Various groups – including the little known Islamic Study Group – protested against both the visit and his proposal to meet Muslim leaders. The Study Group even sponsored the printing and distribution of pamphlets throughout the country. Commenting on the situation, Alhaji Lawal Abubakar, one of the most famous Islamic preachers in the country, condemned the invitation of the Pope, and rejected out of hand any possibility of meeting the pontiff. He, however, allowed: "I have nothing to tell the Pope except the liberating message of Islam. If he is ready to listen we shall all meet him."

FEBRUARY OIL PRODUCTION FIGURES--Lagos, 7 May (NAN)--Crude oil production for February dropped by 20.05 percent to a total of 38,951,286 barrels while exports stood at 26,512,697 barrels, according to a report by the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC). The report released in Lagos today said that these figures represent an average production rate of 1.39 million barrels of crude oil per day with exports at 950,000 barrels per day. It noted that on comparative basis, a decline of about 20.5 percent in production and about 34.9 percent in export over the figure recorded during the proceeding month was observed. The NNPC explained that the sharp decline in production and export in February was caused by the continued lull in the world's oil market and the disruption of shell's production in the western zone which was due to the rupture of a major crude oil delivery pipeline which took more than two weeks to repair. A total of 4,187,973 barrels of crude oil was supplied to the country's three local refineries during the month. The posted prices for the Nigerian crude oil were naira 26.12 per barrels for the high quality grade of crude oil and N24.03 per barrel for the medium grade. The NNPC said that the corresponding official selling prices were N23.61 per barrel and N21.77 per barrel respectively. Those prices, it said, remained constant throughout February. NLC REJECTS WAGE REDUCTION--The Nigerian Labor Congress, NLC, has warned that any attempt to cut or in any way tamper with salaries and fringe benefits of all categories of workers will be strongly resisted. Those who ruined the Nigerian economy, it said, must be made to pay fully for it. In a statement issued last night after a meeting of its central working committee, the congress blamed the present economic situation on a number of issues, including lack of prudent management of the resources of the nation and illegal transfer of huge foreign exchange. Others are inflated contracts, large-scale smuggling and disproportionate salaries, allowances and fringe benefits of assemblymen and political appointees. The congress, however, declared its support for some of the measures already announced by the government. Some of these are the closure of private jetties, ban on the importation of non-essential goods, reduction in basic traveling allowance and the number of Hadj pilgrims. The NLC called on the government to pace the construction of Abuja for a period of between 10 and 20 years, and to devise an effective tax collection system. It also called for the payment of economic rent for houses and utilities by legislators. The congress criticized the increase in the price of petrol, and directed all workers not to accept the unilateral increases in transport fares. LEADER EXPLAINS GNPP WITHDRAWAL--The national leader of the Great Nigeria People's Party [GNPP] has said that his intention for initially spearheading the move for the formation of the Progressive Parties Alliance [PPA] was to offer constructive criticism to the federal government, especially at the National Assembly. Speaking in a radio interview in Kaduna, Alhaji Waziri Ibrahim said that the decision by the GNPP to pull out of the Progressive People's Party [PPP] was his and those of the few members of the National Executive Committee of the party. The GNPP leader said however that until the decision was ratified by a convention of the party, the continued attendance of the two GNPP governors at PPA meetings will be valid. On the crisis in the party, Alhaji Waziri Ibrahim remarked that any leader without a dictatorial tendency will not succeed. [Text] [AB140809 Lagos Domestic Service in English 0600 GMT 14 May 82]

MAKELE ASKS U.S. PARTICIPATION--The minister for steel development, Malam Mama Ali Makele, says the federal government's economic measures are not meant to scare away foreign investors from the country. The measures are temporary and will be relaxed when the economic situation improves. Malam Makel was speaking on Friday when the U.S. ambassador to Nigeria, Mr Thomas Pickering, paid him a courtesy call. He said so far only British, Japanese, Italian and German firms have shown interest in Nigeria's steel development and called for increased American participation in the nation's steel project. Replying, Mr Pickering commended Nigeria for being a reliable supplier of fuel to the United States. [Excerpt] [AB171737 Kaduna Domestic Service in English 1600 GMT 17 May 82]

NPN OFFICIAL ON RENOMINATION--Lagos, 10 May (NAN)--The NPN [National Party of Nigeria] today denied that President Shehu Shagari had formally applied to the party for renomination as its presidential candidate for the 1983 elections. In a statement, the general secretary of the party, Alhaji Suleman Takuma, said that although the renomination of the president was "constitutionally desirable", the president had not personally made any request to the party for renomination. Alhaji Suleman was reacting to a front page story yesterday in a national weekly, credited to the national publicity secretary of the party. He said that when the time arrived and the president "makes his request known, his case along with others would be duly considered." He said that the party had implicit confidence in the integrity, ability and competence of the president, "whose second term of office the party would very much like to support, given his proud record of performance." The publicity secretary of the party, Mr Simon Shango, was reported to have said that the president had formally applied to the party for renomination. NEW POLITICAL PARTY REGISTERED--LAGOS, May 25--A new political grouping, the Nigerian Advance Party (NAP), was registered here Monday by the Federal Electoral Commission. Headed by Lagos lawyer Tunji Braithwaite, the NAP brings to six the number of officially-recognised parties in Nigeria. The next legislative elections are scheduled for mid-1983. Under the constitution, parties seeking registration have to show evidence of national support and present a countrywide programme, and have a multi-tribal bureau. Those regulations aim to stem the resurgence of tribally based parties. The other five legal parties are president Shehu Shagari's National Party of Nigeria (NPN), the Opposition Unity Party (UPN) under Chief Obafemi Awolowo, the Opposition Nigeria People's Party (NPP) of Dr. Nnamdi Azikiwe, the opposition Great Nigeria People's Party (GNPP) of Waziri Ibrahim, which is in the process of splitting up, and Aminu Kano's opposition People's Redemption Party (PRP), also facing internal splits. FRENCH CRITICIZED ON TRIBALISM--The Ambassador to France, Mr. Oga Okwoche, has expressed dissatisfaction with the constant reference in the French press to Nigerians and parts of Nigeria in terms of tribal groupings and religious affiliations. The Ambassador who was addressing members of the Euro-African Press Association in Paris, said that such phrases as "The Muslim Northerners" and "The Christian Southerners" continued to occur in the French mass media as if there were no native Christians in the northern parts of Nigeria, or vice versa or as if these were the only words by which Nigerians could be described. Mr. Okwoche pointed out that the fact that Nigeria comprised many ethnic groupings or that Nigerians practised different religious beliefs was neither unique nor could it even be counted as a fault against them. He declared: "We in Nigeria are proud of our successes to date in our attempt to forge a strong and united country from our multi-ethnic background, just as we are equally proud of the spirit of religious tolerance and religious co-existence which obtains in Nigeria today." NIGERIAN UNIFIL TROOPS--New York, 11 Jun (NAN)--The military attache with Nigeria's permanent mission at the United Nations, Col Olayinka Sule, said yesterday that the Nigerian battalion with the UN Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) had not suffered any loss both in men and material since the current Israeli invasion of southern Lebanon began about one week ago. Colonel Sule told the New York correspondent of the NEWS AGENCY OF NIGERIA (NAN) that he was always in contact with the battalion and there had been no report of any casualties. The military attache, however, added that all had not been well with the Nigerian battalion there, as well as other contingents of the UNIFIL since the Israeli invasion, because almost all supply routes for food and other logistics were disrupted. Colonel Sule said that arrangements had been concluded between UNIFIL authorities and Israeli commanders in parts of southern Lebanon to allow regular supply of food and logistics to the UNIFIL troops. It is expected that normal supplies will resume today. The current mandate of the UNIFIL troops in Lebanon expires next week. CHAD SITUATION CALLED 'DISASTER'--The secretary general of the People's Redemption Party, Mr Samuel Okokwu, has said the recent developments in Chad which led to the removal of former President Goukouni Oueddei constitutes a disaster in Africa. Mr Okokwu, who was addressing newsmen at Murtala Muhammad airport, Lagos, remarked that the Chadian situation had further exposed the weaknesses of the OAU and reestablished French imperialist influence in Chad. 'PUNCH' CONDEMNS ISRAELI INCURSION--THE PUNCH, writing under the caption "Israel Should Quit Lebanon," condemns the Israeli military incursion into Lebanon and feels that the Begin administration is aiming at annihilating both the Palestinians and the idea of their having an independent state. The paper points out that instead of military clashes, the bane of the problem, which is the recognition of a Palestinian state, should be examined. THE PUNCH is of the opinion that since the Camp David accord has failed to yield the desired results, Israel, Egypt and America, which are parties to the accord, should consider other avenues to bring about a lasting peace in the Middle East. IMPROVEMENT IN DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS NOTED

[Text] Rwanda will improve its ability to carry out development projects with the aid of experts recruited internationally. To help pay for their services, a credit of $5 million has been approved by the International Development Association (IDA), the World Bank's affiliate for concessionary lending.

The main coordinating agency for development in Rwanda is the Ministry of Planning. Its Programmes Directorate will be supported by a study fund, financed by the IDA credit, to pay for preinvestment and engineering studies. The fund will finance about 545 staff-months of expert assistance. In addition, a project economist will be hired to help manage the fund. A documentation centre will also be established in the ministry.

Other directorates of the Ministry of Planning are assisted by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and bilateral agencies of Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and Switzerland. The strengthening of the Programmes Directorate will contribute to a more balanced staffing and better coordination among the technical ministries. The UNDP will contribute $1 million in technical assistance to the IDA-supported project.

A financial analyst will be provided to the National Bureau for the Study of Projects. Among its duties, this bureau prepares documentation (technical, economic and financial) necessary for submitting projects for outside financing. Two-week training seminars on project preparation and implementation will be held for Rwandan officials.

The IDA credit to the Rwandese Republic is for a term of 50 years including 10 years of grace. It is interest-free but carries a service charge of 3/4 of 1% a year to help cover IDA administrative costs.

1982-83 BUDGET--Dakar, 13 Jun (AFP)--Senegal's budget for 1982 to 1983 has been fixed for revenue and expenditure at 230.2 billion CFA francs compared with 211.4 billion CFA francs in 1981, the presentation report to the National Assembly states. This budget increase (9 percent) however falls short of Senegal's rate of inflation which is 12 percent. The new budget reflects the slight resumption of economic activities following last year's good harvest (879,000 tons of peanuts, 41,000 tons of cotton and 73,000 tons of millet and sorghum). According to the report, the added value of agriculture for the year 1982 to 1983 is estimated at 118 billion CFA francs compared to 67.8 billion in 1981. The [word indistinct] deficit will be up to 103 billion CFA francs compared to 136 billion CFA francs in 1981 and that of the balance of payment at 23 billion CFA francs compared to 54 billion CFA francs in 1981. The recurrent budget is estimated at 151.3 billion CFA francs totally secured by ordinary revenue, without calling for new taxes. The capital budget represents 23 billion CFA francs to which is added 37 billion CFA francs of available external loans and special treasury accounts (67 billion CFA francs). Expenditure provided for the debts service is 41 billion CFA francs and the foreign loans needed to finance investments come to 116 billion CFA francs. MOVES TO COUNTER WHITE EXODUS REPORTED

Johannesburg AFRICA AFP in English 25 May 82 pp 22-23

[Article by Herve Guilbaud]

[Text] BEITBRIDGE, Zimbabwe-South Africa border, May 23--The South African Government, already facing up to bush war in northern Namibia, is trying to stem a white exodus along the border with Botswana and Zimbabwe in order to block infiltration by guerrillas of the banned African National Congress (ANC) in this sector.

Premier Pieter Botha and Defence Minister General Magnus Malan have in the past few months issued warnings to local inhabitants about growing ANC guerrilla operations mounted from neighbouring countries.

In March Gen. Malan announced a restructuring of military service, which is compulsory only for the country's 4.5 million whites. One clear change was to extend the mobilisation of reservists.

The number of attacks committed or claimed by the ANC has increased considerably since 1980, with targets including railways, power plants and police stations. There were 50 incidents last year.

Sixteen presumed terrorists were arrested as they tried to enter South Africa last year. Police said 15 of them came from the small kingdom of Swaziland, which affords a preferred passageway for commandos coming from Mozambique.

Common border

The situation is generally held to be much calmer along the some 1,600 kms (993 miles) of common border with Botswana and Zimbabwe, but any acceleration and generalisation of the current rural exodus could lead to the opening of a "second front".

From Zeerust to Beitbridge, along the Limpopo river, the natural frontier between South Africa, Botswana and Zimbabwe, the opinion of the farmers is the same: the government in Pretoria should do more to maintain a white presence in the outposts of the republic.

There was a general complaint about the lack of roads and railways and about the delays in bringing electricity to this part of the countryside--the 'platteland' (flat land) as the Afrikaans-speaking farmers call it.

In the Marico corridor from Zeerust to the Botswana frontier, the farmers were worried about an imposed integration of their lands in the independent black homeland of Bophuthatswana on the eastern and western flanks of their holdings.

For Charles van der Heever, a stockraiser and grower of maize, wheat and sunflowers, Pretoria is letting doubts persist over what it intends doing with this region. He said white farmers were less and less persuaded of the merits of the homelands system, which appeared hardly credible economically if not politically.

The lands already ceded to Bophuthatswana are in most cases in a deplorable state, due to a lack of competent management, and some farmers are still waiting for financial compensation, Mr. Van Der Heever said.

It is all serving to strengthen locally the position of the hardline Afrikaner rightwing, in particular that of the new Conservative Party formed in March, whose deputy leader Ferdie Hartzenberg is the constituency's MP.

A little further north, farmers complain above all about the purchase at high prices of tens of thousands of hectares by the leisured classes of Pretoria and Johannesburg, who turn them into reserves for hunting impala antelopes and warthogs.

Local landholders cannot compete financially with these "remote control farmers" when land comes up for sale.

Hannes Els, who runs a herd of 850 head of cattle along the Limpopo, was also critical of the high wages paid to black farm labour by the new owners. On his 7,500 hectares (18,532 acres), valued at some 250-300 rand (the same in dollars) each, Mr. Els pays 40 rand a month to his workers, in addition to free lodging and rations. But the "cheque book farmers", he said indignantly, were paying up to three times as much.

A further complaint he voiced was that the newly acquired farmsteads were left in the care of black sharecroppers. If ANC guerrillas got over the border, they would be able to move with impunity from one "black farm" to another towards the country's urban and industrial zones.

More departures

All along the border with Botswana the phenomenon of white departures is speeding up, according to everyone I met, although Botswana is viewed by one and all as the most moderate of the black 'frontline' states involved in southern African developments (the others are Zimbabwe, Zambia, Angola, Mozambique and Tanzania).

Schools are closing one after the other because there are no pupils.

Most of the farmsteads are linked by citizen band radio to neighbouring police stations, and the farmers are armed. The youngest among them do regular shooting practice and patrol the border. The army supplies automatic rifles on request.

The frontier is as often as not marked only by a small cattle pen here and there and is easily crossed, especially in the winter months from June to September when the Limpopo is fordable dryshod at many points.

Only in the north along some 200 kms (125 miles) of frontier between South Africa and Zimbabwe do security measures look more effective. There is a double fence four metres (13 feet) high topped with barbed wire running from east to west on the south African side. (A.F.P.)

COMMENTARY ON CONTROVERSIAL COMPULSORY FINGERPRINTING LEGISLATION

Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 25 May 82 p 6

[Editorial]

[Text]

MANY blacks must have been rocked by the statement in a morning newspaper about the t king of fingerprints which reads: "No one apart from the narrow circumstances provided for by the Criminal Procedures Act should be compelled to have his fingerprints taken. It would be an invasion of privacy."

This was a quote by Professor S A Strauss of the Department of Law at the University of South Africa, reacting to a new Bill which provides for all South Africans to have their fingerprints and palm prints taken for future documents.

To say this country is notorious for its double standards is an understatement. The truth appears to be that there's one law for blacks and another set of laws for whites. Or at least some laws become applicable only when the civil liberties of whites are infringed.

The article describes the new Bill as not only an invasion of one's privacy but being incompatible with the tenets of Western democracy. It goes on almost blithely in this vein, completely forgetting or ignoring the fact that we blacks have had our fingerprints taken for years with not so much as a whimper from any lawyer.

We have had our privacy seriously invaded every time we went to the pass office after losing a reference book, applying for a new one, or even changing a job.

It is somewhat late in the day, I guess, for us to complain about our privacy. The professor incidentally averred that fingerprints should be destroyed as soon as one is found not guilty of a charge, or if his conviction is later set aside, or if he is acquitted at the end of a preparatory examination, or if it is decided not to prosecute the person.

Section 37 of the Criminal Procedures Act gives a policeman the right to take fingerprints from any person arrested on any charge and a court may also order that a person's fingerprints be taken.

Blacks have been so subjected to the massive invasion of their privacy that they have come to accept this as par for the course. It is only when these things are about to be visited on whites that the anomalies are raised.

We know we have felt particularly insulted when we are forced to give our prints to petty officials all over the place for many years. But we had accepted this — as we are unfortunately wont to suffer most such insults in silence.

Finger-printing is not even the least of our problems. We have to endure the humiliation of being stopped in the streets by any rookie and asked for these passes. The law has gone one better because you can be stopped, your wife can be stopped and sometimes even your mother gets stopped — and sometimes arrested — for a pass book. That is what we really call invasion of privacy.

But now that the truth has leaked out we can be excused if we feel particularly bitter that this is only raised when whites are about to go through the whole humiliating experience.

We are astounded to learn from Prof Strauss that it is now questionable whether the new Bill is in keeping with the tenets of Western democracy. Surely he and all whites who are informed should have been aware that blacks have had their fingerprints taken almost at the drop of a hat for years.

QUESTIONS RAISED OVER MOZAMBIQUE DEFECTOR

[By Emielia Jaroschek and Chris Freimond]

[Text] Torture and murder allegations levelled against defected Mozambique Security Chief Mr Jorge Costa will have to be weighed against his intelligence value to South Africa before a decision is made on whether he can stay in the country.

Intelligence sources told the RAND DAILY MAIL at the weekend that the protests flowing in from members of the Portuguese community in South Africa would have to be viewed in the light of results of lengthy debriefings with Mr Costa.

Mr Costa, who as national director of security for Mozambique, was third in charge in the Ministry of Security and who had direct dealings with President Samora Machel, worked with the country's most guarded secrets.

He said in a press interview last week that his work involved intelligence, espionage and counter-espionage and related directly to neighbouring countries such as South Africa.

Lieutenant-General Johan Coetzee told the RAND DAILY MAIL that protest could be expected when a communist official defected to a Western country.

"When in the past, politically involved people from communist countries sought political asylum in Western countries such as England or America they experienced similar campaigns of protest.

"Mr Costa occupied a position which invited enemies and these protests come as no surprise to me," General Coetzee said.

But the opposition spokesman on internal affairs, Mr Tiaan Van Der Merwe, said yesterday that if the allegations of torture and other "uncivilised" practices against Mr Costa proved to be true he should not be given asylum in South Africa.

Mr Van Der Merwe yesterday called for a thorough investigation of Mr Costa's background.

The allegations were "very disturbing" and if they proved true he was not the type of person wanted in South Africa, he said.

Mr Costa could not be contacted this weekend. Police said he was still "recuperating."

TWO RECENT DETAINEES CHARGED WITH TREASON

MB141101 Umtata Transkei Capital Radio in English 1000 GMT 14 Jun 82

[Text] Two recently released South African political detainees have been charged with high treason. (Barbara Hogan) and (Cedric Mason) were charged this morning. Another former detainee, (Allan Fine), has been charged with taking part in what is described as terroristic activities.

(Hogan) and (Mason) had originally been charged with (Fine) and South African Allied Workers' Union officials (Thomas Iligweta), (Sam Kitkine) and (Seswe Njekelana), Nigel Rench reports.

[Begin recording] (Hogan) and (Mason) will have separate trials in the Supreme Court, while (Fine) is to appear in the magistrate's court. (Hogan) and (Mason) are charged with high treason, or alternatively participating in terroristic activities. The first count charges them with conspiring with the banned African National Congress and furthering its aims, while the second count charges them with ANC membership.

(Allan Fine's) charge sheet says he participated in terroristic activities by conspiring with the exiled South African Congress of Trade Unions and so with the ANC. (Fine's) case has been postponed until 21 June. No date has been set for (Hogan's) or (Mason's) Supreme Court appearance. (Thomas Iligweta), (Sam Kitkine) and (Seswe Njekelana) will appear in court on the 28th of this month. No charges have yet been formulated against them. All six will remain in custody. This is Nigel Rench in Johannesburg for Capital Radio News. [End recording]

CARS OF THOSE ATTENDING DETAINEES' BENEFIT VANDALIZED

[Article by Liz McGregor]

[Text]

THE tyres of up to 200 cars were slashed outside a detainees' benefit concert at Wits, bricks were hurled through the windows of a detainee's former home and the windscreen of a car outside the home of another detainee was shattered in a wave of Rightwing thuggery at the weekend.

The tyre attacks followed another attempt to sabotage the concert last Thursday when Wits campus and the Crown Mines area were flooded with pamphlets announcing the concert had been cancelled.

A second fake pamphlet said the concert would take place a week later at a different venue.

After the concert on Friday night, stunned concert-goers left the Great Hall to find that cars parked alongside the hall, in Yale Road and in a parking lot across the road from Wits all had at least one tyre slashed.

Concert organiser Mr Adrian Tighe said about 200 cars were involved.

Three bricks were hurled through the windows of two bedrooms in the former Grafton Road, Yeoville, home of detainee Mr Auret van Heerden just before midnight on Friday. Later that night a threatening note was written on a message pad pinned to the front door.

This is the third time this year the house has been attacked. A pot plant was thrown through the window of one of the bedrooms at 3am several weeks ago and at the beginning of March this year bricks were thrown through a bedroom window.

At 11,50pm on Friday a stone was hurled through the window of a car belonging to a former Nusas projects officer, Ms Lisa Seftel.

Ms Seftel's car was parked outside the Hunter Street, Yeoville, home of Ms Barbara Hogan, who has been held under Section 6 of the Terrorism Act since September last year and is now awaiting trial on charges under the Terrorism Act.

This is the second attack on Ms Hogan's home — a brick was hurled through a window of her home in November last year.

Police could not be contacted last night for comment.

MUSLIM REPORT FUELS OUTCRY--CAPE TOWN--The Vice-State President, Mr Alwyn Schlebusch, yesterday joined another member of the President's Council in condemning Mrs Ada Claassen, wife of Springbok rugby chief, Professor Johan Claassen, for derogatory remarks made about Muslims. Mr Lofty Adams, a former member of the coloured Labour Party, and who now heads the Congress of the People (Cope), made a scorching attack on Mrs Claassen after a Sunday newspaper reported her as voicing her despair if Muslims were to be allowed to join whites in power sharing structures. She labelled Muslims as being "on the road of darkness". Mr Adams referred to Mrs Claassen as "another of those vicious little germs that crawl into the body". "I want to say to her that as a Muslim I have a duty before God to pray for her." After Mr Adams' speech, Mr Schlebusch announced that if the report was correct in its reference to Muslims, he wanted to express the strongest objection to Mrs Claassen's remark. "It is unfortunate that any Afrikaner can make remarks like that, if in fact they were made by Mrs Claassen," said Mr Schlebusch. [Text] [Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 21 May 82 p 1]

GOVERNMENT TO MAKE EXPENDITURE CUTS

AB090821 Paris AFP in English 0736 GMT 9 Jun 82

[Text] Dar es Salaam, 9 Jun (AFP)—The Government of Tanzania is believed to be preparing for a major cut in expenditure involving increased austerity aimed at minimising a continuing drain on the east African state's foreign currency reserves.

Budget estimates, expected to be submitted to Parliament on Thursday of next week, will reflect a massive slashing of government expenditure for the 1982-83 financial year, informed sources said.

Proposed expenditure for recurrent and development programmes is expected not be exceed 18,960 million Tanzanian shillings ($1,890 million), which would represent a reduction of 240 million shillings ($24 million) from the year ending this month.

Financial analysts saw the expected moves as an indication of Tanzania's declining economic situation, marked by a further fall in foreign exchange earnings.

Over the last 2 years, the Tanzanian economy has experienced unprecedented problems, largely due to poor agricultural performance caused by bad weather, and also to higher foreign exchange spending on imported fuel and increasingly expensive industrial products.

The expected budget, which would still be in deficit, would therefore imply that the government impose strict austerity measures to curb expenditure, in an attempt to reduce negative impact on the national treasury.

Addressing members of the Parliamentary Finance and Economic Affairs Committee here on Tuesday, Finance Minister Amir Jamal said emphasis would be placed during the 1982/83 financial year on rehabilitation of the national economy. This would involve postponment of some important projects until the economic situation had sufficiently improved.

Minister Jamal indicated that the aim would be to spend more on "de-bottlenecking" and on increasing capacity utilization in all spheres of the economy.

Also briefing the committee, Minister for Planning and Economic Affairs Kighoma Malaima said postponed projects would include a proposed brewery and malting plant.

He said the criteria used in suspending some of the projects included lack of firm commitment on founding and the projects requirements of imported raw materials after their completion. Professor Malima explained that launching such projects would be like building museums.

One project in particular which the government has apparently reluctantly shelved is a French-financed power alcohol plant due to have been built later this year. Between 10 and 15 percent of vehicles. This would have saved the country an estimated 300 million shillings ($30 million) annually in foreign exchange.

POLITICAL EDUCATION DEPARTMENT IN U.N.L.A.

THE Government has decided to make the army productive and more politically conscious of their role in society. This decision has been highly appreciated by both the U.N.L.A and the entire nation.

This is completely contrary to the army of the past which was both idle and without any political awareness. The results of which have proved very disastrous.

To have a section of comptent people idle, does not only deprive the Government of her human resources, but also amounts to total exploitation of the civilian population who will have to provide for the idle group.

In Uganda, like in any other third world countries, the rate of poverty is high because of low production capacity. Development in these countries can never be realised unless the natural resources and the manpower are fully utilised.

The primary role of the army is protection of the country against external aggression. But for the army to offer effective protection, it must have the motive as well as the commitment to do so. Thus, the need to politicise the army.

This avails the army with political background and the situation under which it operates.

Imperialists have helped stage coups and pro unpopular Governments in third world.

They have been successful because they used the local military leaders. These leaders betrayed their countries because they lacked political awareness, lacked the spirit of nationalism and patriotism.

In Uganda today, some soldiers have been misled by disatisfied politicians because they did not know what is expected of them as protectors.

This is now the situation we in the army want to discourage by making our army politically knowledgeable of their roles and duty.

To this end, the political education department headed by Lt-Col. Nyero (M.P.) has been formed within the U.N.L.A.

On the other hand, the forming of a technical education department will ensure production in agriculture manufacturing industry, engineering, construction as well as other skills in arts and crafts, promotion of culture, games and sports.

Meanwhile, a sub Political Department Protocal and foreign affairs could be established to learn the defence of other countries as well as their foreign policies.

Against this background, the army so built will be difficult to corrupt,unbiased and the people's own army.

Then and only then will Uganda have successfully laid the foundation of a future proper productive and politically conscious army.

OFFICIALS URGED NOT TO EVADE REPORTERS

Kampala MKOMBOZI in English No 2, 4 May 82 p 6

[Article in the column "'MKOMBOZI' Comment": "Relationship Between Pressmen and Public Executives"]

[Text]

AMONG the important and yet sensitive roles of the press is to decide when to play its role as a watch-dog of the general public.

This is generally determined by the amount of pressure from the general public, usually in cases of major scandals.

In playing this vital role, the press is sometimes misunderstood by those executives heading public bodies, organisations, corporations, institutions, town councils, banks, and so on.

Such authorities or executives very often forget that they do not own those public bodies as private properties but they are mere custodians of the public interests.

Therefore, members of the general public in whose interests those public bodies are run are entitled as a matter of right to express their view on those public bodies. The views may be pleasant bitter, pertubbing, searching or even nerve-breaking.

For instance, if members of the general public are not happy about the services rendered to them by any public body—bank, institution, town council, corporation, etc., they have the right to voice their criticisms or suggestions, and if they do not receive any redress from the authorities concerned the alternative is to turn to their watch-dog the press.

It is then when the press investigative reporter calls on the "boss" who may be pleased to talk to a pressman or who may fume or be excited or desparately elusive.

Some executives are very sensitive to the press especially those who are not sure of their ground.

Others, realising that if they refuse to talk to the press they merely deprive themselves of the opportunity of voicing their side of the story, do answer all questions put to them calmly and very often convincingly.

Those who fume or refuse to talk to the press forget that whether or not they talk to the press, the press story will come out all the same, minus their side of it. Some of the elusive bosses instead of answering the questions themselves they will refer the reporter to someone else who is on "safari" or abroad.

The reporter very rightly will say "when mr. so and so was asked . . . he declined to answer". This does not do any good to the elusive "boss".

In extremely few instances the reporters have been threatened, particularly by those who forget the fact that they are mere custodians of the public bodies under their charge.

Never assume that the pressman is purposely trying to work against you. He gains nothing by doing that, merely he is carrying out his professional role in the society as a public's watch-dog.

Giving elusive answers merely lays the executive open to suspicions that he is trying to hide something, which does him no credit.

A reporter who distorts facts of an executive or an inside source with a view to cause sensation or to draw biased conclusions is usually found out by his editor. Such a reporter is seriously reprimanded by his editor and if he persists he is thrown out of his job without any compuctions.

The press firstly gets serious frequent complaints against public body, then the editor weighs them before he decides to carry out investigations. He is careful to be fair to all those concerned, the public and the executives. Investigations in any scandal are carried out thoroughly and carefully.

In conclusion, we say that the majority of Uganda's executives treat pressmen as respectable professional people. Next time you are approached by a reporter remember our message in this comment.

TEXTILES BOARD SAID SPEARHEADING INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY

Kampala MKOMBOZI in English No 2, 4 May 82 pp 13, 20

[Article by Patrick M. Kisuule]

[Text]

THE National Textiles Board is spearheading our industrial recovery. This is due to its sound management by a dedicated and hard working top team and factory workers.

This big complex consisting of eleven specified companies is producing a wide variety of fabrics of durable plain, coloured, attractively printed, "kitenge", "khanga", towels, bed spreads, sheeting materials, poplin and lately jean and polyster.

This diversfied complex of companies utilises our locally produced cotton as its main source of raw materials. It is now the biggest single industrial employer, with its 13,600 workers, in Uganda.

National Textiles Board's story of success is narrated by our investigative Reporter, Patrick M. Kisuule who interviewed members of the top team.

There are eleven specified companies under the National Textiles Board, namely, Uganda Spinning Mill, which does spinning of yarn. Nyanza Textile Industries Ltd.; Pamba Textile Ltd.; Uganda Rayon Textiles Manufacturers Ltd.; and African Textiles Mill Ltd.

Under the NTB are two garment manufacturing factories which are:—United Garments Industries Ltd.; and Uganda Garment (1973) Ltd.

One gunny bags and Hessian Cloth Factory is situated in Tororo and one marketing concern of National Textiles Board known as Lebel (EA) Ltd. One other company makes furniture and does some Marketing of Textiles and Uganda Manufactures Ltd.

The textile sector under the National Textiles Board provides employment for about 13,600 persons. Nytil being the largest single employer and accounts for about 5,000 employees.

The total out-put in terms of bales were for the years 1971—84,800 bales, 1979—33,110 bales and 1980—41,000 bales. This decline in bales was due to the decline in cotton production during Amin's reign of terror, when farmers were neglected.

Uganda Textiles Boards Mills, produce a variet of fabrics of attractive designs, for example, Uganda Rayon Manufactures Ltd., specialises in fancy fabrics as kitenge and khanga, Pamba produces towels, bed spreads in addition to dye material. Nytil produces a variety of products which include nice prints, sheeting materials, poplin and lately it has embarked on the production of gins and polyster.

Cotton is the main raw material, used by the mills and is obtained locally.

According to M. S. M. Walugembe, Research and Planning Development Manager of NTB, said, "There are signs that production of cotton will rise tremendously because of the Government's increased price payable to the farmers".

Walugembe noted that, "measures taken by the Government to collect the crop from the farmer has lessened the farmer's burden".

According to the Ministry of Agriculture, officials, production of cotton in 1970/71 was 414,000 bales and declined thereafter. According to the same Ministry, production of cotton is expected to go up to 150,000 bales for the year 1981/82 and more and more increase of cotton is expected in following years.

Another ray of good was highlighted by the official of National Textile Board, who said that, "at the moment there is enough cotton for their mills and this is likely to be the case in future".

"Inputs such as chemicals and dyestuff are imported from countries such as Britain and Germany. The Government has done a lot to assist the mills to get the necessary foreign exchange for these inputs", said the official.

Accordingly, an official from the Managing Director's Office was optimistic when he told "Mkombozi" reporter: "more and more funds will be set aside for the inputs so that the mills continue production without stop".

However, the factories are not running at full capacity. This is because of the neglect which characterised the factories, during the last regime.

The reason given by the NTB official as to why the factories were not running at full capacity are, "the last regime did not buy spare parts to repair the machines.

"Many of the machines in the factories are not operating because of that same reason" lamented Walusimbi.

"Fortunately", noted Walusimbi who is the Research Planning and Development Manager of NTB that "there is tremendous improvement in some of the mills, and this is due to the financial assistance from IDA".

According to him, "Nytil, Pamba, Uganda Rayon and other mills have done some rehabilitation and this has helped to improve production".

Reports from the mills indicate that cotton consumption by all the factories has been as follows:

1978	...	21,200 bales
1979	...	14,717 bales
1980	...	39,200 bales

According to the National Textiles Board's reports, some of their factories are making profits, these are: — UGIL, Nytil, Lebel (EA) Ltd.)

The Jute Factory in Tororo, the Uganda Blanket and Uganda Rayon are breaking even.

However, the Uganda Spinning Mill at Lira is making losses because at the time it was made a specified company of National Textile Board, it was still a project. While was only operating by getting grants from the Treasury.

At the time of the hand-over to the National Textiles Board, the grants were stopped. Consequently the mill lacks working capital and it has accumulated many debts some of which were inherited when it was a project.

Another problem which the industry is facing according to an official of NTB, "is lack of adequate foreign exchange for the purchase of new machinery to to replace the absolete ones, and also for purchase of chemical dyestuff".

"Lack of trained manpower in some technical areas plus labour turn-over", is another puzzling problem to the NTB according to the Planning Development Manager.

The National Textiles Board does not export its finished products. The Development Manager said, "the main objective of the Board is to clothe our own people first and later we can think of exporting the remaining products".

In pre-Amin era Uganda had become a big exporter of textiles, particularly to her neighbours.

He added that "there is not enough material for our people and therefore, we cannot export".

Consequently, future plans of the NTB are to rehabilitate the mills so that production goes up to about 70 mililon L/metres as against the 19,865,000 which was produced in 1979.

According to the figure from the boards records production in 1971 was 50,877,000 L/metre.

However, according to the Managing Director's Office, "after rehabilitation, NTB shall embark on expansion".

Acting General Manager, Mr. F. Atim Otile said, "fesaibility studies for the rehabilitation of the mills have been done and funds for African Textiles Mill have been secured from Abu Dhabi and BADEA". He noted that, "rehabilitation of the mills will soon be started after the preliminary work has been completed".

"As regards Nytil, Pamba, Uganda Rayon Textile Manufacturers and United Garments Ltd. we expect to get funds from the Japanese Government" said the Acting Managing Director.

Perhaps this explains why Mr. Akena Adoko the Managing Director has taken a trip to Japan.

The Office of the Managing Director also disclosed that "agreements have been reached, for the M/s. Star Industrial Centre Ltd. of India to come and assist the country in rehabilitating some of our mills".

Finally, the Spinning Mill at Lira seems to be the most pressing problem of the NTB.

Lack of spare parts which USSR cannot supply without foreign exchange causes much worry to the NTB.

The Planning and Development Manager was asked why the mill does not get assistance from the IDA funds to purchase spares from the USSR?

He replied: "because spares are to be bought from USSR which is not a member of IDA".

In view of the NTB difficulties, "Mkombozi" suggests that, it is necessary for the Government to arrange for special funds for the Lira Spinning Mill".

However, the National Textiles Board is committed to rehabilitate all its mills and clothe its nationals and thereafter embark on export of some fabrics so as to save the much needed foreign exchange.

ZAIRIANS TO LEAVE CHAD NOW THAT OAU FORCES FREED

AB121127 Kinshasa AZAP in French 0800 GMT 12 Jun 82

[AZAP commentary: "Chad: Peace for Tomorrow?"]

[Text] Kinshasa, 12 Jun (AZAP)--Zaire has decided to withdraw within a very short time its troops stationed in Chad since November 1981 within the framework of the Pan-African Peacekeeping Force [FIA].

Zaire's decision follows that of Senegal, and it is probable that Nigeria, the third member country of the FIA, will adopt the same attitude.

By deciding to send a peacekeeping force to Chad--the first of its kind for the settling of a conflict in an African country--the OAU wanted to prove that, through solidarity, Africans can solve their own problems on the continent.

But the OAU's decision to send contingents to Chad arose from suggestions aimed at finding a political solution to the Chadian problem leading to a true national reconciliation. The two OAU minisummits on Chad in Nairobi and Kinshasa have affirmed the conditions for restoring peace to this country.

The leader of the Transitional National Union Government of Chad--then in power in Ndjamena--systematically rejected the OAU proposals for finding a political solution to the conflict. Misfortune was with him: the military solution which he wholeheartedly supported against the wishes of everybody--whereas he had no force capable of withstanding the irresistible drive of the FAN--turned against him. He was swept out like a straw, at the same time losing his power and the right to suggest conditions. Today, he is a lone man, in search of asylum.

The change in the situation in Ndjamena has practically freed the pan-African organization of its commitments in Chad as far as the FIA is concerned as the ruling power in Ndjamena has changed hands. The decision of the countries forming the FIA to withdraw their contingents from Chad is no demonstration of antipathy against the new authority in Ndjamena. It is not simply a matter of leaving Hissein Habre free to find internal solutions to the problems facing his country.

It is comforting to note that in his first public statement after his military victory, the new strong man in Ndjamena emphasized that he would never give up in his efforts to see to it Chadians regain their identity and find Chadian solutions to their problems, adding that these efforts could be made within the framework of the OAU.

As a member of the OAU, Chad must benefit from the help of this organization for its reconstruction and the elimination of all the bitterness and hatred accumulated during the war. Precisely after taking into account the realities of the moment, our country has decided to withdraw its troops from Chad. Everybody knows that in spite of its own economic difficulties, Zaire has never at any moment hesitated to respond to Africa's call to put part of the best elements of its army at the disposition of the Chadian people. It is not exactly a rest cure. It is the opposite; but having experienced similar outbursts of misfortune at a particular time of its history, Zaire has once again learned to rescue those who have also fallen into distress.

CAMPAIGN TO PUBLICIZE MANDELA FATE PRAISED

[AZAP commentary: "Do Everything Not To Forget Nelson Mandela"]

[Text] Kinshasa, 11 Jun (AZAP)--The PAN-AFRICAN NEWS AGENCY (PANA) is getting ready to join this month the news media of the black continent to undetake a campaign aimed at drawing public attention to the fate of Nelson Mandela, the former ANC chairman who was sentenced to life imprisonment by the Pretoria regime on 12 June 1964. This will be the first major political demonstration by which PANA will affirm its personality.

PANA will provide information equipment to the national agencies of Africa, and will play a particularly active role in this campaign which is aimed at reminding the world of the unfortunate and inhuman fate which the racist South African regime is forcing one of the first great South African black nationalist fighters to suffer.

The initiative of the African press to draw public attention to the black South African nationalists is very laudable. In fact, preoccupied with the difficult Namibian independence issue after the liberation of the Portuguese and British colonies in Southern Africa, the Africans can be tempted by the devil to push to the background the ANC's fight for the liberation of the black man. Certainly, Africa, which is confronted with the multiple problems of development, cannot be asked to do everything at the same time. However, history will not forgive us if we leave Nelson Mandela and the other nationalists to their sad fate, whatever our reasons.

In fact, despite international protests, Mandela and three of his ANC fellow prisoners, among whom is Walter Sisulu, the former secretary general of the ANC, have been suffering severe prison terms under the contemptible and shameful South African regime.

First of all imprisoned in the infamous Robben Island prison off Cape Town, Mandela and his unfortunate friends have this year been transferred to the Pol Smoor prison in Cape Province.

This measure, which some people believed was a relaxation of the conditions of imprisonment of the four nationalists, was in reality nothing but a mere administrative procedure. Nothing has changed in their prison conditions. With a regime that despises himan life--especially that of black--the African press is right to mobilize African and world opinion in order to discourage all physical attacks on prisoners.

The campaign in favor of Nelson Mandela and the ANC nationalist fighters must be in the interest of the first leader and, it goes without saying, the leaders of SWAPO who are political prisoners in Pretoria. Public opinion should particularly remember Herman Toivo Ja Toio, the founding father of SWAPO, who has also been sentenced to life imprisonment since 1968. The whole world must do everything possible so that all these people--victims of the shameful policies of South Africa--are not forgotten. The intensification of initiatives like the one undertaken by the PANA is very worthwhile. Such initiatives will surely speed up the liberation of the black man in this part of the continent.

RENUNCIATION OF PETRODOLLARS FOLLOWS RELATIONS WITH ISRAEL

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3382, 31 May 82 p 1477

[Text] Zaire's decision to resume diplomatic relations with Israel has prompted a flurry of reactions in African, Arab and Western capitals. (For comment see West Africa May 24.) Contrary to some reports, the Zairois Embassy will be in Tel Aviv and not Jerusalem. Israel's Embassy in Kinshasa has been officially opened by the Director General of the Israeli Foreign Ministry, Mr. David Kimche.

For the record, the following countries have announced a complete suspension of diplomatic relations with Zaire because of the move; Saudi Arabia, Quatar, Libya, Bangladesh, the United Arab Emirates and Kuwait.

Iraq and Morocco have resolved to persuade President Mobutu to change his mind. Tunisia has recalled its Ambassador to Kinshasa "as a first stage"; so has Algeria.

Following a suggestion in the Israeli newspaper Ma'ariv that Ivory Coast, Kenya, Gabon, Ghana and Togo would be among those to follow Zaire's example, Abidjan and Libreville have issued statements denying any such plans. Senegal, Cameroon and Mali have also said they will not follow Zaire's lead.

More than 100 members of the Nigerian National Assembly have backed a proposal before the House to recognise Israel. Great Nigeria People's Party member E. C. Ebo called on President Shagari to "do all within his power to persuade other member countries of the OAU to recognise Israel as soon as possible".

Washington has welcomed the move. A United States' State Department communiqué said of the siting of the Embassy in Jerusalem (which later proved untrue) "this is a bilateral affair concerning only Zaire and Israel".

The Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa (BADEA) has said it will suspend all activities in Zaire because of the decision. The Khartoum-based bank said the move was a grave breach of Afro-Arab solidarity.

The OPEC Fund for development, which is due to meet next month in Libreville will discuss whether to continue loans to Zaire.

Zaire joins three other African countries which have diplomatic relations with Israel; South Africa, Malawi and Egypt.

President Mobutu has denounced Arab "interference in a Sovereign State's policy" and the "vile threat of petro-dollars curiously aimed at a Black State". In an interview on Brussels Radio the President said Zaire was not ready to submit to the "yoke of an Arab neo-slavery system". He described Afro-Arab solidarity as a booby trap, and denounced Arab leaders as "slave taking caravanners with riding crops and turbans".

Most African States broke relations with Israel in 1973 under pressure from Arab States seeking a return of Israeli-occupied Arab territory. Part of that territory was the Sinai Peninsular, which was returned to Egypt recently.

Because of the return of the Sinai, the Kinshasa statement said, there was "no problem" about renewing diplomatic ties with the Jewish State.

In Jerusalem, an Israeli Foreign Ministry spokesperson welcomed the decision and called on other African countries to "renew ties of friendship and co-operation to our mutual benefit."

Israel has close economic ties with many African States, sending them agricultural experts and training Africans in Israel in various fields. It is estimated that about 4,000 Israeli experts already work in Black Africa, some 300 of whom are in Zaire. Israeli Foreign Ministry officials operate unofficially through friendly Embassies in a number of African States, including Gabon, Ghana and Ivory Coast. Zaire in particular is known to have maintained close economic links with Israel despite the diplomatic break.

ZAIRIAN FORGERS IN FRANCE--VERSAILLES, April 22--French police have smashed a multi-million dollar forgery ring run by Zairean political refugees under which people drew social benefits under up to a dozen different names and may have falsely inflated unemployment figures by some quarter of a million people. Official sources said Wednesday that a total of nearly three million dollars' worth of benefits had been illegally drawn in France with the false identity papers. With ramifications into Belgium, the network had drawn a total of some 20 million dollars' benefits. The Zairean refugees, as well as French citizens, passed themselves off as British, Chadian, Central African, Namibian and Congolese nationals anddrew benefits worth between 5,000 and 18,000 dollars a month each in different towns throughout France. DECLINE OF SPARSE INTER-AFRICAN TRADE REPORTED

Harare THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 4 Jun 82 p 7

[Text]

NINETY-FIVE percent of African trade is with countries outside the African region. Intra-African trade now accounts for less than 5% of total African trade and shows a declining trend.

This was revealed in the Economic Commission for Africa's African trade bulletin, made available at the ECA seminar for presidents and secretaries-general of African chambers of commerce, held in Harare last week.

The bulletin said though this was the trend, the potential for the expansion of intra-African trade was substantial.

"The realisation of this potential will largely depend upon the extent to which African governments, producers, and all trade organisations commit themselves to identifying products that can be traded among African countries and the efforts exerted in actually orienting their production and commercial activities towards African markets," the bulletin said.

The African region was, in 1970-79, a net importer of products classified as manufactured goods — which included machines and transport equipment, beverages and tobacco, chemicals, animal and vegetable oils — while it was a net exporter of products falling under the categories of food and live animals, crude materials excluding fuels, mineral fuels and others.

Some studies have also shown that the African region is a net importer of processed goods that are produced from raw materials available in African countries.

RAW MATERIALS

"The potential for an expansion of intra-African trade therefore, lies partly in the management and processing of the raw materials for distribution within the region.

"Accordingly trade institutions such as chambers of commerce, export promotion centres and related trade intermediaries have an important role to play in realizing this potential by identifying trade opportunities and encouraging production of goods to be marketed in Africa," said the bulletin.

The bulletin also said the excess of imports over exports for the period 1976 to 1978 showed an increasing demand trend for some commodities. In 1976, imports of canned meat exceeded exports by $17 655 000. A year later imports were $45 879 000 more than exports, and in 1978, imports were $58 652 000 more than exports.

The bulletin quotes the Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO) as saying the largest exporters of canned meat were Kenya, Zimbabwe, Tanzania, Madagascar, Ethiopia, Swaziland and Somalia. The bulk of these exports were destined for European markets. While some African countries exported their canned meat to European and Middle East markets, African importers were supplied from Europe, Latin America and New Zealand.

"The reasons for this pattern of trade in canned meat are said to include transport facilities old-established trade links, credit facilities, taste, brand loyalty and quality requirements for the traditional African consumer groups, particularly those in urban areas," the bulletin added.

It however acknowledged that there were obstacles and barriers to the development of intra-African trade. These included general obstacles relating to production and markets, monetary, financial, communication and tariff obstacles, and barriers and quantitative restrictions.

CUBAN PROJECT TO MOULD NEW AFRICANS DESCRIBED

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 4 Jun 82 pp 1-3

[Article by Pierre Cayrol]

[Text] Havana, June 2--Cuba has embarked on the ambitious project of moulding thousands of youthful "new Africans" into revolutionaries, anti-imperialist, anti-racist and anti-colonialist.

The trainees, aged between 12 and 20 are to become the new cadres of their countries at 18 identical establishments on Cuba's "Youth Isle," formerly known as "Island of Pines."

They come from six sovereign African states--Angola, Congo, Ethiopia, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Sao Tome E Principe--and two liberation movements, fighting for the independence of the Western Sahara and Namibia.

There are also students from Nicaragua.

The youths are grouped by nationality in 18 schools built in the countryside where half the day is spent on classroom studies and the other half working in the fields.

Each establishment has both Cuban teachers as well as Africans who are the same nationality as their pupils. For instance, in the Namibia school there are 34 Cuban and eight Namibian teachers.

The African pupils have the same courses as Cuban children, plus special lessons in geography, history and politics adapted to their own countries.

Strict Schedule

It is a rule that all pupils are members of a revolutionary political organisation.

For instance, Tommy, born in Namibia, is affiliated to the youth movement of the South-West Africa Peoples' Organisation (SWAPO).

All pupils on Youth Island without exception have been granted Cuban scholarships which cover all their expenses.

They have a very strict, almost military, daily schedule, rising at 6:00 a.m. At a parade in their school square they hoist their national and Cuban flags while, standing to attention, they sing their own and the Cuban national anthems.

Friendship Theme

After the morning parade, two columns are formed: one marches off to the fields and the other to the classrooms.

There appear to be no disciplinary problems in the schools. The whole theme of their training is the international working class movement and friendship with Cuba.

A Namibian teacher explained: "Our pupils are here because they want to be here. They want to learn so that later they can help develop their countries, and our main problem is that they all want to be doctors or engineers."

This reasoning is shared by all the teachers--once the "revolution" wins in Namibia, the new government must not be faced with a lack of trained cadres, as Cuba was in 1959. These "new Africans" are here to see that there is no shortage of brainpower at that vital moment.

Own Newspapers

Jorge Martin, the Cuban director of a burgeoning SWAPO revolutionary school, said: "It is important that our pupils do not feel like Cubans, but Namibians. That is why we develop their own forms of culture like art, singing and dancing."

They are taught in Spanish, but they all speak and study in their own language. They regularly read their own newspapers, and at the SWAPO school press clippings are pinned up from "Namibia Today", SWAPO's own publication.

Each Sunday students can go into the nearby town of Nueva Gerona. They are given a little pocket money so that they can buy a cold soft drink or an ice-cream. It is here they meet other Cuban children and youths.

The visitor's main impression is the apparent political determination shown by the pupils. They have all completely memorised their political lessons and have absolutely no doubt as to the rightness of their cause.

Bullet for Tyrant

Take this slogan changed by Nicaraguan children: "A peso for a bullet and a bullet for the tyrant, because the sovereignty of the people is unquestioned and must be defended by force of arms. Sandinistas Command."

Guillermo was born 13 years ago at Matagalpa, Northern Nicaragua. He knows all these slogans by heart like all his friends. He is happy to be here, working in the orange groves and then studying in the classroom.

Naturally, he gets homesick, but he receives letters every two weeks and that seems to keep him content.

Leninist Conception

Javier, 17, is proud of the system here and the mixture of study and farming. "It is the implementation of the Leninist conception to form the new Soviet man," he said. He knows all about Lenin, having studied him here.

Presumably he will go on later to a Cuban agronomical centre before returning home when he is an adult to "improve farming" there.

There is enthusiasm everywhere, and one reads hatred in their eyes when they talk about colonialism, racism and imperialism.

They become exulted whenever they talk about their revolutionary leaders.

They all seem happy, well fed and enjoying good living conditions which they attribute to Cuba. They never stop chanting "Long Live Cuba-Angolan Friendship" or whatever their country is.

President Fidel Castro is ensuring that Cuba's presence in Africa will remain for at least one generation. (A.F.P.).

ITALIAN MINISTER COMMENTS ON SUPPORT TO MPLA

AB091034 Luanda ANGOP in French 0919 GMT 9 Jun 82

[Text] Mocamendes, 8 Jun (ANGOP)--Giorgio Chiacomeli, minister plenipotentiary at the Italian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, declared in Mocamedes (south-west Angola) that his country gives concrete support to the MPLA-Labor Party and the People's Republic of Angola under existing agreements between the two countries.

Talking to the local press just before his return to Luanda, Giorgio Chiacomeli said cooperation between Italy and Angola is gradually being strengthened.

The Italian minister, who is also the director general of cooperation and development, added that he had contacts at various levels with Angolan authorities with a view to strengthening the already-existing relations on the basis of assistance and mutual understanding. It is believed that these contacts have resulted in speeding up the execution of development projects.

Asked about his impression about activities of international imperialism in southern Angola, the Italian leader said the Italian Government will always give its support to the People's Republic of Angola whose struggle is followed with understanding by the Italian people.

In conclusion, he said we condemn racist South African maneuvers, as well as that of the so-called contact group, and we favor the independence of Namibia under the leadership of SWAPO, its sole and legitimate representative.

OILFIELD SUPPORT UNIT PROGRESS--Luanda, 10 Jun (ANGOP)--The first phase of the Kwanda Basein Zaire Province, northern Angola, will be inaugurated in September, according to a reliable source from the Angolan National Oil Company (SONANGOL). This first phase constitutes a support unit for the oilfields in oil production blocks 1 and 2 respectively (onshore and offshore) with a total production of approximately 50,000 barrels a day. It has been further indicated that this first phase of the base includes the construction of a road linking it with the oecean export terminal of Quifunquena, a heliport, warehouses and workshops. The Quifunquena terminal, it is said, has just been equipped with storage tanks that can hold 800,000 barrels of crude, in order to facilitate the loading of tankers at sea. UNDP CHIEF LEAVES COUNTRY IMPRESSED

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 10 May 82 p 2

[Article by Bapasi Mphusu]

[Text]

THE ASSISTANT Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), Mr Doo Kingue left Botswana on Wednesday with high impressions on how Botswana manages its economic development.

Mr Kingue, who was visiting Botswana at the invitation of the Government said in an interview with BOPA: "It is my very great satisfaction to notice that the government of Botswana manages very well its economy and have very well organised priorities."

The administrator is also the UNDP Regional Director for Africa incharge of the management of UNDP supported activities in 43 African countries except Algeria, Morocco, Tunisia, Libya, Sudan, Egypt and Djibouti.

Mr Doo Kingue said that it was a delight for the UNDP to deal with a country like Botswana and assured continued support by the UNDP for Botswana.

He pointed out that he was pleased that the UNDP-supported projects in Botswana "are bringing a significant contribution to the development of the country."

"All these projects impress me for the impact they are facing in the development of the economy of your country," said Mr Doo Kingue.

The projects visited by Mr Doo Kingue included the Botswana Institute of Administration and Commerce (BIAC), the Agricultural Research Station at Sebele and the Soil Mapping project. He also visited the Rice Project in Maun for which there is a UNDP volunteer and the Okavango Delta.

In addition to the UNDP bilateral cooperation with Botswana, the UNDP official said: "We have committed ourselves to intensify and increase our cooperation with the nine member countries of the Southern African Development Coordination Conference (SADCC)."

Mr Doo Kingue's impressions about the management of the economic development of Botswana resulted from his visits to some of the UNDP supported projects and the discussions with leaders of the country.

He met with President Dr Q.K.J. Masire, three cabinet ministers, Dr G. Chiepe of Mineral Resources and Water Affairs, Mr Washington Meswele of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance and Development Planning, Mr Peter Mmusi.

He described the Finance Minister as the UNDP contact of the UNDP Resident Representative in Gaborone.

With Mr Mmusi he held two meetings reviewing all aspects of UNDP-Botswana cooperation. According to Mr Doo Kingue the second meeting was a round up after visiting and meeting other ministers and seeing UNDP supported projects in Gaborone.

He said that his meetings with ministers enabled him to discuss specific problems concerning the development of departments which the ministers were incharge of.

Explaining the reasons for his visit Mr Doo Kingue said that he was here to discuss with the Government the status of UNDP-Botswana cooperation and also assess how relevant the cooperation was to the needs of Batswana.

He added that he was consulting with the Government on overall cooperation between UNDP and African and particularly on aspects of the cooperation concerning southern Africa.

"As you know Botswana is the headquarters of SADCC, an organisation, the creation of which we very well welcome," Mr Doo Kingue said.

In addition to the management of UNDP supported activities in 43 African countries Mr Doo Kingue said that he was also responsible for cooperation between UNDP and all the continental bodies like the Organisation African Unity, Economic Commission for Africa.

Also, he added, he was responsible for the intergovernmental organisations which have sub-regional and regional responsibilities like SADCC and the Economic Community for West African States (ECOWAS), and the African Development Bank and the Arab Bank for African Development.

LOW FOOD HARVEST--Botswana will face a low food harvest this year. This was announced in a press release from the Division of Planning and Statistics. "According to the Agricultural Statistics Unit's assessments of the standing crop, there is little optimism about the 1982 crop production prospects," says the release. It goes on: "Current projections estimate the 1982 production of the four food crops--sorghum, maize, millet and beans/pulses--to be between 17 000 and 22 000 metric tons. In 1980 and 1981 the crop farmers in the country produced 44 800 and 54 300 metric tons, respectively. "The planted area is currently estimated between 128 and 147 thousand hectarage. Consequently, the present forecast should not be treated as invilate. It will be revised as more information becomes available. "Seen against the background of the above average 1981 agricultural situation, the current year's projection is down because of the decrease in both average yields and planted hectarage. "The major contributions to the presently unfavourable situation were, among other things, the prevalence of adverse seasonal weather and the high incidence of aphid infestation on crops," added the release. MOGADISHU RADIO COMMENTS ON ETHIOPIA-SUDAN RELATIONS

EA082122 Mogadishu Domestic Service in Somali 1115 GMT 8 Jun 82

[Text] The Addis Ababa regime has begun causing chaos in Sudan. Our commentary on this issue is read to you by Muhammad Umar Khayreh.

The Russian regime, Addis Ababa's (?teacher), is known to be bringing chaos and confusion to Abyssinia's neighbors, whose policies run counter to those ugly Soviet policies which work against the interests of the region's masses. Another known factor is the Mengistu regime's efforts over the past few years to implement Moscow's policies, in particular its great interest in expansion and control of the Red Sea. The regime also made an unholy alliance with Libya. The Abyssinian regime is also known still to be dominating various nationalities who are constantly fighting to win their freedom.

The Abyssinian regime failed miserably with its so-called "red star" campaign aimed at exterminating the Eritrean liberation movement. [Words indistinct] Moscow and Libya brought a contingent of 200,000 troops, including Cubans and Russians. Mengistu also transferred his defense headquarters to Asmara. The campaign, whose aim was to create terror and fear, gained nothing but immense losses for its troops. When Abyssinians became embarrassed by the campaign, Moscow advised them to woo Sudan and make it stop its assistance to the Eritrean fighters. A delegation was sent from Addis Ababa to discuss the matter with President Numayri. The delegation held low-key talks with Sudanese leaders and came back with no concrete success.

Immediately after the delegation's return to Addis Ababa, there was intense activity in Sudan. Members of the armed forces, including security forces, numbering 50,000, were put on full alert and mobilized [words indistinct] the Abyssinian regime. Sudanese helicopters now daily patrol the border between the two countries, especially the towns of al-Qadarif and [name indistinct].

Military reports from Sudan indicate that the Abyssinians are arming and infiltrating into Sudan two antigovernment factions. The reports say one of these groups is led by a former Sudanese paratrooper by the name of (Yaqub Ismail), who defected from Sudan in 1976. He and another man by the name of (Ansheri) have established a base in (Zimeyra), near the Sudanese border. The aim of these factions is to cause chaos and confusion in Sudan.

A Sudanese Government spokesman said clashes took place on the Sudan-Abyssinian border, during which several arms caches were unearthed. The spokesman added that in the last 6 months, fierce fighting took place along the border, but worse came in the past 2 weeks, when Abyssinian forces and Sudanese Government forces exchanged machinegun and artillery fire, although no casualties were reported.

It is known that Sudan is well aware of Addis Ababa's evil activities against the Sudanese Government. The Russian regime [words indistinct] Addis Ababa wants to carry out an undeclared war against Sudan.

Sudan is aware of Russian conspiracies in the Horn of Africa. An anti-Sudanese conspiracy is also being hatched in Libya. At Khartoum airport recently, various weapons were seized which came from Libya via Addis Ababa. Bombs have also been detonated in Khartoum, but the merchants of death were brought to court and sentenced accordingly.

There is no doubt that the campaign Addis Ababa regime attempts to wage against Sudan has been masterminded by Libya and Addis Ababa with the knowledge of Moscow. However, it is very difficult for it to succeed in their campaign since the Sudanese Government and people are aware of the plot: Similar plots have already been carried out by these countries. It is also known that they have carried out naked aggression against the Somali Democratic Republic, although they have always met with defeat and (?shame).

ELF-PLF CALLS ON EEC TO STOP AID TO ETHIOPIA

GF091305 Doha QNA in Arabic 0957 GMT 9 Jun 82

[Text] Mogadishu, 9 Jun (QNA)--Osman Saleh Sabbe, chairman of the executive committee of the ELF-PLF, has announced that the front asked the EEC countries to halt whatever aid it was giving to the regime in Ethiopia because it is abusing this aid for military purposes.

In a statement to QNA in Mogadishu, Sabbe, who is currently visiting Somalia, said that he had informed the EEC member countries that the continuation of this aid by the EEC will lead to bolstering the Soviet expansionist policy in the Red Sea--which would pose danger to the interests of the EEC countries in Bab El Mandeb since the Eritrean forces will be forced to hinder navigation in Bab El Mandeb and even carry out operations of hijacking or sabotage if this aid continues.

Osman Sabbe added the Eritrean forces have been waging a battle of struggle and heroism for more than 20 years. As a result, 130,000 martyrs of the Eritrean people and forces have been killed and 1 million Eritreans have become refugees in Sudan. Sabbe expects a new Ethiopian assault against the Eritrean forces this summer and during the rainy season.

Regarding the Ethiopian plans against Sudan, Sabbe said the Ethiopians are trying to invade Sudan and topple the national government there in order to establish a pro-Moscow communist government and cut of reinforcement lines to Eritrea.

Regarding efforts being made to close the ranks of the Eritrean fronts and organizations, Sabbe said Chadli Klibi, the secretary general of the Arab League, is currently trying to reunite these organizations and fronts at a meeting to be held in Tunis, "and there is great hope that the reunification and closure of ranks will be successful after the schism which has weakened Eritrean stands."

ERITREAN OFFICIAL ON UNIFICATION OF FACTIONS

GF021212 Doha QNA in Arabic 0830 GMT 2 Jun 82

[Text] Abu Dhabi, 2 Jun (QNA)--Ramadan Mohamed Nour, secretary general of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Eritrea [EPLF], has reiterated his call for the unification of all fighting Eritrean groups in order to work for the achievement of a comprehensive national unity among the children of the Eritrean people and in order to accomplish the right to self-determination and national independence.

The Eritrean official, who is currently visiting the UAE, said: "We consider national unity a fundamental issue and a strategic question, whether for the purpose of fighting against the Ethiopian enemy or on the level of the future of Eritrea."

He indicated that efforts are underway to unite the groups of the Eritrean revolution in the fighting arena and in political action. [words indistinct]

In a statement published in AL-WAHDAH here today, the Eritrean official said that the Arab League's efforts to unite the various resistance groups during 1981 succeeded to a certain extent, as far as foreign policy and military actions are concerned, but this did not last for more than 6 months, following which fighting broke out between the Popular Front for the Liberation of Eritrea and the Revolutionary Council due to a disagreement on negotiating with Ethiopia, particularly with regard to the issue of autonomy. He indicated that the Popular Front rejects the autonomy that was proposed by Ethiopia and insists on the right to self-determination.

CVC URGED TO HUNT FOR BIG-TIME FRAUD

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 24 May 82 p 2

[Editorial: "Role of the CVC"]

[Text]

THE Greater Accra branch of the June 4 Movement has urged the Citizens Vetting Committee (CVC) to go for the big fish in its efforts to bring accountability home to those who have destroyed the nation's economy through their fraudulent get-rich-quick business deals.

What the CVC has been doing so far, the Movement holds, amounts to merely chasing clerks, the rank and file. Certainly, if the Makola woman, the one-shelf shopkeeper, the messenger or the labourer is corrupt, he must pay for it. But these are the secondary causes of the nation's economic destruction.

The revolutionary demand for accountability for the economic destruction goes deeper than these. The political basis of the revolution is national democracy, which requires the dismantling of the neo-colonialist economic relations. Unfortunately, up till now the bulk of the cases dealt with by the CVC have failed to tackle this fundamental problem.

This fundamental problem cannot be effectively tackled by chasing the indigenous petty bourgeoisie; it must be tackled by bringing to book the international exploiters in our midst, the comprador capitalists fronting for external interests, and their local allies using the cover of the national bureaucracy.

Many of the people vetted so far are people who changed their money on the black market. They deserve their punishment. But what about the big-time racketeers who brought goods into the country on SUL, sold them at high prices and obtained approval for the Suppliers Credits and transferred the money at the bank rate?

What about the foreign-owned companies which run their business almost permanently on bank overdraft and yet always make profits to be transferred?

Where are the greedy big-time suppliers and the local manufacturers who used their influence with the big politicians who ruled the country, top civil servants who wrote the approval memos, and top officials of the commercial banks and Bank of Ghana to acquire and utilize fat import licences and Suppliers Credits?

FOREIGNERS

We are not hearing anything about the foreigners who "chop Ghana small." What is happening to them?

Where are those who turned the PNP into their private enterprise, cleared everyone else away from the Limann government and turned it into a willing puppet organization for import licence and Suppliers Credit appropriation and distribution to accomplices? The CVC must tackle the PNP gurus who shouted Nkrumah but kept the Nkrumaists at bay, made the party a veritable 'PNP Company (Suppliers and Importers)' and became its sole owners. The CVC must tackle these brokers before tackling the whole country.

The CVC should shy away from the type of sensationalism that creates a bang but reveals nothing. That is what the CVC has so far achieved.

But the people must assist the CVC. Where are the businessmen who used to frequent the corridors of power in the Limann era? Have they vanished into thin air? The CVC must be aided to unearth them. The PDCs of the Ministries of Industry and Trade should publish the names of the fat import licence and Suppliers Credit beneficiaries so that the CVC can do a more useful job for the revolution.

For, if the CVC continues as it is currently doing, it would achieve no more than the fruitless result of trying to kill a tree by pruning the branches instead of cutting the roots. If it goes on this way, it would create adverse effects on tax payment and banking. Formerly mainly people who pay turnover tax kept their money away from the banks; now more people are doing so.

The National Economic Review Committee has the job of solving the liquidity problem caused by tax evasion and too much of the nation's money in foreign hands. The cash of Ghana is not controlled by Ghanaians, otherwise we would not have been saddled as we are by a neo-colonialist economy. Hence any investigation and vetting which has the indigenous petty bourgeois mainly as the focus will not achieve much.

FREE GERMAN YOUTH PRAISED AT GDR PICTURE EXHIBITION

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 24 May 82 pp 4-5

[Text] A week-long picture exhibition on the history and development of the Free German Youth, the national youth movement of the German Democratic Republic (GDR), has opened in Accra at the Exhibition Hall of the Ghana Library Board.

The exhibition was mounted by the Ghana/GDR Friendship Society in conjunction with the GDR Embassy in Accra.

Speaking at the ceremony, Mr Zaya Yeebo, PNDC Secretary for Youth and Sports, regretted the disbandment of the Ghana Young Pioneers Movement by the National Liberation Council government after the 1966 coup.

He said the action dealt a deadly blow to the efforts of the country to develop an anti-imperialist youth movement.

The Secretary noted that the movement spearheaded the mobilisation of young people for industrial, agricultural, social and cultural projects as a means of preparing them for their future role as dedicated and responsible citizens.

Mr Zaya Yeebo said the government has plans to mobilise the youth who form about 60 percent of the population, for the task of national reconstruction.

In this connection, the National Youth Organising Commission had been charged with the establishment of a mass national democratic youth movement within six months from last March 3.

Mr Yeebo said unemployed youth and existing youth organisations in the country would be brought under the newly formed Youth and Students Task Force at the start of the mass democratic youth movement.

Ms Ama Ata-Aidoo PNDC, Secretary for Education, who opened the exhibition called for effective mobilisation of the Ghanaian youth to make their impact felt in the nation reconstruction efforts.

Ms Ata-Aidoo said Ghanaians should be inspired by the achievements of the Free German Youth and help the country take great strides toward development.

Mr Herbert Denzier, GDR Ambassador, hoped the achievement of the Free German Youth would inspire the younger generation of Ghana in tackling the noble task ahead.

Mr John Kwajoe, acting chairman of the National Youth Organising Commission, chaired the function.

MILITARY ACADEMY GRADUATION--Out-going graduates of the Ghana Military Academy and Training School have been reminded that a commission in the army is not a free ticket to positions of rank and privilege, nor does it give one a key to wealth and golden beds. This was contained in a speech delivered by the Army Commander, Brigadier Arnold Quainoo when he reviewed the graduation parade of 37 officer cadets of the Academy at Teshie near Accra yesterday. He said commission in the army will give them nothing but unlimited opportunities to be of service to their motherland. The Army Commander explained that all over the world and herein Ghana changes of very spectacular dimensions were taking place almost every day. Officer cadet D Tamatary was awarded the military Cane for being adjuged the best all-round cadet. Among the graduating cadets were three Sierra Leoneans. NEGLECT OF STATE FARMS--The root cause of the unproductive nature of the State Farms Corporation (STAFAMS) is apparently due to the fact that a good number of the corporation's farms have been neglected. Over 27,000 acres Oil Palm Plantations spread over four regions in the country, have been virtually abandoned even though most of them are ready for harvesting. The reason given for this sad state of affairs is that the corporation cannot get money to pay its labour force at the various farms with the result that most of them have left for other jobs. Workers of the Corporation of Akonfodi in the Central Region, Kwame Danso and Wenchi in the Brong-ahafo Region and Begoro in the Eastern Region have not been paid for the past five months. Consequently, the corporation has not been in a position to maintain its farms let alone harvest the ripe fruits. Most of the tractors, trucks and other vehicles belonging to the corporation have broken down whilst those on the road need tyres and other parts to keep them running efficiently. The PNDC member who was inaugurating defence committees of two units of the People's Army said this education would give the army the true character of a people's army. He stressed that the government's ideology was geared towards ensuring the well-being of Ghanaians. It could be summed up as the "wish of the people" he added. The newly inaugurated PDCs were for the Armed Forces Training Centre and the Logistics Services of the army, both in Tamale. [Excerpt] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 20 May 82 p 6]

BREWERIES CLOSING--All the three breweries in the country--Accra Brewery Limited, Achimota Brewery Company and Kumasi Brewery Limited will soon close down due to shortage of raw materials. Investigations conducted by the Graphic have revealed that the Accra Brewery is now producing at 60 percent capacity, Kumasi Brewery Limited at 35 percent and Achimota Brewery Company at 10 percent and that the breweries face imminent closure. The Achimota Brewery will most probably close down by the middle of next month, the Accra Brewery by the end of that month with the Kumasi Brewery closing down by early September. In an interview with the Graphic in Accra yesterday, Mr Peter Berhard, Managing Director of the Accra Brewery disclosed that last year his company had an import licence of ¢11.3 million which was to last for 12 months. But this, he said, has been stretched into 17 months by cutting down on production. Mr Berhard revealed that last year the company paid to the state ¢160 million as Customs and Excise duties and even though the company applied for ¢25 million import licence this year, up till now nothing has been heard about the application. PEOPLE'S TRIBUNALS OPERATION--People's Tribunals which will try persons who have committed various crimes against the state will soon start sitting, a member of the PNDC, Mr Amartey Kwei has announced in Accra. The tribunals will be composed of not only judges and lawyers but laymen including soldiers. Mr Kwei, who disclosed this at the official opening of the Alajo People's Market yesterday said those who thought the tempo of the Revolution was gradually dying out were deceiving themselves. The PNDC believes in using tact and patience in bringing about changes in the society. He noted that things had even gone worse than they used to be because of the continued petty malpractices of market women. These women, he said, would whilst workers were at work, queue for essential goods and sell them later to their fellow women at high prices. He said kalabule, which has eaten deep into the fabric of the Ghanaian society, must be totally eliminated at all cost. "If thousands of people should die to serve this purpose, they must die," he declared. The PNDC member appealed to the women to adhere to the advice of the Government and sell their wares at reasonable prices. He commended the local PDC for their vigilance and made it clear that PDCs were a force to reckon with. They must not be underrated. [Text] [Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 19 May 82 p 8]

It said the offer was the result of discussions the Principal Secretary of the Ministry of Rural Development and Co-operatives had with a two-man Indian delegation which visited the country recently. NAIROBI PAPER ATTACKS UNIVERSITY 'AGITATORS'

EA071800 Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 7 Jun 82 p 4

[Editorial: "Crackdown on Agitators"]

[Text] His excellency the president, Mr Daniel Arap Moi, has vowed to root out plotters and agitators from within the Kenyan nation. In this decision, our leader has the unwavering support and confidence of the overwhelming majority of his people at every level and aspect of national life.

It is extremely easy to identify that minuscule element of misguided individuals that does not support President Moi in his commitment and determination to foster peace, stability and progress in this country.

The fact that they are known and have been tolerated for so long, speaks highly of the calibre of the man that Kenyans have chosen to lead them. It puts them to shame and were they worthy of their convictions, they would have ceased to operate under often government-financed jobs and come out in the open to peddle their foreign ideologies and disruptive teachings.

It is because they know that few Kenyans would listen to them that they choose to manipulate gullible young men and women using ill-gotten gains for foreign elements, that do not have the interests of this country at heart.

We have in mind those university lecturers who consider that academia is the ideal milieu for cowardly agitators. They have turned the honourable pursuit of knowledge into the disreputable medium of poisoning young minds. This fundamental right of the individual to pursue knowledge, is being greatly abused by people who are at the same time maintained at public cost.

One of their activities was revealed yesterday; students at various institutions are being instigated to purchase guns and Maasai swords so that they can deal with those who do not support them when they decide to cause chaos on the campus.

Those who are instigating them--and again we must repeat that they constitute a tiny minority of teachers in our institutions of higher learning--are supposed to be grooming young men and women for a better life through academic attainment and application.

One has to wonder which responsible person or parent would set out deliberately to guide a younger person along a course of violence and destruction.

There are certain elementary questions that these agitators at the campus should be asked to answer. What, for example, was their behaviour during their studies that enabled them to attain their present positions? Did they practise what they are attempting to teach--the senseless rebellion, intimidation, cowardice and slovenly behaviour that they want our youth to adopt.

Most certainly not. They were as likely as not snivelling sycophants which made it easy for disgruntled and vindictive teachers of permanent revolution to shovel their mumbo jumbo into them.

Why then, should they be tolerated and worse still paid to continue with their evil deeds? The nation has a basic responsibility to educate the youth and to mould it into better people for their own sake and for the good of the country.

We do not need these few elements, either on the campus or in public life who are seeking to retard and ultimately destroy the nation. Kenyans have a right to ask that they be consigned to where they belong and we support the president in the constitutional steps that he takes to deal with them.

POLICE COMMISSIONER BANS ISLAMIC PARTY DEMONSTRATION

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 22 Apr 82 p 4

> [Excerpts] The demonstration that Yousouf Mohamed's Mauritian Islamic Party (PIM) was planning to hold tomorrow in front of the Ministry of Employment to support a demand for jobs for unemployed Muslims has been banned by Police Commissioner M. A. Rajarai. The organizers were officially informed yesterday, in a letter addressed to them from police headquarters.

In that letter, the police commissioner said that the demonstration could not be approved since the Council of Ministers generally meets on Friday. He pointed out to them that the demonstration organized by jobleee graduates 2 weeks ago was banned, and that those who had disobeyed police orders were arrested.

Yousouf Mohamed, one of the PIM's main spokesmen, took advantage of a meeting held at Camp Yoloff yesterday afternoon to announce to his supporters that because of the police commissioner's decision, the party had decided not to go ahead with the demonstration. Commenting on that decision, Mr Mohamed noted the problems his party has been having.

In that connection, he said that party posters have even been torn down by agents of opposing parties.

Mr Harish Boodhoo, leader of the Mauritian Socialist Party (PSM), was taken to task severely during that meeting by a number of speakers coming to the podium one after the other, among them Yousouf Mohamed himself and Ismael Nawoor and Sedick Naudeer, two former members of the MMM [Mauritian Militant Movement]. According to the PIM, Harish Boodhoo has shown himself guilty of demagoguery, and even simple-mindedness, through his recent assertion of support for creation of a ministry of religion. "This issue is one that could create problems for Mauritians. Who will take on the duties of minister of religion? Will it be a member of Seva Shivir? Will it be a Hindu, a Muslim or a Christian? And what criteria will be used to choose him? Mr Boodhoo should answer all these questions," Yousouf Mohamed said.

The speaker warned his supporters against the PSM.

Commenting on the current situation in the Labor Party and the CAM [Muslim Action Committee], Mohamed said that "the things that are happeneing now prove we were right to have left Labor. Today," he said, "CAM will only say that the Labor Party is going to return to power, with or without the Muslims. CAM has let itself be humiliated by Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo and Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolan. Razack Peeroo should have submitted his resigation after the Stanley-Diljore affair,"

It is inconceivable, Mr Mohamed opined, that the leader of the Labor Party should order the Police Riot Unit to beat up its own activities. "It is shameful," he said. Mr Mohammed assured his supporters that he has nothing in common with the current Labor Party Leadership. All the same, he added , the Labor Party would have had the best candidate in Moka/Quartier Militaire--but instead he chose to leave his party and fight for the Muslim with the support of the PLM.

SWAPO DELEGATE ADDRESSES NONALIGNED IN HAVANA

FL051853 Havana Domestic Television Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 5 Jun 82

Here is an excerpt from the SWAPO representative's speech:

[Begin recording in English with consecutive Spanish translation] We urge all the movement's members to condemn, denounce and firmly reject the Reagan administration's policies in terms of its purported policy of friendship and alliance with the Nazi-like regime of Pretoria and because it is carrying out reactionary, hostile and constant propaganda and disinformation plans against SWAPO. Ours are patriotic struggles of the oppressed masses to liberate their beloved homelands. Therefore, we reject all attempts to portray our movement as a party or to link our struggle to the East-West conflict. We urge the meeting to do the same. SWAPO continues to enjoy from international assistance, support and solidarity. We believe this is so because our cause is just and legitimate. It is the cause of self-determination, independence and national sovereignty. [end recording]

DETAILS OF CANTONAL ELECTION RESULTS REPORTED

Saint-Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 22 Mar 82 pp 2, 3

[Text] Following the announcement of the cantonal election results, FR3 organized a discussion yesterday evening, first on radio then on television, by Reunion political leaders.

Listeners were no doubt amazed by the intemperate remarks of Wilfrid Bertile, no doubt upset by his failure in the Saint-Pierre second canton.

He accused our party specifically of a "sabotage action" against the Socialist candidates and of "doing everything to shatter the union of the left." As for his statements to LE MONDE, Wilfrid Bertile said that the Reunionese Communist Party [RCP] had used these "as a pretext for a scheme" against the Socialist Party [SP].

After hearing Wilfrid Bertile's remarks at Saint-Denis, our colleague Paul Verges has tried to present the true facts and has said he is going to tell the people of Reunion the truth about Bertile's statements to LE MONDE. Instead of accusing the RCP leaders, he would do better to recognize their efforts to repair the damage caused by his statements and the great harm done to the entire left and his own friends.

Jean-Claude Fruteau, first secretary of the Socialist Federation, said yesterday evening that the report of the Saint-Benoit vote was correct and that the second round vote was indeed larger than the vote in the first round, thereby showing that when there is a united effort the left wins. He added: "This is no time to engage in polemics within the left."

During the television debate, representatives of the left avoided any polemics in their remarks, which were very constructive. Gilbert Annette, for the Socialist Party, called for a strategic union of the left on the basis of Point 58 of the president of the republic's program (proportional election of a single assembly). As he had on radio, Paul Verges rose above polemics by saying that it was high time to go beyond the stage of intentions and really work to achieve a solid union of the left and of all democrats, all of whom are concerned about developing their country.

He proposed, therefore, that the leaders of the parties of the left meet soon to work energetically to achieve a solid union in anticipation of the major struggles of 1983.

COMMUNIQUE OF SOCIALIST PARTY FEDERATION CRITICIZED

Saint-Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 2 Apr 82 p 2

[Text] The Socialist Party Federation executive committee met on Saturday, 27 March. A communique reporting the results of the proceedings was published in QUOTIDIEN yesterday, 1 April.

The communique cited a number of objectives and facts that TEMOIGNAGES has already reported.

It pointed out that when the left was mobilized it won considerably more votes in the second round than in the first. This is a sign that the union of the left is producing a favorable reaction in the country.

The Socialist Federation executive committee reaffirmed:

1. The need to establish a single assembly by proportional election; and it called on all its elected representatives to work for this objective at all levels.

2. "The need to rally the popular forces and the need for progress on a development program."

The primary requirement is a will for unity on all sides. The Reunionese Communist Party [RCP] has already made a new proposal for a meeting to the Socialist Federation in a letter dated 30 March 1982.

Facts

However, there is another aspect to the Socialist Federation communique: The voters themselves will be the judges of any failure to transfer votes, and "the RCP bears the responsibility for the defeat" of Socialist candidates in the second round.

We regret this new attack, but we fully agree that the voters of the left are the best judges of responsibility, particularly on the basis of what they saw and heard, an anticommunist propaganda conducted by certain Socialist Party members and candidates as well as efforts to corrupt.

The voters will be the judges when they see first hand the disunity and the arguments of the right on independence used against the RCP. For years, the right has done everything to pin this image on the RCP, without the Communist Party being able to respond even once.

This is what some Socialist Party members and candidates have been doing, without recognizing that this harms the entire left. The voters will reflect on this when they become aware of it.

It is a question of facts, which should make everyone think.

Before the first round of cantonal elections, we approached the originators of these attacks and pointed out that they were very negative. We have refused to publicly engage in polemics, and therefore the polemics are not our fault.

On the other hand, after Wilfrid Bertile delivered his veritable act of aggression against the RCP, did the Socialist Federation executive committee wish us to keep quiet, when the clear intentions had been affirmed in the 13 March LE MONDE? Should we have concealed the fact? We would have assumed a serious political responsibility by hiding this from the voters, who would have been certain to criticize us for it. Who is responsible for the polemics?

Clarification

The attack on our party appeared in the 13 March LE MONDE, and Wilfrid Bertile knew that it would be published during the election campaign; it was he, therefore, who opened fire. TEMOIGNAGES naturally responded. And as far as we know, until notified to the contrary, Wilfrid Bertile is a leader and an elected representative of the Socialist Party.

In these circumstances, should we attach any importance to what Bertile says? Or, indeed, is he saying out loud what others are thinking privately? These are important items to be clarified.

When, on 22 March 1982, Daniel Cadet declared on television that he was "fed up" with bearing the responsibility for the division on the left during the 1981 legislative election, because he was simply carrying out instructions, Wilfrid Bertile was at that time first secretary of the Socialist Federation.

Political honesty demands that the truth be told.

Thus, in regard to responsibility for starting the polemic, the executive committee of the Socialist Federation should be more objective, especially since it has not silenced the individual who poured oil on the fire.

We need only look at the current case of a man of the right like Jacques Dambreville saying publicly that the right should unite with the Socialists to block the way for the RCP in Saint-Pierre (QUOTIDIEN, 26 March 1982, p 5). Was that not the result of political maneuvers during the cantonal elections, maneuvers to which Camille Gerard was referring?

Should we conceal this from the voters or demand an explanation, a reply, from the Socialist Federation, which has thus been faulted?

More Obstacles

In summary, if the executive committee of the Socialist Federation had discussed the RCP's many proposals for a meeting and an agreement on a joint platform of "no opponent on the left and reciprocal withdrawal," none of these problems would exist today.

However, better late than never; and from the communique, once again, we stress the main point: Both parties are ready to meet without conditions. If the RCP is attacked, it will systematically reply. It will not do so willingly but as a political duty to the public, which demands that matters be made clear.

Thus, there is no further obstacle to a meeting.

It is not a matter of provoking a polemic, neither of provoking nor continuing a polemic, which would lead to a response and then require the establishment of the condition: "No more polemic."

All that is needed is to stop the feuding, period.

Therefore, we await with interest the response to the RCP's latest letter of 30 March 1982 calling for a meeting. If there is agreement on that, then we will embark on a genuine union of the left and the right will be defeated in Reunion in the coming months.

CHURCHMEN ATTEND NUCLEAR CONFERENCE IN MOSCOW

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 31 May 82 p 2

[Text] Sierra Leone was among 590 delegates and guests from 90 countries attending a world conference on "Religious workers for saving the sacred gift of life from nuclear catastrophe" held in Moscow, USSR recently.

Rev Jeremiah Pratt, one of two Sierra Leonean churchmen who attended the conference said "The conference made it possible for representatives of different religions to meet and discuss the problem of vital concern for all people of the planet: the preservation and consolidation of peace.

The other delegate was Canon Harry Sawyerr.

Speaking to correspondents in Moscow, Rev Pratt said "The conference launched a fervent appeal to safeguard peace by promoting understanding among countries and peoples.

"We have discussed how to prevent a nuclear catastrophe and adopted resolutions. Now we expect a response from Heads of States who should meet and negotiate disarmament problems."

Delving on the relations between the USSR and Sierra Leone, Rev Pratt noted their friendly character and expressed appreciation for the USSR's aid in training national personnel for Sierra Leone.

Rev Pratt ended up by saying "When meeting Soviet people we sensed their striving to friendship and peace among nations."

MEMBERSHIP IN ISLAMIC DEVELOPMENT BANK REPORTED

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 28 May 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] Sierra Leone has become the 42nd member of the Islamic Development Bank.

This followed the recommendation of the Board of Executive Directors and the Board of Governors of the Bank at a meeting presenting being held in Turkey.

The Minister of Finance, Mr Salia Jusu Sheriff in thanking the Board of Governors on behalf of the Government for accepting Sierra Leone's admission to the Bank, assured the meeting that the government and people of this country highly appreciated the importance and obligation that go with such membership.

He noted with delight that when Sierra Leone indicated her intention to assume full membership of the Bank the President of the Bank and his staff responded with remarkable speed and effectiveness.

He added that their effort had ensured the presence of his delegation at the meeting.

Sierra Leone, the Minister said, was fully aware of the ideals and aspirations that inspired the founder members of the Islamic Development Bank.

He affirmed that the case of the least developed of the developing countries to which Sierra Leone belongs could not be better presented than has been done by Dr Ahmad Mohamed Ali, President and Chairman of the Board of Executive Directors in his review of the international economic perspectives and its impact on member countries.

Mr Jusu-Sheriff was confident that with such a case so convincingly presented in the Sixth Annual report there would be understanding and support of the Bank, in our effort to improve our overall economic situation.

The Minister spoke of the reluctance and hesitance of the major industrialised countries to meet the targets set for aid and the transfer of resources to the least developed countries.

It was therefore pleasing to note the generosity and willingness of some of our brothers in the Islamic Development Bank to alleviate the worst effects of underdevelopment and improve the equality of life in the least developed countries, Mr Jusu-Sheriff added.

The Finance Minister told members that his delegation has been encouraged by what has transpired and will be stimulated with ideals on their returning home and wished the Bank prosperity in its future efforts to promote the well-being of the citizens of its member states.

ALLEGED SALE OF ARMS TO ARGENTINA DISCUSSED

Confusing Policy Statements

Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES in English 30 May 82 p 2

[Article by Ivor Wilkins: "Anatomy of a Muddle"]

[Text]

THE prospect of South Africa arming the Argentine regime in its struggle against the British Government had to be taken seriously.

And, after all the bluster and the denials, it still is.

British spokesmen have made it quite clear, in diplomatically couched terms, that Whitehall is not entirely satisfied that South Africa's responses to the allegations have closed the matter.

In reply to queries from the Sunday Times a British Embassy spokesman said his government had noted South Africa's assurance that it was not supplying and would not supply Exocet missiles to Argentina.

Concern

It had also noted the Defence Minister's denial that missiles or aircraft parts have been provided before or during the Falklands conflict.

"Her Majesty's Government has, however, also noted the limited scope of that denial and the fact that it concerns only the past and not the present or future," the spokesman said.

What is causing concern among sceptics is that South Africa has specifically denied supplying Exocet missiles, missiles in general and aircraft parts to the Argentinians.

They worry that that leaves open a host of other weaponry that South Africa may or may not be supplying.

Notwithstanding South Africa's denials, the depth of scepticism still felt in Whitehall was reflected in the embassy spokesman's response:

"We have impressed on the South African Government the strong hope that all military supplies will be suspended for the duration of the conflict."

The extraordinary events of Monday, which saw the South African Government dig in on a blunt refusal to talk about arms deals and then, within hours, turn its own policy upside down, has left political and diplomatic circles buzzing.

Immediately the allegations of South African arms supplies to Argentina became public, the Government's attitude was that it would not confirm or deny with whom it traded in arms.

Both the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, and the Foreign Minister, Mr Pik Botha, issued formal statements affirming that commitment.

"We will not be shifted from our position by politics," the Prime Minister said.

But within hours something had happened to cause the Government to completely reverse its position.

To the astonishment of Parliament, General Malan interrupted a night sitting of the House of Assembly to issue a denial:

"South Africa has not supplied or sold any missiles or aircraft parts before or after the Falklands crisis to Argentina."

Observers attribute the absolute reversal of policy to a number of possible factors.

There is a belief that the Government attempted a bold finesse against the British Government which backfired.

Resentful of Britain's arms embargo against South Africa and its withdrawal from the Simonstown Agreement, the Government might have wanted to deliberately allow Whitehall to labour under the apprehension that the Republic had weapons aplenty — arms embargoes notwithstanding — enough to spread around.

Dangers

Hence the calculatedly ambiguous stance.

But, in the vital hours that so completely reversed the Government's position, it is believed the dangers of this strategy were forcefully brought home to the South African leaders.

Europe was solidly behind Britain. America, whose tolerance towards South Africa is the first consideration in virtually all its foreign policy decisions, was backing Britain.

Britain has enormous trade with South Africa and is an influential ally under Mrs Thatcher's Conservative Government.

With a permanent seat in the United Nations Security Council, that is not something to be casually jeopardised.

That enough was cause to tread warily in choosing to side with Britain's opponents.

Certainly, British Government spokesmen were quick to point out that the British public would react with anger if the allegations were confirmed.

(There were other public reactions in Britain, too, however. The London Daily Express reckoned that if South African arms were used against British troops, successive British governments only had themselves to blame: by placing embargoes against South Africa, the biters had become the bitten.)

But, for South Africa's internal politics, the dangers were also enormous.

With a large proportion of the white population traditionally linked with Britain — particularly in times of war — the risk of repeating the awful divisions of the past and re-awakening Boer-Brit antagonisms inside South Africa would be considerable.

At a time when the Government is seeking new political alliances such divisions simply could not be afforded.

In at least three private meetings between senior Government Ministers — including the Prime Minister, the Defence Minister and the Foreign Minister — Opposition representatives made it clear how seriously they regarded the allegations.

Checks

They conveyed their determination to clarify the issue, either by way of formal questions in Parliament or in attempts to have the matter aired in a snap debate.

Observers believe it was considerations such as these — rammed home in a flurry of telegrams from abroad and from advice at home — that caused the dramatic backaway by the Government.

Subsequently, the Prime Minister has made lashing attacks on the newspapers that originally published the allegations and a formal police investigation is under way to establish whether there have been contraventions of two laws: The Defence Act and the Arms and Ammunition Act.

The newspapers concerned — all members of the Argus Company — have published accounts of the lengths to which they went to obtain Government reaction to the allegations.

Before publication, the allegations were submitted to the Ministries of Defence and Foreign Affairs and the Prime Minister was informed, according the accounts by the newspapers concerned.

The report was seen three times by the Department of Foreign Affairs "at very high level" and the original Government comment was amended, at their request, before the papers went on the streets.

The Star's political correspondent, Peter Sullivan, who broke the original story, commented: "I made all the checks I feel a reasonable journalist should make."

The lead-up to the local publication of the allegations began about two weeks ago when the suggestion that South Africa might be assisting Argentina with arms started to circulate in London.

At a time when every military expert and commentator in every news organ in Britain is engaged in dissecting the minutiae of the Falklands crisis, the question of arms supply to Argentina was an obvious subject of examination and South Africa was named as a possible source.

Inevitably, the question percolated back to South Africa and began to circulate in the political corridors towards the end of last week.

"Carefully placed diplomatic leaks" went out that military hardware ranging from "super-sophisticated sea-skimming Gabriel killer missiles to spares for Mirage fighter jets" had been supplied to Argentina.

The equipment, according to the story, had been loaded in crates marked "tractor spares" on to a transport aircraft parked in an isolated place at Cape Town's D F Malan Airport.

There is open speculation in political circles that British diplomatic sources planted the story to force the issue of South Africa's role into the open.

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 28 May 82 p 12

[Article by Jaap Boekkooi: "Weapons Row Puts SA in Spotlight"]

[Text]

Controversy over allegations concerning South African weapons shipments to Argentina has focused international attention on this country's thriving arms industry.

The implication of the storm for war watchers is that South Africa can export weapons of the calibre of the Gabriel missile, or weapons which have the potential to sink the QE2, the Canberra and some warships.

Headlines in newspapers across the world gave the South African armaments industry free advertising.

Before this week's furore the international public was hardly aware that South Africa produced and could sell missiles with the capacity to sink a ship from a launch-pad invisible to the enemy and over the horizon.

The Falklands war and the possibility of South Africa exporting sophisticated and electronically - guided "slingshots" has given this country more military punch.

The basic facts are well known in military circles: the production of Mirage jets and spares, Impala jets, the Cactus (or Crotale) below-radar missile batteries to counter air attack, air-to-air missiles, the G5 155 mm cannon which hits targets accurately at 42 km, the Panhard, Ratel and Eland armoured cars, which are said to have been sold on foreign markets and other weapons systems.

In the naval field the country can produce frigates and corvettes. In ammunition 141 different calibres are turned out.

And then there is speculation abroad that South Africa has the capacity to assemble a nuclear device from locally made compoponents

Armscor, the giant of the South African arms industry, was brought into being by Act of Parliament after the international arms boycott of the Seventies.

Today Armscor provides work for about 100 000 people — compared with SA Breweries' 66 000, Barlow Rand's 197 000 and Anglo-De Beer's 250 000.

It has 450 main and sub-contractors and 1 500 other firms making its "nuts and bolts."

Nobody knows Armscor's carefully classified budget but having turned South Africa into the 10th largest arms manufacturer in the world it obviously runs into the thousands of millions.

That tenth place may seem high, but it is far behind giants like Russia, the United States and China, which spend between R100 000 million and R30 000 million a year on arms.

Then come France, West Germany, Britain and Israel, making South Africa a clear second-ranker in the industry of death.

The extent of South Africa's arms factories and exports will probably never be known because the set-up is heavily protected by at least four Acts — the Defence Act, the Armaments Development Act, the National Supplies Act and the Arms and Ammunition Act, flanked by the Atomic Energy Act and the Uranium Enrichment Act.

But the fact that a plane load of modern weaponry and spares from this country could have the effect of tipping the scales in a war between Britain and Argentina will make people in world capitals gasp and take notice.

MORE COMPLETE UNDERSTANDING OF SWAPO URGED

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 28 May 82 p 25

[Article by Carolyn Dempster: "SA Must Face Reality, Says Prof. View of SWAPO 'Too Simplistic'"]

[Text]

It is inaccurate and dangerous to portray Swapo simply as a puppet of Russia, Professor John Barratt (right) told University of the Witwatersrand graduates last night. CAROLYN DEMPSTER, The Star's Education Reporter, recorded his address.

To regard Swapo simply as a monolithic marxist organisation and a puppet of Russia was not only inaccurate but dangerous, Professor John Barratt, director of the South African Institute of International Affairs, said last night.

Addressing graduates at the University of the Witwatersrand's final ceremony, he said the South African Government had adopted this simplistic view and was fostering attitudes which were "entirely unconducive to the acceptance of Swapo as an eventual legitimate government of Namibia."

If the Government was determined to resolve the longstanding dispute, he said, it was surely time to prepare people in Namibia and South Africa for the political changes ahead.

"Are we going to witness the same about-face we saw in Zimbabwe when we have to accept the realities in Namibia," he asked.

South Africa's credibility in the international community was already low because of high-profile security operations and a refusal to negotiate or even recognise Swapo, he added.

This negative and unrealistic approach was symptomatic of the Government's attitude and policies generally, Professor Barratt said. Instead of a firm commitment to end discrimination in all spheres, albeit slowly, the Government sought to mobilise support for a "total national strategy" to combat the "total onslaught."

"We are asked simply to accept without question the official assessment of an external threat — masterminded from Moscow.

"We are asked to accept that the main cause of all our problems is external . . . and we are asked to place the demands of State security above considerations of individual rights."

The Government's perception of external threat infected attitudes towards and dealings with, neighbouring African states, and prevented South Africa from developing constructive relations to build a foundation for the future.

It was easy to become overwhelmed by the immediate problems in South African society and in the southern African region, said Professor Barratt. A call had been made for the Government to make a clear statement of commitment for the future by the constitutional committee of the President's Council — "but will we get such a commitment? Or will we have to contiue without any clear sense of direction into a highly uncertain future?" asked Professor Barratt.

PAPER COMMENTS ON NEW PRESS BILL

MB101025 Johannesburg THE STAR in English 9 Jun 82 p 16

[Editorial: "Another Bull in the China Shop"]

[Text] Some of the Chinaware is destroyed, much is damaged but until this week there still remained some precious pieces of porcelain. Now Mr Chris Heunis, minister of internal affairs, appears to be blundering in to destroy most of what is left of freedom of expression in this country. It is a tragedy for many reasons.

Firstly, further legislation is entirely unnecessary. It is already possible to close down newspapers, as the world was closed, without even giving reasons. The restriction and regulations covering the press are already vast, far greater than those affecting politicians or the man in the street.

Secondly, there was every reason to believe that all the excesses of the Steyn Commission could be avoided. Even those who sought further censorship or external control of the press seemed reluctant to go far as the Steyn Commission proposed. Perhaps those excesses will be avoided, but if more statutes are introduced, free speech is further damaged anyway.
[No Third received]
Fourthly, the vexed problem of disciplining any excesses within the press was already being attended to by the newspapers and newspapermen themselves.

Despite all this, the minister wants another little law to turn self-discipline into state discipline for all. It is catastrophic, and while this does not appear so to him, history will provide the proof.

At the time of writing, the terms of the proposed legislation were not to hand, yet we know that any law at this stage is retrogressive. Rather the time was ripe for Mr Botha's government to take a forward step; to show the world that we are on a course of reform towards greater freedom.

Ironically, it seems that the rush to push drastic press law through Parliament in the dying moments of the session is aimed--not at the English-language press or at the government-supporting press--but at the Afrikaans newspapers on the far right. We would all like to see the ultra-conservative, often rabid voice muted... But if it is done by force, what sort of freedom is that?

Freedom, as we wrote some weeks ago, means reluctantly "fighting for the right for them to write what they like." That is the sort of cause many South Africans have fought and died for in the past century. Some bull-in-the-china-shop operations now could finally destroy that tradition.

MINISTER ON CONTROL OF PRESS

MB100930 Johannesburg International Service in English 0630 GMT 10 Jun 82

[Text] The South African Minister of Internal Affairs, Mr Chris Heunis, says it is the responsibility of the state to settle differences that may arise among the news media over their responsibilities towards the community. Mr Heunis was speaking in a nation-wide television programme during which South African newspaper editors emphasised the need for the greatest possible measure of press freedom.

The minister said the media had an important role to play in democratic system, but freedom was not absolute. Information should be disseminated in such a manner that it served the general interests.

Mr Heunis said suggestions made by the media regarding code, procedure and method of settling differences were generally acceptable to the South African Government. There was, however, one fundamental shortcoming. That was that all publications in the country were not members of the newspaper press union. This meant that methods had to be devised to ensure that the self discipline could be made applicable to non-members.

KWANDEBELE CHOICE OF INDEPENDENCE DEPLORED

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 28 May 82 p 3

[Article by Anton Harber: "Poverty Presides at a State's Birth"]

[Text]

"IF it were not so tragic, KwaNdebele's decision for independence would be hilarious — pure music hall comedy."

This was the reaction of Mrs Ina Perlman of the Institute of Race Relations, to the announcement yesterday that the minute Ndebele homeland northeast of Pretoria had requested independence.

The territory's Chief Minister, Mr Simon Skhosane, and his Cabinet met Dr Piet Koornhof, Minister of Co-operation and Development, in Cape Town on Wednesday to discuss the request.

But it is expected to be five years before independence will be granted because of the homeland's almost complete lack of development.

Mr Skhosana said they will wait until they have a capital, more land and an industrial infrastructure.

Meanwhile, Holiday Inns have secured the rights to build a casino in partnership with the KwaNdebele Government after independence.

Mr Nigel Matthews, managing director of Holiday Inns, confirmed this yesterday, but said it was too early to make any firm decisions on the casino.

He said Holiday Inns were hoping to build a major entertainment centre only about half an hour's drive from Pretoria and an hour from Johannesburg.

The homeland has drawn much attention because of the hundreds of thousands of people resettled in 12 camps there in recent years.

Although the official population of the homeland in 1980 was 166 477, researchers estimate that about 180 000 have been brought in from outside the homeland.

A year ago it was reported that 20 families a day were being moved into the territory.

Mrs Perlman, whose organisation delivers more than 600 food parcels to the area a year and estimates that up to three times this amount is needed, painted a grim picture of poverty and underdevelopment in KwaNdebele.

Only 2 640 people — 1,6% of the population — are employed within the homeland. Another 35 500 — 21% — have found work in nearby nearby white areas.

In 1981, 2 300 new cases of tuberculosis were reported. There are no hospitals.

KwaNdebele also has a serious water shortage. In some villages, according to Mrs Perlman, there is only one tap for every street of 20 or 30 houses — and this only works for two hours a day.

"Sometimes these villages get no water for a week," she said.

Mrs Perlman said Chief Minister Skhosana had told her they would have enough land for subsistence agriculture — but only in 1984 when negotiations were complete.

"The school drop-out rate is frightening. In one case, a teacher told me she had 500 pupils in Standard Two, but only 75 went on to Standard Three."

The most educated member of the Cabinet that will lead KwaNdebele to independence is Chief Minister Skhosana, who completed Standard Six.

LUKHELE, MSIPI ATTACK BUTHELEZI

Intimidation of Chiefs Charged

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 31 May 82 p 1

[Article by James Dlamini]

[Text]

PRO-UNIFICATION Ka-Ngwane politician, Mr. David Lukhele yesterday accused Kwa-Zulu leader, Chief Gatsha Buthelezi of intimidating Swazi chiefs in the disputed Ngwavuma region.

Chief Buthelezi took his entire cabinet and legislative assembly and a contingent of South African journalists to a series of meetings in Ngwavuma on Thursday and Friday. In the meetings, the chiefs of the Matsenjwa, Mngomezulu Nyawo and Tembe are reported to have expressed their loyalty to the Kwa-Zulu "homeland" administration.

The chiefs, and crowds of what was described as banner carrying supporters are reported to have said they regarded themselves as Zulus and not Swazis. They are reported to have rejected plans to return the trans-Phongola territories to Swaziland.

There is a population of about 80,000 Swazis in this region.

"One wonders why he had to take his entire cabinet and legislative assembly, an army of more than 200 people and an army of journalists," Mr. Lukhele said. "The purpose was clearly to stage a big show-off in order to intimidate. This is part of a continuous and futile exercise to force the chiefs and their people in the area into docile submission to Buthelezi's grand designs for their future," Mr. Lukhele said.

"He is playing political games and I know that the chiefs said what they are said to have said under considerable pressure. The whole army of people coming with Gatsha must have made a big spectacle indeed," he added.

"Chiefs in these areas were not appointed without first informing the King of Swaziland. This was so until 1976 when the Ngwavuma area was unilaterally made part of Kwa-Zulu. It is a well known fact that the boundary dividing Swazis and Zulus is the Phongola River," Mr. Lukhele said in a telephone interview from his house in Pretoria.

"I don't see why Gatsha is making all this noise. In 1971, the Ngwavuma chiefs wrote to me asking that they be included in the Swazi territorial authority. I referred the matter to Chief J.M. Dlamini, who was then chief executive councillor.

"He advised them to join voluntarily. Subsequent to this, a faction fight broke out in Ngwavuma, and, as you know, Chief Ntunja had to flee to Swaziland. Another man was imposed as the new chief," Mr. Lukhele said.

"We referred this mater to Mr. P. Torlage who was then Commissioner General. The Kwa-Zulu leadership then accused me of sowing seeds of misunderstanding. I told them that the chiefs had asked to join on their own. What they were after was unity of the Swazi people," he said.

"We are not after anybody's land. There should be no intimidation. There was no bloodshed when the land was taken and there should be no bloodshed when it is returned," he added.

"Buthelezi wants Natal, but he does not want us to claim what belongs to the Swazis," Mr. Lukhele added. Two separate meetings were held last Thursday to Friday.

Meanwhile, in Ka-Ngwane, Chief Mkolishi Dlamini of the Embhuleni Royal Kraal resigned from the executive council of Ka-Ngwane. The Ka-Ngwane Times newspaper reported that he resigned amid "rumours of a Swaziland connection being at the root of the reasons for his resignation."

The paper quoted Ka-Ngwane political officials as saying "he could not have resigned at a more sensitive time." His official reasons were reported as poor health. Chief Mkolishi was executive councillor for the justice portfolio.

The South African Sunday Times quoted Chief Mkolishi as saying he could not serve in a government which is opposed to King Sobhuza II and saying he would throw his full weight to support the unification moves.

Gatsha Challenged

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 2 Jun 82 pp 1, 10

[Excerpt]

IN a bitter attack on kwaZulu leader Gatsha Buthelezi, the official spokesman for the Swazi nation yesterday set the record straight on the border adjustment issue.

The kwaZulu leader last week took his entire cabinet, legislative assembly and a contigent of South African journalists to a series of meetings in the Ngwavuma area.

In the meetings, the chiefs of the Matsenjwa, Mngomezulu, Nyawo and Tembe are reported to have expressed their loyalty to the kwaZulu homeland administration.

But yesterday, Swaziland, through a statement by Dr. George Msibi, gave facts of the matter

In a hard-hitting response Dr. Msibi accused Buthelezi of intimidating the chiefs and people in the Ngwavuma area.

He challenged Gatsha to complete his itinerary of the Ngwavuma with a visit to Ndzevane where, he said, over 15,000 people who fled from the Buthelezi-inspired terror are now settled as refugees.

Dr. Msibi also challenged the kwaZulu leader to tell the world about the shootings and killings he (Gatsha) conducted when he "tried to force and subject our people to his bantustan plan."

"We cannot blame you Gatsha for, you had been slavishly pushing the bantustan plans of your masters. But alas! it is your masters who, now in the face of reality would like to undo those plans," said Dr. Msibi.

He charged: "You were given and you received the land you knew full well never belonged to Natal or Zululand."

Dr. Msibi said all the Swazi chiefs in the Ngwavuma including the Tembes never fought in the Zulu wars. Ngwanazi, Mbikiza, Mtshelekwane and Sambane were never part of Natal or Zululand."

Claim

On a claim that King Dingane's grave is up to this day in the Ngwavuma area because it is Zulu territory, Dr. Msibi said Dingane died there as a refugee after running away from his own people.

He stated: "There is no history of Dingane dying at his own kraal. And there is no kraal that ever was for Dingane or any other Zulu king for that matter in the Ngwavuma area."

During last week's meetings at Ngwavuma, the chiefs and their followers were reported to have said they regarded themselves as Zulus and not Swazis.

They are reported to have rejected plans to return the trans-Phongola territories to Swaziland. There is a population of about 80,000 Swazis in this region.

SWAZI PRIME MINISTER TALKS WITH OFFICIALS

MB101027 Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 10 Jun 82 pp 1, 16

[Article by James Dlamini]

[Excerpt] The prime minister, Prince Mabandla, yesterday told a visiting United Nations official that Swaziland is in a continuous dilemma being in the centre of an ideological storm.

Prince Mabandla said the political strife in South Africa causes continuous complications and uncertainty. "The South African problem puts us out of gear all the time," he said.

Prince Mabandla was addressing visiting United Nations official, Mr Gordon Goundrey.

Mr Goundrey is assistant secretary at the UN secretary general's office in New York. He is visiting countries which are affected by the South African question to assess economic problems.

"Your visit in the region is vital to us so that you can see for yourself what is happening," he said. "From the south east to the north we are surrounded by South Africa, a country which is not palatable to the whole world," he added.

"But we have to deal with them. About that there is no question and there is no way we can avoid it. Even if we had an outlet to the sea, I don't see how we could avoid dealing with South Africa," he said.

"To the east we have Mozambique which had its own economic problems. It is very poor and we cannot sell as much to them as we would like to," he added.

"We can't export our produce to all the markets," he said.

"We are in an awkward position. We are like a little island in a big ocean and when the ocean is in a storm we are affected. However, we are adamant on our policy of non-alignment as much as we are concerned about world problems," he added.

"The world recession is hitting harder all the time. We live like suckers. We are like a tree which lives on another when the other is unstable," he said.

EXTRADITION TREATY WITH MOZAMBIQUE PLANNED

Mbabane THE SWAZI OBSERVER in English 29 May 82 p 1

[Text]

THE Prime Minister, Prince Mabandla, yesterday told the visiting Mozambican Minister of Interior, Mr Mariano Matsinha, and his delegation that the Extradition Treaty between the two countries was vital.

He said the treaty should be done with great care because it involved the lives of criminals in the two countries who were part of these communities.

Prince Mabandla added that the treaty needed a great deal of thought in putting justice in its right perspective.

He was speaking at Government House during a courtesy call by the Mozambican Minister and his 12-man delegation.

Prince Mabandla said it was important that all the discussions between the two countries should be communicated to the people. He said this was particularly so since the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference talks started.

"It is important that all relations and communications done between the two countries be communicated to the grassroots of our communities," he said.

He said it was time that the two countries regarded their independence as the beginning of the struggle and not the end of it.

The Mozambican Minister, Mr Matsinha, briefed the Prime Minister on the Draft Extradition Treaty discussions held at the Deputy Prime Minister's Office on Thursday, and said the work was not finished.

"The discussions were held in a friendly manner of solidarity but we feel there should be more time for deeper preparations," Mr Matsinha said.

Mr Matsinha said the discussions showed that Swaziland and Mozambique were trying to take decisive steps on co-operation.

"In this work we are doing, we have difficulties, but hope that there would be moments of progress and victory," Mr Matsinha said.

The Draft Extradition Treaty discussions began on Thursday after the Deputy Prime Minister, Senator Ben Nsibandze formally opened the talks, at the Police Headquarters.

The delegation was yesterday taken on a tour of the Television and radio manufacturing facilities at Salora and Libby's.

Before their departure from Swaziland, later today the Mozambican delegation is expected to tour Mhlume Sugar Company.

MORE LOSSES FOR SUGAR INDUSTRY PREDICTED

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 4 Jun 82 p 1

[Article by James Dlamini]

[Text]

THE regional controller of the Commonwealth Development Corporation Mr. Arthur van Dorssen yesterday predicted more losses for the sugar industry at the end of the current financial year.

Speaking at the presentation of the CDC annual report for 1981, Mr. van Dorssen said he expected Mhlume to make less profit next year and Simunye to suffer more losses.

Loss

For the 16 months in operation, Simunye lost about E15 million. He said losses were being suffered by the sugar industry worldwide.

He said investors would feel the pinch. He said, however, that he hoped that the industry would eventually pull through.

"It's not only Simunye but the rest of the sugar industry in the world. I expect that Mhlume will not make the profits it had earlier hoped to make next year," he said.

"The recession is now beginning to bite — how long it will last is difficult to say. Market trends are beyond our control, but we are proud of our investment in Simunye," he said.

CDC investments in Swaziland total E79 million.

He stated that CDC policy is to promote local participation in its projects, and to encourage labour intensive industries to absorb as many people as possible. He said CDC has invested in protects which employ about 9.000 Swazis.

He said all their projects have training budgets, to train Swazis at all levels.

Answering a question on "apartheid-style" housing allocation at Mhlume which continued for a few years after independence, Mr. van Dorssen said CDC had eliminated it.

He said CDC inherited the segregated housing allocations from Huletts, a South African company. There were three villages — one for blacks, a middle one for coloured, and exclusive quarters for whites, who were provided with servants and other services.

Expatriates' pay

Answering a question on expatriate allowances, Mr. van Dorssen said it was necessary to pay them because people were taken away from their surroundings.

Asked why white South Africans who seek jobs in Swaziland are paid these allowances when they are from next door, he said they were rated as gratuity employees because their employment was temporary.

He said local whites were paid according to experience and responsibilities.

SUGAR CORPORATION LOSSES REPORTED

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 3 Jun 82 p 1

[Text]

SIMUNYE suffered a net loss of more than E15 million during its first 16 months in operation, according to a newly released report.

The report, compiled by the Commonwealth Development Corporation (CDC) quoted the exact figure as E15.232 million.

The Chairman of the Royal Swaziland Sugar Corporation, Mr. Goshe Szokolay said the escalated losses are attributed to the considerable descrease in sugar prices in the world market.

Mr. Szokolay said according to their initial estimates, losses were expected but this high figure had not been anticipated. He pointed out that since then, prices have gone tumbling down and the downward trend continued at an unexpected rate. He said currently the prices of sugar are at bottom level.

He said at the initial stages of their estimates, sugar cost 160 British pounds per ton in the London market; but this morning sugar cost 104 British pounds.

He attributed the downward trend in the prices to over production.

However, he expects an increase in the prices of sugar in the world market within months. He pointed out that Simunye is fulfilling its role in the world market. "We are producting efficiently," he said. He further pointed out that the price situation was out of their control.

The CDC report states that sugar production for the 1981 season was 84,595 tonnes. In 1980 it was 44,480.

The Swaziland government and Tibiyo have a 32.4 percent stake each in Simunye.

GOVERNMENT RELUCTANCE TO BACK ETHANOL PROJECT REPORTED

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 1 Jun 82 p 1

[Excerpt]

TIBIYO Taka Ngwane announced yesterday that the much publicised ethanol project "was falling away because government had declined to give it a green light."

The project, estimated to cost about E1 million, was designed to help Swaziland achieve self-sufficiency in fuel.

Announcing the project about four years ago, Tibiyo disclosed that its investigations had revealed that up to 20 per cent of fuel alcohol could be added to petrol without energy loss.

The investigations it said, also revealed that the output of molasses from sugar mills in Swaziland, if converted to alcohol, would equate 20 per cent of the petrol used in the country at the time.

The announcement also stated that the most sufficient way of manufacturing this alcohol would be by small amount forming part of the sugar mills.

"We are, therefore, currently discussing with one of the sugar mills in whom we are shareholders the possibility of installing such plant on a joint venture basis," said the statement about for years ago.

The venture, according to the statement was to have helped the country "overcome the fuel shortages; give an edge to the sugar industry against fluctuation in prices..."

But yesterday Tibiyo's public relations officer, Mr. Cyril Dlamini issued a statement which seemed to cast doubt on the future of the project.

Technology

The statement said in full: "It was announced today at Lozitha that the ethanol project was falling away because government had declined to give it a green light.

"Tibiyo's management in conjunction with Lonrho had prepared all the necessary studies including the financial implications for the project.

"If government gave the green light, the project could have shot off the ground three years ago, with a substantial employment potential.

"Tibiyo in conjunction with Lonrho had even organised the world's latest technology in Brazil on ethanol to be implemented in the Swaziland plant.

"Although it would cost the project twice now to start it, Tibiyo and Lonrho are still prepared to start it now provided the government grants the green light.

"The project was earmarked to be situated near Big Bend and another phase in Northern Swaziland at another date.

CELEBRATION OF KING SOBHUZA'S BIRTHDAY SCHEDULED

[Article by Mashumi Twala]

[Text]

THE 1982 King's birthday celebrations will be held at the Prince of Wales ground in Mbabane.

This has been announced by the Minister of Home Affairs, Prince Gabheni.

Addressing councillors at the annual general meeting of the Mbabane Town Council, Prince Gabheni said His Majesty had agreed that his 83rd birthday celebrations should be held in Mbabane.

The celebrations will take place on July 22.

Prince Gabheni said he was pleased with the work done by the Mbabane Town Council to develop the town. He said: "Taxpayers must be obviously satisfied with the development projects going on."

He pointed out that since he last made an appeal on behalf of the public, there had not been many complaints of irregularities and wastage by the Council. "We are satisfied that you are all putting some efforts into improvements and developments in this town," he said.

But, Prince Gabheni urged the Council to take immediate remedial steps to help the women street vendors who have always been complaining that despite the regular harrassments by the Council, nothing was being done to provide them with proper facilities.

Regarding the provision of market-places, Prince Gabheni appealed to the Council to "look into the issue of a market next to the government hospital. He said this plan, which was proposed long ago, should be closely examined with a view to making suitable recommendations.

"A market near the government hospital would be a good amenity. Not only would it benefit the hospital, staff and patients, it would be of importance especially since government ministries are being grouped on that area, thus a lot of civil servants would get assistance, said Prince Gabheni.

He commended the council for the remarkable work they had done to provide markets so far.

In this respect, he noted that in the past two years, there had been two official openings of new markets, at Sidwashini and Msunduza.

Prince Gabheni pointed out that a subject which requires the Council's strong consideration is the system of land purchasing and ownership in the urban area.

He said his Ministry had been drawn to the attention that many potential land buyers were being frustrated because of a few well to do people were allowed by the Council to own large stretches without even developing them so that the not-so-able buyers have no chance.

Said Prince Gabheni: "This deserves your utmost attention. We should all learn to share. The small men should be given their opportunity to own stands instead of one person enjoying all the monopoly, simply because he has the money.

FRENCH RAIL DEAL--Swaziland and France will soon sign a financial agreement under which France will provide assistance in the proposed Northern Rail Link. Under the agreement, France will also supply equipment to the planned extension of the Matsapha Airport, French Ambassador, Mr Bernard Boyer, has said. In a meeting with the Prime Minister, Prince Mabandla this week, Mr Boyer said French experts had participated in the feasibility study of the proposed railway and that negotiations for financial assistance were hoped to be soon completed between representatives of the two countries. Mr Boyer added: "On the cultural aspect, my government would like to make it possible to supply Swaziland with French teachers, for there seems to be a growing love for this language here." Mr Boyer said he was glad at what he saw to be rapidly progressing relationship between Swaziland and France. "In the field of economic cooperation, we are heading for a fast mutual agreement," he said. He pointed out that his government admired Swaziland's foreign policy ever since independence. He said: "We know of your problems and hardships and we are following your policy of co-operation with other countries. We are also aware of the activities of the Southern Africa Development Co-operation Conference and glad that this relation is developing. GERMAN DELEGATION--A German Government Delegation is in the country for discussions with government on bilateral technical and financial assistance to Swaziland for the period 1983-84. The delegation is led by Mr Kurt Mocker of the Federal German Ministry for Economic Cooperation. He is accompanied by Dr Lunau of the German Agency for Technical Cooperation. Mr Mocker is no newcomer to Swaziland and has led various German delegations to the Kingdom in the past 8 years. The first Secretary of the German Embassy in Maputo, Mr Gregor Koebel, accredited to the Kingdom of Swaziland, will participate in the delegations' discussions. NEW TOWNSHIP FOR MANZINI--A new urban township is to be developed in Manzini. It is situated a little way to the left of the Siteki road and bounded on the north and west by the Mzimnene River. The area is presently called Maywood Park after the Mrs Maywood who bought the land in 1972, but this will be changed to a local name. It has always been the intention to develop it as a township, but discussions with the then Ministry of Local Administration, later Home Affairs, were very protracted and it was only at the beginning of 1981 that the Townships Board began to treat the matter with some urgency because of the shortage of building land in Manzini. Apart from housing, an area has been set aside for development as a large shopping complex, which will also serve the new Manzini Township, next to the Golf Course. Final approval for Maywood Park came through in April of this year, subject to many development conditions. Advertisements have gone out for tenders to deal with the civil engineering (drains, roads, etc) and once these have been settled it will be known how much the stands will cost. It is estimated that they will be in the region of E8 to 9 thousand. It is planned that Maywood Park will be a "model" township and strict standards as to type and quality of housing will be laid down by Manzini Town Council. DEFENSE MINISTRY STREAMLINING SERVICES, INTEGRATING TPDF, JKT

[Article by Charles Kizigha]

[Text]

THE Ministry of Defence and National Service has embarked on implementing a new set up aimed at streamlining services and consolidating integration of the Tanzania People's Defence Forces (TPDF) and the National Service (JKT).

The Ministry's Principal Secretary, Ndugu C. M. Masanja, told the Daily News in Dar es Salaam yesterday that the new set up involves creation of four departments and three units.

He said that the departments would be headed by four commissioners and 13 assistant commissioners would head sections.

Ndugu Masanja said the commissioners (heads of department) would be army officers and assistant commissioners would be appointed from among army officers and civilians, he added.

He said that under the new set-up, a department of manpower development and administration has been created and would have sections of manpower planning and training, and administration and finance.

The Principal Secretary said that the department of military planning has been included in the new set up and will deal with military equipment, planning, organization and budgeting.

Ndugu Masanja said the third department is that of industries, construction and agriculture with agriculture and livestock, industries, sectorial planning and construction sections.

Ndugu Masanja said under the new set up a legal department to be headed by a judge-advocate general with two assistants — one dealing with by-laws and orders and the other with legal matters — would also be established.

He explained that the new set up would relieve the army headquarters of a lot of duties leaving it to concentrate on military training and operations.

The new set up also creates units for military tenders liberation movements and internal audit.

Registration numbers for vehicles would also be changed to read TPDF/NS or JWTZ/KT, he said.

Implementation of the new set up started last March, he explained adding that the pace was slow because of a number of unavoidable circumstances.

A committee, drawing members from the Ministry headquarters prepared the recommendations for the new set up last year and Ndugu Masanja said people to man the new structure will be announced soon.

ZANZIBAR HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES RAPS 'AGITATORS'

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 4 Jun 82 p 1

[Article by Abdallah Yakuti]

[Text]

HE ZANZIBAR House of Representatives yesterday morning condemned agitators who publish and circulate leaflets criticising the Isles leadership and called on the Government to deal mercilessly with anyone involved.

Discussing a private motion, the first since the House was established two years ago, moved by Representative Mohmed Khatibu (Central District Zanzibar) and calling for the condemnation of the agitators, he said their intention was to create an atmosphere of fear and disunity among the islanders.

He said the leaflets which circulated in Zanzibar town over the week-end calling for the resignation of certain leaders in the Government, were seditious with intent to arouse popular agitation against the Revolutionary Government.

Ndugu Khatibu described the agitators as cowards, who instead of working along the laid down channels provided for in the Isles Constitution to air their grievances, decide to work in dark corridors.

Ndugu Seif Bakari (Nominated) supported the motion, adding that through the 1980 Zanzibar Constitution, the Government established democratic institutions such as the House through which suggestions and criticisms from the citizens could be presented and discussed.

He said to deviate from these established institutions was tantamount to conspiring or waging a seditions war against civil authorities.

"We do not want violence. But these people who want violence must understand that their reactionary violence would be countered by revolutionary violence of the people", he warned.

He pointed out that between 1964 and 1972, reactionaries plotted against the Zanzibar Revolutionary Government twelve times, but did not succeed because they were eliminated as soon as they were detected.

Contributing to the debate, Representative Abdallah Saidi Natepe said what was causing unrest in the enemy camp was the steady progress the Islanders were scoring on all fronts.

He called on the Islanders to enhance unity and democracy in the Isles for political stability, equality and economic progress.

Supporting the motion, Ndugu Sudi Mgeni (Chake Chake) cautioned the Representatives that a campaign against agitators would only succeed if there were no "handles" within the Party and government leadership to fit on the reactionary "axe".

The public should also cooperate fully with authorities to expose the enemy, Ndugu Mgeni stressed.

ZANZIBAR TO RECEIVE EXECUTIVE JET FOR GOVERNMENT IN JULY

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 4 Jun 82 p 3

[Article by Abdallah Yakuti]

[Excerpt]

ZANZIBAR will receive next month a 48 million/- ten-seat executive jet which will be used by the Zanzibar government, the Isles House of Representatives has been told.

The Zanzibar Minister for Finance, Ndugu Mohammed Ramia, said the government has so far made no down payment for the executive jet. The aircraft was being purchased through a 48 million/- loan from the manufacturers, British Aerospace Limited.

He said the aircraft was intended to provide a reliable transport for the President of Zanzibar to allow him discharge his responsibilities efficiently.

Ndugu Ramia refuted allegations that purchase of the jet was the cause of the current shortage of rice and sugar in Zanzibar.

Neither was it true, he said, that development projects supposed to be undertaken during the current financial year got struck because funds earmarked for them had to be used in purchasing the jet.

The aircraft became an issue in the House on Wednesday when the Representatives saw no funds allocated for its purchase in the 1982/83 budget proposals and the annual development plan presented to the House on Tuesday.

The Representatives charged that since funds for the purchase of the plane were not indicated in the current budget, the government must have slashed expenditures for programmed projects to buy the plane, which they described as a "luxury" considering Zanzibar's current economic problems.

They charged that the scarcity of food staples on the Isles was a direct result of the government move to withhold funds to buy the aircraft.

Ndugu Ramia maintained that the decision to buy an aircraft for the Zanzibar President dated back to 1975, but the move had been delayed until this year when the government secured the loan from Britain.

Ndugu Ramia refuted the idea that the plane was a luxury and wondered why it was acceptable for companies and individuals on the Mainland to own fleets of aircraft but strange for the Zanzibar government to own and operate a single aircraft.

Ndugu Ramia also defended the recent price increase for wheat flour, saying that the item would still sell at a lower price in Zanzibar than on the Mainland.

A kilogramme of wheat flour will now cost 6/75 on the Isles as against 7/70 on the Mainland despite the fact that the two parts of the United Republic import the foodstuff from the same source.

BRIEFS

GOVERNMENT TO ABSORB FEWER STUDENTS--Financial constraints now facing Tanzania are likely to limit the number of 1981 Form Four leavers to be absorbed by government and parastatal organisations. According to an official in the Ministry of Manpower Development and Administration, Form Four leavers with low marks have less chance of getting allocated for employment or higher education. He told Shihata in Dar es Salaam yesterday that although selections and allocations were still going on, some parastatals and government department had rejected offers from the ministry because of little money they expected in the coming financial year. He said up to last month some 2,872 Form Four leavers had been allocated to various secondary schools and technical institutes. Form Six leavers who were undergoing one year National Service training and university leavers were not affected. He said under the next financial year's expenditures estimations, his ministry made a reduction of 12 percent of the total expenses. The proposed total expenses might even be reduced during parliamentary budget sessions, he said. [Text] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 3 Jun 82 p 3]

BULGARIAN DELEGATION ARRIVING--The Communist Party of Bulgaria (BCP) and Chama Cha Mapinduzi (CCM) have agreed to formulate a joint plan of action to implement the Dar es Salaam protocol on co-operation signed last year. A member of the Party's Central Committee, Ndugu Ali Mzee, said in Dar es Salaam yesterday that a Bulgarian delegation is expected in Tanzania next month to participate in drawing up the plan. Ndugu Mzee, who led a three-man delegation to Bulgaria, also disclosed that the BCP has offered more than 10 scholarships to CCM leaders at its Academy of Social Sciences and Management. BCP and CCM agreed last year to co-operate in the education and industry fields. [Text] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 4 Jun 82 p 1]

FLOUR PRICE INCREASES PROTECTED--The Isles House of Representatives has called on the Zanzibar government to reconsider its decision to raise prices for wheat flour by about 20 percent announced here on Tuesday. Discussing Budget proposals in Zanzibar yesterday, the Representatives argued that the already high cost of living was a heavy burden to the citizen. Instead of hiking prices for basic necessities, the government should consider other ways to balance the budget. They observed that wheat flour and rice were staple foodstuffs in the Isles. The new prices of the commodities would certainly hurt the majority whose income and purchasing power was low. Ndugu Juma Saadallah (MP) wondered why the Minister for Finance increased prices for wheat flour by 20 percent while raising prices for beer, cinema entrance fees and cigarettes by as low as two percent. ZAIRIAN VIEWS ON REACTION TO RESTORED TIES WITH ISRAEL

Front-Page Commentary

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 23-24 May 82 pp 1-2, 15

[Commentary by Essolomwa Nkoy ea Linganga: "Demented Reactions"]

[Text] It will be remembered that, at its meeting on Friday 14 May, the Bureau of the Central Committee, chaired by MPR president-founder and president of the republic, Gen Mobutu Sese Seko, decided to resume diplomatic relations with the state of Israel. According to the spokesman of the Central Committee Bureau, this decision was the logical conclusion of a thorough analysis of the current international situation and a full review of our country's external political situation in relation to a number of crisis areas of the world.

To better understand the reasons for this decision and its background, we should remember, as explained by the spokesman of the Executive Council, that General Mobuto's official announcement of the break in diplomatic relations between Kinshasa and Tel Aviv, in the context of African solidarity, was made in his historic, brilliant speech of 4 October 1973 at the United Nations in New York. Zaire, as a sovereign nation strongly committed to its unity and territorial integrity, could not tolerate the occupation of African territory of Egypt by the Jewish state. Thus, Zaire's decision at that time was justified by the fact that part of the territory of Egypt, an OAU member and fraternal African country, had been annexed by the Jewish state. Further explaining this historic decision, General Mobutu said, in a proverbial phrase which has become famous: "Between a brother (Egypt) and a friend (Israel), the choice is clear."

Also, several other fraternal African states, confirming Zaire's action which derived from the political will to achieve progress toward a durable solution to the problem of peace in the Middle East, in turn broke relations with the Jewish state.

Our faithful readers will remember that after our return from New York, having accompanied the head of state on this historic visit, we published a series of commentaries on the president's 4 October 1973 speech. In these commentaries we not only highlighted the great historical significance of General Mobutu's decision, but also summed up the favorable and enthusiastic reaction of the Arab World, which subsequently described the great chief of state, President Mobutu, as an incomparable leader of men and certainly an outstanding leading African. To illustrate the Arab leaders' general satisfaction, we also recounted that some Arab country ministers and delegates left the hall at the conclusion of the president's speech with tears in their eyes; others came and kneeled in front of the Zairian head of state saying: "Never in the annals of the United Nations has an African leader spoken in language which was so profound, so moving, and so clear and precise." To illustrate how much the Arab countries were charmed by General Mobutu's strong personality and frank manner of speaking, we should point out that the president's 4 October 1973 speech was even requested by some university research centers in the Arab World for use as a basic reference in their studies on the entire subject of Arab-African cooperation and solidarity. For to many observers of African politics, Zaire's stand in New York was a strong demonstration, solemnly affirmed, of Afro-Arab solidarity.

However, after the signing of the Camp David agreements between Egypt and Israel, and particularly after Israel's withdrawal on 25 April from the Egyptian territory it had occupied since June 1967, the position Zaire had taken at the United Nations had become obsolete, because it was now contradictory and even illogical. The obstacle to reestablishment of relations with Israel had been removed, particularly since General Mobutu had stressed in his UN speech in a clear and percise way that the break in relations with the Jewish state would be continued only as long as that country continued to occupy African territory belonging to Egypt. Israel's annexation of part of Egypt's territory had always been denounced as an act which affronted the dignity of the African peoples and their right to their own soil.

This is why Zaire was overjoyed to see the Sinai restored to Egypt in accordance with the spirit of the Camp David agreements. This joy was expressed in messages sent by the MPR president-founder to the leaders of the two countries. Egypt and Israel having restored normal relations, it became absurd for Zaire to shun the Jewish state. That is why General Mobutu, faithful to his word and seeing no further obstacle to the resumption of Zairian-Israeli relations, decided, in the name of his people who fully support him, to renew relations with that country.

It should also be pointed out that in renewing relations with Israel, Zaire does not mean--as the decision of the Bureau of the Central Committee stresses--rejection of the legitimate aspirations of the Palestinian people to have a homeland. Our country therefore continues to recognize the PLO. The cornerstones of Zaire's diplomacy are founded on principles of justice, equity, and law. It is on the basis of these principles that Zaire recognizes the two Germanys and the two Koreas.

However, what astonishment to learn that less than 24 hours after Zaire's sovereign decision certain Arab countries were bustling about and shouting to heaven and earth, even going so far as to liken the decision to high treason. However, what high treason, and against whom?

Yet, as the president of the republic's views expressed to AZAP indicate, in Zaire's 1973 decision it was never a question of Arab territories but only African territories of Egypt, which is an African country and an OAU member, though also an Arab state. Everyone knows, moreover, that all these "loud-mouthed" Arabs had done nothing to help Egypt recover the annexed land. Their reactions are thus unjustified, illogical, and even demented. Also demented and ridiculous are the reactions of some African countries, which are behaving like "Panurge's sheep" [Panurge: character in Rebelais' "Pantagruel"]. They are revealing more and more that they are prepared to sell their dignity and sovereignty for ignoble interests. That is true of the African state which, while condemning our decision, shamelessly declares its willingness to bargain Israeli technical aid for Arab petrodollars. We can only deplore the attitude of these fickle, inconsistent states which look out only for their own sometimes humiliating interests. These countries do not have the courage to say out loud what they are thinking to themselves, especially when they are telling everyone that the Arabs have deceived them by not fulfilling their "good promises" and by not granting them special prices for oil purchases.

General Mobutu is thus quite right when he says that some African states will go so far as to mortgage their freedom for miscellaneous aid under virtually unacceptable conditions.

Another deplorable fact is the unfortunate and sad concept which some Arab banking circles have of the meaning of financial loans. These elements, which have been revealed to be an instrument of Arab imperialism, speak about loans to our country as if they were a gift. Even if they were a gift, which is certainly not the case for our country, are these banking circles justified in sacrificing the financial issues on the altar of imperialist political interests? Does this authorize them to interfere in the internal affairs of a client? Are we to believe that there were conditions attached to the loans to Zaire by these banking interests that affected our country's sovereignty?

These are some questions which evoke deceitful answers from these banking circles. Though these reactions do not surprise or frighten us, they do serve as a lesson to some Third World countries which are still under many illusions about these financial institutions and the demagogic promises of most of the Arab countries. Within the continent, all the fraternal countries will now understand that the Arab-African solidarity we hear so much about is the perfect example of the "engine pulling the cars" policy.

At any rate, as events have fully proved over almost 17 years, Gen Mobuto Sese Seko is still the political genius, the prophetic guide, and the undisputed leader who, with his exceptional courage, leads the Zairian people toward a better future.

He is a leader who consulted only his people before taking the sovereign decision to renew ties with Israel. All Zairians thus look to the future only with serenity, optimism, and confidence. They know that our country is in the right.

The demented reactions of Arab imperialism and its African underlings do not impress us. The dogs bark, and the caravan goes on.

African Complacency

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 23-24 May 82 p 2

[Text] Since 14 May, the date of the announcement of Zaire's resumption of diplomatic relations with Israel, not a day has passed without our receiving in Kinshasa reactions to the Zairian decision, reactions from sources disapproving of our country's affirmation of its sovereignty.

Until then, there had been no reaction by either the government or the Zairian press. The president of the Zaire Republic had asked the latter to refrain from any polemic with the media or foreign sources disapproving of the Zairian initiative.

However, the agitation abroad about the initiative has assumed the scale of a full-blown brainwashing campaign which might mislead the public in the Third World and Africa, and we are thus forced to reply in order to provide the real scope and meaning of the principles and events.

This was why the head of state, on his return from Gemena where he attended the ceremony marking the 11th anniversary of his wife's death, called a meeting with the manager of AZAP at his Camp Tshatshi residence to give him his thoughts about the reactions to our decision to renew diplomatic relations with Israel.

It is the view of the president of the Zaire Republic that no state in the world has the right to prevent Zaire, a free and independent state, from freely determining its foreign policy, thereby fully exercising its national and international sovereignty. This sovereignty was publicly and solemnly affirmed on 4 October 1973 when through the voice of their president the Zairian people announced at the United Nations the breaking of relations with Israel. This sovereign decision was dictated by the Jewish state's occupation of African territory in Egypt. Zaire, reacting to this occupation of part of African territory, at that time unilaterally and publicly broke off relations with Israel. The international public will recall that it was made clearly understood that this situation would last as long as Israel's occupation of African territory in Egypt continued to affront African dignity and the rights of African peoples to their own land.

At that time there had been praise, with a surfeit of superlatives, not only of Zaire's political awareness and analytic skill, but also the courage and foresight of its guide.

As of 25 April 1982, pursuing the same logic and with the same consistency, Zaire announced through the voice of its leader that the reasons which had caused it to break relations with Israel had now disappeared since the Jewish occupation had ended, and the African territory of Egypt had been recovered by that fraternal country. It is noted also that in Zaire's historic stand in 1973 there was never any reference to Arab territory but only the African territory of Egypt, which is also an Arab state, and that was clearly stressed.

So? Zaire deplores the reactions in African capitals following its decision to reestablish diplomatic relations with the state of Israel. So much naive candor or spineless cowardice combined with such inconsistency will not convince anyone to take Africa seriously, this poor discredited Africa which does not know whether it should prefer the carrot or the stick, accept the carrot or animal food, or choose between the plague and cholera.

Zaire observes with sadness the puerile self-confidence of those who yesterday would howl about colonialism or showed the slightest evidence of real or imagined interference, yet today, in face of massive interference by the Arabs in the policy of a sovereign state, can find nothing to say other than to fall into step behind the slave trader with the whip and the turban.

Did we fight European colonialism and neocolonialism only to bow our heads to the yoke of Arab neo-slavery?

Did we stand up to the formidable embassies of the industrial powers only to bow today before the intimidation and pressures of turbaned emissaries now criss-crossing Africa?

Finally, is it now acceptable for a worthy son of Africa, for a sovereign state, to go along with the disgraceful underhanded dealing which they are proposing under the slogan of Arab-African solidarity, a slogan with which they have been deafening us since 25 April? Moreover, what kind of solidarity are they talking about? The Zairian people are not deceived. We conclude from the reaction we have been hearing that Arab-African solidarity is a delusion, a trap for idiots. What they are trying to impose on us with this solidarity is the fine tactic of the locomotive and the freight cars, the Arab countries being the locomotive and we the wagons.

In this link-up, where we would have no initiative: when the engine stopped, the cars would stop, and when the engine started again, the cars would blindly follow down the rails. There were still some under the illusion that Zaire was a freight car. We disproved that satisfactorily in the recent past when we did not bend our knees in respect to American aid. The despicable petrodollar maneuver which has taken place before our eyes will be no more successful. Zaire's policy is not chained to the barrel. Zaire announces this at the top of its voice while others think it, but do not have the courage to say it.

Those countries should keep in mind that Arab "reprisals" against those whom they consider to be a threat to their interests seem strangely to be directed only against a black state. Around the world, dozens of countries manage to deal with the goat and the cabbage, they maintain good relations with both the Jewish cabbage and the Arab goat without incurring any kind of "sanction." On the other hand, the Arabs pour out the flood of their petrodollars to these countries, making huge investments there, constructing or buying hotels, palaces, and mansions, locating factories, etc. It is no secret that the good relations which these countries continue to have with Israel--often selling its arms or war-related technology--have never caused the slightest sneeze or frown among the Arab countries, whether those of the Gulf or elsewhere. However, a black state has only to stand up to affirm its independence for the old slave trader reflex to be revived from the past and the holy war declared. We find it difficult to understand how all the countries of the world have the right to cooperate freely with whomever they wish, including Israel, with the exception of the black African states. If that is Arab-African solidarity, then Zaire can only say no to what it regards as a masquerade and a fool's bargain.

Some day, perhaps far off, but at any rate some day, when the eyes of the African peoples are finally opened, they will realize that Zaire was right in not being afraid, today as yesterday, to be alone in saying out loud what others were only thinking to themselves. Come what may.

'NAN' CORRESPONDENT ON MOZAMBIQUE REFUGEES

AB091212 Lagos NAN in English 1155 GMT 9 Jun 82

[Article by Adewale Fatona]

[Text] Harare, 9 Jun (NAN)--The ongoing fighting between Mozambican government troops (FRELIMO) and insurgents of the Mozambican National Resistance (MNR) is sending a steady stream of refugees across the border into Zimbabwe.

The Harare correspondent of the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) reports that at present, about 400 Mozambicans fleeing from the fighting zone are camped at Chibgwedzia, Zimbabwe. The refugees, mostly from the Gaza Province of Mozambiqmuen said that they were fleeing from the fighting between FRELIMO soldiers and terrorists of the South African-backed MNR. The Mozambicans arrived with their scanty belongings on wooden sledges and now have about 2,000 cattle in their camp.

According to reports the refugees, mostly women and children, live under insanitary conditions and their men sell their cattle to local people to raise money for maize and other staple foods.

One of the refugees, Chitanga Kasawae, showed bullet scars on his arms and said that he had been shot by the terrorists after they had accused him of lying about whether his son was in the people's militia. They then abducted his son, he said.

A local Zimbabwean official confirmed that the influx of refugees began in January this year, and that about 100 of them were now in the area. The Chiredzi District administrator, [words indistinct] that blankets and food had been given to the refugees by the Department of Social Services.

One official said that a state of war exists in the province. A decision is still to be taken by the Zimbabwean prime minister's office on the status of the refugees.

During the liberation war in Zimbabwe, Mozambique accommodated thousands of Zimbabwean refugees. The two countries have very good relations. Both have a security pact under which one is obliged to come to the defense of the other in the event of external aggression. Zimbabwe has also pledged to help Mozambique to fight the rebels.

The Zimbabwe-Mozambique border in the southeast is heavily guarded to prevent the insurgents from setting up bases inside Zimbabwe.

MASUKU, DABENGWA STILL DENIED ACCESS TO LAWYERS

Harare THE HERALD in English 8 Jun 82 p 3

[Text]

THE detained deputy commander of the National Army, Lieut General Lookout Masuku, and the former head of ZIPRA, Mr Dumiso Dabengwa, may not see their lawyers until a Supreme Court hearing on the matter.

Making this ruling in the High Court yesterday, Mr Justice McNally said, however, that the two men's wives could make further application in the court for this decision to be reversed.

Last Wednesday the judge ruled that an order signed by a senior policeman preventing the detained men from communicating with lawyers was unconstitutional and he gave them access to their attorneys.

This decision was suspended when the State lodged an appeal with the Supreme Court after an attorney had seen the men. On Friday Mrs Zodwa Dabengwa and Mrs Gift Masuku applied for High Court permission for legal access to their husbands pending the appeal.

Mr Justice McNally dismissed their application but said they had the right to reapply within three weeks.

The Supreme Court appeal could be heard tomorrow or on Thursday, but it is unlikely that the State will be ready to re-argue the case by then. In that event, the hearing will come up next month.

Mr Justice McNally said he was concerned about the fact that the State was entitled, as it had done, to bar the wives from visiting their husbands before the matter came to court.

If they could not see their lawyers either, the only people the two ex-ZIPRA men would see for some time would be State officials.

Two senior policemen, Mr Geoffrey Hedges and Mr Clive Arnold, swore affidavits put before the judge alleging that "harm" had been done by the one visit of a lawyer to the men and that further access would prejudice "the process of the investigation and the administration of justice".

They also claimed that the security of the State and the "tranquillity of its citizens" was involved to the "utmost degree".

When two senior lawmen and a Cabinet minister (Dr Herbert Ushewokunze) allude to the risk to State security, said the judge, "I cannot brush this aside".

He said he did not believe the detainees would suffer "irreparable harm or prejudice" if he turned down their wives' application because the appeal would be heard shortly to decide the matter finally.

There was a danger, said the judge, of "moving too fast rather than too slowly".

If the original decision to allow them to see lawyers was upheld on appeal, their rights would only have been delayed by a relatively short time. If the appeal was successful, they would have benefited by the one visit from their attorney.

Both men were aware of steps being taken on their behalf and must realise the matter would soon be finalised, said Mr Justice McNally.

An affidavit made by the ex-ZIPRA men's attorney said a charge had been put to them, but only one of them had agreed to make a statement to the legal representative.

Mr Adrian de Bourbon, instructed by Scanlen and Holderness, is appearing for Mrs Dabengwa and Mrs Masuku, and Mr Simbarashe Muchechetere of the State Attorney's Office is representing the State.

PROTECTION CODE FOR INVESTORS RULED OUT

Harare THE HERALD in English 8 Jun 82 p 1

[Text]

THERE will be no special protection for new investments in Zimbabwe, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said yesterday

He told a Press conference that the Government had refused to give guarantees to new investors because there was no difference between new and old investments, besides that of time.

"Our law is sufficient in offering the necessary guarantees. We have the most rigid constitution in the world in the way of protecting private property," the Prime Minister said.

There was no need to create a new set of investments in a special way apart from what existed in the country. "If we offered special protection to new investors, what would happen to companies already operating in the country?"

On the possible introduction of an investment code, he said pronouncements had been made that the Government was committed to accepting private investments in areas where they could serve the economy best. The Prime Minister said the present unwritten code was sufficient guarantee to any would-be investor.

Suggestions had been made that Zimbabwe should enter into bilateral agreements with countries from which new investments might come; but the Government had refused to do so.

If there was need for an investment code, the Government would consider one. "But at the moment we feel the general principles we have enunciated are sufficient."

The EEC had been very responsive to what Zimbabwe was trying to do. The organisation's member states had pledged to increase their financial and technical aid.

Britain had agreed to make aid for resettlement and students flexible. West Germany had committed itself to $22 358 502 of financial and technical aid for this year, and an agreement had been signed involving a number of projects.

France had increased its aid from $24 418 235 to $38 702 903. The aid was expected to benefit programmes under the country's three - year national development plan.

The Government would soon give a detailed account of all the financial and technical aid agreements signed during the Prime Minister's tour. The various ministries involved would follow up the arrangements to ensure that the aid was effectively put to use for the benefit of all the people in the country.

Mr Mugabe had held talks with owners of the Beira-Mutare oil pipeline, but could not say when it would open until the discussions had been concluded.

GOVERNMENT'S LAND PURCHASE PLANS WORRY COMMERCIAL FARMERS

[Article by Mike Overmeyer]

[Text]

COMMERCIAL farmers in Zimbabwe are concerned about the Government's plans to buy more than half their land to resettle thousands of peasant families.

They are unhappy that the Government wants to buy between eight and ten million hectares of the 14,5 million hectares of commercial farmland in the country at an estimated total cost of $480 million as part of the three-year resettlement programme which is expected to start next month.

And a Government spokesman has warned that the authorities would not tolerate a situation where commercial farmers tried to blackmail or hold the country to ransom.

The president of the Commercial Farmers' Union, Mr Jim Sinclair, said in an interview that farmers supported resettlement and land distribution, particularly when it was geared towards making use of underdeveloped land.

"This unused land must be made productive and the best way to do this is through resettlement," Mr Sinclair said.

But, he added: "We get worried and unhappy about the resettlement programme if it does not take into account the food production needs of the country.

"We are concerned if resettlement is going to affect production in the commercial sector," he said.

Echoing similar sentiments another farmer, Mr David Nield, said: "We feel there is lots of unused land."

Mr Nield, who is chairman of the TSATSI Farmers' Association situated in one of the country's most lucrative farming areas, added:

"It would be a dangerous step to start taking over commercial land for resettlement because this land feeds the nation and brings in substantial foreign currency.

"There is enough land available on a willing-buyer willing-seller basis."

Asked whether the commercial farmers might want to "hold Zimbabwe to ransom", Mr Sinclair said: "We can't hold anyone to ransom. It would be disastrous and we would be the losers.

"It's nonsense to say that we would hold Zimbabwe to ransom."

The Government spokesman said there was no doubt that the major issue during the war was the land, not only part of it but all of it.

He said the Government believed that by investing in the communal lands, the peasants could become productive.

"While resettlement may be the immediate objective, the Government will in the long run try to make all land productive, including the marginal land.

"This marginal land is not being used properly and cannot yield maximum results because of the lack of fertiliser and implements.

"Today there are still no roads into the communal areas," the spokesman said.

The war was not only fought over the shortage of land for the majority of the country's people, but for the peasants who had been denied facilities to develop the communal areas and buy fertiliser and implements, the spokesman said.

"A government that cares for the people will try to improve along these lines," he said.

To avoid any "blackmailing", the spokesman added, the Government would give the people in the communal lands an opportunity to contribute to the national food supply.

The first year of independence had shown that, given fertiliser and equipment, the communal peasant could make a big contribution to food production in Zimbabwe.

BRIEFS

FOOD PROBLEMS--Zimbabwe might not be self-sufficient in food in five to 10 years, let alone be the breadbasket for Southern Africa, the Secretary for Agriculture, Mr Robbie Mupawose, said yesterday. Opening a symposium in Harare on extension service management, he questioned the crecibility of statements that this country was the region's breadbasket. "We have neither the best climate and soils nor the largest land mass in this region. With our expanding non-food producing urban and mining population, with its increased spending power, in five to 10 years shall we be self-sufficient in food?" More than 90 percent of all agricultural produce marketed through formal channels, came from the large-scale commercial farms, 2 to 3 percent from small-scale commercial areas and 5 to 7 percent from communal areas. "As the resettlement programme progresses and reduces the size of the commercial sector, productivity and land should be maintained and, if possible, increased. "If there is a drop in production it must only last a very short period indeed, or we face disaster," he said. Warning against false euphoria, Mr Mupowose said agriculture faced reduced availability of fertiliser, machinery and experienced staff. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 5 Jun 82 p 1]

UNION COMMITTEE--The Government has appointed a three-man committee to run the Agricultural and Plantation Workers' Union. The move was taken after the suspension last week of the organisation's general secretary, Mr Dickson Ndawana, from all trade union activities in Zimbabwe. He was suspended by the Government pending the outcome of investigations into alleged nonpayment of rent for offices in Sinola Street, Harare. The Chief Industrial Relations Officer, Mr Ignatius Chigwendere, said the committee would look after union affairs until the problem was settled. He said the Government would not hesitate to take action against unionists who misused union funds. "All union leaders in Zimbabwe were required by law to account for their funds. Failure to do so will result in their organisations being investigated by the Government." [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 8 Jun 82 p 3]

BATTERY CASE EXPORTS--Chloride Zimbabwe's recently formed export department has already started exporting hard rubber battery cases to its sister components in Malawi and several consignments of other battery components have also been despatched there. It is estimated that a total of 50 000 battery cases will be exported to Zambia and Malawi this year with the first consignment for Zambia ready but awaiting import documentation from Lusaka prior to despatch. Mr John Murphy who is responsible for Chloride's export department said "We worked hard to ensure that the export potential of the new plant was brought to fruition at the earliest possible moment. "In addition to the consignments that have already left, we have a further 20 orders for battery cases and accessories which will be exported in the immediate future. "We are investigating all possible markets, including Mozambique, and are confident that as well as saving the country foreign currency by manufacturing locally we can further help Zimbabwe's foreign currency situation by enlarging our export market." He added, "Our Bulawayo depot export finished batteries to Botswana and Chloride's agent in Francistown has recently been awarded the Botswana Government contract thereby increasing his orders from us by 50 percent." HOUSING PRIORITIES LISTED, CRIME RISE NOTED IN HUAMBO

[Text] Huambo--The People's Provincial Assembly of Huambo recently passed important resolutions aimed at improving the supply of petroleum and construction materials for the rural areas and to give priority to the allocation of housing facilities.

These resolutions were released through a communique distributed to the information media in the province of Huambo; they recommend that, looking at the petroleum sector, SONANGOL [National Fuels Company] should make every effort to normalize the distribution of this product; in this effort it will have the support of the party. The highest people's government body, in the resolution passed for the construction sector, notes that construction materials produced in the province of Huambo must be sold directly to the consumer whereas those coming from other provinces must be sold through Domestic Trade [Ministry] and specialized private enterprises.

The announcement also emphasizes that the provincial housing agencies, when it comes to allocating housing units, must give priority to international cooperation, to party and government personnel, mass and social organizations, students coming from other provinces, army officers, and supervisory personnel trained abroad.

Indoctrination Meeting in Community of Dondero

An indoctrination meeting was held in the community of Dondero in whose course the new community commissioner for that area was introduced.

The coordinator of the municipal DORGAN [Provincial Department of Party Organization] for Ecunha, who presided over the introduction ceremony, during his remarks urged the local population to get down to work on the tasks of defense and production.

Defense, Security, and Justice Agencies Hold Seminar

The first professional advancement seminar of the defense, security, and justice organizations has been underway since Wednesday in the city of Huambo under the chairmanship of the region's military and civilian attorney general.

This seminar, whose closing session is scheduled for today, studied methods which would simplify the details and delays now encountered in the handling of trials due to the low professional skills of the security, defense, and justice personnel.

During the opening session, Marcolino Moco, deputy coordinator of the Provincial Party Committee, emphasized the important role to be played by the security cadres in fighting crime which is on the rise in the province.

GDR INDUSTRIAL FAIR OPENS IN LUANDA

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 14 May 82 p 5

[Article by Americo G.: "First GDR Export Exposition Opened--Leipzig Gold Medal for Lopo do Nascimento"]

[Text] "The gold medal awarded to me was given for the effort made by all workers in the Ministry of Foreign Trade and the enterprises under it," said RPA [People's Republic of Angola] Planning and Foreign Trade Minister Lopo do Nascimento in substance at the moment he officially opened the first exposition of GDR export products in the RPA.

The exhibit opened today by Lopo do Nascimento was attended by GDR Vice Minister of Electrotechnology and Electronics Manfred Titze and by the GDR ambassador in Angola, the minister of health, and the RPA vice minister of domestic trade as well as other officials from the Ministry of Foreign Trade; it constitutes an important milestone in trade relations between the RPA and GDR.

Trade between the RPA and the GDR marks the implementation of one of the main guidelines of the party which involves the privilege of commercial relations and exchange with the socialist countries, our unconditional allies.

In this context and as was pointed out yesterday, Angola is the GDR's first partner in the area south of Sahara and the GDR is one of the first trade partners of Angola in the socialist camp and these relations are considered to be exemplary.

Lopo do Nascimento, who is a member of the Central Committee of the MPLA-Labor Party, was on that occasion given one of the highest awards of the GDR, that is, the Leipzig Fair Gold Medal of Honor; it is traditionally awarded to the man who is most outstanding in the maintenance of friendly relations with the GDR. The medal was presented to Lopo do Nascimento by the East German ambassador accredited in Angola.

In the meantime, the vice minister of electrotechnology and electronics emphasized the importance of the visit by Oscar Fischer to the RPA because of the way this served to step up relations between the two countries, fitting in perfectly with the friendly relations between the MPLA-Labor Party and the SED [Socialist Unity Party] under the provisions of the cooperation agreement signed between Agostinho Neto and Erich Honecker; the implementation of this agreement includes the agreements signed by Comrade President Jose Eduardo dos Santos during his visit to the GDR in October 1981.

This exhibit displays some products and equipment items already known to the Angolan people, such as the IFA [Industrial Association for Motor Vehicle Construction] W-50, the ADK mobile revolving crane, the model 512 harvester combine, plus other known products and several unknown products, such as the Multicar, a utility cargo vehicle which consumes little gasoline and is widely used in urban transportation; it has emerged as a real alternative and variant for small freight transportation used in urban environments in the RPA.

The exhibit also includes miscellaneous projects and studies developed by GDR specialists which could at the right time be turned over to Angolan officials in charge of foreign trade.

It is noted that the GDR already maintains broad cooperation with Angola in sectors such as education and health, among others.

RAILROAD SYSTEM DESCRIBED

Paris EUROPE OUTREMER in French No 623, Dec 81 pp 30-31

[Article: "Realigning the Douala-Yaounde Railroad Track"]

[Text] Managed and operated by REGIFERCAM (the Cameroonian Railway Administration), a public industrial and commercial enterprise, the Cameroonian railroad system includes a total of about 1,173 km of lines distributed as follows:

- the Transcameroon central line, Douala-Yaounde-Ngaoundere (935 km),

- the western line, Douala-Nkongsamba (172 km),

- the Ngoumou-Mbalmayo line, branching off the Transcameroon line (37 km),

- the Mbanga-Kumba line (29 km), branching off the western line.

To these should be added 250 km of service and junction tracks, 74 stations and depots, including some 50 on the Douala-Ngaoundere line, central vehicle maintenance and repair shops at Douala-Bassa, and various maintenance and reserve depots.

Rolling Stock Increase

On 30 June 1979, REGIFERCAM employed close to 6,000 people, including 86 Cameroonian higher cadres and 39 expatriates delegated under a technical assistance program. At the same date, it had at its disposal 93 motor vehicles, including 53 locomotives, 8 railcars, 30 light rail motor tractors and 2 gang-cars, as well as 91 passenger cars, 15 luggage vans, 1556 commercial cars, 157 passenger and service cars, 197 service cars. Orders were placed in 1978 and 1979 to increase the rolling equipment: with Canadian financing, twenty 2000-HP locomotives, 500 40-ton load cars, including 240 covered cars, 60 high-sided open cars, 200 lumber cars, amounting to a total of 6824 million CFA francs. With French financing, 31 passenger cars and 5 luggage cars equipped with electric generators (2,430 million CFA francs), plus 10 switching locomotives and car carriers.

At the end of 1981, REGIFERCAM also received a new 35 million French franc loan for the acquisition of railroad equipment, including ten 950-HP electric Diesel locomotives. These purchases are part of an equipment program, the cost of which totals 2.5 billion CFA francs.

Apart from the realigning of the Douala-Yaounde track (see below), some of the main investments include the expansion of the Douala and Yaounde shops. The cost of this program is estimated at 3,800 million [CFA francs]; it is financed 80 percent by the World Bank and 20 percent by REGIFERCAM. The first stage is in progress. The new Douala goods station, scheduled to be completed this year, will cost 7.5 billion CFA francs (World Bank financing). The future Douala passenger station is expected to cost 4,300 million CFA francs. The search for financial backers has started.

A Spectacular Recovery

REGIFERCAM is now facing financial difficulties because of the debts it has incurred in connection with its investment program. Thus, at the end of 1981, the Cameroon Chamber of Commerce, Industry and Mines indicated that "from 1978 to 1981, expenditures have increased at an average annual rate of 45 percent, whereas sales progressed by only 20 percent. Despite this, a remarkable effort to recover has been made. The operating deficit decreased from 730 million in May 1979 to 290.7 million CFA franc in May 1980." Recovery is continuing, as is shown by the statements and balance sheet for the fiscal year 1980-1981 which are marked by an improvement in managing conditions, and by good results in passenger and freight traffic which are clearly exceeding budget forecasts and last year's results.

These results are due to new modern equipment being placed in service, and were obtained in spite of the decline in traffic connected with lumber exportations. Thus, for the fiscal year, freight traffic amounted to 668.7 million tons/km (i.e. a 15.9 percent increase). In 1979-1980, passenger and freight traffic amounted to 244.3 million passenger-km (against 239.8 million in 1978-1979), and 578.06 million ton-km (against 500 million the previous year). The freight transported amounted to 1,417,000 tons (against 1,350,000 tons in 1978-1979), but could have reached 1.5 million tons had it not been for the crisis in Chad, the natural market for the Transcameroon railroad. The main goods transported were, in that order: lumber with 40,022 tons and 177,399,315 ton-km; oil products (176,407 tons and 73,950,225 ton-km); ALUCAM [Cameroon Aluminum] materials (112,754 tons); building materials (99,154 tons and 34,007,343 ton-km); North Cameroon materials (70,669,339 ton-km).

We should also mention bananas and pineapples (73,383 tons), cotton (54,575 tons), and cocoa (44,410 tons).

Realigning the Douala-Yaounde Railroad Track

A true bottleneck, because of its age and the intricacies of its layout, the Douala-Yaounde track has been repaired and replanned for seven years. The objective of the project, known under the code name TRANSCAM III, is to bring the track length to slightly over 264 km, down from the 308 km of the old track. Between Douala and Eseka, this railroad track was built by the German from 1909 to 1914 and, between Eseka and Yaounde, by the French from 1916 to 1926. Because of the inadequacy of the earth-moving equipment of the time, the builders had to follow the relief, hugging the contour lines as much as they could since there was no gorge or penetration valley in the relief, which is chaotic in places. This line required considerable maintenance expenditures, not only for the track itself but also for the rolling stock; derailments were very frequent and accidents, often very serious, occurred. For all these reasons, the modernization of this track, which is the natural continuation of the Transcameroon railroad was given top priority.

Studies started late in 1969 and were entrusted to the Transcameroon Railroad Office (OCFT). On-site work started on 1 November 1975.

The first section, Yaounde-Maloume (83.5 km down from 102 km) was completed in February 1978 and placed in service on 26 April of the same year, after 30 months of work. The cost of the work amounted to 14,526 billion CFA francs and was financed by Cameroon (2,585 million CFA francs), the FRG (7,221 million), France (3 billion) and Canada (1,720 million).

After this section was placed in service, overhaul of the Douala-Edea section was due to begin; this section is the most heavily used, mainly because of the transport of aluminum uphill to Edea, and the shipment of ALUCAM production (aluminum ingots, sheets, corrugated plates) to Douala.

At the same time, REGIFERCAM wished to divide the very long Makondo-So-Dibanga block by a station equipped with safety facilities. Therefore, it was decided to add the Mandjab station section to the Douala-Edea section. Work on this second TRANSCAM III section--long of 80.45 km, down from 94.63 km--started in December 1978 and was completed on 21 June 1981. The cost of this second section was 16,233 million CFA francs; it was financed by Cameroon (2,850 million CFA francs), the FRG (6,843 million), the EEC (2,775 million), the United States (1,565 million), Canada (1.2 billion) and France (1 billion).

Work is now in progress on the third section, Edea-Eseka (more precisely Mbengue-Eseka). This section, long of 72.4 km (down from 79.7 km), could be placed in service during 1982. The cost of the work amounted to 14,966 million CFA franc; it was financed by Cameroon (3,552 Million CFA francs), France (4,994 million), the FRG (3,480 million) and the European Investment Bank (2,940 million). It should be noted that the old Eseka station built by the German will be renovated but, at the request of the local authorities, the present building will be preserved.

Realigning Completed by 1986

The fourth, 28-km long section, Eseka-Ngwate, is still under study. Because of the relief and geological peculiarities, the project developed by OCFT provides for the construction of three large viaducts to straddle valleys and one 400-m long tunnel.

Another layout also under study provides for a 1,670 km-long tunnel, more accented curves and more earthworks. Work will last three to four years and could start in July 1982. The cost of this section is estimated at 30 billion CFA francs. Financing is expected to be obtained from the organizations which, in the past, have contributed to this realization. This section is scheduled to be placed in service in 1986. The realigning of the Douala-Yaounde track will then be completed. According to the most recent estimates, its total cost will have amounted to some 76 billion CFA francs provided by Cameroon and several financial backers.

Let us recall that TRANSCAM I (Yaounde-Belado, 1969) and TRANSCAM II (Belabo-Ngaoundere, 1974) represented a total cost of 26,227 million CFA francs of the time, provided by Cameroon (3,692 million CFA francs), the EEC (12,238 million), the United States (5,169 million), France (4,039 million), and the FRG (1,089 million).

Thus, the Douala-Yaounde track, the most heavily travelled in the railroad system, with its curves of over 500 m radius (the number of which was reduced from 750 to 196!), with its maximum gradients of 16 mm/m, with its some 30 crossing stations spaced at regular intervals (about 10 km), will be able to receive long trains, and the maximum speed of passenger trains will increase from 60 to 90 km/h. When work is completed, the trip will take only 4 hours and 30 minutes instead of some 10 hours at present. Early in 1982, travellers leaving Douala at 20:00 hours used to arrive in Yaounde around 5:30 hours. The capacity of the line will be multiplied by five as far as freight trains are concerned.

This realigning will obviously result in a decreased number of derailments and accidents which, at present, are due to the age of the track; and, finally, the trains could be on time more often.

MILITARY RULE, SUPPRESSION OF DISSENT CRITICIZED

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3382, 31 May 82 pp 1451-1454

[Article by Elizabeth Ohene]

[Excerpts] "TRYING to judge the 31 December revolution in Ghana from press reports, and comments internationally, has been almost impossible." Articles in favour of the coup have been written: heavyweight commentators have expressed personal opinions (and supposedly factual ones) which, by chance, accord with the views and attitudes of their home governments.

I offer no apologies for plagiarizing the first paragraph of Stuart Sutton-Jones' article in West Africa. It just goes to prove the point that the bottle is half-full and the bottle is half-empty both mean the same thing, depending on which point of view you are trying to push. A "World Today" BBC World Service programme on Ghana which featured a lot of heavyweight commentators, ended with ". . . if there is anybody in Ghana today that can turn that country around, it is young Jerry Rawlings." Admittedly, the BBC's early hysteria has calmed down somewhat now, but there can be no denying that the general credo of the BBC is that young Jerry Rawlings is indeed the "Junior Jesus" come to save Ghana.

A recent publication in The Guardian, based on an interview with Captain Kodjo Tsikata the Special Advisor to the ruling PNDC, also left no doubts that the answers to Ghana's problems are finally being found, with the compliments of the new regime.

The point being laboured here is that much of the international press has simply treated the Ghana story very much according to whether they see in the situation anything that reinforces its own beliefs: Jeune Afrique, for example, was enthusiastic about the events of 31 December because, according to the paper, the black bourgeoisie had been given a rude shock.

There have been no dearth of articles in

Why should it be made out that Ghana is such a peculiar country that what is generally understood to mean parliamentary democracy in other parts of the world cannot work in our country. Civilians and elections cannot equal democracy anywhere, neither in France nor in Rumania, nor indeed in Ghana; the formula can only work if it is supported by institutions that work and a determination on the part of the people.

There is a lot of talk these days in Ghana about "real democracy" and the restructuring of Ghanaian Society. Libya has been held out as one of the places where "real democracy" exists and works and all the people are involved in the decision making process. I am suggesting that this is an insult to the Ghanaian people and a sad misunderstanding of our society, for we have, even in our traditional set up, the institutions that can stand any democratic test and which might be worth studying by a comparatively backward and unquestioning society like Libya.

Transplanting Alien Concepts

In this desperate attempt to transplant alien concepts to Ghanaian society, our traditional values and institutions are likely to be destroyed in the process leaving us the poorer. The lowly clerk in an office in Accra, the mechanic on the factory floor in Tema might very well be "odikros" or sub-chiefs in their towns or villages and after 5 pm he immediately becomes the chief or elder that he is and the man who is his Managing Director between 8 am to 5 pm would have to (as we say in Ghana) lower his cloth before speaking to his clerk or mechanic and on occasion might have to remove his sandals before approaching this mechanic at a dawn gathering and be giving orders to him a few hours later. This is just to illustrate that words like the "working classes, peasants", as understood in other societies might have difficulties being transplanted wholesale into Ghana.

I am suggesting that the forming of new institutions to replace old ones because they have not worked is a defeatist and cowardly attitude. If the courts in Ghana, for example have been found wanting, the answer is not to establish new courts — People's Courts. This is not to suggest that the courts have discharged their duties to everybody's satisfaction. My own personal experience with the courts in 1980 and 1981 left me with the decided impression that some judges would much rather not irritate the Executive. But then Ghana history is full of judges who have been firm and true to their oaths inspite of tremendous pressure from the Executive

In much the same way, the Armed Forces of Ghana have produced some of the finest soldiers of which the country can be justly proud. But it is the Armed Forces that have wreaked the most havoc on the country and we know in Ghana, more than any other people, that uniforms and guns are no guarantee for honesty or even hard work.

The point is that if the civilian population had it in its power to administer this theory of "if thine right hand troubles thee, cut it off" that the PNDC is applying to time honoured institutions, the Armed Forces, maintained at over 2 million cedis a week by public funds, would have been disbanded long ago.

"Campaign for Democracy"

I did not have the misfortune to attending that most "spurious and chaotic" press conference at which the "Campaign for Democracy in Ghana" was launched, I also have no knowledge of who the motley collection of unlikely bedfellows are that are fronted by Mr. Addae-Amoako and Justice Hayfron-Benjamin, but one must take exception to the patronising attitude again; why should Justice Hayfron-Benjamin be a naive and unwitting front for whoever the former politicians are? Is the suggestion that his is too simple a mind to grasp the realities and machinations that the commentators know? I am not in a position to challenge what Mr. Ayeh-Kumi might have said or planned but it sounds to me that unless the suggestion is that Mr. Ayeh-Kumi, the master manipulator, and this group of Old Guards had the courts also in their pockets, they took an awfully risky chance chanelling their grab for power through the courts. If the three PNP officials who were the targets of the Adae-Amoako case were indeed guilty of the charges laid against them and were removed by a court order, I think it is something to be happy about for it showed that three very powerful "President's Men" could be removed from office for corruption and that can't be wrong. I have heard of cynical manipulation of power in the western democracies.

But then such a marvellous way of explaining away such a phenomenon in Ghanaian politics as the Adae-Amoako case sounds very much like an attempt to reinforce the view that Ghana's social reality means that corrupt officials can never be exposed unless through equally corrupt manipulation of power.

It is rather late in the day though to expose facts which show that the Adae-Amoako case was not aimed at ensuring probity in government: these facts published in November last year could at least have helped in diluting the public support that the move enjoyed. And yet in spite of the evidence adduced, one still wonders how Dr. Ayeh Kumi could have pulled off his coup, seeing that he was disqualified by law from holding public office and could not have become Chairman of the PNP no matter how many houses he sold in Holland or Paraguay to finance the party.

This elaborate attempt to discredit that case sounds to me suspiciously like an attempt to justify the main reason that Stuart extends as the justification for the coup, i.e. there was no possibility of change in the Limann regime. I am suggesting that since the court case was never given a chance to work and demonstrate for once in Ghana's political history, that powerful men can be removed for corruption without the power of the gun, the benefit of the doubt has to be given to Adae-Amoako. And if he is willing to front a "Campaign for Democracy", I would say more grease to his elbows, the gentleman strikes me as one of the few non-progressive Ghanaians willing to do something about what they believe in.

I never imagined that I would live to see the day when Dr. Limann would become something of an enigma. My own impressions were that he was quite lost and overwhelmed by the task that faced him and I would agree with Stuart that in spite of his protestations, Dr. Limann did not wield half the powers that were his on paper and this impression I formed even without the "behind the scenes" knowledge of Stuart and without the advantage of having interviewed Dr. Limann in custody. So what is one supposed to make out of the reports in the Ghana press that quote many of Limann's cabinet and top party officials as describing Limann as a dictator? The former Interior Minister, the former Foreign Minister, Nana Okutwer Bekoe are all supposed to have described Dr. Limann as a Dictator who wanted only his wishes to be carried out — even the Chairman of the Parliamentary Committee for Finance whom many considered an intelligent and strong member of the PNP is supposed to have told the National Investigation Committee that Dr. Limann was a dictator and always wanted the Executive to override Parliament and Mr. Hyde, this apparently strong character, according to his own words, always acquiesced and turned Parliament into a rubber stamp of Limann's wishes.

Losing the Truth

It must be obvious that somewhere in all this, the truth is lost. The argument has been made to me that the December 31 coup is somewhat different in reality from what it seems. It is being suggested that in 1979, the people who consider themselves "progressives" saw in the June 4 Revolution, an opportunity to grab power and restructure the Ghanaian Society according to the theories they have been propounding. They tried to convince Flt-Lt. Rawlings not to hand over power to an elected civilian regime but at that time, he was still 'naive" and refused to listen, but they bided their time, planned carefully, adopted the Flight-Lieutenant, goaded the Security Services into harassing him to make the government lose credibility with the people and when the time was ripe, moved to take over the country. In other words, the aim was the left-wing (progressive) take over of the country, the coup was the method and Flt-Lieutenant Rawlings was the tool! After all, the Flight-Lieutenant can publicly claim considerable track record as a defender of principle and probity. Was it not he who, in 1979, demonstrated quite indelibly that a day of reckoning will come for all the rulers, no matter how powerful or corrupt? And has he not since then become the idol of the people?

The recent Guardian article already referred to about Kodjo Tsikata said a lot of enlightening things. In 1979 Flt-Lt Rawlings was urged not to hand over power: the only political party to be allowed in Ghana, the United Front, will be formed soon and membership will be limited only to the progressives — organisations like the June 4 Movement etc., and there will be no room for liberals and reactionaries.

Unacceptable People?

Is is being suggested that the restructured Ghana being planned will have room only for progressives whose credentials apparently rest with the Special Advisor, and what will happen to unrepentant and unabashed liberals, reactionaries, anarchists, weirdos and dreamers . . . should they disappear from Ghana?

The suggestion then is further made that the Limann administration did not have a ghost of a chance right from the word go and the fact that they themselves were so incompetent and corrupt only hastened an inevitable end, which the "progressives" were bent upon anyway.

Why should every criticism of the PNDC be labelled as coming from people with axes to grind, or people who are blindly ignorant or who are naive and unwitting? Need it be only the PNDC, and the progressives that love Ghana. I have always been suspicious of people who have all the answers and do not want any dissenting voices and nothing has happened to dissuade me from this conviction.

Those who call themselves progressives in Ghana are fond of quoting Chairman Mao's tired dictum "a revolution is not a tea party" and that is supposed to excuse the abuse of civilians that accompany and has been going on in this coup also. A member of the PNDC is even reported to have said (one hopes as a macabre joke) that there are 14 million Ghanaians, and even if we should lose 4 million in the process of making the revolution work, it is a worthwhile price! The PNDC itself has dismissed as ridiculous the claims of the fugitive former Ambassador to Nigeria that over 2,000 people have been killed, at the same time all dispassionate observers also dismiss the PNDC figure of about 30. The real figure might never be known and I am suggesting that whatever the figure it is a criminal waste of innocent blood.

When all is said and done, one should not worry about what is said in the international press whether for or against the coup. What about the Ghana Press? What they say must be important, and they seem to say all is well, and they said so at the height of Acheampong's infamous rule.

PNDC QUESTIONS EXPATRIATES' USE IN IRRIGATION PROJECT

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3382, 31 May 82 p 1482

[Text]

The Provisional National Defence Council will not renew the agreement between the Ghana Government and Tate and Lyle Technical Services, a British firm, for the management of the multi-million cedi Tono and Vea irrigation projects in the Upper Region.

In place of the expatriates, qualified Ghanaians within the Irrigation Development authority and other Ghanaian experts will be made to manage the two projects, PNDC member Sergeant Alolga Akata-Pore said. Addressing border guards, custom and immigration officials at the Ghana-Upper Volta border post at Paga, he said like all other agreements signed in the past "the agreement was inimical, an insult, a complete sell-out and a big drain on the scarce foreign exchange resources of the country."

He questioned why one expatriate officer alone, apart from being paid his monthly allowances in cedis, which ran into thousands, should again earn a colossal amount of £1,900 a month for only performing supervisory work which, he said, was not above the capabilities of most Ghanaians.

The PNDC member said since Tate and Lyle was only operating under a "Letter of Intent" whose duration of one year had expired, the PNDC would not renew such an inimical agreement, let alone sign the agreement. He blamed the PNP administration for leading the country into such an agreement and said if the PNP was committed to improving the lot of Ghanaians, it would not have signed such an agreement with Tate and Lyle. Sgt. Alolga Akata-Pore added that a team of auditors would arrive at the Upper Region at the end of May to audit the accounts of Tate and Lyle which was operating under the name Irrigation Company, Upper Region (ICOUR).

The PNDC member has ordered officials of the Paga border and all entry points from neighbouring countries to the region not to allow any officials of Tate and Lyle to bring in goods under the duty-free system they enjoyed under the agreement. Recently, the PDC of ICOUR locked out their five expatriate management personnel, seized their fleet of 504 caravan and Range Rover cars, and called on the PNDC to abrogate the Ghana government-Tate and Lyle agreement which the Limann administration signed last year.

PRICE RISE NOTED, RESPONSIBILITIES QUESTIONED

Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 12 May 82 p 2

[Article by Baba Sanfa: "Who Controls Prices?"]

[Text] I am addressing this letter to your newspaper and ask that it be published in the letters to the editor because I want to take up an issue which I consider pertinent. It involves price controls which have been a frequent topic in articles published in NO PINTCHA although no steps have been taken to put an end to this unrestrained speculation.

I am saying this because, from the women who run their stands at the markets to the merchants, via the government hotels, the disparity or, better yet, the arbitrary nature of the price fixing process has become ever more widespread and has assumed frightening proportions. Let us now take a look at the facts. For example, how can one justify the fact that just one little chicken costs 250 and even 300 pesos whereas the price on the price list it seems is only 50 pesos per kilogram? It is true that it would not be fair to force a poultry farmer to sell a chicken of that size for 75 or 100 pesos because we know that our chickens are poorly fed and therefore do not weigh much; at least they get the price at the farm which is 110 pesos per kilogram.

So much for chickens, not to mention the old issue of meat prices which still cause clashes between the butchers and the city authorities who have not yet arrived at an agreement while meat prices continue to rise. Another case for example involves coal. Since the last cooking gas crisis, this product has been a tempting source of income for those who sell it. A 100-kilogram sack which in the old days cost between 100 and 150 pesos now has to be purchased at 250 pesos. How is this possible? But that is not all because miserable is the family that does not manage to purchase a sack of coal and that every day obtains a small quantity of this product which does not even amount to a kilogram for 15 and even 25 pesos, depending on the occasion and the supply. This is really inconceivable.

But the price of mangos really takes the cake. This is a product which for the most part is reproduced spontaneously, without requiring any great care, but which is sold at exorbitant prices with as much as 5 pesos for each mango or even 15 or 20 pesos for those from India. If this goes on, where are we going to stop? And what about hotel prices where each meal now costs 275 pesos whereas a short time ago it only cost 200 pesos?

Speaking quite frankly, it is more than ever necessary now to review the situation for the benefit of the lower-income families so as to counterbalance the low wages and the high cost of living. If the government cannot at this time raise wages due to the country's economic situation, it must at least try to defend the interests of the citizens and it must not permit such arbitrary action and it must demand that each agency carry out all of its functions. The government must make sure that the problem of supervision will be properly reviewed and that each will assume his own functions in defense of the interests of the ordinary citizen who is the primary victim of unrestrained speculation.

BRIEFS

SWEDISH RURAL FINANCING--A financing agreement in the amount of 30 million Swedish crowns (about 180 million pesos) was signed between Guinea-Bissau and SIDA (Swedish International Development Agency) and was earmarked for financing various projects in progress in the country. The document was signed by Comrade Carlos Correia, member, Political Bureau, PAIGC [African Independent Party of Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde] and finance minister, and Mr Sven Ake Svenson, SIDA representative in Bissau. The nonrepayable financing will essentially go for the Rural Integrated Development Project of Zone I which comprises the regions of Biombo, Oio, and Cacheu, extending to other sectors, such as education, health, and natural resources. The signing ceremony was held last Wednesday in this capital and was attended by comrades Abubacar Toure, director general in the Ministry of Economic Coordination and Planning, and Jorge de Oliveira, director, Bachile Rural Extension Project. GDR MEDIA TRAINING--Last Wednesday, a ceremony opening the advanced training seminar for information personnel took place in the presence of Information and Culture Minister Filinto Barros and GDR Ambassador Manfred Feiferth. During the ceremony, which took place in the conference room of the Party Secretariat, Comrade Agnelo Regalla, director general of information, stressed the importance of this initiative "because the journalist must keep improving his skills all the time and upgrade himself professionally." Addressing a gathering of information workers which was very small--something that must be criticized severely because unfortunately it demonstrates the lack of interest on the part of some journalists--Agnelo Regallo talked about the bonds of cooperation which link the two countries, peoples, and the journalistic profession. After recalling the past record of our relationships of friendship, he praised the help which the GDR gave to the country, particularly to the national press. One of the leaders at the seminar, Fred Frotscher, generally outlined the objectives to be attained in this course. "The press must play a role as mobilizer, organizer, and educator," the German journalist emphasized. It must be noted that the seminar will be held for 4 weeks, simultaneously, at party headquarters (for radio personnel) and at the editorial offices of NO PINTCHA (for the printed press). DELEGATION TO KOMSOMOL CONGRESS--The JAAC (Amilcar Cabral African Youth) is represented at the 19th Congress of the Konsomol [Young Communist League] by comrade Teobaldo Barbosa, of the PAIGC [African Independent Party of Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde] Central Committee and deputy secretary of the Guinean youth organization. The congress began last Tuesday and heard a speech by Komsomol Central Committee first secretary Boris Pastukhov and Central Control Commission chairman Yevgeniy Gluchevich. AGRICULTURAL DELEGATION TO CUBA--The Republic of Guinea-Bissau is represented at the sixth congress of Cuban farmers which began yesterday in Havana. The country is represented by a delegation from the Secretariat of State of Liberation Fighters of the Fatherland and of Rural Development consisting of comrades Jose Lopes Vieira Junior, in charge of the Department for Control and Support for the Production Units, and Carlos Mateus Amarante Tavares, technical agriculture official. The congress, which ends next Monday and in which the country participates for the first time, will review past activities, as well as the profitability and output during the year which has just ended, and it will plan the new system for the current year. MUSLIMS OF RUIRU WARNED TO FOLLOW THE NYAYO OF MOI

Nairobi TAIFA LEO in Swahili 23 Apr 82 p 7

[Article by Kiambu: "Muslims in Ruiru Should Quit Their Greediness and Gluttony]

[Text] "Quit the greediness, the gluttony and great avarice for quickly making yourselves rich and vying for leadership," advised the Councilor of Ruiru, Mr Charles Njenga Ngacha.

Councilor Ngacha, speaking with TAIFA LEO, said that the citizens of Kenya are now aware and recognize true leaders by what they do, not by their words alone.

He said that the inhabitants of Ruiru and all the citizens of Kenya together should heed the president's call for Nyayo, that is, unity, love and trust; for without these three, there could be no progress nor the great respect which Kenya, this country of ours, has gained from the leadership of the wise President Moi.

Councilor Ngacha, explaining what he meant, said that there is a saying in the Kikuyu language: "Njuguma njega yumaga o-ikuriro," that is, "A good stick is naturally shaped the way it is;" and that, "Mwere mwega umenyagwo na magetha maguo," that is, "A good, first-rate plant is recognized at harvest time."

Councilor Ngacha urged the residents of Ruiru to follow President Moi's wise, courageous, loving and most of all, God-fearing leadership.

Touching on progress in the area of Ruiru that he represents, Councilor Ngacha said that the city of Ruiru continues to grow very quickly and that many factories have been built and many others would continue to be built and now there are many citizens who have been hired for work.

Councilor Ngacha warned those who are bragging that they would be presenting themselves as candidates for the chairmanship of the Ruiru Town Council, which was recently set up, by reminding them of the Swahili saying, "Don't buy clothes before the baby is born."

READER TALKS ABOUT DIFFICULTY IN FINDING WORK

Nairobi TAIFA LEO in Swahili 24 Apr 82 p 2

[Article by Daudi A. Luvusi of Nakuru: "Difficulty in Getting Work in Kenya"]

[Text] Many parents deprive themselves of a comfortable life so they can pay for the studies of their children who are in secondary school.

If you look well you will find that the fees in these schools are very high, so that parents of two or more children are confronted with a heavy burden of fees, especially in colleges and the Harambee schools.

After the parents have carried this load, the children finish fourth form and fail to continue with their studies for some reason or another, and then, return to their parents looking for work.

Things are difficult these days. For example, are you hired just because you know someone?

That is the way things are these days.

In the end the children have nothing to do except to remain unemployed in the cities.

President Moi continually emphasizes and warns greedy employers who are sowing the seeds of clannishness, tribalism and cronyism to practice patriotism and employ citizens without any discrimination.

But there are some who do not follow this advice and instead hire only people of their own group. The first question these employers ask one looking for work is, "What is your tribe?"

The government should find some employment procedure that precludes clannishness, tribalism, religion and cronyism.

Finally, I would advise our children not to turn down work in whatever form, be it sweeping, cutting grass or hauling loads. Also enjoy self-employment work like sewing, shining shoes, carpentry, watch and clock repair, etc., for things have changed because of a lack of work.

TEST FARM PROJECT TO GET OIL FROM PLANTS

Nairobi TAIFA LEO in Swahili 24 Apr 82 p 11

[Article by Patrick Mungai: "They Are Planting Euphorbia (Mchongoma (Flacourtia Indica)) to Get Petroleum"]

[Text] There are few domestic programs as attractive and talked about as the 300-million-shilling program for growing euphorbia in Loruk, Baringo District.

While some researchers are talking about the merits of these plants, others hope that this might be the solution to the oil shortage problems of Kenya.

This program, which is being carried out jointly by the Ministry of Environment and Natural Resources and the Government of Belgium in an area of 1,000 hectares, is a major attempt at the use of a certain family of euphorbia which is found in tropical countries and can be used to make petroleum.

Tests recently conducted by Mobil oil company for the ministry showed that 7 tons of dried euphorbia can yield 1 ton of petroleum.

"This means that we can produce 8,000 liters of petroleum from 1 hectare of euphorbia per year," said the program's director Mr Philip Leakey, who also is a deputy minister in the Ministry of Environment and Natural Resources.

Such an assessment indicates that Kenya's daily petroleum requirements could be met with 45,000 hectares of euphoria which can thrive in deserts.

Even so, this program is still estimating the total cost to make one hectare of euphorbia productive and calculating the cost of dried euphorbia at the factory.

According to statements made by Mr Leakey, once this research is completed, it will be possible to determine whether euphorbia can be grown and used for making gasoline economically and profitably.

Research carried out on existing equipment has shown that because of its high oil yield, euphorbia can be produced at a cost of 150 shillings per ton of dried shrubs.

If so, then, gasoline made from euphorbia could be produced at a price of 3 to 4 shillings per liter, a price which would be cheap considering current economic conditions.

Other research that has been performed has shown that euphorbia could be used to produce for other fuels, e.g., charcoal. It was found that 50 tons of dried euphorbia can make about 15 tons of charcoal.

In this euphorbia program, clay brick kilns were built and used to make charcoal at low price.

Presently the euphorbia program which is being conducted in Baringo is continuing in cultivated fields, and labs and the workers' houses have been built there. The program has 80 Kenyan employees who are specialists in various fields.

Research

The idea of starting this program came to Mr Leakey in February, 1980. In his own words: "My inspiration came from what countries, like Brazil, Australia, Canada, and America, are doing to produce oil from plants as an alternative method of producing energy to drive generators."

"After analyzing many reports on the research done in those countries, I realized that many of the plants being researched are available locally," said Mr Leakey.

"As a result of this study I realized that oil could be derived from plants available in this country," he said.

Mr Leakey recommended to the government, through his ministry, to set up a program to do research on various plants found here in the country, to see if they are able to produce oil.

Then he visited various programs like those in America, Brazil and Mexico and returned satisfied that a similar plan could be carried out here in this country by using native plants which grow in the desert regions, and plants which, if they were grown, would not require different farming methods than those used for growing food plants in fertile regions.

The government approved Mr Leakey's recommendation and asked the Government of Belgium to provide money for the program through the Ministry For Cooperative Development.

In 1981 the Government of Belgium agreed to help with this program through a joint venture with the Government of Kenya by providing an amount of five million dollars and specialists to take part in the program.

The Three Types

The Government of Kenya agreed to allocate to the program through the Ministry of Environment and Natural Resources 12 million shillings and to fund construction preparation of the test area and to hire the workers for the project.

The aims of the project in the beginning were two: First, to determine the fitness of various trees which are able to furnish oil sap; second, to gather evidence to show that that oil could be produced commercially where it would be exported also.

The research group was given areas for the research in Kibwezi, in Machakos District, the forst of Jilore and in Baringo. After a long period this group had 300 types of plants which could yield the necessary sap. This was a large number and after additional research, these plants were reduced to 30 which could furnish a large quantity of oil.

These 30 types were selected because they were easy to handle and could be transported easily too, said Mr Leakey. Also there were many of them that could yield a lot of oil.

Further research was done resulting finally in just four types of plants which were found to be able to produce oil easily and cheaply. Among these four, euphorbia seemed the best to use for this plan. From there, full research was begun on these shrubs.

Until then no one had successfully grown euphorbia as a farm crop, so no one knew how much it would cost to grow. The program continued and it was found that euphorbia would be able to yield a dried amount of 50 tons per year per hectare.

Research is still under way and, perhaps, euphorbia will become a plant grown by farmers in the desert regions of the country for producing petroleum.

WHAT MMM/PSM WILL DO IF VICTORIOUS EXPLAINED

Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 27 Apr 82 pp 1, 6

[Interview with MMM/PSM [Mauritian Socialist Party] alliance leaders Aneerood Jugnauth, Paul Berenger, Jean-Claude del'Estrac and Harish Boodhoo by representatives of L'EXPRESS, LE MAURICIEN and ADVANCE on 26 April 1982]

[Excerpts] "If the MMM/PSM alliance wins power this coming 11 June, a small apolitical administrative team (commissioners), currently being hand-picked by the leaders of the alliance, will be appointed to head the municipalities, mainly, pending the organization of municipal and village elections in the shortest possible time."

This statement was made by the secretary general of the Mauritian Militant Movement (MMM) yesterday morning during the interview with this leader of the MMM/PSM alliance, Mr Aneerood Jugnauth, from which Mauritius Broadcasting Corporation (MBC) cameras were barred. In the course of this approximately 2-hour interview with newsmen, Mr Jugnauth, when pressed, revealed that he owns seven houses and a camp, but that his income varies since he is a professional man.

In response to questions, Mr Berenger also provided details on the unemployment allocations proposed in the MMM/PSM government program. However, Mr Jugnauth dismissed the idea that a future MMM/PSM government would grant an unemployment allocation to the 60,000 persons without jobs in the early months after it took office. The key leaders of the MMM/PSM alliance nevertheless stressed that a mixed committee is currently working on this matter, and that a number of scenarios are being studied, ranging from an unemployment allocation to each of the 60,000 to the choice of family responsibility criteria which will determine eligibility for this social aid.

In the course of his initial statement, the leader of the MMM/PSM electoral alliance spoke in particular of democracy under the regime of Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam's Labor Party--the postponement of legislative elections during the 1970's, the abolition of partial elections, the postponement of the most recent municipal and village elections, the unhealthy situation which prevailed during the nomination of commissioners, government interference in the administration of certain institutions such as the Public Service Commission (PSC), the fate suffered by the private motions of the members of the parliamentary opposition, and the lack of parliamentary sessions in what will soon be 1 year. These were the main focuses of the criticisms of the regime in power voiced in this connection by the opposition leader.

Mr Jugnauth stated, moreover, that according to information in the possession of the MMM, the 2-billion-rupee loan which the prime minister, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, wants to obtain to launch developmental projects is about to be finalized. He said that foreign representatives are already in Mauritius and that in all probability the 2-billion-rupee loan will be ratified at the next meeting of the Council of Ministers. He used harsh words to denounce this personal maneuver undertaken by Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, despite the warnings advanced by the minister of finance.

In response to questions, the key alliance leaders, to wit Messrs Berenger, Jean-Claude de l'Estrac and H. Boodhoo also made their contributions. The questions ranged from the controversial unemployment allocation to the rights of the opposition leader under a future MMM/PSM regime, and touched on the thorny problem of public holidays. The main aspects of this interview held yesterday developed as follows:

LE MAURICIEN: The MMM/PSM alliance attaches great importance to democracy. Can you give us the date of the next municipal and village elections, Mr Jugnauth, and the time period which will elapse before the reestablishment of partial elections, under an MMM/PSM regime?

Mr Jugnauth: The reestablishment of partial elections will be a priority for the MMM/PSM government, whether it has a good majority or not. We will ask the opposition to assume its responsibility in sponsoring a motion. It is in the interest of the country that this work be completed as quickly as possible. The task would be facilitated with a three-quarters majority. Where the holding of village and municipal elections is concerned, they will take place in as short a time as is practically possible.

LE MAURICIEN: Before December?

Mr Jugnauth: If we are able to do it.

LE MAURICIEN: From the MMM/PSM alliance viewpoint, would the ombudsman have the right of inspection in sectors in which the ministers are directly involved?

Mr Jugnauth: We believe that this ombudsman's right of inspection would be a veritable "deterrent" in the country. Moreover, I was with Bissoondoyal at the London conference during the discussion of the authority of the ombudsman such as to allow him to take action in cases of abuse of authority even by ministers.

LE MAURICIEN: How do you plan, concretely, to guarantee the independence of MBC television? Will it come under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting?

Mr Jugnauth: MBC television will come under a ministry. The goal of the MMM/PSM government will be to make their radio and television services democratic. It is unacceptable that the opposition, which in a democracy represents an alternative government, should not have the right to radio time. This is nothing but a monopoly for the regime in power, and any sensible observer will see that the abusive use of the Mauritius Broadcasting Corporation by the government is scandalous.

Board of Directors

LE MAURICIEN: Will the opposition be represented on the MBC television board of directors if an MMM/PSM government takes office?

Mr Jugnauth (drily): I don't think so.

Paul Berenger: The members of the MMM/PSM alliance are currently working on a draft law to replace the MBC Act. Certain responsibilities have been entrusted to Dr Y. Maudarbaccus. The MBC Act as such gives total authority to the prime minister "to give any directive," and all the MBC can do is carry out his orders. In the draft law being prepared, the ministerial authority will be precisely and clearly delimited. Where the members of the board of directors are concerned, it is not believed that having people representing the opposition government in an independent institution could seriously be contemplated. Moreover, the view that Dr S. Jugessur, discussed as a possible Labor candidate Friday, should have submitted his letter of resignation as president of the board, has been expressed.

Empty Promise

ADVANCE: You criticize the National Alliance Party for promising an unemployment allocation, but mention is made of this allocation in the MMM/PSM government program. Do you not believe it is a good thing to reassure the voters on this subject?

Mr Jugnauth: We are not against the unemployment allocation. What we reproach the regime in power for is lapsing again, as in 1976, into poorly planned and poorly organized free education (Mr Jugnauth mentioned the 10 million rupees appropriated by secondary school directors, the reintroduction of university tuition, the elimination of the Book Loan Scheme, the threat by the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to reintroduce fees beginning with the Third Form). The government has not done serious work on unemployment compensation. We do not challenge the right of any political party to establish such a measure, but we do not want irresponsible action, any "empty promise to win votes."

Confusion

LE MAURICIEN: Within what time period do you think your unemployment allocation proposal could be put into affect.

Mr Jugnauth: Not in July. It will be necessary to turn to foreign agencies to formulate work plans. Nor can it be within the first six months of an MMM/PSM government. Meanwhile, "hardship cases" will be taken under study.

L'EXPRESS: On the subject of the unemployment allocation the MMM/PSM has promised to the 60,000 unemployed, can you tell us approximately the monthly amount, if it will be indexed, and if so, on what basis and what the sources of financing will be?

Mr Jugnauth: I can give you no details at present. A team is working on this.

Clearly Defined Criteria

Berenger: The team in charge has compiled a voluminous file on this subject. The legal text, the latest reports on the Unemployment Benefit Scheme in Great Britain, have been gone over with a fine tooth comb. Where the amount is concerned, this is directly related to the financing sources. We are studying a number of scenarios for unemployment allocations to all those unemployed without differentiation, or to certain groups selected on the basis of clearly established criteria. As to financing sources, we are discussing the matter with enterprise heads, taxpayers associations and the trade unions. As soon as we are in power, the machinery for gathering the last data in connection with the preparation of a draft law will be set up. Where indexing is concerned, social allocations will be reviewed in the light of the rate of inflation.

LE MAURICIEN: Will municipal elections be held within 6 months? And will the current commissioners remain in place meanwhile?

Mr Jugnauth: We'll leave them as they are....

Mr Berenger: The time period will be as short as is practically feasible. For the interim, a list of apolitical administrators is currently being drafted. A very small number of these will be assigned to cover the interim period in the institutions involved until elections are held.

Opportunity for Women

LE MAURICIEN: Where women's representation is concerned, you seem to criticize the Labor Party while women account for only 3 percent of the MMM/PSM alliance slate (two women candidates).

Mr Jugnauth: We have had a maximum of two. This is not enough, but it is not our fault either, since according to our information from the PAN, there were 14 applications from women.

Mr Berenger: The regional administrations represent an excellent opportunity for women who want to get into politics on the national level.

ADVANCE: Can you tell us about the policy of the MMM/PSM alliance in connection with the number of official public holidays?

Mr Jugnauth: In principle, we are not against public holidays. Alternative solutions should be studied. And also, Mauritius has different religious contexts, and it is necessary to satisfy all communities on the public holiday issue.

L'EXPRESS: The MMM/PSM alliance is actively drafting the 1982/83 budget. Can you tell us if the budget will include sums for the following items: 1. unemployment allocations; 2. payment of the sums recommended by the Pay Research Bureau (PRB) report as of 1 July 1981; 3. the 13th month for government employees next December; and 4. next July's wage increase?

Mr Jugnauth: I do not have the details available. A committee is working on this. It is not possible to predict anything whatsoever for the unemployment allocation item in the budget. Considerations pertaining to the 13th month are currently being studied, and where the PRB report is concerned, it is difficult to say because we do not have the details of this report in hand. One must be realistic.

Imagination Needed in Government

Mr Berenger: Where the unemployment allocation is concerned, the 200 million rupees in the Contingencies Fund could have been used. It is our intention to propose a "token vote." With regard to the PRB report, we have made a formal commitment. With regard to the 13th month, a "token vote" will also be taken, but any decision will have to be considered in the light of a review of the economic situation. On the wage compensation issue also, a "token vote" is planned, pending the completion of wage negotiations.

L'EXPRESS: The MMM has always accused the minister of finance of not including precise sums in his budget.

Mr Berenger: We will insofar as possible reestablish the purchasing power of wages. We are working on a recovery budget. We must show imagination. We will keep our commitments while drafting a recovery budget.

L'EXPRESS: When the results of the legislative elections were announced on 21 December 1976, the MMM had elected 30 candidates, but along the line it has lost 6, representing a 20 percent decline. Can Mr Jugnauth swear to the 60 alliance candidates, or at the most, the 42 representing the MMM?

No Veto Right

Mr Jugnauth: Insofar as possible, I would say yes.

L'EXPRESS: Mr Jugnauth, can you give us an assessment of the consultations between the GM and the opposition leader in these past 5 years?

Mr Jugnauth: Such occurred, but this is a farce. One can add nothing to a government decision which has been promulgated. Moreover, the word "consultation" was interpreted by the Supreme Court as meaning quite simply "to inform." This is total nonsense!

L'EXPRESS: Will you give the opposition leader the right of veto after 11 June?

Mr Jugnauth: Certainly not the right of veto. He will come to me, and we will accept valid suggestions.

L'EXPRESS: Will you be ready to declare your assets publicly?

Mr Jugnauth: I say so at all the meetings.

Mr Berenger: A legal text on this matter is planned.

L'EXPRESS: Can you declare your assets this morning?

Mr Jugnauth: Of course. I am a professional man, and I do not have a fixed income. I own houses and I collect rents. That is all.

L'EXPRESS: Can you tell us how many houses?

Jugnauth: Seven (Mr de l'Estrac interrupted to ask if the same question could be asked of the other members of the team).

L'EXPRESS: What will be the....

Mr Jugnauth (interrupting suddenly): I also own a camp.

Balanced Cabinet

L'EXPRESS: The MMM/PSM alliance has been in contact with various governments within the context of the exercise of power. Is it true that quite recently a representative of the MMM held discussions with authorities in Mozambique, while on a mission to that country, in connection with technical and administrative training at an airport for some 40 militants?

Mr Jugnauth and Mr Berenger said simultaneously that they had no information on this subject.

Mr Berenger: Amedee Darga was recently in Zimbabwe, in Dar-es-Salaam. Moreover, we maintain very close relations with France, India and Algeria, which will in the future lead to aid.

L'EXPRESS: Why hasn't the PSM urged the Ministries of Finance and External Affairs to offset the balance of forces in the cabinet of a future MMM/PSM government?

Harish Boodhoo: Where the PSM is concerned it is clear. An alliance was not sought out of greed where the number of tickets and ministries was concerned. The two persons approached to serve in these two posts, to wit Paul Beringer and Jean-Claude de l'Estrac, are by far the best choices. The important thing is the collective work which will be done within this team.

The Goal

L'EXPRESS: How many ministries would the PSM have if the MMM/PSM alliance wins the election?

Harish Boodhoo: On the basis of the agreement, we will have five ministries.

L'EXPRESS: The breadwinners for 300 Mauritian families earn their living on Diego Garcia. What will the attitude of the MMM/PSM government be in this connection after 11 June?

Mr Jugnauth: We oppose the military prosence of foreigners in the Indian Ocean. We will do everything to put an end to this war of influence in the Indian Ocean. We will undertake an overall effort.

L'EXPRESS: Will you eliminate the contingent of Mauritian workers on Diego Garcia?

Mr Jugnauth: That is our goal.

Mr Berenger: We have explained our position clearly to the American ambassador and his immediate colleagues. We will study the contracts and operate within the law.

Mr de l'Estrac: Not necessary to do it. The contracts are short term.

No Comment

L'EXPRESS: What is the feeling of the MMM about the rapprochement between India and Saudi Arabia, which has culminated in Mme Indira Gandhi's visit to Jedda?

Mr Jugnauth: We have nothing to say on this.

L'EXPRESS: Do you expect to have representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organization in Mauritius, despite this current wave of assaults in France?

Mr Jugnauth: We oppose terrorism. The PLO struggle is different.

Mr Berenger: Identification of the PLO with the assaults is entirely unacceptable.

ADVANCE: Much has been written about the Santoo affair. What is the feeling of the MMM about it?

Mr Jugnauth (turning toward Berenger): We were out of the country at the time.

(Mr Berenger whispered to Mr de l'Estrac, and on learning that they were on Rodrigues at the time, he said that this matter should be clarified as soon as possible).

On the subject of government employees, Berenger said that there would not be "any great upsets, but certain limited changes." A little earlier Mr Harish Boodhoo had taken the opportunity to comment on his past political activities. He said in this connection that he still remains a "laborite," not of the stamp of the present representatives, but in the tradition of the likes of Rozemont, Anquetil, Pandit Sahadeo, Seeneevassen, etc.

MAURITIAN SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY ISSUES MANIFESTO

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 17 May 82 pp 4-5

[Text] The electoral manifesto set forth to the country by the PMSD [Mauritian Social Democratic Party] is inspired, its authors say, by capitalism and Marxism-Leninism, two philosophies of which they say they have made a synthesis. In fact, the preface of the PMSD manifesto specifies: "Our political philosophy is a synthesis of classic capitalism and Marxism-Leninism."

The first chapter of the PMSD manifesto is devoted to foreign policy, and at the outset, the authors of the document state that the country must align itself with the West, "which alone is capable of guaranteeing our economic development through trade relations, investments, tourism and emigration, and which is the sole guardian of democratic freedoms in the world." The last of the five paragraphs in the chapter devoted to foreign policy stresses "a realistic and courageous foreign policy," the primary goal of which would be "to guarantee our economic development."

In the chapter on economic policy, the PMSD promises to get the economy moving again, to reabsorb the unemployed and to achieve full employment. To do so, the authors of the manifesto write, a PMSD government "will eliminate waste, will refuse to increase the number of unproductive jobs, will encourage promotion based on merit, efficiency and productivity on all levels in Mauritian society." The PMSD favors a policy "of rapid but controlled industrialization, growth in the tourist industry, recovery in investments, development of the free service zone and encouragement of savings, all of this accompanied by the necessary fiscal and monetary measures."

The manifesto states that there is currently a firm offer from investors in Taiwan to commission 300 plants in the free zone "within a 6-month period," which would provide 40,000 jobs, according to the PMSD. The creation of an export processing zone authority is also planned, as is the development of the free service zone.

The development of small and average enterprise through a suitable fiscal policy and other incentive measures, as well as the development of the southern part of the island through the reopening of the port of Mahebourg, the enlargement of Plaisance (with the PMSD prefers over the north airport), the establishment of a sugar refinery and the creation of a tourist center for seamen and the military vacationing in the Indian Ocean are among the main economic projects of the PMSD. In the tourist sector, the PMSD proposes to convert the northern part of the island "into the Riviera of the Indian Ocean."

In the sports sector, the PMSD manifesto proposes the creation of a vast complex to accommodate multiple sports activities with tourist business in view. Courses for trotting and grayhound races will be developed. In addition to its appeal to tourists, the sports center will be able to accommodate major international competitions, the authors of the PMSD manifesto say.

Other projects which will aid recovery in the tourist industry are vacation centers for young people, students and middle-income tourists; the "diversification of tourism to the islands;" and the rationalization of craft employment. In connection with international trade, the PMSD proposes the development of regional cooperation and also the maintenance of the existing links with our main trade partners.

In the chapter on agriculture, the PMSD proposes devoting special attention to the problem of yield and efficiency, productivity and income distribution, and also undertaking "a vigorous policy of agricultural diversification." An amendment to the export tax on sugar is planned, as well as retention of the advantages acquired in relation to the EEC.

In the irrigation sector, the drip system "will be encouraged to the maximum by appropriate fiscal measures which will provide incentive for investments in this sector." Where food and farm production are concerned, the authors of the document write that everything will be done to reduce the country's dependence on foreign sources. They state that the cooperative movement will be closely linked with the agricultural diversification policy. Among the farm production projects are the raising of deer, cattle, swine, the raising of vegetable and fruit crops, aquaculture, horticulture and apiculture.

With regard to maritime resources, the manifesto proposes the exploitation of the polymetallic nodules found on the sea bottom in the Mauritian maritime sector. Prospecting for oil is also planned. The authors of the manifesto also urge intensive development of the fishing sector, in order to reduce our imports of fish.

In the energy sector, the PMSD supports a policy designed to reduce our dependence on nonrenewable and imported energy sources. Also, hydroelectric and solar energy, ethanol and use of the winds and tides will be the subject of more intensive studies and possibly concrete future projects.

A wage, price policy, maintenance of the existing job level and an atmosphere favoring the creation of new jobs, introduction of a plan for compulsory participation within enterprises and the establishment of enterprise committees are urged in the chapter on industrial relations. The PMSD advocates an unemployment allocation of 300 rupees per month for those out of work, noting "with pleasure that all the political parties today are in agreement" on this subject. An increase in social allocations for the neediest population strata is planned. In the housing sector, the PMSD favors improvement of conditions in the housing developments, elimination of the deposit requirement and reduction of rents to 150 rupees per month. The laws will be amended to make the CHA and MHC "more functional," the manifesto promises.

A special chapter is devoted to the acceleration of the development of Rodrigues.

MMM/PSM ANTIVIOLENCE RALLY REPORTED

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 17 May 82 pp 1, 5

[Text] The "mobilization against violence" meeting which was held in Sebastopol yesterday on the initiative of the MMM/PSM [Mauritian Socialist Party] alliance took on the aspect of a celebration when the crowd, estimated at between 5,000 and 6,000 individuals, carrying flags and waving color photographs of Mr Aneerood Jugnauth, surged joyfully into the crossroads of the Royal Road, bedecked with the colors of the two parties. Before the meeting began, more than an hour late, numbers of young people who had climbed onto the roofs of neighboring buildings could be seen dancing to the music of songs being broadcast over the loudspeakers. Not only the three MMM candidates for the district, Messrs Ramduth Jaddoo, Jugdish Goburdhun and Azize Asgarally, but in particular the MMM and PSM leaders Aneerood Jugnauth and Harish Boodhoo, were given a warm welcome. Heavy applause greeted them and Paul Berenger, who despite his protests was borne in triumph to the rostrum. "There are many there more powerful than I. I'm not pleased with the quality of this act. I ask in the future this not be repeated for it's not our manner. We are content to walk hand in hand, shoulder to shoulder," the secretary general of the MMM said in this connection.

The various successive speakers, adhering to the named theme of the meeting, stressed the atmosphere of violence which, "like in December 1978," has reappeared on the political scene in this electoral campaign period. They denounced violence in all its forms--physical violence, violence in language, that which appears in the form of persecution, repression and poverty which is plaguing the country. In some instances the speakers strayed from the subject, stating that the knell will sound for the Labor Party on 11 June, that the "communal specter" some are trying to revive is doomed, that the publicity campaign the labor party has waged on television, far from benefiting it, "in the end worked against that party."

Mr Jugnauth said that during the period in the 1960's when he was in the government, the prime minister designated him as his "successor."

Mr Berenger said that the PT [Labor Party] will soon come out with another film denouncing torture and executions, in an effort to make it appear that he, Mr Berenger, would have recourse to such means if he were to win power. He said that Mrs Gandhi refused to participate in the Labor Party publicity films, because she is "more desirous than anyone of seeing the advent of an MM/PSM government in Mauritius." This is why she is not to be seen in the films currently being shown.

Mr Ramduth Jaddoo, who presided at the meeting, expressed his satisfaction at the outset with the massive attendance by militants in response to the appeal of the MMM/PSM leadership. He then went on to recall that the atmosphere of violence, persecution and repression in 1976 was such that the militants were afraid to display their political colors. But today he asked the crowed" "MMM/PSM--yes or no?" "Yes!" screamed the crowd. Mr Jaddoo then spoke, recalling how in that "dark period" in 1976, some individuals attended the private meetings of the MMM, wrote down names and subsequently passed them on to certain politicians. Reprisal measures were then taken against these people. They were transferred and made to swear they would work for the PT.

He also recalled the incident at Montagne Blanche just prior to the elections, when MMM supporters could not venture into the streets, where the thugs of a political party stood guard. That night, Azize Asgarally, the MMM candidate, whose car was followed by a fleet of vehicles carrying gangsters, remained safe thanks only to a family who kept him with them overnight.

Nonexistent Police

Today, the threat of transfer has surfaced again. Anyone will tell you, the speaker said, what order and discipline characterizes the work of the militants. He recalled the extent to which the secretary general of the MMM, Mr Berenger, has been the victim of violence during his career as a politician.

The leader of the PSM, who then took the floor, was welcomed with thunderous applause. He had barely begun to speak when Mr Paul Berenger was seen to arrive, carried in triumphantly. Visibly annoyed, he was shaking his head, but smiling nonetheless.

Mr Boodhoo stressed the fact that the electoral battle will be waged on the economic level, and that the triumph of the MMM/PSM alliance is a certainty. He spoke for a short time in Bhojpuri before praising the virtues of Mr Jugnauth, who is a man of "remarkable honesty, intelligence and simplicity." He made an appeal to laborites who are still hesitating to join the MMM/PSM alliance.

Mr Jugdish Goburdhun, for his part, recalled the order and discipline which typified the 1 May meeting in Rose-Hill. The police even said there was no need for their presence at the demonstration. In a sharp denunciation of violence in all its forms, Mr Asgarally stated, in his address, that it is as the saying goes generally "the weak who make use of them." Mr Jugnauth, who spoke next, predicted from the outset "the end of the reign of Sir Satcam Boolell, No 3 man in the government, who is a candidate in the Montagne Blanche district. On the subject of communalism and violence, he said in substance that the history of the MMM has often demonstrated that this party has always been their victim. If the MMM has taken steps, it has been above all to defend itself, he added. The President of the MMM went on to say that there are some individuals who will stop at nothing to achieve their goals. It is the duty of all militants to remain vigilant in order to counteract violence in all its forms.

Chosen Successor

In this connection he warned the police against servile alignment with certain individuals who will not be ministers any longer after 11 June. "We are not asking any favors of him, but simply that he act impartially and without any discrimination. We will not tolerate, but will impose penalties for, any abuse," Mr Jugnauth stated in a severe tone.

He asked his attentive audience to avoid falling into the trap of the Labor Party telecasts. Refuting the assertion of his adversaries to the effect that he "represents nothing," Mr Jugnauth indicated that at the time when he served with the Ramgoolam government, he was regarded by the prime minister as a "hope" for the country and "as a competent minister." This praise did not please certain ministers, including the minister of agriculture, Sir Satcam Boolell. "When I resigned from the government in disgust with the PT deviation," he added, "the prime minister came to my home to ask me to resume my position in the cabinet, telling me that it would be for me to succeed him one day. May the good lord punish me if I am not telling the truth," Mr Jugnauth said. This speaker attributed the ill will against him to the fact that it was inconceivable to some that he could belong to the MMM.

The last speaker, Mr Paul Berenger, explained for his part that the pages of history have often been written in violence. In Mauritius itself, he said, when the slaves, in order to break their chains, and the coolies, to obtain their freedom, had to turn to violence, Mahatma Gandhi acknowledged that when a people moves forward, violence becomes inevitable at a certain time, although it is not desirable. "What most merits denunciation," he said, "is the violence of the reactionaries." Continuing on this theme, Mr Berenger said that the various forms violence takes should be denounced, including violence of language. And after the elections, we must teach our opponents a lesson, by showing great generosity of heart, "have no bitterness, but instead open your heart wide to those who have nurtured other ideas," he urged.

National Recovery with Jugnauth

Mr Berenger had the highest praise for Mr Jugnauth, whom he described as a man of "honesty" and "exemplary correctness." At the time when he was minister, he was unwilling to take advantage of tax-free privileges, for example with regard to vehicles and whiskey. "Mr Jugnauth embodied the MMM even before it was founded. He is a worthy leader who will see to the country's recovery, a man behind whom we are all proud to work."

On the subject of the Labor Party telecasts, Mr Berenger said he had information according to which the PT had to pay a one-time fee of 3,000 rupees for just one half-hour of time. The truth will be known after the elections, he said.

Along another line of thinking, he urged the unemployed to accept what the government grants them in this electoral period, and he added that the MMM will abolish nothing if it wins power, but will consolidate all of these measures in a rational fashion.

In another connection, the organizers report that 8,000 persons attended the MMM/PSM meeting held yesterday in Plaine Verte. As was the case in Sebastopol, the main theme was violence. The speakers were three deputies from the district, Messrs Cassam Uteem, Osman Gendoo and Bashir Khodabux. Dr Rohit Beedassy and Mr H. Boodhoo, of the PSM, as well as MMM leaders Aneerood Jugnauth and Paul Berenger, were guests.

CONTENTS OF LABOR PARTY MANIFESTO REPORTED

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 19 May 82 pp 1, 5

[Text] The Labor Party (PT) has just published its electoral manifesto, a 46-page booklet in which it proposes a "new social contract." The document contains an assessment of the Labor government action, 10 goals and 30 proposals. In the introduction, the opposition is first of all charged with responsibility for all of the evils of a local nature which have affected the economy, adding to the economic problems of an international sort. "But despite these domestic and foreign difficulties," the document says, "the Labor Party has never ceased to work for the country's advance." The electorate is urged to cast a "massive" vote for the PT, so that the party will not suffer in the next legislative assembly from "the same constraints as hindered it during the last legislative assembly."

In its assessment of the situation, the document stresses that "the citizens of Mauritius enjoy full liberty: freedom of the press, freedom of expression, freedom of association and freedom of religion." The PT also boasts of having worked for universal suffrage and the right to vote at the age of 18. In connection with foreign relations, diplomatic links are maintained with "more than 90 countries." Mauritius "has opted for the path of nonalignment." In the demographic realm, the document says that without the measures adopted by the PT, the population of Mauritius would have reached 1.4 million by today.

Defense of the Workers

Under the heading "Defense of the Workers," the Labor manifesto assesses the activity of the PT as positive in terms of the trade unions and the laboring masses. It says that "the era of shameless exploitation, subjection and humiliation for the workers is past history. But the battle has not been won. Other fortresses still remain to be taken. The Labor Party will take them with the support of the workers." The manifesto says that the PT defends the right to unionize and to struggle "for more industrial democracy," and "has taken a resolute stand beside the workers class," such that it has "succeeded in safeguarding the workers against the stranglehold of adventurers and dictators." This is doubtless an allusion to the opposition trade unionists, but no mention is made in this chapter of the Industrial Relations Act.

To illustrate the "social and economic progress" made since independence was won, the authors of the labor manifesto present a series of figures: the number of vehicles has doubled; the number of motorcycles has tripled; the number of bicycles has been multiplied by 8; 57,000 new homes have been built; the number of telephones has doubled; the number of refrigerators has quadrupled; the number of television sets has been multiplied by 6; 100,000 new jobs have been created; and the number of tourists is 8 times the previous figure. In addition, the government has created a large "welfare state" in which many subsidies are granted the most neglected sectors, the labor document says.

The manifesto also asserts that the PT has carried out the first phase of rural development; has successfully brought about agricultural diversification; has given women the means for emancipation, thanks above all to the amendments to the Napoleon Code; and has introduced "the principle of equal wages for equal labor" for women in relation to men. Not to be overlooked, moreover, are the creation of a ministry of youth and sports, the introduction of the free education system, the hospital service, old-age pensions and other social measures, the relocation of disaster victims as well as the implementation of a housing program based on the principle of "a roof for each family," strict price control, and the construction of new roads.

On the subject of goals, the Labor manifesto says that the PT has always worked for "the defense of democracy and respect for minorities" and "the building of a new civilization in which the plurality of races, religions and cultures will be not a divisive factor for the collective, but a source of enrichment for each man and woman in Mauritius. This ideal should rally the entire country."

Double Suffrage for the Workers

The document then sets forth 30 proposals, one of which is designed to change the constitution of the country in order to grant workers in the sugar industry, the municipalities and other sectors double suffrage in the elections to send representative to the assembly. As to women, they will be appointed to the assembly directly. The manifesto says that all of these reforms will go into effect in January 1983.

The manifesto states that the PT reasserts the right of Mauritius to exersize sovereignty over Diego Garcia, noting that this party has already launched proceedings for the return of the Chagos Archipelago (of which Diego Garcia is a part) to Mauritian territory. (Note: No formal request for return has as yet been submitted by the Mauritian government to the government in London on this subject.) In the case of Rodrigues, the PT, in its manifesto, adopts a position against "any effort at secession."

Imperialism and Racism Denounced

The foreign policy proposals include denunciation of imperialism, racism and colonialism, defense of the rights of blacks in South Africa and Namibia, demilitarization of the Indian Ocean, respect for the principle of nonalignment and a broader opening toward the Arab world.

In connection with the creation of jobs, a number of incentive measures are promised with a view to the creation of 47,000 jobs in the small business sector "after several years." The creation of an industrial democracy commission is promised to defend the rights of the workers. "The goal of the PT is to increase the power of the workers."

Other projects include maintenance of the private sector, "dynamization" of the government sector, agrarian reform to allocate land among those who work it, environmental protection, development of the fishing industry and the maintenance of justice.

Defense of Public Morality

In the chapter on public morality, the PT presents itself as its fierce defender. "Charges of corruption have been made from time to time, which rightly provoked a keen reaction on the part of the public," the Labor manifesto acknowledges. It promises the creation of a committee to improve the laws against corruption.

The PT proposes to encourage vocational training in a number of sectors, including the press. Other projects include protection of the family, disease prevention, expansion of social protection measures, the development of leisure time activities, reduction of our dependence in the energy sector through the use of ethyl alcohol and other so-called renewable energy sources as well as economy measures, the building of housing for those involved in the new facilities, improvement of transportation, the reopening of the port of Mahebourg, encouragement of mass tourism and tourist use of the islands surrounding Mauritius, the development of Rodrigues, on which an "island council" will be created (a promise which has been made for more than a decade) and the expansion of regional democracy.

In the conclusion of the manifesto, the PT is described as having been since 1936 "the motive historical force for the national liberation and emancipation of the people."

MSPA FORESEES 200 MILLION RUPEE DEFICIT

Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 17 Apr 82 pp 1, 6

[Text] The sugar crop for 1982 will result, for the sugar factories as a whole, in a deficit amounting to a little over 200 million rupees; at least, that is the figure arrived at by the Mauritius Sugar Producers Association (MSPA), on the basis of a 690,000 ton sugar harvest.

With this tonnage, Mauritius would meet all its EEC quota, but will also have to sell a certain quantity on the open market, where prices are constantly falling at the moment; this price is incidentally much lower than production costs in Mauritius.

Still with regard to the 1982 campaign and still taking into consideration a hypothetical output of 690,000 tons, the export duty for sugar companies will amount to 414 million rupees (that is, over twice the estimated deficit for them) and more if output reaches or exceeds 700,000 tons of sugar.

For both 1980 and 1981, the government took in a total of 563 million rupees from the sugar companies in export duties, whereas the companies wound up with an overall deficit of 376 million rupees for the 2 years.

Complaints have been made to the government by the Board of Agriculture and the MSPA. Several working sessions have taken place between representatives of these two organizations and the prime minister, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, and the minister of finance, Sir Veerasamy Ringadoo.

During the meetings, the sugar industry representatives expressed their grave concern to the government, and stressed in particular the inability of the industry to invest in equipment renewal.

The government representatives were very receptive to the views expressed by the Board of Agriculture and the MSPA, whose documentation is being studied.

Industry representatives also had a meeting with high-ranking experts of the International Monetary Fund in Mauritius.

Of particular concern to the sugar industry are not only the serious cash flow problems the sugar factories are having to face, but also their profitability problem.

The latter problem has done nothing but get worse from day to day, because, as the industry borrows to meet its daily obligations (including personnel wages), its profitability is all the more affected.

The example is given of a sugar company that about 3 weeks ago, did not have the resources to meet its personnel wages obligations within 24 hours, having exceeded its authorized bank overdraft, and having also been turned down by the State Bank and the State Finance Corporation. When informed of such a situation, the government agreed to delay that company's export tax slice due at the end of March. Subsequently, the State Bank and the State Finance Corporation agreed to help the company in question, which was thus able to settle its cash flow problem.

Numerous suggestions have been made by sugar industry representatives to the government, the two most important being total abolition of the export tax and long-term loans at a low interest rate.

Non-renewal of sugar factory equipment, finally, is producing a very negative chain reaction among heavy equipment shops, maintenance shops, major industry suppliers which amount to sugar industry satellite sectors.

LITTLE GAIN FROM SEYCHELLES TOURIST PRICE SURGE SEEN

Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 20 Apr 82 p 6

[Text] Since the number of tourists visiting the Seychelles has fallen by about 50 percent, as a result of a hotel, etcetera, price surge, and serious political problems like the recent abortive coup d'etat in that country, Mauritian travel agents and officials of the large local tourist hotels were expecting the number of tourists here to increase considerably, and even June, which is the slowest month, to be fairly good.

With the elections set for 11 June, and since tourists only visit foreign countries to enjoy themselves, they systematically avoid periods subject to problems -- like elections, specifically -- and tourist industry circles have noted that reservations for that month were slow.

Representatives of agencies abroad had in any case warned them not to expect a lot of reservations during election periods, and that potential vacationers would probably prefer to travel elsewhere.

However, June reservations of long standing (perhaps made before the date was set) have not been cancelled, or at least not yet.

Since August 1981, travel agents visiting Mauritius have been expressing the opinion that if prices in Mauritius were maintained, the Mauritian tourist industry could take over a large portion of the Seychelles clientele, because of ther price surge that had occurred there.

The average over a year is 10,000 tourists a month in Mauritius; the average number in June is 6,000.

'EXCELLENT' MAIZE CROP FORESEEN FOR RODRIGUES

Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 20 Apr 82 p 7

[Text] The maize harvest in Rodrigues, which will begin at the end of the month, is estimated by certain authoritative circles in Port Louis at about 1,800 tons, which is an excellent crop. This estimate has incidentally been confirmed by the experts of the French animal husbandry mission which was on the island last week. The average crop the last two years was about 1,200 tons.

The excellent maize crop is explained by ideal climate conditions that prevailed during the season. In one sense, this crop contradicts the official thesis that the maize crop had been severely affected by the passage of cyclone Damia through the Rodrigues area in mid-January. In a Ministry of Foreign Affairs communique dated 22 January, it was reported that "the maize crop was totally destroyed." But authoritative circles in Rodrigues had stated that planters in Rodrigues had only put in a portion of the seeds, and that the planters were waiting for a good rainstorm before sowing.

In addition, during a recent visit to Mauritius, the resident commissioner, Dr Sydney Moutia, confidently stated that for this season, Rodrigues would produce more maize than Mauritius would, despite the fact that Rodrigues occupies an area only one-eighteenth the size of Mauritius (42 square miles compared to 721 square miles).

The maize crop could well be far larger than the figure already given, it is asserted in other circles. The latter explain that taking inventory of the crop is rendered rather difficult because the harvested maize is used as animal fodder by the planters themselves.

The Agricultural Marketing Board imports maize from Rodrigues when there is a surplus. Over the past few years, there has been no importation of maize from Rodrigues. The area under maize is about 2,000 acres.

With implementation of the Malagasy Bay integrated agricultural production project, financed by the European Development Fund (EDF), the authorities are planning to establish maize growing in Rodrigues on more rational and scientific bases. The project might start during the second half of this year. FED research for this project has reached an advanced stage. Agreement on financing is supposed to occur at the beginning of the second six-month period, according to authoritative government circles.

SOUTH-WEST AFRICA ESTABLISHES DIPLOMATIC TIES WITH TAIWAN

Officials' Visit to Taiwan

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 26 Apr 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] This month the South-West established diplomatic ties and relations on a trading level with Taiwan after a group of politicians and business personalities paid an 8-day visit to the Far East country. The tour was arranged by the PROSWA Foundation.

The group of politicians were Mrs Anna Frank and Minister Jurgen von Hase along with the city clerk of Windhoek Mr Attie Arnold.

Among those visited were the deputy minister of Taiwan's Foreign Affairs Ministry, Mr Edward Kuang, who was ambassador to South Africa for 7 years and who came to South-West Africa on three occasions. Especially strong ties have been established with Taiwan through Mr Kuang.

According to the chairman of PROSWA, Mr Peter Goodland, there are effective agreements between Taiwan and the South-West and for this reason the decision was made to learn more about the rapidly developing country.

Like the South-West Taiwan is not recognized by the UN, but despite international opposition this Eastern country has a flourishing economy. As an example Mr Goodland mentioned that Taiwan's exports in 1981 amounted to about 41.5 billion rand, while in 1949 they were still not carrying on any export trade.

One of the most important reasons for Taiwan's success is the business skill exhibited by the government. For example, land was rented at a normal price to foreign countries who built factories there and then proceeded to employ Taiwanese workers.

In this manner care was taken that unemployment was kept to a minimum, the country had an income and the export of manufactured products such as cameras, radios, clothing, etc. was managed by foreign countries.

Mr Goodland also referred to the hardworking nature of the Chinese and their determination to make a success of each business enterprise. In 1977 Taiwan opened a shipbuilding dock for the first time in its history. By 1978 they had already built the first ship and they did this while old existing shipbuilding docks such as those in Glasgow had a hard time making a go of it.

The success attained by the shipbuilding industry is such that now Taiwan has the third largest shipbuilding dock in the world. Only Japan's and South Korea's shipyards are producing more than Taiwan's.

What impressed the group of South-West visitors most was their business skill. In processing raw materials the Taiwanese have eliminated many processes and this has resulted not only in speeding up production, but in making the price of goods much cheaper.

Mr Goodland related the account of the group's visit to a steel industry where they were able to observe how they departed from the old methods of production thus reducing production time considerably.

Even in the agricultural field the South-Westerners could light candles to them. Whether it has to do with rice farming, hog raising or the planting of pineapples...nothing is wasted. Leaves are used, hog offal is cast into fresh water dams for raising fish; also the irrigation system for the fields has been worked out to a fine art, said Mr Goodland.

Visits were also made to military academies, a nuclear power station, the trade fair and to several government departments. There was a meeting with the Chinese Foreign Development Council where good contacts were established.

According to Mr Goodland the visit surpassed expectations in its success and much more was accomplished than was ever hoped.

A Proud Accomplishment

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 27 Apr 82 p 6

[Editorial: "Our Ties Abroad"]

[Text] The contact which South-West Leaders (politicians and business people) have established with Taiwan stands out as a sign of the daring with which the people who believe in their country have undertaken the struggle.

For too long there have been too many South-Westerners used to the idea that it was South Africa which does things for the South-West, and whatever it did not do was just left alone.

An independent South-West Africa/Namibia must be known all around the world, and must have friends all around the world, for its own sake and for the sake of the greater southern Africa community.

A modern state simply cannot remain in isolation and cannot progress in isolation. Internationally speaking it must be on the cards. On the part of the government, the business community and other entities more contacts with the outside world have been made than is generally realized.

This most recent action on the part of PROSWA to strengthen our ties with Taiwan and the role played by Anna Frank, Jurgen von Hase and Attie Arnold are showing the recipe for success to others who are in earnest.

JUSTIFICATION FOR KALANGULA'S ACTIONS PROVIDED

Windhoek A.D.K. 'INFORMATIONS' in English Apr 82 pp 2-4

[Text] "Storm In a Teacup or End of an Experiment?"

Peter Kalangula was born in 1926, a son of a chief of one of the largest Ovambo tribes, the Kwanyama. He was educated at the Mission School of the Anglican church in his tribal area.

After leaving school, he studied for a teacher's degree by correspondence course and taught for two years before changing over to the civil service. Later he studied theology and after four years of studies at two theological institutions in South Africa was ordained an Anglican missionary. He became a priest in his own tribal area in Ovamboland. Here he clashed with the (white) bishop of the Anglican church because the latter took the side of SWAPO in his public addresses. Kalangula founded his own church.

In 1977 he was elected a foundation member of the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance and later to membership of the executive board of this organisation. When Pastor Ndjoba retired, Peter Kalangula became president.

His work as a Christian priest may have influenced his approach to his people's problems. Even during his period as president of the DTA, where different ethnic groups with their own language and culture are recognised, Peter Kalangula always argued in favour of changing the parent organisation of 11 ethnic groups into a united party.

The following details reflect the main reason for this desire to change the structure of government in Namibia.

1. Roughly 50% of the entire population of Namibia are Ovambo, the remaining 50% being divided among 10 ethnic groups, each with its own language, culture, way of life and development level.
In the case of a unitarian situation, the Ovambo, because of their majority, would practically decide the fate of the rest of the population. They could rule the country without taking the interests of the other groups into consideration.

The old dream of uniting the Ovambo of SWA/Namibia and those across the border in Angola is not a thing of the past, even though the realisation of this dream does not appear feasable in the near future.

Even Kalangula is dreaming of ethnic borders. As he is speaking against ethnicity and using the ethnic principals of the DTA as his alleged reason for leaving, that is illogical.

Should this dream become reality - in which case many borders in Africa would be altered - the predominence of the Ovambo would be even greater.

2. The largest part of the world is not happy that today's ruling party in Namibia, the DTA acknowledges the right of different ethnic groups to retain their identity. They want a unitarian state although that could leave roughly 50% of the population without political rights.
Kalangula's move could precipitate not a confrontation between Black and White, but a North - South border dispute. It is not the preservation and protection of the white population that is at stake but the fate of ten ethnic groups in Namibia.

It is claimed that there is reason to believe our European mother countries have already attempted to break up the DTA - the main handicap towards a unitarian state.

Accusations made by DTA Chairman Dirk Mudge and Vice-President Herero Chief Riruako have been rejected by the West German Representative in Cape Town. According to him West Germany never interfered in SWA/Namibian internal affairs and had nothing to do with the Kalangula affair. However this denial doesn't exclude interference by West German citizens or organisations.
The first attempt to break the DTA has failed. The second may also fail because West German standards are applied to the political situation and views in SWA/Namibia which are seen only from a West German point of view. This country and its people have their own standards and ideas.

Kalangula has declared that he would withdraw from the DTA 'with his party'. Kalangula has no party. He is not even a member of the NDP (National Democratic Party). Neither T. Imbili, chairman of the NDP nor it's secretary Nigelifua, had any knowledge of Kalangula's intentions. Both have remained members of the DTA and the National Assembly, T. Imbili still retaining his position as Ovambo member of the Council of Ministers.

The NDP has never been active in Ovamboland, it is more or less unknown to the population. The DTA is wellknown and a tragicomic fact is that the DTA made Kalangula known in Ovambo and "Built him up". T h a t is the foundation on which Kalangula is standing today. Without the DTA he would be a small unknown politician.

The future will show how strong his support in Ovambo really is.

There is no doubt whatsoever that Kalangulas' withdrawal from the DTA is a great disappointment, not only for the DTA but for the whole country. The DTA however is NOT facing a breakdown but is continuing with its work, even in Ovambo.

Kalangula's main problem is that he stands for a united party, in fact, a unitarian state. For this reason the small number of ethnically orientated groups who wished to join him cannot be accomodated. Their inclusion would have created a parent organisation similar to the DTA, making Kalangula appear unreliable and ridiculous.

These small groups have applied for membership and some have had their application accepted.
In the meantime the Damara Council, ruling party in Damaraland has started negotiations with Kalangula, aiming at uniting the two parties.

It will be interesting to see how both are accomodated: the unitarian thought and the wish of the Damara to retain their party identity.

If the Damara Council and other parties dissolve in the future to join Kalangula's or some newly founded organisation, they would drown in the Ovambo masses.

If one would ask: Why did Kalangula take this step? the question would be formulated incorrectly. To find out the real truth one should ask: Who made him do it ? Who brought him or rather pushed him into the position where he is today?

He left the National Party together with Mudge and was a founder member of the Republican Party (RP). He became the representative of the Whites in the Council of Ministers and resigned on his own accord last year because of differences with the chairman of the Council of Ministers, Dirk Mudge. (H.J. von Hase is his successor). He asked the main committee of the RP to allow him keep his membership and declared that he could see only one way of solving SWA's problems and that was the DTA way.

One of the main figures responsible for the present situation is Werner Neef, a german speaking Southwester, born in the country and active politician for a long time. He had been a member of the National (white) party, one of their representatives in the Legislative Assembly, the early parliament of the country.

Soon after his resignation however it was rumoured that he would found a party of his own "to collect the members and supporters crumbling away from the DTA and SWAPO in a party of the middle". According to him financial support from West-German officials and organisations and a party organiser from Federal Germany had been promised.

As Werner Neef today is head adviser to Kalangula and again sits in the National Assembly, this time as representative of the Ovambos one can assume that he sees the origins of this 'middle party" in Kalangula or wants to use him for that purpose.

Neither Kalangula nor Werner Neef are friends of SWAPO. On the contrary: Both of them strongly reject marxism.
Undoubtedly both of them have good intentions. This shall not be questioned.
But whether they have ever asked themselves: Do we 'push' or are we being 'pushed' - that is a different, not unimportant question.

In order to do justice to Kalangula the following should be explained:

> The majority of Ovambos are war-weary - understandably so. Who could blame them?

It is they who have to suffer the terror carried into their country from the North.
It is their leaders who are shot in cold blood, their relatives who are torn apart by landmines, their children who are abducted their houses which are looted and burned to the ground, their property which is stolen and destroyed, their lives being threatened all the time -
whereas the other ten population groups, the rest of the country is seldom directly involved.

The Ovambo have to bear the main burden of the war because of the geographic position of Ovamboland They bear it though most of the people scarcely understand what it is all about.

Independence for Namibia which all of us - even the five Western powers - had hoped would take place at the 31 December 1978, and with it the end of war and terror, has not been achieved yet.

With every meeting of the Western powers, with every conference, hope for a quick, peaceful solution, in fact a peaceful solution at all - becomes less and less.

The West seems to be powerless - or doesn't understand us and our situation. How else could it be fooled by marxist SWAPO? That this is the case has been proved again and again. For instance , with the negotiations of the first phase of the three phase talks. SWAPO's demands have always been met by the UN - and SWAPO d o e s n ' t want an election, it wants power. This is no secret but has been spelt out by Sam Nujoma and his "comrades" often enough.

Are the democratic western powers deaf? We who originate from the West don't understand them any more. How can Kalangula and his people understand them?

What Kalangula did was done from a feeling of abandonment - abandoned by the West and also by the rest of SWA/Namibia, because it doesn't share the ordeals of his people.

Who will throw the first stone at him?

RIRUAKO REPROACHES CHURCHES AS SWAPO ABETTORS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 4 Jun 82 p 3

[Text] THE Lutheran and Catholic churches in Namibia were accomplices in acts of murder against the people, Mr Kuaimo Riruako, member of the Ministers' Council said this week in the National Assembly.

The DTA Vice-Chairman was speaking during the Budget debate when he said: "The blood of this country is on the hands of the Catholics and Lutherans because they assist the murderers to murder well."

These churches were acting as agencies for Swapo and encouraged ill-feelings amongst the inhabitants of the country, according to Mr Riruako.

"They are not the only Christians", Mr Riruako said.

Before his attack on the two churches, Mr Riruako referred to Owambo Chairman Mr Peter Kalangula's newly-formed Christian Democratic Action for Social Justice (CDA).

He said the influences of the Lutheran and Catholic churches were at work in Mr Kalangula's latest political moves to mobilise the Owambo people along Christian democratic lines.

He criticised the Owambo leader for not using Central Government grants to buy land for Owambo farmers outside Owambo.

"Kalangula keeps his people caged in Owambo for his own purposes. We want the people of Owambo all over the country, not only in Owambo," Mr Riruako said.

THREE SWAPO MEMBERS JAILED FOR 29 YEARS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 3 Jun 82 p 11

[Text] WINDHOEK. — Three Swapo terrorists were jailed for a total of 29 years by the Windhoek Supreme Court yesterday.

Josef Sagarias (20), Theofilus Jason (20) and Lucius Nangala Malambo (22) were convicted on February 24 this year on charges under the Terrorism Act.

Sagarias and Jason were each sentenced to nine years' imprisonment. Malambo was sentenced to 11 years.

Earlier evidence before the court was that the three men had been among a group of 22 Swapo terrorists that infiltrated traditionally White farm districts in SWA in April last year.

Sagarias, Jason and Malambo had been captured while heading towards the Angolan border.

The rest of the group had been killed.

Sagarias and Jason had been seriously wounded in skirmishes with security forces while Malambo had surrendered after further resistance had become impossible, said Mr Justice Ken Bethune.

In his reasons for sentence, the judge said it had been common cause that the three men "were wearing distinguishing uniforms of Swapo's armed wing".

Skirmishes between the terrorists and security forces could be described as having taken place in "a war situation", he said.

The defence had led evidence about political and constitutional developments in SWA over many years and the court accepted those events could have influenced the mental outlook of the accused.

"The events that gave rise to Swapo's armed struggle extend over many years and its effects have been widely spread," Mr Justice Bethune said.

He quoted from a speech made in the SWA National Assembly last December by a member of the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance, Mr Katuutire Kaura, who said: "These are the causes of terrorism, these are the things which have caused terrorism and the chickens have simply come home to roost and South Africa has to bear the full consequences of its own making."

Mr Kaura was referring to policies of racial discrimination applied in the territory.

At the same time, Mr Justice Bethune said, many restrictions embodied in statutory discrimination in SWA had been abolished long before the crimes had been committed.

Evidence led in mitigation said the International Court of Justice and the United Nations had ruled that South Africa's presence in SWA was illegal, and those views had been endorsed by a large section of the international community.

The convicted terrorists had in all probability judged their actions part of a "just struggle" enjoying considerable support both internally and externally.

Mr Justice Bethune said the court was not empowered to declare that the terrorists be treated as prisoners of war. But it had to take into consideration trends in international law when considering whether the death penalty should be imposed.

Authoritative evidence before the court was that the Geneva Convention excluded the execution of prisoners of war for military activities prior to their capture unless the activities amounted to war crimes, while inhabitants of SWA had special status.

Contraventions of the Terrorism Act carried a minimum sentence of five years. The accused were quite young and had no previous convictions.

It could be readily accepted that after they had left SWA they had been caught in a web of circumstances over which they had little or no control.

"This situation, which has been of their own making to some extent, constitutes no justification for their actions but nevertheless is a factor for consideration in punishment," the judge said.

At the same time, the accused had to foresee that the laying of land mines and sabotage to railway lines, for instance, could have killed or injured innocent people.

Sagarias had sustained a crippling leg wound, while Jason had an arm shot away. They were two years younger than Malambo and had to receive lesser sentences than Malambo.

"In view of indications by the defence that severe sentences will not deter Swapo members, no purpose will be served by suspending any portion of the sentences," Mr Justice Bethune said. — Sapa.

KAURA VENTS SPLEEN AGAINST WESTERN 'FIVE'

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 2 Jun 82 p 3

Nujoma should be given work to clean toilets

Known for his colourful and provocative public addresses, Mr Kaura this time became notably abusive towards some of his political rivals, describing Swanu as "schwein" (pig) and suggesting Swapo leader Sam Nujoma be given work to clean toilets.

Most of his speech was devoted to countering criticism of the Budget from the Christian Democratic Action for Social Justice (CDA) – the newly-formed party led by Owambo Administration Chairman Peter Kalangula.

Katjiuongua must stop worshipping everything white

Mr Kaura said the budgeted allocation of funds to the Owambo people totalled a favourable R94m and described the CDA as a "Christian Disgrace Association".

CORRUPTION

Turning to the Damara Administration Mr Kaura called for the immediate arrest of its Chairman Mr Justus Garoëb and another leader Mr Simon Gobs, to answer for the "corruption in Damaraland".

He suggested that their passports be withdrawn before they could leave the country, and accused Mr Garoëb of "running to Swapo to save face".

Mr Kaura then addressed himself to the Western Five, saying: "We, the people of Namibia, who have endured untold hardships, who have grown up hungry in the country of our birth, who would like to shed the shackles of SA colonialism, are sick of your spinelessness, cowardice, indecision' and your appeasement of Swapo and Russia. We are sick of your bloodstained détente."

His message to the African Frontline states was: "Feed the hungry in your own countries and don't worry about us."

To Swapo Mr Kaura's message was, as he put it "very simple": "Swapo jy sal bars (you will suffer).

Women should serve in the National Assembly

"Just send us (Swapo leader) Sam Nujoma so that we can give him a job to clean the toilets," the DTA leader continued.

Countering Swanu leader Moses Katjiuongua's criticisms of the ruling DTA, Mr Kaura said: "The DTA does not promote apartheid. It is the only organisation that does not only talk about abolishing apartheid, but which has a clear record of doing."

CDA is a 'Christian Disgrace Association'

He also rebuked the Swanu leader for criticising the tribal courts in Namibia, saying "Mr Katjiuongua must help to build out the judicial system of the Black man instead or worshipping everything white."

He described the Swanu leader as a typical "been-to" – a Black intellectual who has studied overseas and discarded all his traditional African values in the process.

DISLIKE

Referring to Mr Katjiuongua as one of those, Mr Kaura said: "They develop a complete dislike for anything Black and worship anything White. No wonder Mr Katjiuongua is worshipping the South African courts."

The Territory's judiciary was granted greater constitutional independence from the SA judiciary by an act of the National Assembly last year, after resorting directly under SA statutory rule since the start of civilian administration by the SA Government of the Territory, and during which time SA instituted a system of tribal courts.)

Mr Kaura also suggested that women should be nominated to serve in the National Assembly "to liven up the Chamber", and called for the allocation of special number plates for motor vehicles driven by members of the National Assembly.

BEN AFRICA CLAIMS UN SCHEME IS BANKRUPT

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 4 Jun 82 p 3

[Text] THE UN and the Western Five were stumbling blocks to independence for the Territory, DTA Vice-President Dr Ben Africa said this week.

Speaking during the Budget debate in the National Assembly, Dr Africa said preparations for independence inside Namibia were receiving too little attention.

The delay of independence was working against democracy in the Territory, he said.

Turning to US Assistant Secretary of State Africa Affairs Dr Chester Crocker, Dr Africa said: "It is high time that Dr Crocker explains a few things to the DTA or he will not be trusted."

The Western Five had become another stumbling block to SWA's independence according to Dr Africa because instead of pressing for a settlement it was dancing to the tune of Swapo who was too scared to face the DTA in elections.

On the UN, Dr Africa said, "This is 1982 not 1945. The UN has shown by now what it can and what it cannot do. The time has come for us not to take the UN too seriously.

"We must not regard the UN as a necessary condition for independence", he added.

Dr Africa went to say if the Western Five's settlement initiative shipwrecked, only the greatest measure of internal unity amongst the people of the Territory should be strived for. Only the DTA could ensure maximum internal unity, according to Dr Africa.

Dr Africa recalled a motion passed by the DTA in November 1980 calling on the AG to pomulgate a Bill of fundamental human rights, a constitutional court to enforce it, and an independent ombudsman to take up complaints before the Court.

WHAT HAPPENED?

Addressing himself to the AG Mr Danie Hough, Dr Africa asked: "What happened to it?"

Most of the Territory's people had accepted the principle of equal social status based on merit alone, and much progress had been made in this direction, added Dr Africa.

"But the goal has not been reached. There are stumbling blocks remaining on the way, but they are not insurmountable."

Preparations for independence should take special note of the building of a Namibia nationalism and the combatting of racism, he said.

He went on to say the SWA independence question had become over-internationalised. The UN did not stand much of a chance to solve the problem as long as it refused to drop its partiality towards Swapo and did not openly demonstrate this.

ECONOMIC, POLITICAL PROBLEMS FACING REGIME NOTED

Paris LE MONDE in French 18-19 May 82

[Article by Philippe Decraene: "Niger: the Time of Uncertainty"]

[18 May 82 p 6]

[Text] Part I: The Economic Morass

Mr Francois Mitterrand, who is paying his first official visit to sub-Saharan Africa, is expected Wednesday evening 19 May at Niamey on the first stage of a journey that will take him to Niger, the Ivory Coast and Senegal.

In a two-part article our special correspondent gives the current situation in the evolution of a country whose geographical position makes it a link between white and black Africa.

Niamey--Never in the 22 years since this territory of former French West Africa became independent has Niamey experienced such activity. Of course, the abundance of workplaces can be explained by the preparations being made for Mr Mitterrand's visit. Everywhere roads are being tarred, new ones are being opened, and seedy public buildings are being completed or modernized.

Under an investment program drawn up during the mining boom, when uranium ore was at its highest price, new administrative buildings were started, and some of them are near completion. For a long time Niamey looked like an immense village devoid of character, but now its face is suddenly changing. A style of architecture is emerging there, one that is in perfect harmony with the rugged beauty of the Sahel regions. Determinedly modernistic buildings stand everywhere, their forms bare and geometric, the ochre or sand-colored rough-cast siding reminiscent of the sober elegance of traditional construction.

Beyond this obvious feverish activity looms a time of uncertainty. Uranium is the main economic resource of the country, and its price has dropped considerably. Rain that is too rare, too little and badly distributed threatens once again to starve populations whose living standard is already very poor. And, finally, hopes for profitable oil discoveries seem to be fading.

Uranium at its Lowest

Niger is the fourth largest producer of uranium in the non-communist world after the United States, Canada and the South African Republic; all of Niger's ore comes from the Air region, in the eastern part of the country. It is a mountainous plateau that tops out at 2,000 meters elevation; the oases of Timia and Iferouane are two of the country's main tourist attractions. The plateau's mineral resources are still only very incompletely known.

There are two mining companies: the Air Mining Company, called Somair, which has been operating since 1971 and processed 2,200 tons of ore last year; and the Akouta Mining Company, or Cominak, which has been in operation since 1978 and processed 2,000 tons last year. In 1980 the Tassa n'Taghalgue Mining Company was formed, or SMTT. One-third of the capital has been underwritten by Kuwait. The company should produce 1,800 tons of ore beginning in 1985. Only the slumping market has kept the SMTT from going into operation so far. Start-up costs will take an investment of 200 billion francs CFA (1 franc CFA = Fr 0.02), for the initial projects, at least. President Seyni Kountche, head of state, told us that as a consequence an intermediate solution is being studied that would limit initial expenses for a workers' city; for the time being, the ore would be processed in Somair's installations.

Dr Anou Mahamane, a young economist who studied at Clermont-Ferrand and Aix and who is currently minister of Mines, refuses to yield to the pervasive gloom. However, he does admit that "The uranium market is likely to be sour till 1990, as far as we can see. Everything is related. The wealthy countries are going through a serious economic crisis. It was inevitable that we should feel the effects." The minister showed that for several years now the level of production has stayed pretty much the same while the selling price of the ore has varied greatly: 5,400 francs CFA a kilo in 1974; 24,500 fr CFA in 1979; 20,000 fr CFA in 1981; 24,000 fr CFA at present. He also explained that "The costs of production have increased considerably because of world inflation. When you take various costs and, especially, loan repayments into account, a kilo of ore costs more than 23,000 fr CFA to produce."

'Our Last Hope'

A European industrialist who knows the uranium market well says, "Nigerien ore has not been profitable for two years now because the cost of mining it is higher than the spot price, i.e. the price paid on the free market. Hence only the privileged prices agreed to by France and Japan make it possible to continue mining it." These statements err by omission on at least two points. A free market for uranium does not exist: most of the tonnage is sold at contracted prices for reasons having to do with the strategic nature of the ore. The present price of about 16,000 fr CFA a kilo is therefore purely theoretical. Also, new buyers have appeared: Libya, which is said to pay 26,000 fr CFA a kilo, and Iraq.

When the sale of Nigerien uranium to Libya is mentioned to him, President Seyni Kountche invariably answers, "We make a distinction between politics and trade."

For the time being, other mineral resources are still very limited. A factory has been in operation at Anou-Araren since April 1981 to treat the coal taken from the open-pit mine there; it supplies electricity to the town of Agadez and the uranium mines at Arlit and Akouta. When the second and final phase of construction is completed at the end of the year, Anou-Araren's total power output will reach 32 megawatts.

The production of about 100 tons of cassiterite a year, i.e. tin-bearing ore, is exported through Jos, Nigeria to Antwerp, but this is relatively negligible. Interesting calcium phosphate deposits have been discovered in the "W" wildlife preserve, but their geographical location is such a serious handicap that mining them remains a real problem. However, the minister of Mines seems optimistic and ready to get on with the task, saying: "We have to choose between development and ecology."

The gold nuggets panned in the Sirba River, which is a tributary of the Niger, are of interest mostly to tourists, who are attracted in increasing numbers by the sumptuous Saharan safaris in the Air region, the Tenere desert or Djado offered by various travel agencies. However these jaunts on camelback or, more frequently, by Land- or Range Rover are not likely to bring any real financial support to the national economy.

The Elf company has taken over from some U.S. companies that have left the country and is proceeding to check out some indications of sizeable oil reserves. Prospectors are working both in the Nguigmi region, near Chad, and in the area of Bilma, on the Djado plateau. "These are our last hopes," a government official told us, adding: "I am not optimistic, but we have seen worse, and I think there is no real reason to dispair."

However, while mining revenue is declining, export crops are also decreasing, namely peanuts and cotton. Cotton production is subject to capricious rainfall and stricter growing requirements than food crops; it also produces a very inadequate income, which explains why cotton production is one-third what it was 10 years ago, amounting to scarcely 3 tons of seed cotton a year (a little more than 1,100 tons of fiber). Also, peanut production dropped from 205 tons in 1970 to 120 tons in 1981. Thus, the supply of local products to Nigerien peanut oil plants and textile mills has been running a heavy deficit.

Then there are goatskins, which exceed 1 billion fr CFA a year in export revenue. The French leather industry makes some of its suede clothing from the Maradi "red" goatskin.

The Treasury in Trouble

Lack of export products accounts for the government's financial difficulties. A government official told us, "In 1982 the National Investment Fund had practically no income, even though this agency was carefully set up so that income from uranium would go entirely toward capital equipment for the country and would not be swallowed up by operating expenses. Now things have come to a complete standstill."

Foreign debt has tripled in 3 years. Debt service charges have quadrupled in 4 years, and the state's debt must come to nearly one-fifth of the budget, which is 94 billion fr CFA. Public investment has consequently been reduced from 26 billion fr CFA in 1980 to 7 billion for 1982. The treasury used to have about 20 billion fr CFA in reserves, but this money has almost entirely disappeared while the state has contracted heavy debts to the private sector and to certain branches of the semi-public sector, for example, social security. At the same time, the foreign trade debt has worsened.

The government has taken economy measures by suspending some public works projects and delaying orders in the construction industry, and this has caused increased unemployment. Also, work on some large projects is temporarily suspended: the Tillabery sugar plant, the new cement works, the Kandadji dam, etc. The dam has some serious handicaps: the time it will take to be completed--10 years before it can hold water, the very high cost of investment--120 billion fr CFA as of 1 January 1982, and the the large number of creditors involved. The Nigeriens are trying to get the Arabs interested in this project, e.g. Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, as well as EEC states such as France and the FRG, many international organizations, and Canada and the United States.

The Drought Storms Back

Another contrast points up the fact that the food situation is alarming for most Nigeriens. While the region around Niamey seems relatively green because it recently received some rain, most of the eastern part of the country is again being ravaged by a terrible drought.

A technical assistant returning from Nguigmi told us, "Lake Chad used to flood the town's marketplace every year, but now it has receded more than 70 kilometers. There is no more plant life left for hundreds of kilometers around. Sandstorms have covered everything. Flocks are dying in their pasture as in 1972. There is still some water in the wells, but no forage is left. The animals drink, lie down and die."

A European expert recently returned from the pasture land where the local EEC delegation recently set up an emergency aid station confirms this report: "In the Tahoua region, large cattle have been moved south by the Peuhls herders. Only goats and sheep are scraping through at the moment and managing to survive." The average life expectancy is 37 years 9 months for men and 38 years 8 months for women. The fact that the general mortality rate is 27 percent and that 40 percent of live births die before the age of 5 is explained primarily by the chronic malnutrition and undernourishment of the poorest Nigeriens. They are decimated by chronic malaria, by cerebro-spinal meningitis, which kills hundreds of people every year, and by measles, which afflicts tens of thousands of children. Curiously, though, while the drought is worsening and bringing ever more patients into the hospitals, discontent is not rising among the rural masses or in the impoverished shantytowns on the outskirts of the cities; it is rising among certain privileged elements of the population who refuse to give up their privileges.

[Excerpts] Part II: A Regime on the Alert

In the first installment of this article (LE MONDE 18 May) our special correspondent told how Niger is in a period of economic stagnation as a consequence of the world crisis and persistent, unfavorable climatic conditions.

Niamey--"We are turning out graduates who will be unemployed. We have to take a more realistic look at our educational system and make it a truly public service," President Seyni Kountche told us. He also denounced those he called "privileged characters on the other side of the river." The head of state was showing his displeasure with students and alluding to the geographical location of a part of the university, on the right bank of the river beyond Kennedy bridge. It is easy to "shut down" by the forces of law and order if there is a threat of agitation.

For several weeks now--and this is not the first time--high school and grade school students and teachers have been spoiling for a fight. Arrests and brutality have been the consequence of their distributing tracts very hostile to the government, holding demonstrations and, especially, strikes. Speaking of strikes, the head of state is upset that they came "a few weeks before the baccalaureate exam," and told us, "We are going to have to take a look at academic freedom."

We got the same story from a European teacher who has remained outside the movement. He said, "They aren't young people in revolt but irresponsible ones egged on by some teachers and, sometimes, their parents. The head of state is embarrassed, because on the eve of a visit by the president of the French republic he does not want to be accused of presiding over a military regime that clamps down on young people whenever they make demands."

For some people, certainly the leaders, the country awards about 700 baccalaureate diplomas but cannot satisfy everybody, for obvious financial reasons. Moreover, many of the young people's demands do not meet national needs, it is said in governmental circles.

Since the military and the students have an equally strong hostility for one another, the confrontations between the youth and the regime cannot be taken lightly. The Bureau of Coordination and Liaison (BCL), a police arm specializing in infiltrating opposition groups, is particularly watchful and brutal. It has been paying special attention to the students of Issa Korombe national lycee, which has a long history of opposition. It has also been watching students in Zinder, Maradi and Agadez, who are not immune to oppositionist contagion.

Redoubled Vigilance

Police vigilance has redoubled especially in the last few weeks because the presidency intends to maintain the splendor of the festivities celebrating Mr Mitterrand's visit to Niamey. This vigilance is also motivated by the fact that some people are using students out of nostalgia for the regime of Mr Diori Hamani, who was overthrown eight years ago in a putsch organized by the present president.

In his most recent press conference, Col Seyni Kountche singled out "ambitious people with bad intentions," and those people are too concerned with being effective to pass up seeking allies among the youth, even though the young people do often denounce the "unpatriotic Diori clique" in their tracts.

The memories of the parliamentary system are not yet completely gone. As time goes by, some people even tend to embellish them. True, all the spokesmen of the progressive party, the Nigerien section of the African Democratic Rally of Mr Houphouet-Boigny, have left the political scene, but their partisans have not put down their arms, and they have taken up the battle with help from abroad, it is said here.

The authorities say they intercepted a 15-man commando squad last April with 13 Malians. According to some sources, the men were planning to capture an arms depot in the Arlit region, sabotage industrial installations and take expatriates as hostages. The aura of mystery about this affair is encouraging speculation, none of which seems unlikely on the face of it. The head of state told us that as far as he was concerned he was convinced that the men were connected with one of the sons of the former president, Mr Abdoulaye Diori. The BCL has been following Mr Diori's moves between Tripoli, Kano, Abidjan, some European capitals and even, recently, Ndjamena, where he had been operating on occasion. "For two years now I have been planning to set his father free, because he is still under house arrest in Niamey, but how can I decide to do that in a situation like this?" Col Seyni Kountche told us.

This climate might hamper starting up a development company, "a structure that is unique to Niger, one that has no reference to a foreign model and is intended to set itself up as a constituent assembly at the proper time," according to Mr Barmou Salaou, the permanent secretary of the development company's commission. Niger has had no National Assembly for eight years, the constitution is suspended and parties are outlawed, but some kind of return to democracy is planned through the future Development Company. Elections will be held in five stages: the people elect village councils (6-16 members); the councils elect local councils (20-30 members); the local councils elect subregional councils (12-30 members), which elect regional councils (16-30 members); the regional councils, finally, elect the National Council of the Development Company.

No date has been set for these elections; things are still at the village council stage. True, there are more than 9,000 of them. For the moment, the executive power is not in the hands of the people but of the head of state and the Supreme Military Council. Not even the present number of members of the Supreme Military Council is known. (There were originally 12, at the time of the putsch in April 1974.)

A return to a regime of political parties is even less likely because a real foreign menace seems to be weighing on the political stability of the country; it has immensely long borders (more than 5,000 km) that defy effective surveillance. Actually, it is even possible that the various origins of the foreign threats may cause them to neutralize each other. Libya is not about to let Algeria move into Niamey, and Nigeria is afraid that a preponderant influence other than its own might emerge in Niger.

Franco-Nigerien relations are exemplary in their harmony, and they must be kept distinct from the recall of the ambassador and tensions within the 6,000-person French community in Niger. The reasons are still obscure for the sudden recall to Paris of Mr Pierret, a few days before the arrival of the president of the Republic, and the affair is still causing the most contradictory remarks to be made.

"The Language of Truth"

The Nigerien president has received a favorable impression of the French head of state; he was the second sub-Saharan head of state to pay a visit, after Ivorian President Houphouet-Boigny, last July. Col Seyni Kountche appreciates the fact that Niger is the first sub-Saharan country to be visited by Mr Mitterrand, and he makes no secret of his satisfaction on this score to anyone who will listen. He was worried after the 10 May election but very quickly understood that the new majority in France would not call the Nigerien regime into question and would deal with it without ulterior motives.

Mr Jean-Pierre Cot's visit to Niamey in March was a success. His Nigerien counterparts say they found him to be understanding and friendly. They considered it fortunate that the new minister of Cooperation was ready to increase aid to Nigerien agriculture and gave priority to nationally managed development and the quest for food self-sufficiency.

"Mr Francois Mitterrand speaks the language of truth to us. It is time Africans realize that no power in the world gives you something for nothing. We have to keep in mind that solidarity is not gratuitous," a high Nigerien official told us. He added, "People have to stop helping us just make ends meet on our budget and start giving us the means for real development."

French cooperation personnel has been stable for several years. The actual number varies from 390 to 400 people, nearly three-fourths of whom are teachers. For 1981, France granted aid in the general amount of 21 billion fr CFA, 13 billion of which was in loans from the Central Fund for Economic Cooperation. Of the 9 billion fr CFA in aid from the ministry of Cooperation, personnel salaries come to about 5 billion fr CFA.

Nevertheless, here as in many other countries of French-speaking Africa, France is still the main provider of bilateral aid. In the period 1960-81, some 340 billion fr CFA were given to Niger in bilateral aid, and 190 billion (36 percent) was for multilateral aid. Second in line after France comes the EEC, followed by the FRG and the World Bank; next are the Arab countries (14 percent of total aid).

Obviously, people in Niamey expect a lot more from France. Thus, a Nigerien university official told us with some disappointment, "It's all very nice to conclude the deal of the century with Algeria to buy its gas. But you see, we here would have been happy with a tenth of what you have given the Algerians, who do have economic advantages far superior to ours. Sub-Saharan Africa is liable to waste away on such a burst of generosity."

ISRAEL'S RELATIONS WITH VARIOUS AFRICAN COUNTRIES DISCUSSED

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 21 May 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Israel, the Arabs and Africa"]

[Text] ZAIRE's decision to re-establish diplomatic relations with Israel should not surprise anyone. It is the delay in announcing it which should. There have been calls all over the continent, not the least in this country for African countries to resume diplomatic links with Israel. The Israelis have themselves been very busy courting favour furtively in "vulnerable" countries such as Ivory Coast, Zaire and Ghana.

The rupture in diplomatic ties between African countries and Israel began in 1972 with the decision by Guinea to sever links with Israel. Relations with Israel further deteriorated when during the October 1973 War, Israel occupied Egyptian land, which, as former President Senghor of Senegal put it, was an "illegal occupation of territory which is incontestably African." Before that unprecedented show of solidarity with the Arabs, most African countries had tried to maintain an even keel between both parties to the Middle East imbroglio. In 1969, an Organisation of African Unity Peace Mission was sent to Tel Aviv and Cairo during which the Israelis merely lectured the mediators and snubbed our head of state, who was a member of the mission.

The crucial question now is whether Zaire's decision is going to have a "bandwaggon effect", that is, whether those vulnerable countries, and there are quite a few, will follow Mobutu's footsteps. Right now there are about three categories of countries. In the first category are the leftist regimes (Ethiopia, Congo Brazzaville, Mozambique, Zimbabwe, etc.) who will not renew ties with Israel because of her strong links with American imperialism and South African colonialism. Secondly, there are the countries with very large number of Muslims who will abhor contacts with Israel on grounds of Islamic solidarity.

The third category are the "vulnerables" who would for reasons of residual domestic sympathy for Israel and/or disenchantment with the policies of some Arab states resume diplomatic ties with Israel. Rather unfortunately, we seem to straddle all the categories, though our government is hardly leftist. But we must be very careful. Our best allies in the struggle against racism and colonialism are probably Algeria and to lesser extent Libya. We would definitely lose more in our long term pursuits if the Federal Government is pushed to resuming relations with Israel. Even for the short term, it is in our own interest to maintain cordial ties with the oil-rich Arab states who have been helping us put up a brave front in the wake of the onslaught on oil producers by the West. There are no compelling reasons for us to re-establish ties with Israel.

BRIEFS

BACKGROUND ON ISRAELI RELATIONS--A motion for Nigeria to normalise diplomatic relations with Israel had been tabled before the House of Representatives. The motion jointly sponsored by 106 legislators sought among other things, that Nigeria should renew, re-establish and seek normal diplomatic, consular trade and cultural relations as well as technical co-operation with Israel at ambassadorial level. It also sought to appeal to President Shehu Shagari to do everything within his power to persuade all the other OAU member-states that share Nigeria's point of view to normalise relations with Israel at their earliest convenience. However, when the motion was moved, some members protested that their names were included in it without their consent. At this juncture, Speaker Edwin Ume-Ezeoke ruled that the motion be suspended and referred it to the House Committee on Rules and Business to ascertain signatories to the motion. AJ/MRDN WILL NOT TAKE PART IN PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

[Article by Momar Seyni Ndiaye]

[Text] The And Jef/Revolutionary New Democracy Movement (AJ/MRDN) will not nominate a candidate for the 1983 presidential elections. This is one of the main decisions made by the first legal congress of this organization, which began Saturday and ended yesterday morning at the El Mansour Cinema in Dakar. The 523 participants in the congress also recommended to the leading party levels that a "vast debate" be initiated to inform the base levels about the import of the legislative and municipal elections next year. The congress also deemed it necessary to take the opportunity offered by the electoral campaign to popularize and publicize the AJ/MRDN line.

The decision not to take part in the presidential elections in 1983, according to the report dealing with this matter, is explained by the "anti-electoralism" of the movement and the "antidemocratic nature" of the new electoral code. The AJ/MRDN "rejects the exclusion of the opposition parties in the drafting of the code." The congress then went on to deplore certain positions, in particular the principle of guarantee, optional use of the polling booths, the mixed nature of the ballot, the rejection of allowing emigres to vote, the lack of control by the voters over the work of those elected, and discrimination among the parties in the use of ORTS [Senegal Radio and Television Office] time during the electoral campaign.

Because of all of this, the congress determined that "only the organized masses are capable of carrying through the democratic and popular national revolution, the transition towards socialism," and that it is "necessary to combat all illusions" on this subject. On the question of unity, the congress asked the board of officers "to launch discussions immediately with the PPS [Senegalese Popular Party]" with the view to achieving unity as proposed by the secretary general of that party, and "to adopt decisions to determine the differences between the AJ/MRDN and the UDP [Union for People's Democracy]".

With regard to the RND [Democratic National Rally] and the MDP [People's Democratic Movement, "the congress recommends the maintenance of dynamic relations." In connection with international policy, the congress denounced "the annexationist policy of Senegal in Gambia," recommended the "recognition of the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic (SDAR)," and confirmed its "proletarian internationalism." On the other hand, the participants in the congress expect a determination to combat "French imperialism" in order to remain faithful to the "tradition of struggle of the Senegalese people initiated by Alinn Sitoye Jatta and Lamine Senghor."

At the conclusion of the congress, a general council of 125 members was elected, and the National Executive Committee (CEN), which previously had 25 members, was expanded to 42, with a heavy percentage of workers, peasants, and women. This increase in the number of CEN members corresponds to the extension of the base of the movement. The women's commission established is, for its part, to study the status of women, eventually to convoke an And Jef National Women's Conference, and to create a National Women's Movement. The youth commission which has worked in the field for some years is also to stress its efforts in the various sectors of youth and sports activities, such as the Sport and Progress Movement.

It should also be noted that an investigation and study commission will assess the needs of the masses and their concerns. Its duty will above all be to penetrate the various social strata and classes in Senegal with a view to their integration in the revolutionary process. Following the work of the congress, the delegates organized a march from El Mansour Cinema to the headquarters of the Gibraltar Movement. We talked with Mr. Landing Savane, who expressed a view that the holding of this congress "is proof that only perseverance pays off. We have struggled tirelessly for 14 years, and we will continue to struggle until the RNDP [Democratic National Rally Party], the transition towards socialism triumphs."

Permanent Bureau

Secretary General--Landing Savane; General Secretary--Alioune Sene and Mamadou Diop Decroix; Political Secretary--Amadou Top; Workers and Trade Union Members Secretary--Bocar Ndiaye; Investigation and Studies Secretary--Abdoulay Ly; Peasant Movement Secretary--Abdoulaye Bakhoum; Propaganda and Agitation Secretary--Mamadou Diouck; Training and Legal Affairs Secretary--Abdoulave Gueve; Economic Affairs Secretary--Mazide Ndiaye; Organization Secretary--Thierno Kane; Women's Affairs Secretary--Fatou Kane; Youth Secretary--Joe Diop; Immigration Secretary--Aziz Dieng.

INDIAN OFFER OF EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE REPORTED

Victoria NATION in English 19 May 82 p 1

[Text] AS Seychelles strives towards self-sufficiency in manpower, India has opened its educational doors as much to Seychellois medical students as to other professions, Health Minister Karl St. Ange said yesterday.

Mr. St. Ange was speaking to Seychelles Agence Presse after what he called "very fruitful" visits to France, Switzerland and India. The Minister returned from India last Sunday.

Meeting in New Delhi with the Indian Assistant Minister for Health, Mr. St Ange discussed future bilateral cooperation and was told that Seychelles was welcome to send medical and other students for training in India.

In New Delhi, the Seychellois Minister also visited a rehabilitation centre and discussed posible Indian assistance in this field should it be needed.

Next, in Bombay, Mr. St. Ange visited another large institute for the handicapped and was "astonished" by the extent and sophistication of treatment and rehabilitation available.

He was especially impressed to see many of the disabled patients actually working in the institute, producing equipment to help the handicapped along in their daily lives.

In fact, Mr. St. Ange said, he saw no reason why serious Seychellois cases in general could not be sent to India for certain advanced treatment rather than to much more expensive destinations in Europe for example.

He also believed, after visiting a medicine factory, that Seychelles should look into buying some drugs from India at cheaper prices, especially since some Indian medicine were exported to Europe.

Minister St. Ange's long trip started in Paris where 125 delegates from 24 countries benefiting from French medical assistance met on April 29 and 30.

The meeting, organised by French Co-operation Minister Jean-Pierre Cot and Health Minister Jack Ralite, was held in the Hotel Concorde-Lafayette.

Mr. St. Ange described the meeting as being very cordial, simple and open with an interesting exchange of views and experiences.

He said the two hosts were sympathetic to the problems brought up by those taking part and assured their guests that France would continue such co-operation.

TOURISM PLAN AIMS AT SALVAGING DEPRESSED INDUSTRY

Victoria NATION in English 20 May 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] "WE can, and will, be as ruthless and as professional as everyone else". In a "do or die" tone yesterday morning new Seychelles Tourism Director John Enright announced an aggressive revival of Seychelles as the most favoured tourist destination of the world tourist and travel trade.

Addressing Seychelles People's Progressive Front and Government leaders and local and foreign representatives of Seychelles tourism in the Reef Hotel conference room, Mr. Enright started out gloomily setting alarm bells ringing before confidently presenting a 23-point plan aimed at reversing a steepening downward trend that was gathering momentum in a "plummet into the earth".

This was the new Seychelles Tourist Board's (STB) first analysis of the ailments of Seychelles tourism and the national and international strategy needed to cure these.

Among the recuperative steps being taken, the STB and the private sectors had together achieved an average decrease of 27.6 per cent in Seychelles tourism prices, or, in other words, the costs to a tourist visiting Seychelles.

In its contribution the Government was expected to agree to passenger service fees being halved for adults in January 1983 and abolished for children.

But this was not how the Director of Tourism started out.

He introduced his analysis on quite an opposite note: "Tourism, which provides the major percentage of our gross national product, is in the most serious decline of any country in the world".

Using graph charts to show the gravity of the situation, Mr. Enright said that if Seychelles received 38,000 visitors this year, "it will be luck".

This is the worst figure since 1975 when there were 37,321 visitors. The peak was 78,852 in 1979.

Emphasising repeatedly that Seychelles could not afford such a decline if the tourism industry was to survive, Mr. Enright pinpointed a past lack of control over an initial tourist boom as the main reason for this.

Falling standards, wrong attitudes, mediocre food, high prices, high airline fares, revaluation, the abortive mercenary invasion — all had been blamed but these, claimed Mr. Enright, were an offshoot of the real problem.

"Private enterprise and tour operators abroad used Seychelles for profitability.

"Seychelles, on the other hand, let the private sector, the tour operators abroad and the travel industry as a whole use it the way they wanted to".

Meanwhile, Mr. Enright said, the competition in Mauritius, the Maldives, Hong Kong and other places were pulling out all the stops to overcome Seychelles' challenge.

Seychelles' tourist industry lost control and became fragmented in a "heartless" and "vicious" industry where if a product was not up to standard, the tourist could freely make another choice.

The ironic thing was that Seychelles had the best product by far in the Indian Ocean, but it had never been identified for its own interests.

Nevertheless, with the STB spearheading the battle for revival and the country dictating its own tourism philosophy and controlling the balance of its tourism requirements through a co-ordinated plan, Mr. Enright was confident that Seychelles would begin to climb back to the top of the highly competitive tourism ladder by 1984.

This would be done by regaining the confidence of all concerned locally and internationally, especially in the tourist markets, while controlling the industry in Seychelles so that it would not "eat into" the country's culture and quality of life.

"Tourism is a disease which can erode the very basis of your upbringing", he warned.

SAP

A Tourist Board for a Balanced Industry

THE SEYCHELLES Tourist Board, with the full backing of President Albert René, who is also the Tourism Minister, has been set up to tackle the country's very serious tourism problems professionally and internationally. Mr. John Enright the Director of Tourism said.

There was close communication with the President through the Principal Secretary for Finance and Industry, he said, to ensure that the STB would operate according to the country's philosophy guidlines .

Several departments had been set up to deal with the various sectors of the industry such as marketing, the development of tourist attractions, trade and visitor services, research and statistics, and licencing and control.

An advisory Board of Directors to be set up soon would, in future, direct the country's tourism policy.

A Seychelles News Bureau was being organised to present an attractive image through the media, especially the travel press.

The Bureau would provide the world press with up-to date tourism information from Seychelles, encourage travel journalists to visit the islands and involve itself in marketing by penetrating the market, through the media, to create credibility.

Presenting a 23-point recovery plan, Mr. Enright said that tourist offices in London, Frankfurt and Milan would be strengthened.

At present visitor arrivals from the United Kingdom are down 51 per cent on last year, West Germany is down 45 per cent, and Italy, the No. 1 market, is down 48 per cent.

The tourist office in Paris will be re-opened. France is currently Seychelles' second major source of tourists but figures are down 27 per cent on last year.

A director will be appointed to co-ordinate the European offices.

There will be a secondary markets promotional drive, especially in Japan, whose figures are up 41 per cent on last year.

"We need to expose Seychelles to every concievable market we can find and on a policy of balanced tourism I think we can control any kind of market." Mr. Enright said.

An advertising agent in London, Parks Advertising, has been engaged to work out a new image and style of promotional approach in a major trade and consumer advertising campaign that is expected to start in August.

Backing up this, the STB intends to go on a major European promotion tour in October.

Co-operative trade advertising and promotion campaigns will be organised with major foreign tour operators.

A co-ordinated plan for familiarisation visits to Seychelles by journalists and travel agents will be drawn up to show the product in the best light.

Seychelles will participate in such major world and European travel trade exhibitions as Berlin's ITB and the World Travel Market.

The STB itself is, through its advertising agency, putting out new, highly attractive publicity material.

A craft and cultural village is being set up both as a major tourist attraction and to counter the bad effects of the trade on national culture and social values.

"The manner in which we expose Seychelles to tourism is vital", said the Tourism Director. "The craft village will be one of the most important vehicles to create the right balance on all sides."

The STB will also work closely with all the associations representing the different sectors of the industry in Seychelles, especially the Hotel Association, the Restaurant Association and the Small Hotels and Guesthouses Association.

A more personal approach to tourism accomodation will be encouraged through the small hotels and guesthouses.

Seychelles, not the tour operators and the hotels as in the past, will define high and low tourist seasons so as to set proper rates and combat accusations of high prices.

However, giving value for money, the Director of Tourism said, was not a question of what the product cost, but a question of the quality and the variety of the product.

"The Seychelles Tourist Board cannot and should not, in view of the fact that it is spending public money, to promote tourism, leave any stone unturned where it can go into the market and secure business".

There was no compromise, Mr. Enright stressed, especially if the resources and administrative and promotional abilities existed.

It was thanks to the Government, he said, that such abilities existed as it was the Government that was providing the necessary funds to make Seychelles the No. 1 destination of tourists in the world.

As part of yesterday morning's presentation of Seychelles' aggressive new tourism strategy, the Chairman of the Seychelles News Bureau, Mr. Garth Davies and two Directors of Parks Advertising, Mr. Peter Lough and Mr. Tony Harirs, used slide and video shows to explain their respective approaches to the problems.

Mr. Davies explained how the Bureau would keep contact with the major media, especially the travel media, in the tourist markets and would supply them with a flood of information from Seychelles.

The Parks Advertising representatives presented Seychelles' new and eye-catching tourism logo and showed examples of highly colourful brochures, posters, stickers, stationary, labels and other publicity material and ideas they would be producing for the advertising campaign.

Until Friday, representatives of the local and overseas staff involved in promoting or administering Seychelles tourism will go on meeting to discuss and put the finishing touches to the new strategy presented yesterday.

BRIEFS

SPPR-FRENCH TIES--The Seychelles People's Progressive Front and the French Socialist Party are to keep in closer contact following a three-day visit to Paris by SPPF Secretary General Buy Sinon. Mr. Sinon, who returned to Seychelles on Sunday, told Seychelles Agence Presse that he was very satisfied with his talks with leaders of the ruling French party and with the convergence of views that emerged. Among the subjects discussed was the Indian Ocean. The Front Secretary-General also held two days of fruitful talks with Senior officials of the African section of the French Co-operation Ministry. Before going to Paris, Mr. Sinon met with the Commonwealth Secretary-General, Mr. Sridath Ramphal, in London. After Mr. Ramphal agreed to the Commonwealth Secretariat sending an adviser to the Ministry of Labour and Social Security in Seychelles, Mr. Sinon had more talks on the matter with other Commonwealth officials. PASSAGE OF PRESIDENTIAL COUNCIL'S PROPOSALS WILL BE DIFFICULT

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 12 May 82 p 14

[Article by Dawie from his "Out of my Political Pen" Column: "The Deciding Test Is Here for Builders and Destroyers"]

[Text] The Presidential Council is engaged in bringing about a fundamental reorientation in South African politics. Its proposals about a new order have been tabled as of today, but it appears already clear that this can become a litmus paper test in our politics.

Every school child knows about the litmus test in the science class. That little piece of paper which turns red when acid is poured on it, turns blue again when immersed into an alkali. The Presidential Council's proposals will be just like a litmus test for the builders and the destroyers in South African politics.

Those to the far right have, of course, already shown their color.

The Reconstitutes stand for unwatered-down superiority. Their policy of hate has gotten stuck on the Mauri rugby players and since then it has not moved a step.

So to speak, they have on their side the Conservative Party of the Treurnicht group which simply refuses to accept the consequences of the Nationalist Party's 1977 proposals which, at that time, they were also supporting. They are also clinging tenaciously to a past which is irrevocably gone.

To the left we have the progressives. Their leader, Dr Frederik van Zyl Slabbert, is treading water with verbose statements and long interviews which are demonstrating the pressures to which he is being subjected from the two wings of his party: the moderates and the radical leftists.

The abysmal mistake he made in boycotting the Presidential Council from the very start is getting back at him again. This appears all the more clear by the extent of the pleas being made, from unexpected coloreds circles, that the prime minister's reform initiatives must be supported.

Notice too with what condemnation the Progressives' stories about "sham reforms" are being rebutted by certain colored leaders. They are noticing why foremost Progressives are evidently blind; that radical rightwing opposition has been carried on to a breaking point exactly because real reform is on the way!

Moreover, it is obvious that among many coloreds there is a healthy sobriety about Progressive stories to the effect that no reform is possible without "participation of the black majority."

This lospided reasoning overlooks a couple of important facts:

First of all, at the moment the coloreds do not have any political rights. The rights of urban blacks are going to be expanded, within the greater whole, while millions of black people in the self-governing national states already have effective rights and they are exercising them.

Did they wait for the coloreds to grasp these rights with both hands and to exercise them? Do not believe that.

Among many of the coloreds there is a strong feeling that whatever proposals by the Presidential Council are accepted by the government it will behoove colored leaders to snatch them up, so that they will no longer be regarded as the country's stepchildren.

The approach of using whatever you can get to advance further later on, is evidently causing many problems for radicals...even those in the Progressive Party.

All or Nothing

The Progressives' intolerant leftist radicals have an all or nothing approach which has a following among black radicals who will not be satisfied with anything less than a black majority government.

Another irony is that the far left and the far right radicals could, after all, be finding themselves in the same camp, as has happened in politics before.

It is just possible that the Progressive Party's Suzmans and Boraines will fight as hard against the Presidential Council's proposals and the government's reaction to them as Dr A. P. Treurnicht (with people like those destroyers in the Afrikaner Resistance Movement who cling to him) will be doing.

From House to House

Standing in first place against these forces is the Nationalist Party, a party which must go forward under difficult circumstances. It is again taking the lead in its classic role of renewal and courageous approach.

Its reaction to the Presidential Council's proposals will be a determining factor in leading the country to a new order, away from a status quo which simply does not comply with the requirements of Christian justice and does not take into account the unavoidable realities of the country.

Realistic leaders of all population groups must continue to carry the message that the art of reconciling the unavoidable with the possible rests with politics.

The attempts on the part of the destroyers, which can lead only to chaos and conflict, must be halted for the sake of a better South Africa. In white politics this can only be done by the Nationalist Party which must carry its message from door to door throughout the entire country... against attempts at delay and obstructionism no matter what new low levels they reach.

EVENTUAL ESTABLISHMENT OF BLACK GOVERNMENT PREDICTED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 5 Jun 82 p 8

[Text] ALTHOUGH most White South Africans did not share the view, it seems to be accepted by most people that eventually South Africa will have a Black Government, according to an economic report entitled "South Africa: Business Prospects re-assessed," released in Johannesburg yesterday.

The report was compiled by Simson-Freer, South African representatives of the Economist Intelligence Unit, London.

It says: "Whites are not prepared to give up their own culture and traditions and developments in some other African countries since independence have suggested to them that they would have to do so.

"The solution being attempted is to give political self-determination in separate geographical areas with economic co-operation and interdependence and with multi-racial sharing of decision-taking over matters of common concern.

"The devolution of authority that has already occurred is substantial. The endurance of this system would seem to depend, however, on the rate of economic growth."

The report says it is not surprising if most Blacks at this stage see the prospect of any Black Government being better than any White Government.

The argument that Blacks want control of their own destiny, rather than a more comfortable form of bondage, indicates a willingness to accept some economic sacrifice for the political goal.

"However, conditions are improving, both politically and economically. The sacrifice is thus also potentially larger as time goes by.

"People have been predicting a Black Government 'soon' since the decolonisation process in Africa began two decades ago, but the time horizon keeps shifting further into the future.

"At the time of writing, there was no indication whatsoever that a Black Government was probable in the near future."

The report says the thinking of Black political leaders is, to a large extent, unknown because there is little published policy discussion "and many of the Black leaders are in enforced or self-imposed exile or in jail."

Those leaders that are "visible," namely, the chief political figures in the national states, are frequently denounced as "puppets" of the White Government.

After a changeover to Black Government, whatever its policy, it seems probable that a large number of Whites would remain in South Africa. Some would stay because they had no choice — Sapa.

WAY OPENED FOR BLACK 'EQUAL STATUS'

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 7 Jun 82 p 2

[Article by Jaap Theron]

[Text] THE Black Local Authorities Bill now before Parliament opens the way for urban Blacks in South Africa to reach "equal status" regarding the management of their own urban affairs, as opposed to that of Whites, and to that which Coloureds and Asians will get once the President's Council recommendations have been instituted.

Commenting on the Bill Dr Piet Koornhof, Minister of Co-operation and Development, told The Citizen: "All channels have now been opened for the urban Black to reach equal status with other races on the third level of government in South Africa."

He pointed out that this Bill would not only give urban Blacks the fullest possible rights to govern their own affairs but would in fact provide them with a channel to air their views in a future umbrella confederal system as well as to a Black council which could in future be consulted by the President's Council.

Dr Koornhof stressed that this Bill, which was the result of years of inquiries by various commissions, and which was before Parliament earlier this year before it was referred to a select committee, "in fact fully accommodates the South African urban Black into the country's constitutional system".

The Bill repeals about 70 Acts and regulations which affect urban Blacks, including the extremely controversial Urban Areas Act of 1960.

The new Bill will give urban Blacks viable local management structures with full autonomy on the third level of government.

It also gives the Black urban management committees the right of landownership, whereas they have until now had only 99-year leasehold ownership.

Black residents themselves, however, do not get landownership. The argument is that Black local authorities are part of the South African constitutional land system and should therefore have the right to own land.

Dr Koornhof said the principle underlying this legislation was the belief that the inhabitants of a city, town or village should have the right to control and manage their own affairs at local level through elected representatives. The implementation of this principle required that meaningful powers should be conferred on local government. It was the belief that further significant powers should now be conferred on Black local authorities.

A valid criterion to determine whether the new dispensation structuring Black local government is autonomous is to see whether the powers conferred are the same or substantially the same as those conferred on White local government.

It is also fundamental that the powers thus conferred should emanate from and be conferred by Parliament itself and that these powers should not be subject to arbitrary abrogation or curtailment. It has accordingly been decided to incorporate these powers in the Bill itself and that legal provision be made for the extension of these powers.

In order to ensure good and orderly government, however, it is essential that residual power should vest in an authority. In the case of White local government, that authority is vested in the administrator. In the case of Black local government that authority is vested in the Minister.

The circumstances in which these residual powers are to be exercised are, however, strictly circumscribed. It is commensurate with the powers of an Administrator to act in special circumstances.

CABINET'S INTERPRETATION OF PC'S RECOMMENDATIONS ADOPTED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 7 Jun 82 pp 1, 2

[Article by Jaap Theron]

[Text] THE full caucus of the National Party, which includes all its MPs and MPCs, this weekend adopted the Cabinet's interpretation of the President's Councils recommendations on a constitution for Whites, Coloureds and Asians.

The sole dissenting vote came from Mr Ferdi van Heerden, MP for De Aar . . . who will today become the 18th member of the Conservative Party in Parliament.

The broad guidelines of the Cabinet put before the caucus, held in the Cape Town Civic Centre, apparently included the following political directives:

● The office of Prime Minister will disappear and his powers will be vested in the future Executive State President to be elected next year;

Powers

● The Executive President will chair the future mixed Cabinet;

● Junior Cabinet Ministers, with an apparent higher status, will replace the present deputy Cabinet Ministers;

● The mixed President's Council will be enlarged and given arbitratory powers in order advise the Executive President on matters of conflict between the White, Coloured and Asian chambers of the legislature;

Target dates

● The President's Council will be partly elected by the three ethnic chambers on a proportional basis and partly-appointed by the Executive State President;

● The Coloured and Asian chambers could be instituted as early as 1983 and the entire envisaged adaptation of the Constitution completed by late 1984;

● The Cabinet has rejected the President's Council's separation of powers between the legislative and the executive and Cabinet Ministers can retain their seats as MPs and attend their respective ethnic caucus.

Cabinet Ministers can be appointed from outside the legislative body and they will have the right to attend any of the three chambers, namely the White chamber (which will apparently be the present main chamber of the Assembly), the Coloured chamber or the Asian chamber.

Vote proviso

But only a White Cabinet Minister, who is also an elected MP, can vote in the White chamber. This applies similarly to Coloured and Asian ministers in their own chambers.

Cabinet members of the three ethnic chambers will also be able to attend their respective caucus and be able to vote there.

A second session of Parliament later this year in order to elect an Executive State President is apparently out.

It now appears that the first such President will only be elected next year after the establishment of the Coloured and Asian chambers so that they may have a joint say in the matter.

Levels

All indications now are that the Government is eager to settle the initial, or central, level of Government first in order to occupy the Coloured and Asian chambers of the legislative body and immediately thereafter launch its plans to accommodate the President's Council's recommendations on the third, or local level, of Government.

The second, or provincial, level of Government will only be adapted or phased out after further consultation with MPs and especially MPCs and only after the introduction of the new plans on first and third levels.

Dropped

The argument is, apparently, that the accommodation of Coloureds and Asians on the first and third levels, will automatically lead to an acceptable solution, in time to come, on the second or provincial level.

What is also, apparently, now dropped is a referendum or referenda on the President's Council's proposals mainly because they are so close to the 1977 constitutional proposals which were already, at the time, on issue at a general election.

Saturday's meeting was a confidential caucus meeting and MPs won't be able to reveal to voters details given to them until after the federal congress to be held in Bloemfontein on July 30 and 31.

It is expected that delegates to the federal congress will be supplied in writing with the Government's guidelines on a new constitution, as they were put before the caucus this weekend, shortly before the federal congress.

But those guidelines might also have slightly more detail in order to give delegates the opportunity to prepare themselves for an in-depth debate on the whole constitutional issue.

The President's Council has recommended that the Executive President should be elected for a seven-year term.

Office term

But indications are now that the Government favours a term only slightly longer than the five-year elected period of the legislature. This will give the President the opportunity, not only to overlap slightly the legislature's term of office, but also to allow the newly elected legislature to elect a new Executive President at the earliest possible opportunity after a General Election.

The President's Council proposed that the Executive President should elected his own Prime Minister and —in consultation with him — the Cabinet. But it now appears that there will be no prime minister and that the President will chair the mixed Cabinet.

Options

The political adaptation of the third level of Government, which is likely to be changed soon after the first level next year, apparently still contains most of the options as suggested by the President's Council.

The Government is apparently in favour of the recommended options for the time being, including separate municipalities for Whites, Coloureds and Asians and where applicable, the formation of own local management committees by ethnic groups in cases where they cannot form separate municipalities.

In the latter case, the chairman of such management committee, should he, for example, be a Coloured, can sit in on a White town or city council meeting especially when matters concerning the Coloured management committee's interests are at stake.

Another option is that White and Coloured management committees of adjoining White and Coloured areas, or of the same area, can hold joint meetings in order to reach consensus on matters of mutual concern before their respective town or city councils decide on them.

A further option is to allow White and Coloured or Asian management committees to attend White town or city council meetings," but without a vote", when matters of mutual concern are under discussion.

Another option which also remains is the President Councils recommended ward system, which in fact boils down to fully mixed municipalities consisting of a number of White and Coloured wards, each of which would elect its own councillors to a single town or city council.

The Cabinet can definitely be mixed and Deputy Ministers will probably get the status of Junior Ministers in order to get away from the present impression that they are only appendages to their Ministers.

The granting of arbitrary powers to the President's council and the election of some of its members will give higher status and powers to its chairmen and to its committees.

The President's Council will have the right not only to play the role of arbitrator in matters of conflict between the three chambers of the new legislature, but will also have the right to consider the impeachment of the Executive State President and of Cabinet Ministers.

STRUGGLER FOR COLOURED FRANCHISE INTERVIEWED

Braamfontein FRONTLINE in English Jun 82 pp 10-11

[Interview of Louis Kane-Berman by John Kane-Berman: "The Torch Commando--The Wheel Turns Full Circle"]

[Text] The present crisis over "healthy power-sharing" with the so-called "coloured" people is but a ripple compared with the turmoil which shook the country in the early 1950s when the Nats started plotting to throw them off the common voters' roll. In the thick of the fight to protect the "coloured" franchise was Louis Kane-Berman, national chairman of the War Veterans' Torch Commando. Kane-Berman recalls those days in an interview with his son, journalist John Kane-Berman:

How did the Torch originate?

A few of us formed a committee of ex-servicemen to protect United Party political meetings, which all over the country were being broken up by Nationalists. Then there was talk of government plans to remove the Cape coloured people from the common roll, and we found we had the nucleus of an organisation to protect the Constitution and the rights of the coloured people.

What did you do?

We all knew each other from the war, and we began by posting people on all the street corners in Johannesburg to hand out "route forms" of the type used in the Army, calling on the public to converge for a protest meeting on the city hall from four gathering-points north, south, west and east of the city. There was a spontaneous reaction throughout the country, especially among ex-servicemen. People came, between 30 000 and 60 000 of them, carrying 10 000 flaming torches in tin cans, which the Afrikaans press called "blikfakkels". To us they were torches of freedom.

Why were ex-servicemen particularly concerned?

We had fought for certain fundamental freedoms, which we now thought we saw being undermined in this country. Also, ex-servicemen regarded the coloured people as having made a significant contribution during the war. They fought in the Desert and in Italy, as volunteers.

Why did the government want to throw them off the common roll?

For one reason, and for one reason only. There were, I think, six marginal seats, and the coloured people would not support the Nationalists. So they removed them as a step towards entrenching themselves in power.

What was the government's attitude to you?

They were terrified of us. The units of the Active Citizen Force were largely controlled by ex-servicemen, and we had top officers, including generals, in our ranks. On one occasion when we converged on Cape Town from all over the country to arouse public attention, they took fright and put machine guns on the roof of the Houses of Parliament because they thought we were planning a coup.

Were you?

It never entered our minds. Our intention was to act democratically. None of us had been involved in politics and we were not looking for any political power or office.

Did people try to break up your meetings?

Sometimes the Nationalists tried, but they had to be careful because our meetings were well organised, although our fellows were never armed.

How did you know they were Nationalists?

Who else would break up a meeting? They once broke up a meeting in Lydenburg, so we immediately announced we'd have another meeting there the following week. People converged from all over, mainly from the Lowveld; you could not get into the town hall, nor could you get a gallon of petrol or a pint of beer in the town. It was "Nagmaal" so we were accused of desecrating that occasion, but we went back to assert that we had a right of free speech anywhere in the country.

How big was your membership?

We had about 250 000 signed-up members, each paying a minimum subscription of five shillings. Many paid much more. You've got no conception of our impact on the public of South Africa. I alone must have spoken at 150 meetings all over the country in about two years. Money just poured in. Once, in East London, at a fete, we collected more than £10 000 in cash in half an hour. I was invited to talk to some businessmen in Cape Town, and they asked how much money we needed. I said about £8 000 to £10 000. They laughed at me, and said they would give us £80 000 to £100 000. Mr Harry Oppenheimer, who was then United Party MP for Kimberley, told me we shouldn't dissipate our efforts in fund-raising. He too guaranteed us money, so we stopped our fund-raising. But in the result we were naive to have done so.

How did your alliance with the United Party come about?

There was talk that in the coming election (1953), the United Party would oppose the Labour Party, which it wanted to destroy, because it wanted its parliamentary seats for itself. But the Labour Party was being very successful in recruiting working-class Afrikaners away from the Nationalists. We pleaded with Mr Strauss, the Leader of the Opposition, and Sir de Villiers Graaff, not to destroy the Labour Party. They agreed not to oppose it, but only if we entered into a United Front with them and the Labour Party to fight the election. But we were naive to have done so. We should have assisted them, but remained independent. The UP was always looking over its shoulder at the platteland. It never wanted to fight anything on principle.

How did the Front break up?

It was over the "Swart Bills", the Public Safety Act, which gave the government the power to declare a state of emergency and imprison people without trial, and the Criminal Law Amendment Act, which provided for whipping. "Blackie" Swart was the Minister of Justice and we regarded him as a menace. We were bitterly opposed to these two bills in principle, but the United Party leaders supported them. One very well-known mining man said to me: "During the war, Smuts imprisoned Afrikaners without trial and now you complain because the government wants to throw a few kaffirs into prison."

I called a meeting of the Torch's national executive, which had about 70 members, in Cape Town. The Labour and United Party leaders addressed us. The Labour leaders were bitterly opposed to the bills, and they made a considerable impact. A couple of UP members tried to defend them, but it was clear to us they had not even studied them. We in the Torch decided unanimously there and then that if these bills went ahead, we would call a national day of protest. When we announced this to the press the next day they cheered. But I was quickly repudiated – in my view, quite wrongly, by a few of my senior executives. That was the death-knell of the Front and of the Torch. I think that some of the big businessmen involved were concerned about the impact the day of protest would have on the mines and on labour generally, because blacks would have supported it and it would have brought the country to a standstill.

Can you say anything more on the Public Safety Act, in the light of what has happened since?

It was the beginning of the "total onslaught" by the Nationalists on the fundamental freedoms in this country, the erosion of all our rights, which has persisted ever since. If there is now a "total onslaught" against this country, as they allege, they are responsible for it.

While I have always held our judiciary in high regard, I believe that when it comes to the question of "voluntary" confessions, allegedly extorted, the Bench takes the line of least resistance.

What should it do?

I believe that once an accused person at his trial denies that a confession was made voluntarily, then it should be inadmissable. I would even go further, and suggest that once it transpires that an accused has been in solitary confinement, then any statement made by him should automatically be excluded. This might conceivably put an end to such brutality.

And alleged suicides in detention?

If a person is so ill-treated that suicide becomes an option, then in my view the person responsible for the treatment which led to suicide is guilty of homicide.

Coming back to the vote issue, do you think the government now regrets what it did?

They must do. They have alienated the "coloured" people, who will now tell them: don't include us and exclude the blacks. If the "coloured" people were to accept something denied to blacks, what would someone like Chief Buthelezi think? I've always told "coloured" friends of mine that they would be mad to estrange blacks because they would never be forgiven for it. Blacks must have direct representation in all law-making institutions. Excluding them can only lead to disaster. ●

INKATHA STRATEGY OFFICIAL ANALYZES WEST'S SUPPORT OF EXILES

Braamfontein FRONTLINE in English Jun 82 p 12

[Article by Gibson Thula: "International Pressure--False Support for the Fashionable Radicals"]

[Text] GIBSON THULA, chairman of Inkatha's strategy committee, argues that the reason the West gives support to exiled movements trying to overthrow apartheid by force is not because the exile movements are perceived as making changes fastest. Rather, he says, it is because they are not achieving changes at all.

THERE was a time when black people set great store by support from Western countries. For many years after the founding of the ANC, for example, there were attempts to ask Britain to intervene diplomatically on behalf of blacks in South Africa. By the forties and particularly the fifties, however, it was realised that these were vain hopes. Today most black people realise that the Western countries, no matter how antagonistic to Apartheid particular governments may be, are not going to actively and aggressively champion the cause of blacks in South Africa.

Black people who take note of the international scene realise the following things:

1. Trade with South Africa is too important for most Western Countries to make it possible for them to do anything which could weaken the export market to South Africa or reduce the flow of raw materials and agricultural goods.

2. Most Western countries do not place a very high priority on race reforms within their own boundaries. Almost all Western countries with black minorities have maintained housing and welfare policies for blacks which have done little to rehabilitate these black minorities. Their policies more often than not have amounted to passive neglect, under the guise of not wishing to do anything that would "discriminate" between blacks and whites.

A few years ago a study in Germany, Holland and Britain showed that the attitudes of European whites towards blacks in their countries were much the same as the attitudes of English-speaking whites towards blacks in South Africa. That about sums it up. Blacks are somewhat cynical about the seriousness of Western whites when they say they oppose Apartheid.

3. Black people also realise that it is only really the pressure on Western nations, and probably on Eastern Bloc nations as well, that makes them take a firm verbal stand against Apartheid. There would probably be much less opposition to Apartheid in the Northern Countries if there was not an active and insistent Afro-Asian bloc in the United Nations.

4. Furthermore, apart from some unrealistic fringe groups among blacks, black people in South Africa realise that there is in fact very little that Western nations can do to have a quick and sweeping effect on the system in South Africa. Black people here are aware of the strength and resilience of the white-dominated system. We realise that it would take more than sanctions or boycotts from the West to change it. We realise that only very active intervention by outside countries could have a radical effect and that none of them would be prepared to or could afford to go to such lengths.

For these reasons, blacks who are reasonably well-informed do not any longer respond to overseas figures who are opposed to Apartheid with anything like the enthusiasm that was or would have been the case years ago. Even as late as the sixties, when Bobby Kennedy visited South Africa, there was a great deal of hero-worship among blacks – his tour of Soweto was very well-supported by enthusiastic black crowds. The same would not happen today.

I would sum it up by saying that all or most black groupings in South Africa today realise that black people themselves have to secure their own emancipation and liberation.

This does not mean to say that the organisation I represent, Inkatha, is unconcerned about the attitudes in the West. There is one thing in particular which concerns Inkatha a great deal. This is in fact a problem which the West's own inactivity in fighting Apartheid brings about.

As I see it, the intention of most Western countries is to avoid any costly action or intervention in regard to South Africa. This gives them a problem of credibility among the Afro-Asian bloc. They try to counter this in two ways. Firstly by verbal attacks on Apartheid which mean very little. Secondly, some countries also try to "correct" their image by making grants or appearing to be sympathetic to radical black groups like SWAPO or the external mission of the ANC. They give more moral support to some black liberation groups than others. It is fairly typical for them to overlook the importance of Inkatha for example, while over-emphasising the role of the ANC external mission.

This amounts to a kind of interference in South African black politics which is quite serious in its consequences.

It is particularly true of some church groups and other voluntary organisations opposed to Apartheid. The very sense of helplessness which their governments' ineffectiveness causes in them, makes them "over-react" as it were by being as fashionably radical as they can with regard to South Africa. Fashionable radicalism usually means under-rating the internal black leadership in South Africa and heaping accolades on the militaristic movements, quite irrespective of how successful these movements are likely to be in the short to medium term.

Inkatha realises that sanctions and boycotts are impractical. It also realises that a peaceful strategy is important to explore to the full before considering violence. If the Western countries feel unable to make any dramatic intervention in South Africa, the least they can do is admit this and attempt to be as helpful as possible to movements devoted to exploring peaceful change for as long as possible, like Inkatha.

That would show that they mean business. Inauthentic support for movements which are not creating change suggests that the Western countries do not want to see change take place●

COMMISSION REPRESENTATIVE DEFENDS BUTHELEZI REPORT

Braamfontein FRONTLINE in English Jun 82 pp 18, 19

[Article by Bobby Godsell: "Buthelezi Commission--Perhaps It Marks the End of the Beginning"]

[Text] The Buthelezi Report came, caused the usual brief and confusing flurry in the press, and then sank without trace from the headlines – dismissed by the average, bemused, South African as just another carbuncle in the never-ending stream of big words about apartheid which mean not much. BOBBY GODSELL, who was an alternate member of the Commission, sets the record straight.

THE publication of the Buthelezi Report and Andries Treurnicht's split from the National Party have been the major political events of 1982 to date. Both are centred around this enigmatic phrase "power sharing". Both present the wide-awake, earnest South African with the dilemma of trying to understand what these events mean, and whether they represent real change or yet another seven-day-wonder.

On the surface, the Buthelezi Commission Report can be dismissed as nothing more than liberal utopianism revisited ; a sort of "Sprocas 2". Afterall, the Commission was well populated with well-known liberal figures. More important, perhaps, were those who were not present: the Nats and the ANC both failed to take up invitations.

The Commission Reports are scholarly (as becomes a good liberal endeavour), informative, and, the cynics will proclaim, well placed to join the now vast archives of unread documentation about what needs to be done in this troublesome society.

I believe that such a response would be seriously, even dangerously, off the mark. The Commission is significant for a host of reasons, at least some of which are set out below.

1. A black initiative

The Commission was initiated by one of the black actors on South Africa's political stage. This does confer a degree of uniqueness, even in comparison with events such as the Kliptown People's Convention which gave birth to the Freedom Charter. More importantly, it bears witness to a black desire to find a way forward. For so long now the whites have wanted nothing more than to defend the status quo, whilst blacks have done little but bewail it.

A black attempt to map out a road forward is in itself an important change of style in the black "politics of protest" that has filled particularly the liberal press for decades now.

2. A broad base

Even sans the Nats, the NRP (who sat but did not sign) and the ANC, the Commissioners whose names endorse the report represent a reasonably impressive alliance of interest groups – Inkatha, Tongaat, Anglo American, the Federated Chamber of Industries, Assocom, the Natal Teacher's Society, amongst others. In essence, this extends the already significant S.A. Black Alliance by linking it with important interest groups inside the white community. And these interest groups go well beyond the natural Prog hunting ground.

At its crudest, the Commission Report represents a broad based consensus between the largest internal black political movement, the official white opposition and the other (unofficial) centre of white power outside government . the business community. Such an alliance is not insignificant.

3. A Common Response

The purpose of the Commission put simply was to examine how best the Natal/KwaZulu region might be governed. The emphatic response of the report was that in every area and aspect it would be best governed as one co-ordinated region rather than separate, ethnically defined territories.

Given the breadth of the alliance of interests the Commission represented, this itself has significance. However, the Commission went beyond merely denoting "common government" as a desirable ideal. It suggested some of the immediate and practical steps which could be taken towards this ideal's achievement.

Crucially, in defining these steps the Commission confronted the central political realities of South Africa in the eighties. These in essence are:

- Blacks comprise by far the largest part of South Africa's population, and no statistical, flag-raising-in-soccer-stadium sleight of hand can change that .
- Whites have an entrenched power position, which if challenged through armed insurrection alone will take decades and lives by the hundreds of thousands, if not million, to erode. No UN resolution, or outspan-orange-boycott-act-of-solidarity is going to change that.

In the light of these inconvenient yet undeniable realities the Commission recommended a process to begin with which can clumsily be described as conjoint government, or more simply taking some decisions together. It foresaw a transition period in which a joint executive of the Natal Provincial Executive and the KwaZulu Legislative Assembly could be set up, and perhaps joint sitting of these legislatures could be held.

These joint bodies could make decisions that had the double validity of bodies popularly elected by Natal's white and black populations (the Asians and coloureds would have to have co-opted representation at first – but then who can expect perfection in our world?)

The Commission of course spells out steps beyond this joing decision making process. It maps out moves towards common political, economic, educational health and social services agencies, all based on consociational principles – which means decisions by consensus rather than winner-take-all.

For me, however, the Commission's significance does not lie in what it says about steps two, three and four: but rather in its bold, hopeful suggestions for step one .

> Imagine: a joint Natal/KwaZulu executive, and a series of legislative sessions alternating between Ulundi and Pietermaritzburg, with decisions on health, education, roads etc. responding to the needs of both the Msinga peasantry and the Berea bourgeoisie.

Of course, it will not "solve everything". In some ways it would be as Churchill once said not the end (of the South African dilemma), nor even the beginning of the end, but perhaps the end of the beginning.

It would represent a merging of the political (as well as the everyday life) processes which currently so fundamentally divide our country. If it worked even reasonably well it would build confidence that white and black interests could be reconciled, given a degree of real compromise on both sides.

Finally, it would give symbolic form to the alternative to Apartheid. Apartheid has only ever made sense in its extremities: separate parliaments mean and must mean separate armies, factories, schools, swimming pools. In converse, if common counsels of power can work they can make a shared society not too ghastly to contemplate.

Where to from here?

Of course, all the above would be more convincing if the Report had been universally welcomed. Isn't it a dead document in the face of Nat and NRP rejection?

Not necessarily. Some comfort can be drawn from the fact that Nat reaction came from Florwood and not Botha. And the Nat press received the report in the most positive terms.

As for the NRP, its actions increasingly resemble a (not a so New) Republican Party up north.

Neither negative can dismiss the fact that leaders of a significant grouping of black and white South Africans are agreed on a framework for sharing some real power in a way that might prove to be more than a sanguine liberal daydream.

PROBLEMS OF WHITE, COLORED MIGRATION, BLACK URBANIZATION

The Trek Northwards

Johannesburg BEELD in Afrikaans 6 May 82 p 18

[Editorial: "The Coloreds Migrate Northwards"]

[Text] The coloreds are following the northward migration of the whites. In this process the blacks are increasingly replacing the coloreds who have left. This is what Dr Philip Smit, the deputy chairman of the Council for Humanities Research, said in Pretoria yesterday.

He was addressing the sectional mine and industry congress of the Afrikaans Business Institute on the necessity of future planning for the population distribution in South Africa.

Two clear migrations are in progress in the country: one to the north and one toward the cities. Ever since the Great Trek the whites' shift northwards has never yet changed to any meaningful degree. In 1936, 39 percent of the whites were still living in the Cape Province. By 1980 this was only 28 percent.

In the 10 years the Free State and the Cape Province kept on lagging behind more so than the rest of the country, as far as white population, was concerned. Of the 196 magistrate districts whose population shrank, 89 were in the Cape Province and 38 in the Free State.

It was mostly in the Central Karoo, Southern Free State, North and Northwest Transvaal where depopulation occurred. In the meantime most of the growth was in Kempton Park, Bellville, Alberton, Pinetown, Randburg, Boksburg, Pretoria, Newcastle, Hoeveldrif and Roodepoort.

The coloreds are following the whites northwards. Between 1970 and 1980 the colored population of 40 Cape Province towns dropped. The Southwest Cape (especially Wynburg, Kuilsrivier and Bellville) are still experiencing the biggest colored population growth, however, 68 districts of Transvaal, 38 in the Free State and 36 in Natal have become more colored in these 10 years.

As the coloreds move, their place is being taken by blacks as farm workers as well as workers in other sections closer to Capetown.

Asians are moving from east to north and Dr Smit said that the increase in Asian population in the East Rand, East Transvaal and the mining region of the Cape Province is noticeable.

The Error Committed by Verwoerd

Johannesburg BEELD in Afrikaans 6 May 82 p 22

[Article by Piet Muller: "As Black Trade Unions Flex Their Muscles"]

[Text] Traditionally the Afrikaner puts up a lot with bread and butter politics and therefore there have always been too many points of arguments and ideals in our society to get excited over. However, if we look at the forces which are now building up, it appears as though economic policy is going to be the most important single instrument with which governments are going to grind out the country's future in the several decades to follow.

The force which can split asunder our society, if it is not handled properly, consists of the 20 million blacks who are going to move from the black rural regions into the white cities before the end of the century. Passes, police vans, and influx controls will not be able to keep these people from our backdoors.

For Good

Two decades ago there could still have been a chance to keep these people in the rural areas, but the struggle against black urbanization was lost for good when Dr Verwoerd made the decision of not allowing white investment capital in the homelands. As a result of this the attractive forces of the black rural areas were weakened while the suction power of the white industrial regions of the country increased.

The situation has already been reached where for many untrained workers it is better to be unemployed for a couple of months in the cities, to work for a couple of months and to spend another couple of months in jail as an "illegal immigrant" rather than to try to make a living in one of the homelands.

Hand in hand with black urbanization was also the rise of black trade unions and black trade unions are going to play an increasingly political role and the role of black trade unions is not going to be contained by stronghanded police actions either. To the contrary it is already clear that such actions will only make the trade unions more militant.

Strangely enough today it is mostly young English speakers who are leading the black trade movement. Often these are people with a burning social awareness and great frustration over the domination of white politics by the Afrikaners and thus they find in black politics a way to give expression to their ideal. Often they regard white policy as not being "to the point" with respect to the future of South Africa. In many cases these young charismatics have a strong impulse for martyrdom and, as the death of Neill Agget has shown, any action against them can lead to serious industrial unrest.

Links

Sometime ago a well-known industrialist predicted that black trade unions will increasingly challenge the government with respect to labor legislation which is unacceptable to them. They will also seek increasing links with overseas trade unions and this can lead to more foreign pressure upon South Africa.

The problems created by black urbanization and black trade unions are not going to be resolved through rhetoric and hot-winded speeches. An appropriate strategy for black urbanization must be worked out otherwise this will pose a serious threat to white political existence. Today the Pretoria-Witwatersrand-Valdriehoek area is the heartland of the Afrikaner. If this is threatened the threat will not be only to the Afrikaner's political existence, but to his physical existence as well.

The government's plan for an accelerated economic decentralization in South Africa is already a strong foundation for such a survival strategy.

However, before the end of the decade we will also have to find an answer for the problem of political rights for the urban blacks, otherwise we will again be creating an explosive situation which can endanger our own future.

As the black trade unions begin flexing their muscles there is a real danger that certain white trade unions, such as the Mine Workers Union and the Iron and Steel Workers Union, will come up with a counter reaction which eventually could lead to serious industrial unrest. To avoid clashes and frictions between blacks and whites these people must be persuaded that their economic future will not be threatened by black urbanization.

Language

The enormous population shift now going on in South Africa will necessarily also have an effect on the country's language pattern. White depopulation and black growth have already made Afrikaans a "second language" in a region such as the Free State. In traditional Afrikaans areas, Afrikaans is going to be drowned out by black languages speakers who will have chosen English as the second language next to their own. Under so much pressure the language protection, which is built into the constitution, will perhaps be hopelessly insufficient for ensuring the future of Afrikaans. We must look to new solutions, such as district government with which to protect group rights, but this too must be backed up by economic realities.

How on Earth can a party, such as the Conservative Party, which was established with so much emotion at the Skilpad Hall [Turtle Hall], still be running from platform to platform without having anything resembling an economic policy?

COLUMNIST DISCUSSES AFRIKANERS GUILTS OF NEGLIGENCE

Johannesburg RAPPORT in Afrikaans 2 May 82 p 20

[Article by Willem de Klerk: "We Do not Have To Lie Low for this Task"]

[Text] In a sort of indirect way this week the old invective, namely: White guilt for our country's situation, was once more flung before the whites and specifically the Afrikaner.

Dr Allan Boesak of the Dutch Reformed Church is going about accusing us of being heretics amongst Christianity, because of our guilt as racists.

Minister Chris Heunis has accused the Federal Progressive Party of working against reform by continuously putting the whites on the dock.

Last week the Cape Province's Reconstituted Nationalist Party was hammering on the ailing feeling of guilt which dwells behind reforming actions.

Question: What place has guilt assumed in our politics?

Whenever we talk about this there is always a triple concept: Guilt, victim and remission.

First of all something about the guilt.

In my honest opinion the whites (Afrikaners) are not at fault with respect to the coloreds in South Africa in the sense of purposeful meanness. From colonial times onward and thereafter, in most instances, the whites settled matters with the coloreds through negotiations and bargaining. People to people relations were always good. For long generations whites have provided constructive services for the sake of the interests of coloreds and blacks.

The policy of separate development, in its basic philosophy, is an effort to establish freedom, justice, self expression and self preservation and to reject domination.

The whites have also forgiven many things, as there have been bad deeds committed against them. Revenge, as distinguishable from retaliation, has never played a role.

And yet, there exists a communal guilt which must accept. Of course there is also a heap of guilt on the shoulders of coloreds, but I do not want to say anything on that today and moreover I have often written about that already.

I want to mention four charges of guilt for the whites.

The guilt of missed opportunities: The development of the homelands could have been enthusiastically grasped by the blacks if we had moved mountains in the rather comfortable time we had for bringing about gigantic results. The border industries, decentralization and spatial arrangements could have already been an established pattern if we had given this greater thought. The estrangement between us and the coloreds could have been prevented if we had drawn them closer to us when they were still close to us.

This list of missed opportunities, postponed occasions, shortsightedness and easy living can be stretched out much longer.

The guilt of greed: Too often we have wanted to skim off the cream for ourselves and then establish further skimming, but the standard for this was a minimum limit for the coloreds.

The guilt of one-sidedness: Separateness grew like a wild shoot amongst us and thus togetherness was pushed aside to a precarious existence of near death. Everything was sectioned off in compartments and thus, through one-sidedness, we created a climate of rejection.

The guilt of color isolation: For us this became the highest norm and through this we were ensnared into a system of discrimination and disruptive separation with a sort of withdrawal from contact, talking, deliberations and mutual influence.

We should not try to cover up these four guilts; however, we need not put ourselves in sackcloth and ashes over that.

And now this brings us to the sacrifice.

What must we sacrifice in order to atone for our guilt? No, not our identity; not giving up our political voice, not by doing penance in a sick-looking manner with hat in hand; not by drawing a line across our policy; not by throwing color lines overboard....all these things, and even more, are part of the reality and of our right which we demand unashamedly.

The sacrifices which are really being asked are that we must give up the mentality of exclusive right and wrong barricade of injustice, arrogance and rejection in which we are trying to hide.

We must go out with reconciliation, we must wipe out some of our traces and we must make a cordial and new beginning, building upon what has been positive in the past.

This remission will come if we turn those four burdens of guilt into four initiatives.

The initiative to make use of our chances, substitute our greed with co-partnership, get over our one-sidedness and replace it with equilibrium and break through our color isolation with orderly association.

This is precisely what the reform policy is all about. There are still enough doors open for a national compromise in which whites will be able to exercise their rights; there is still a possibility of establishing a spatial arrangement through decentralization. Constitutionally speaking the policy of self-determination/joint agreement can still succeed between whites, coloreds and Indians and with the blacks in a confederation. There is still sufficient understanding that separateness is accepted, provided togetherness is given its full right. Differentiation is still accepted as a whole if discrimination disappears.

History will forgive the Afrikaner's guilt of negligence if he can prove--with disposition and deeds--that he understands the demands of his time and that he will not crawl away afraid of the task which is now resting upon his shoulders.

If we do not do this nobody will dare look this generation in the eye. Then our own guilt will be devouring us.

COMMENTARY ON NEW NIS LOW PROFILE, ENCOUNTER WITH THE KGB

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 18 May 82 p 11

[Text] Johannesburg--As a senior spokesman put it, the capacity of the National Intelligence Service (NIS) "to wrestle with the KGB and come out best" is being estimated highly in the world's intelligence communities.

It takes an intelligence service with a smooth way of operating, by all its offshoots, for cutting through a knotty problem such as the exchange of Maj Alexei Kolzov for Detective Johan van der Mesch and eight Western spies and go through all the numerous stumbling blocks encountered in international negotiations.

Throughout the nearly 18 months gone by South Africa's "gray men" went through difficult negotiations with the Russians through (and with) mediators each of whom also demanded their pound of flesh. NIS attained a splendid success, but just like an iceberg, only the top of this is visible.

We refer to them as "gray men," but this has no reference to the TV advertised small, pale and gray little men of the world who are snatched away in a mail box by a secretive hand in a harem full of womanly seductions.

The days of James Bond are numbered. The men of the intelligence community are people who remain gray and anonymous.

Typically, with respect to the entire triumph of last week, practically nothing was heard about it or mentioned by the director general of the South African National Intelligence Service, Dr Niel Barnard. He prefers it that way. When he officially accepted the appointment on 2 June 1980 (after 6 months of preparations) he held a press conference and that was all! Ever since then NIS has been following the motto: "We say nothing and admit nothing."

There has already been a lot of pressure and temptations. People get into difficulties and then they claim to be members of NIS.

As a matter of policy the service remains silent about that. No espionage service worth its salt admits to the identity of its members and this is the view of Dr Barnard, because then with what kind of confidence would its members be inspired with?

It is a frustration that the kind of work being done never brings in any public recognition. "Our people have no ranks or uniforms;" this is what one of the members said, but then added that sometimes the media arbitrarily attaches ranks to certain of its members with the aim of providing more color to reports about the NIS. Behind the scene admissions do take place, however. A malicious report to the effect that the prime minister is considering getting rid of NIS sometimes coincides with a private medal pinning ceremony in which the successes of NIS are being rewarded.

Dr Barnard was recruited by Mr P. W. Botha from an academic position at the Free State University in order to fill one of the key positions in the service of the government when the former was 30 years old. As of June 1980 he brought in a great deal of evident stability within the NIS.

The skepticism, which was heard in many circles concerning the appointment of an inexperienced man from an academic position into the world of secret codes and ear whisperings, subsided.

Dr Barnard inherited a position vacated by the extrovert Genl Hendrik van den Bergh. In the interim it was the capable Mr Alec van Wyk who took over the direction of the office. During the last years of Van den Bergh's leadership that position was fraught with difficulties through involvements in things which, according to some statements, exploded in the face of the Bureau of State Security, as the organization was previously known.

For example, Intelligence Chief Genl Van den Bergh resigned in obscure circumstances, but his publicity conscious style and toughness made a lot of friends for him inside and outside of the Bureau and certainly a lot of enemies as well.

First it was up to Mr Van Wyk and then Dr Barnard to create a new image. This was an image of muteness outside of the office and not even the director general ever says anything. But what goes on inside? This remains secret as far as the general public is concerned. It's no use knocking on the doors of the NIS for some "juicy tidbits." Details about how people work in it are scant--NIS was established for gathering, evaluating and interpreting intelligence in accordance with scientific and academic approaches.

It is clear that as a "politicologist" Dr Barnard is doing well in the more peaceful atmosphere being extended by NIS. Naturally the organization still has a quota of eccentric veterans and this is a reflection of the hard realities with which they must cope. This eccentricity, so it would appear, has its place under Dr Barnard's leadership...but is not dominant.

In view of the fact that one usually looks to the leader of a team to find out how the team is handling its task, it may be of help to take note of a couple of Dr Barnard's few statements. This is what he said in May 1980 in ACTA ACADEMICA, the technical periodical of the Free State University:

"By taking the lead in a realistic manner South Africa can set the pace and choose the ground in which its competitive power is the strongest."

"For South Africans, as children of the Reformation, a basis of principles of the future does not mean rigid dogmatism."

In his first and thus far only press conference he held on 2 June 1980 Dr Barnard said that South Africa's problems cannot be resolved by violence, but rather "through positive and developing political actions. It will be necessary to assume certain political viewpoints, and definite political developments must take place."

He said that the task of the intelligence service is to provide the decision makers with correctly evaluated information on a timely basis so that this will contribute to the security of the state. "In the future the service will go on providing information and this will not be information which the decision makers like to hear, but information which, in the opinion of the service is the truth."

A news item which the decision makers were actually glad to hear was the one about the capture of the Russian, Kolzov. A big KGB man was trapped here.

While Dr Barnard maintains a low profile, the former deputy minister of National Security, Mr Kobie Coetsee (the Service should be the responsibility of the prime minister), in a statement he made in 1980, said that "the KGB must be combatted with its own formula. The KGB's techniques of misguidance, misinformation and propaganda are based on very intimate studies on the habits of the people of southern Africa. The KGB uses this knowledge very effectively in its actions. South Africa must also study these things if the KGB's actions are to be countered."

What this means: In the case of Kolzov, the National Intelligence Service had to wrestle with the KGB. In this instance, as indicated by the credit balance after the exchange, the result was favorable. But the wrestling goes on and only now and then will the public get to know indirectly what our "gray men" are able to accomplish.

MORE DETAILS, COMMENTS ON GOVERNMENT REFORM PROVIDED

A Glimpse of the Future Government

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 18 May 82 p 12

[Text] Indications of how the proposed non-parliamentary executive authority and legislative authority, which will include the coloreds and Indians, will work, if the recommendations of the Presidential Council are accepted, were given yesterday in the council by Dr Denis Worrall.

As the chairman of the Constitutional Committee Dr Worrall introduced the discussion of his committee's first report regarding reformation at a central government level.

He said that if the president having executive power is elected directly by the voters then the office itself will become politicized, whereas the aim is to have the president stand above sectional interests. It is therefore proposed that he be elected directly by white, colored and Indian members of the legislative authority.

Members of the legislative authority will know each other, agreements can be concluded and arrangements made for the representation of the three groups in the cabinet.

Shift in Emphasis

The prime minister and members of the Cabinet will continue to be in close touch with the legislative authority. Conventions such as motions of no-confidence and censure will be written into the constitution so that there will be set customs for showing no confidence in the prime minister or members of the cabinet.

The atmosphere of the new constitutional authority will be very different than now. The emphasis will be shifting from the present interaction between the white majority and the white minority and from the custom of "winner take all." In the proposed legislative body the community oriented political parties will be playing the dominant role with interaction between the majority parties of the various communities.

Reform

"The government will have to work a lot harder to obtain support for its policy and the automatic majority will no longer be valid. This is going to be a more complicated and difficult system."

In the legislative authority there will probably be an expanded committee system much like the U. S. Congress has. For the purpose of accommodation policies, which the committee envisages, the role of the legislative authority will be an extremely important one and there is no talk about its influence declining.

Dr Worrall said that there are three reasons why the committee is starting out with the executive authority in reforming the central government level:

First of all the Constitutional Committee and the Committee for Economic Affairs in dealing with local and district administrations has recommended that the coloreds be represented in certain government departments;

Secondly, it was one of the Constitutional Committee's point of departure that coloreds and Indians must also have a say at the central government level.

Moreover one of the characteristics of consociation is the leaders-coalition (grand coalition) which must be established. After groups are given recognition and identified in this manner the following step is to involve their leaders in the government process.

Dynamic

The problem of creating an effective executive authority and keeping its powers under control can be best resolved through a separation of the legislative and executive functions. In France's Fifth Republic and in Germany's Bonn Constitution the principle of separation has been introduced successfully.

The Constitutional Committee is of the opinion that South Africa needs a strong executive authority because the period of reform is now entering in which a dynamic society will go on looking for answers. In addition the executive authority must be free of sectional ties and must be able to move freely across communal frontiers.

Dr Worrall said that he wants to warn against the inclination, which might arise, of carrying through the principle of segmental (group) autonomy, now being advocated for the legislative authority, into the executive authority as was the case with the composition of the Council of Cabinets in the 1977 plan. That would be a mistake. Three prime ministers and various cabinets will be unsuitable.

Interests

The principle of segmental autonomy must be determined administratively and politically rather than institutionally in the executive authority. The committee has not recommended a fixed ratio for the representation of the three groups in the cabinet, although, as time goes on, this may become desirable.

Dr Worrall said that a statement of intention which the committee advocates must give the coloreds an idea of the South Africa which the government wants to see, while the statement should also contain assurances to the whites that their interests would not be neglected. The committee listened to testimony on the desirability of a Charter of Rights in a reform situation, but it thinks it is premature to recommend it at this time.

Dr Worrall said that although he did not specifically refer to the courts, the committee is very much aware of the value of an independent and separate court of justice. In the constitutional order being advocated by the committee, differences will probably arise and it is then that the courts will have to play their roles.

Hopes Stimulated; Vocabulary Strange

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 18 May 82 p 12

[Article by Jacques van Wyk: "Impressions From the Presidential Council"]

[Text] Words like "consociational democracy," "simple majoritanism" and "segmental autonomy" are not everybody's kind of food, but yesterday these were important items on the Presidential Council's menu.

The subject of discussion was the first report of the Constitutional Committee on reform at a central government level. Dr Denis Worrall, the chairman of the committee got the ball rolling and pretty soon made it clear that what is being followed is a strong academic and technical approach.

Mr Willem Dempsey wondered how the average person is going to understand such concepts. It is going to take a lot of patience to make them clear.

Prof Anthony de Crespigny, until recently deacon of the Department of Political Science of Capetown University, even admitted that expressions such as consociation democracy are confounding the public. He simply calls it "watchamacallit democracy." On top of it there are several presentations of this concept. The Constitutional Committee has developed its own.

The committee recommends a limited consociation democracy because this will increase the democratization process in South Africa.

Mr. A. M. van Schoor was full of praise for Dr Worrall. When the chairmanship of the Constitutional Committee was entrusted to Dr Worrall there were some eyebrows raised and people wondered whether such a newcomer in politics would be up to the task.

Some 15 years ago he had attacked Dr Worrall in an article about a sounding in Soweto. It was found that the article contained defamatory statements and his company had to pay up. Today he looks at Dr Worrall under an entirely different light. He sees him as one of the foremost political scientists in the whole world.

Interrupting him Mr Alwyn Schlebusch, the chairman of the Presidential Council, asked him: "Why don't you ask for your money back now?"

Mr Van Schoor also made reference to the relations existing among the members. When Mr Les du Preez (the last chairman of the Representative Colored Council) mentions uncle A. M. to him he regards this as an honor. But he will be 73 this Sunday and then he will simply have to call him grandpa!

Mr S. Abram-Mayet warned that if South Africa does not reform then revolution and instability will be the country's fate. The far right people, who want to put everything in vertical watertight structures summed it all up as follows: I will decide on my well being; you decide on yours and I will decide on both of ours.

Sonny Leon, the former leader of the Labor Party said that for the first time we are standing on the threshhold of a breakthrough provided the government does not turn to the far rightwing, or the far leftwing which must first hear from Moscow as to what they must do.

It is not just the constitution which must be reformed, but also the views of certain people. If we do not succeed in this we will be driven into the sea by people who are sitting and waiting to do just this, according to Leon.

Dirk Kotze, professor of history at Stellenbosch University, did not surprise anyone when in his maiden speech delved into history a bit by saying that now that some people complain about an executive state president being a strange phenomenon let people note that the Orange Free State and the South African Republic (Transvaal) both had executive state presidents. In both cases this worked well when a competent person who enjoyed confidence was the state president.

In the Orange Free State the state president was subject to certain controlling measures. The system worked so well that people abroad talked about "the model republic."

How did he find the Presidential Council as a newcomer? His answer was the Griqua's remark on a circumstance of this nature: "Sir, this is too good a place to miss."

[Text] It is wrong to say that in the consideration of the Constitutional Committee's recommendations the blacks are being left out. This is what Dr Denis Worrall said yesterday during the discussion of the committee's first report in the Presidential Council.

Dr Worrall pointed out that in its report the committee says that a consociation democracy which includes whites, coloreds, Indians and urban blacks cannot be rejected altogether. However he did express some serious doubts about the viability of such a system. If the committee thought that this framework can function, then, according to Dr Worrall, it should have had the integrity to recommend this. (The committee proposed a consociation democracy for whites, coloreds, Indians and partition for the blacks).

Concept

Not anybody who criticizes the committee because the blacks, so to speak, are excluded, is willing to say that there must be an identical solution for all four groups. Logically it may be asked why the order of things being proposed for whites, coloreds and Indians must be rejected because, so to speak, the blacks are being excluded?

In its report the committee says that it cannot form a concept of a constitutional framework for whites, coloreds and Indians without also taking the blacks into consideration. However the committee is convinced that a unitary state or a consociation which also includes the blacks will not lead to a democratic order.

Dr Worrall said that the committees report lays down the basis for considering the situation of the blacks living outside the national states. Nothing in the report hinders progress for them.

Opponents Warned of Dictatorship

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 18 May 82 p 12

[Text] Those who are against political power sharing in South Africa are groups who want to establish a one party dictatorship in this country. This is what Prof Herman Strauss said yesterday in the Presidential Council where the first report of the Constitutional Committee on reforms at a central government level were discussed.

Professor Strauss said that the criticism to the effect that the recommendations will put South Africa on the road to a dictatorial system is shocking and it points to a lack of knowledge of the characteristics of modern dictatorship.

One of the characteristics is that it is a one party system. Moreover, modern dictatorship is a total one in which there are no real freedoms. In this report there is no semblance to such a system and it is not to be found even in reading between the lines.

Hindered

The debate about powersharing which is going on before the Presidential Council is a futile one. Political powersharing has existed "for years" in South Africa.

Those who are against political powersharing in South Africa are groups who want to establish a one party dictatorship so as to hinder people from discussing politics and from exercising the right to protest.

Mr S. Abram-Mayet also referred to the office of executive president and said that although criticism may be expressed one must keep in mind the special circumstances in South Africa. The task is not going to be an easy one.

Criticism

The reform initiative must go on, but the speed must be slow while we will be working with new inspirations and earnestness. Reform makes the government more sensitive to the requirements of the people, it raises the legitimacy of the system and government and it brings to the foreground new realistic directions in policymaking.

He voiced criticism of those people who do not want reform and display an obstinate attitude.

"Unless we are willing and able to adapt and live together as brothers, we will perish together like fools. Our salvation lies in reform." This is what Mr Abram-Mayet said.

Mr A. M. van Schoor called the reports on constitutional reforms one of the great moments in South African History. "Now the moment of choice is before us: What are we going to do with regard to the 4 million people who have been forgotten or neglected in all the processes?"

He then turned to Mr Fanie Herman: "We now have a choice and the choice has fallen upon us. The English speakers and the coloreds can hold symposia, but it is not in their power to bring about peaceful change."

Four Objections to the Plan

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 18 May 82 p 12

[Text] Yesterday Dirk Kotze, the new member of the Constitutional Committee of the Presidential Council said that it is up to each group to want to and actually to assert itself in the new order being proposed in the first report of the Constitutional Committee on reform at a central government level.

There are several fears among the whites and the coloreds, but the Constitutional Committee has taken this into consideration and has chosen a government system of consociation democracy with groups autonomy as its basic element.

Essentially there are four misgivings about the proposals. First of all it is being asserted that the recommendation to the effect that "the direction of the official national policy on black people must be continued," means that the government has imposed partition upon the Presidential Council.

"This is not a reflection of the truth--as it appears from the first report."

Dictatorship

Secondly, it is being asserted that the continuation of the policy of partition will accentuate polarization between white and black. "This is being answered by the Constitutional Committee's reasoning that a policy and the practice of reasonable negotiations over partition is in its opinion the only workable possibility in South Africa. The burden of proof that this is unacceptable and impracticable rests upon the objectors."

Thirdly, it is being asserted that the creation of an executive state president will be putting South Africa on the road to a dictatorship. Professor Kotze said that this objection is coming from conservatives and liberals.

He pointed out the history of the Free State and Transvaal and said: "The system of an executive president, who is subject to effective constitutional controls, is in agreement with the 19th century Republican Afrikaners' best government traditions."

Finally the assertion was made that the recommendations will end up in stark integration and inevitably to the ploughing under of the whites. But there are enough safety valves in the model of consociation democracy and autonomy with respect to the interests of each group for maintaining the identity and self determination of everybody, according to Mr Kotze.

Comparison With the 1977 Proposals

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 18 May 82 p 12

[Text] Speaking in the Presidential Council yesterday its chairman, Mr Denis Worrall, said that although the recommendations of the Constitutional Committee on reform at a central government level go far, normatively speaking, in institutional terms they are not drastic.

In the discussions on the committee's first report Dr Worrall said that the principle of a president's having executive powers was accepted by the white voters and by the Nationalist Party congress in 1977.

With respect to the executive authority the 1977 proposals went actually further than the present proposals, because the powers which the Council of Cabinets would have had, in accordance with the 1977 proposals, would have been enormous. The former proposals would have certainly resulted in a very strong executive authority.

In that Council of Cabinets colored and Indian representatives would have benn as equal in numbers as those of the whites. The Constitutional Committee now says that the coloreds and Indians must be given representation in the Cabinet, but does not specify the numbers. However, he believes that in the long run it might be desirable for the coloreds and Indians to have roughly proportional representation in the Cabinet.

Moreover, the Constitutional Committee's recommendations on the Presidential Council are not drastic. The constitution already has provisions for the referral of legislation to the council for comments, while only a slight revision will be necessary to make it possible for the committee, consisting of members of the council and of Parliament, to consider matters of legislation.

CONSTITUTION-BACKSTABBING OF BLACKS UNTRUE, SAY COLOREDS

Johannesburg RAPPORT in Afrikaans 2 May 82 p 20

[Article by Gus Adams: "Who Are Those Blacks Accusing Us Then?"]

[Text] If there was ever a story which I am tired of hearing it is the one that the coloreds will stick a knife on the backs of the blacks if we accept a place in a possible new order of things which is not also offered to the blacks. With the approaching constitutional revelations of 12 May it is necessary that we look again at this sort of accusation.

Two views must first be noted. One of these has to do with the position taken by this column and the other with colored-black relations in general.

This column has the greatest respect for the blacks' just political objectives. I grant them the things I want for myself. It has always been so and so it shall remain.

The second view is more important. In the entire history of South Africa there has never been a case worthy of mention in which the coloreds have taken aggressive actions for taking over the rights, land, money or powers of any other group and this includes the blacks. We have always been on the side of law and order, whether authority rested in the hands of the Hollanders or in the hands of the British (as in the case of the Boer War). Perhaps we were too weak to do otherwise. But then this was a weakness to be thankful for. Even today we do not look upon the colored person as a potential grabber of this person's land or that person's rights. If there ever was a population group which practices the motto of "live and let live" then it must be us.

Why then would we now rejoice over a situation outside of our control in which an offer is being made to us and not also to the blacks? Are not our bona fides towards the blacks unimpeachable? I say they are.

This does not mean that there have never been cases in which there could have been more collaboration; however, that is now history. Abdurahman did not really want any blacks in his APO [African Peoples Organization], but then Clements Kadalie was not too happy about having the coloreds in his ICU [Industrial and Commercial Union of Africa] (unless this was on his terms). Trade unions in which the coloreds had the upper hand went out of their way to help black trade unions to establish themselves from the ground up, even though the hand of friendship was not always welcome. The fact is that the friendship is there, but we must certainly not act from a position of personal advantages, because those are things to be found everywhere.

However, who is it that comes around with backstabbing stories? Perhaps I missed something, but I cannot remember a black leader of any worth making such an accusation.

Help me now, dear reader, but I have no recollection of this having come from Gatsha Buthelezi, Hudson Ntsanwisi or Cedric Phatudi and neither from the leaders of the new black republics or from opposition leaders within their homelands or states. Oh yes, some people will say that these persons are "irrelevant," but now I will tell you something else.

I am also not aware that this came from the ANC or from similar influences among the blacks...you tell me if I am wrong. There is something else: If today I were a member of the ANC I would not be selling such stories. To be sure, if it is true that the ANC is controlled by the Communist Party, then it would be their policy to use the system to get a foot inside the door.

Communists who have been mentioned as leaders within the ANC, by name or by insinuation, are exactly people who believe in infiltration instead of boycotts. When they were still in South Africa their big struggle was against people, such as found in the Non-European Unity Movement, who wanted to do nothing else but boycott, while they used elections and platforms in all councils and up to Parliament.

Let me ask again: Where did the backstabbing stories come from? My theory is that they came from those old chaps to whom I previously referred to as parlor-room philosophers, the do-nothings and charlatans. Their attitude has always been: criticize and slander other peoples' character, do nothing to shake up your own comfortable position, sit pretty and pass the whiskey, chaps! If there ever was irrelevance then it has settled there.

PRESS, POLICE DIFFER OVER SECRET TRIALS

Police Official 'Misquoted'

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 12 May 82 p 7

[Text] The South African Police has decided to present charges against the SAPA news agency before the Press Board after assertions, apparently made by the news agency, to the effect that Lt Gen P. J. Coetzee (South Africa's security chief) is in favor of secret or closed trials.

According to a press statement issued by the policy yesterday, the asserted source of this information is the SAPA news agency and it has been repeatedly requested to set this matter straight.

But apparently the news agency has refused to make any corrections and thus the decision was made to bring the case before the Press Board.

According to the statement further measures are also being considered.

No Secret Trials

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 12 May 82 p 12

[Text] Nobody is being detained in South Africa on account of political views and he denies categorically that the thought is being considered of holding secret trials for people accused under security legislation. This was the statement issued yesterday by Minister of Justice Kobie Coetsee.

In the course of the discussion of his budget item Coetsee said that the only thing under discussion now is the recommendations of the Rabie Commission regarding security legislation.

If the thought has taken root among members of the opposition, newspapers or abroad that the government wants to hold secret trials, then he wants to reject this.

He also told a newspaper, which was inquiring about the alleged statements by Lt Gen Johan Coetzee (South Africa's security chief) about political trials, that no political trials are being held in the country.

General Coetzee also denied that he said that he is in favor of secret police trials. He asked for a correction, but was not satisfied with it.

The general has demanded an apology. If he is still dissatisfied he will use other available instruments to correct this matter. This is what Mr Coetsee said.

POLICE INVESTIGATE REPORTS OF INTELLIGENCE AGENTS ACTIVITIES

Johannesburg DIE VADERLAND in Afrikaans 8 May 82 p 1

[Text] Johannesburg--Senior officers of the South African Police's Commercial Branch yesterday confiscated newspaper documents having to do with activities of asserted members of the National Intelligence Service (NIS).

The police served warrants to the RAND DAILY MAIL, SUNDAY TIMES and RAPPORT for the confiscation of documents in their possession.

They took two notebooks and a diary from RAPPORT and they were provided with documents related to the reports which appeared in the RAND DAILY MAIL and SUNDAY TIMES.

Brig Theo Scherman, the chief of the South African Police's Commercial Branch, and Capt Peter Jordaan took the documents from the MAIL which were connected with the published reports concerning alleged activities of members of the NIS.

Similar warrants were later served to the SUNDAY TIMES.

The editor of RAPPORT, Mr Sakkie Perold, confirmed the visit by the police, but he did not want to make any further comments.

Brigadier Scherman told the personnel of the MAIL that he was investigating charges of violations of the Act on Official Secrets against the three newspapers.

When asked who gave the order for the investigation Brigadier Scherman mentioned the name of the director general of NIS, Dr Niel Barnard.

He said that the charges which he was investigating had to do with reports which appeared in the MAIL on 13 and 19 April under the headings of "Dolincheck May Be State Witness" and "Bid To Gag Dolincheck: Two Named." The reports were written by Eugene Hugo the inspector-editor of the newspaper.

Brigadier Scherman read out the pertinent clauses of the act and then said that the results of the investigation would be referred to the general procurator of Transvaal, Attorney J. E. Nothling for the purpose of studying further prosecutions.

The police then went to the offices of SUNDAY TIMES where, according to a 25 April report in the newspaper, similar documents were taken over.

In the premises of RAPPORT the office of Eddie Botha was searched and two notebooks and a diary were confiscated. Eddie Botha keeps the reports for the newspaper.

DANGERS OF COMMUNIST DECEIT, PROPAGANDA UNDERSCORED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 5 Jun 82 p 8

[Text] MODERN military equipment and arms would be of little use to South Africa if the propaganda warfare being waged against the country, was ignored Colonel Joe van der Merwe, former commanding officer of the SA Air Force Gymnasium, said in Pretoria yesterday.

Addressing a parade at the gymnasium where he handed over command to Colonel Neville Greyling, Colonel Van der Merwe said one of the important facets of the global conflict was the "intense psychological cold warfare campaigns."

"Millions of words are spewed out daily over the air waves" by the superpowers in which they condemned each others motives.

"Indeed, our own country has been a primary target of this massive propaganda battle, therefore we must remember — and recognise — that even with the most sophisticated modern military weaponry, this will do us little good if we ignore this battle of words."

Colonel Van der Merwe added: "As the Russian Communists are masters of chess, so are they past-masters in deceit, propaganda and disinformation.

"All of this is part of their aim to undermine and subvert the morale of our troops and our various population groups."

He then emphasised: "We do everything within our capabilities to instil into our young men and women trainees the need for them to recognise these dangers.

"We consider it our moral responsibility to see that they gear themselves up to meet, and cope with, the many challenges in our endeavour to enable them to look ahead with confidence.

SOLDIERS TO BE CHARGED FOR ATROCITIES

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 5 Jun 82 p 3

[Text] SEVERAL soldiers will be prosecuted and one man has already appeared in court in connection with alleged atrocities against the local population in the operational area in northern South West Africa, the Defence Force disclosed in Pretoria yesterday.

It said in a statement an alleged shooting incident was also being investigated by the SWA police and a case of alleged rape was in the hands of the territory's Attorney-General.

The prosecutions result from a three-month investigation by a specially-appointed board of inquiry, established in March after several complaints against the Defence Force had been lodged by local churchmen and tribesmen.

After studying the board's findings, the chief of the Defence Force, General Constand Viljoen, instructed that "suitable steps" be taken against alleged transgressors.

Rape and shooting

The atrocities were allegedly committed mainly in Kavango, where the board investigated 16 complaints concerning eight separate incidents of alleged theft, intimidation, rape and fatal shootings.

Of the 24 allegations against the Defence Force in Owambo, the board had found that only one issue had not been resolved and it was not necessary to refer a single case to the Attorney-General, the statement said.

"In all the other cases, lesser transgressions were settled locally to the satisfaction of all concerned, while more serious cases were referred to the SWA police.

"Regarding the allegations in Kavango, the board found that some of the complaints about assault and intimidation could be substantiated and those involved will be prosecuted.

"In one case, a man has already appeared in court," the statement said.

"In cases where supervision was unsatisfactory, action will be taken against those concerned.

"One alleged shooting incident is being investigated by the SWA police, while a case of rape is in the hands of the Attorney-General.

"Everything possible should be done to prevent a repetition of the incidents," Gen Viljoen said.

A total of 37 witnesses appeared before the Board, which was presided over by Brigadier Ben de Wet Roos.

The board has reconvened and will hear further evidence until July 31.

The Defence Force appealed to interested parties to substantiate their evidence on alleged atrocities and not "to spread vague and unproved allegations."

"This is not in the interest of SWA/Namibia," it said.

The Defence Force also reiterated every thing possible would be done to stamp out atrocities by its members.

"The success of the security force in SWA/Namibia can mainly be ascribed to the good co-operation which exists between it and the local population," it said. — Sapa.

Action To Combat Incidents Announced

WINDHOEK. — The Commanding Officer of the SWA Territory Force, Major-General Charles Lloyd, yesterday announced comprehensive measures to combat incidents of alleged atrocities committed by members of the security forces in South West Africa.

Among the steps envisaged were the establishment of communication links between the SWATF and the representative authorities in the territory and the creation of a permanent military law office to investigate complaints and take corrective action.

General Lloyd said in a statement in Windhoek the prime objective in an insurgency war was to drive a wedge between the security forces and civilians.

"Swapo has recently begun to intensify its propaganda war in this regard.

"However, we are aware that atrocities do occur in the harrowing situation in which our security forces find themselves, although not nearly on the scale that Swapo's propaganda instruments are trying to convey."

The SWATF denounced "in the strongest terms" all forms of brutality.

Gen Lloyd said the ethnic authorities would each be asked to nominate a member to liaise with the office of the general officer commanding SWATF on military matters affecting the various population groups.

The representative authorities would be empowered to put forward their views on acts of both commission and omission by the security forces and submit complaints.

The military law division would be instructed to investigate charges and initiate disciplinary action and compensation to civilians when necessary.

Gen Lloyd said he had commissioned the board of inquiry into alleged atrocities under the chairmanship of Brigadier Ben de Wet-Roos to extend its brief until the end of next month.

"This has been done since allegations of atrocities by members of the security forces against the local population are still being received," Gen Lloyd said.

People who wanted to testify before the board could apply in writing to the SWATF headquarters in Windhoek.

Gen Lloyd said interest groups in the private sector were also being invited to liaise with his office, while existing liaison committees with the SWATF in Owambo, Kavango and Caprivi would in future also hear and investigate charges against the security forces.

The general appealed to the news media to report to the SWATF incidents of misconduct and complaints against the Defence Force.

"The task of the Defence Force is to protect SWA and all its people and we are determined to live up to this role," Gen Lloyd said. — Sapa.

AVIATION RECRUITING LETTER 'FRAME-UP' CLAIMED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 7 Jun 82 p 12

[Text] HARARE. — A letter ostensibly written by an American aviation recruitment firm in response to a South African request for mercenary helicopter pilots came into the possession of the Herald, the newspaper said in a front page report on Saturday.

The letter addressed to the head of the South African Air Force, Lieutant General A M Muller, in Pretoria, deals with the engagement of highly qualified pilots trained in bush warfare.

The Herald says it spoke to Mrs Janice Barden, president of Aviation Personnel International, at her New Orleans headquarters. She agreed the ltter was written on her company's letterhead.

She confirmed that the signatory of the letter worked for her and that the company "could have recruited mercenary helicopter pilots".

However, Mrs Barden denied the letter had been written with her knowledge, and said: "We don't write those sort of letters. It couldn't have been written without my knowing it."

The letter, dated April 6, 1982, read:

"Based on our agreement dated December 12, 1981, in which you request a continual supply of incoming pilots who are capable of working inside the Sascaf, we now forward the personal data of pilots who — according to our evaluation — meet standards stipulated by you. Said pilots are qualified to operate type YA H-64 combat helicopters and are well trained in jungle warfare.

"We repeatedly wish to direct your attention to the fact that we only recruit and recommend the pilots and the engagement procedures are the responsibility of your representatives.

"On instructions received from the competent bodies of the US Government and because of political factors, this go-between activity of our organisation calls for top secrecy from your side in full accordance with earlier guarantees."

A senior spokesman for the SADF emphatically denied all knowledge of the matter. He said when contacted that it sounded "most strange" because, he said, "we do not employ mercenaries".

"We do our own recruitment and we don't need foreign agencies to do that for us."

He went on to say that it sounded very much like a planted letter with the intention of embarrassing not only the South African Defence Force but the South African Government as well. He said the whole thing had a false ring to it. — Sapa.

JAAP MARAIS UPSET BY CP COLDSHOULDER

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 7 Jun 82 p 12

[Article by Dan Marais]

[Text] THE leader of the Herstigte Nasionale Party, Mr Jaap Marais, said in Pretoria yesterday it was regrettable that Dr Andries Treurnicht's Conservative Party was not prepared to avail itself of the opportunity to establish a united front with the HNP to curb the Leftwing drift in the National Party.

Speaking in Pretoria Mr Marais said he had extended the hand of friendship on numerous occasions to the CP but had been consistently coldshouldered.

After at least 10 efforts to meet the CP on common ground, the HNP was no longer prepared to strike a political pact with them.

"The attitude of the CP came as a big surprise to me as they broke away from the Nationalist Party for the same reason the HNP did," he said.

He said the CP had used the flimsiest of excuses to shy away from HNP approchaes.

Mr Marais said the HNP would decide tomorrow whether it would contest the forthcoming provincial by-election in Germiston district. The Parliamentary seat is at present held by Mrs Bettie Schults of the CP.

Mr Marais claimed the CP had no clearly defined policy and it was most probable that the HNP was going to contest the election with drawn swords.

Asked whether any approaches made by he CP to members of the HNP asking them to defect had had any result, Mr Marais said they had been met with granite resistance.

BLAST IN CAPE TOWN: SECURITY WAS 'TERRIBLE'

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 7 Jun 82 pp 3, 6

[Text] CAPE TOWN. — An intensive investigation in which 11 branches of the SA Police are co-operating has been launched after Friday's bomb blast in the Cape Town Centre.

An engineering student, Mr Michael Younghusband (26), died when a heavy load of explosives blasted a lift apart on the sixth floor of the building.

Speculation in political circles is that the blast may be connected with the President's Council, which meets in the Foreshore building.

The Minister of Law and Order, Mr Louis Le Grange, would not say whether there was any connection between the explosion and those in other parts of the country recently.

Mr Le Grange said it would not be fair to make deductions about the motives for the explosion, but security for the President's Council would have to be strengthened.

Brigadier Dries van den Heever, divisional CID officer for the Western Cape, said all branches of the police countrywide were doing their best to catch the saboteurs.

He appealed to the public, businessmen and private security personnel to be "continually on their toes" for suspicious objects and to contact the police immediately if necessary.

In the past two week at least 12 acts of sabotage have been recorded in South Africa.

The blast at Cape Town Centre is the first in which someone was killed.

All the other blasts have been in Natal and Transvaal.

The last blast which rocked Cape Town was on March 20, when the asbestos roof of a cell block at the Langa Commissioner's Court was ripped off. No one was hurt in the explosion.

The 12 blasts in the past fortnight have been:

● May 21; Two bomb explosions in Durban. One at the Port Natal Administration Board building in Moddie Street, Pinetown, and one at the Coloured section of the Department of Internal Affairs offices in Durban. No one was seriously injured.

● May 24: A bomb blast in the Lamont township office, Mobeni. Nobody was injured.

● May 28: Petrol tnaks damaged in a blast at the storage depot in Hectorspruit, Eastern Transvaal.

● June 2-3: Six explosions in northern Natal damaged a fuel depot and railway lines. A major fuel depot was damaged in Paulpietersburg. Bombs planted between stations in Soweto exploded about 10 pm, blowing up two pylons and damaging two power lines.

● June 4: Blast at Cape Town Centre, a man killed.

Office workers criticised the security precautions in the building housing the Presidents Council.

They alleged: ● Evacuation drills were never practised.

● No instructions were given to fire wardens who had been appointed on each floor.

● There were no security checkpoints in the building apart from men who controlled acess to the President's Council offices.

"Some people said we had to leave and others said we had to stay just where we were," said one.

A man who works on the second floor said a staff count was done immediately after the blast and employees were ordered to leave the building.

Miss A Stoffberg, a secretary who works on the sixth floor of the building, said the security in the building was "terrible."

"Anyone can walk into the building whenever they like — there is no control," she said.

"We never even practised a fire drill," she added.

"With the situation in the country as it is, why do they let the President's Council sit in a public building? They should have given them offices where proper security measures could have been taken," a man said.

"This building was a sitting duck — when the President's Council moved in here, everybody said we would be a target. I'm surprised it took so long," one woman said. — Sapa.

[Editorial: "Outrage"]

THE BOMB ATTACK which has killed a man in Cape Town fills us with horror.

Not only because an innocent man died, but because the bomb was planted in a lift in a public building.

If it had gone off later, when dozens of people were leaving, the death toll would have been high.

Just imagine it. People are in a packed lift and a bomb explodes. Their bodies would be ripped apart, just as Friday's victim was.

Such a callous disregard for life by those who perpetrate this kind of outrage is utterly disgusting.

They do not care that innocent people might be killed or maimed.

They use the foullest means of causing terror — the bomb surreptitiously planted in a place where it can cause the maximum explosive effect and the greatest possible damage.

Bombs have been placed in a shopping centre, in a car showroom, at a war memorial, in offices run by Government and semi-State institutions, on railway lines, and at strategic installations.

Sometimes in the daytime, when people nearby might be killed or injured; sometimes at night, when there are passersby; at other times and places where, fortunately, there is no one around.

The liberals weep for a terrorist who attacks a police station, holds up a bank, plants bombs on a railway line, or attacks electricity and other installations and is caught and perhaps sentenced to death.

In cases where people are killed or maimed, they weep not for the victims but for the attackers, whom they regard as liberators of the "downtrodden Blacks" rather than what they really are — brutal men of terror, cold-blooded murderers and destroyers of property.

It is ironical that the latest in a series of bomb attacks in the past two weeks was aimed against the President's Council, which has its offices in the building in which the lift explosion occurred.

Ironical because it is the President's Council which has put forward the reform proposals which will begin a process of radical change in South Africa.

Change which will affect not just the Whites, Coloureds and Indians who will share power in terms of the council's reforms but in time must also affect the Blacks as well.

The attack, like others in the past fortnight, was made by the African National Congress, a Russian-backed revolutionary movement seeking to overthrow the White Government and replace it with a Black Marxist one.

The latest series of bomb attacks is not connected with change, good, bad or indifferent, but with the commemoration of the June 16 riots in Soweto and the June 26 anniversary of the Freedom Charter.

Coincidentally, these attacks come when the death sentences on three terrorists who attacked the Soekmekaar police station in the Northern Transvaal in 1980 were commuted to life imprisonment.

A campaign was launched both here and abroad against their being hanged, the argument being that nobody was killed.

However, two policemen on duty narrowly escaped death — one when a grenade landed on his chest and he had the presence of mind to throw it away, and the other when the pin of the grenade which was thrown at a policeman jammed.

We do not know why there was clemency —the Appeal Court had dismissed the appeal against the death sentence — but there were suggestions that the lives of the men and woman who are to be tried in the Seychelles for the attempted coup would be saved if President René's appeal for clemency in the Soekmekaar case were heeded.

We do not know if this was the deciding factor, but we hope it was not, since we do not think President René should influence the course of justice here.

The commuting of the Soekmekaar death sentences should, in any event, not be regarded as a precedent.

If men perform acts of terrorism it makes no difference whether they actually kill people, endanger lives, or destroy property.

They must know the deadly consequences if they are caught.

INCORPORATION OF KANGWANE SEEN CREATING PROBLEMS

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 21 May 82 p 9

[Article by Chris Marais]

[Text] The Governments of South Africa and Swaziland are still negotiating on the incorporation of KaNgwane, a homeland without self-governing status, into the kingdom. Maps may be drawn up, edicts may be laid down and new passports issued, but what about the people whose lives might soon undergo drastic changes? CHRIS MARAIS spoke to them. TREVOR SAMSON took the pictures.

The KaNgwane "homeland" and the bordering Honeybird farming area. Graphic: GAIL IRWIN

IF AND when KaNgwane becomes part of Swaziland, your last sight of Gordon MacPherson and his exotic pheasants will be a little dust devil headed swiftly for Natal.

The Scot — who has travelled Africa for more than a decade — wants no part of being a border farmer.

While politicians in Pretoria and Mbabane go about the office aesthetics of re-mapping the area and aligning new borders for Swaziland, the people living in Honeybird and Louieville are opposed to the changes that will come into their lives.

Honeybird is the small farming community just to the west of KaNgwane. Louieville is the "homeland's" capital, where Chief Executive Councillor Enos Mabuza shares the white farmers' trepidations about any proposed amalgamation with the black state.

A Mail team visited Mr MacPherson and his neighbours at Honeybird recently.

"There will be problems if the borders are extended," he said. "Take the security question, for instance. As it is, there is a very small police representation out at Louw's Creek. Livestock theft is commonplace here, and if KaNgwane becomes part of Swaziland I'm sure the situation will deteriorate.

"The little homeland has served as a buffer zone for us in the past. That will obviously disappear. We have also been told nothing by the Government about the future status of the area, and that's another sore point."

Mr MacPherson, whose main farming line is breeding imported pheasants, says he'll sell up and move back to Natal once the new border lines are finally drawn.

"What else is there to do?", he asked.

Down the dirt road, 72-year-old Mr Dawid Marais says he'll sit it out and judge the situation as it comes.

"I still don't believe it," he said. "As far as I'm concerned someone just drew a line in an office somewhere and that's how we have to live from now on.

"What's to happen to our railway line, our main road link to Barberton and our water supply? Will they be part of Swaziland or not?"

Mr Marais says property values in those parts are bound to drop, and "then we'll be sitting where all border farmers are sitting in South Africa these days."

His other concern is that if the Swazi border is extended to just short of Honeybird, the small community will be hemmed in by the mountain range at its back and the border.

His view is staunchly conservative, but nevertheless indicative of the general farmer feeling in the area.

"Look, son, when a man wanted another man's land in the past, he had to shoot to get it. Today, we are giving it away. Where else but in this country does this happen?"

His neighbour, Mr Nico Grobler, says that the proposed new border will be impossible to police and control.

Down in the valley, near Louieville itself, lies the plush cane and cotton farm that used to belong to the Millars, a family that established itself in the area more than 35 years ago.

Today, the Millars are still on Lilydale, but they're paying lease on the property until the end of the year, when they'll have to move out.

"We sold Lilydale to the Government last year," Mr Geoff Millar said. "They paid us R3 500 a hectare for the land. When they made the offers, most of us — being young enough and willing to continue farming — thought we'd move down the line and buy other farms."

Once the sale took place, the papers signed, Mr Millar went in search of a farm away from the border and found to his horror that he would have to pay almost R10 000 a hectare for sugar cane land.

"And with the production costs being what they are, I'm forced to give up farming," he said.

Mr Millar, who leads the Louw's Creek Farmers' Association, said his group had sent a memorandum to the Government expressing concern about the future of their water supply.

Farmers operating just outside KaNgwane get their water from the Shiya-lo-Ngubu Dam, which lies inside the "homeland". If incorporation takes place, they will need certain assurances — or another water source.

At Louieville, the Chief Executive Councillor of the only homeland left in South Africa with no self-governing status, says the illegal immigration problem will double itself if KaNgwane becomes part of Swaziland. He is fighting for the autonomous identity of KaNgwane.

Mr Mabuza said the opinions of the blacks living in the area had been canvassed and that they were "totally opposed" to amalgamation.

He reiterated the "buffer zone" argument and said that South Africa's security problems would only increase if that zone was removed.

"Another point is that KaNgwane is not exclusively the home of the South African Swazi," he said. "It has become a heterogenous society, consisting also of Northern Sothos, Shangaans, Zulus and Ndebeles."

As Mr Mabuza said in a message to Dr Piet Koornhof, the Minister of Co-operation and Development, on April 2 this year.

"Whatever the outcome of the 'border adjustment' talks between the South African Government and Swaziland, we request you, Mr Minister, to inform the South African Government to bear in mind that we are not plants or animals" (an obvious reference to the Kruger National Park) "but that we are human beings with souls and feelings."

BLACK TRADE UNIONS SET PACE IN ANTI-APARTHEID STRUGGLE

London THE AFRICAN COMMUNIST in English No 89, 2nd Quarter 1982 pp 20-29

[Article by R. E. Matajo]

[Text] 1981 was a year of struggle and progress for the South African working class. The outstanding features of the year on the labour front were the unprecedented wave of strikes, community solidarity with strikers, the upsurge in trade union organisation and changes in the labour laws. These events are related. The changes in the labour laws are both the cause and effect of the great upsurge in trade union organisation and militant action by the workers.

The economic gap between the two great classes in our country, workers and capitalists, keeps getting wider. The capitalists are getting relatively and absolutely richer and the workers are getting relatively and absolutely poorer.

Company profits are soaring as never before, flowing from an increasing rate of productivity, which means an increasing rate of exploitation of the working class. Company directors earn huge salaries and live lavishly.

Companies are assisted by the regime's strike-breaking, police interference, raids on trade union offices, detentions, banning and arrests of trade union leaders and strikers. A typical newspaper report reads: "Van loads of armed police are raiding sites along the East Rand and hundreds of unregistered black workers are being arrested". (1)

There is a huge gap not only between the incomes of employers and employees, but also between the wages of white and black workers.

"The average earnings of more than 600,000 whites in a wide range of jobs exceeded R1,000 a month in March this year. Their earnings were 23% higher than in March 1980.

". . . over the same period the earnings of black workers rose 25% to an average R220 a month, those of coloured workers rose 23% to R293 a month and for Asians workers the increase was 20% to R348 a month." (2)

Gross discrimination is demonstrated in the salaries paid to government employees i.e. the state, provincial authorities, local authorities.

Number of white workers employed: June 1981	310,000
Number of African, Indian and Coloured	510,000
Total	820,000
Total earnings of white workers	R780m
Total earnings of African, Indian and Coloured workers	R387m

The National Manpower Commission (NMC) in its first special report published on 3/6/81 stated clearly that so long as we persist in trying to recruit High Level Manpower (HLM) mainly from the white community, the country cannot realise its development targets. HLM as defined by the report consists of 'all persons engaged in the professional and semi-professional occupations, technicians and management personnel of all kinds — excluding farmers, artisans and clerks at the lower levels.'

In 1979, whites comprised 30% of total manpower but provided 71.9% of the HLM. Corresponding figures for coloureds were 11.4% of total manpower, 7.8% of HLM; for Asians 3.9% and 3.2%; for Africans 54.6% and 17.1%.

Between 15,000 and 18,000 artisans' jobs are unfilled. Only a handful of black apprentices are given training in urban areas. Closed shop agreements between white trade unions and employers operate de facto discrimination. The economic boom has not reduced the mass of black unemployed. Figures are grossly unreliable because they exclude the huge mass of unemployed in the homelands. Yet they indicate that 20% of black women and 42% of black young men in their 20's are jobless. Unemployment and inflation bear witness that the poor are getting poorer.

South Africa's inflation rate in 1981 was the worst since 1924. Thus the real wages of all workers were slashed by the 16% rise in the cost of living and for the lower income groups the rise was 20.5%. Monopolies set prices that are far above the cost of production. While farmers' gross earnings rose by 22%, South Africa's 1.3 million farm-workers suffered a deterioration in the purchasing power of their wages and in their living conditions. The average monthly cash payments to farm workers in Transvaal and the Orange Free State were about R25 to R30. In the Western Cape, the figures were substantially higher, from R53 to R79. The abolition of the labour tenant system and the tightening of influx control has worsened the position of farm workers. Farm workers are exluded from the Wage Act, the Labour Relations Amendment Act, Factories Act and Unemployment Insurance Act. South Africa's agriculture depends on cheap labour immobilised by the pass laws. In addition to these injustices, the workers are subjected to brutal treatment by farm owners.

The Fight Back

The oppressed, exploited, starved, unemployed, homeless, organised and unorganised workers are uniting in the struggle to survive against the capitalist white minority regime. The frustrations and mass anger of young and old, men and women, are stoking the fire of a broad-based movement for "Unity in Action." During 1981 the people showed their awareness of the need to unify all forces, the need to take a stand in the struggle against racial oppression and class exploitation.

The first 10 months of 1981 saw a rapid escalation of labour unrest. The regime cannot boast anymore of 'peace in industry'. 180 strikes were recorded in the 10 months to October 1981 during which 140,000 workers participated in many industries in the motor assembly, food, paper, engineering, mining and distributive trades. The issues were: workers demanding wage increases, the reinstatement of workers' leaders, trade union recognition, recognition of agreements and, last but not least, the struggle against the draft Pension Bill.

Under the new Pension Bill workers were only entitled to get access to their contributions at the age of 65. Fearing permanent loss of their money, the workers demanded their contributions back before the Bill was passed and this led to widespread labour unrest. Many companies were forced to pay out large sums of money to their workers as a result of the strike actions.

An important phenomenon in most of the strikes was that they were led by trade unions. Where strikers had no trade unions they appealed for help to trade union federations such as the National Federation of Workers (NFW), the South African Allied Workers' Union (SAAWU) and the Federation of South African Trade Unions (FOSATU).

FOSATU's annual report discloses that out of 90 strikes in FOSATU-organised factories, 36 were over wages, 25 over dismissals, 10 over management-worker relations, 10 over union recognition, 4 over pensions and 4 over working conditions. A further 30 strikes or work stoppages were mostly the result of dismissals, disciplinary procedures and working conditions. (5)

We must recognise that decades of struggle to win the right for African workers to form unions with the democratic right to represent their members have been crowned with limited but important successes in that the apartheid regime has been forced to grant some limited concessions. The regime realises that it cannot prevent the emergence of African trade unions. Its main objective in making these concessions is to ensure that those unions which exist and continue to emerge are controlled and manipulated in the interests of the continued racist exploitation of the black working people. The Black workers have in the recent past been raising their level of unionisation, scoring many important victories, demonstrating in practice their readiness to build trade union organisation.

A major contributory factor is the slow, patient and painstaking work of organisers who have been active in the major industrial centres in the past decade. Some of them belong to old established unions, some are relatively new in the field.

The estimated African trade union membership is now between 200,000 and 250,000. It is evident that the advance has taken place in many ways and through the instrumentality of many different organisations and leaders. This diversity in fact has given rise to a process of fragmentation and competition which is a major weakness and a problem which demands urgent solution. Amongst the African workers there are now at least 5 centres: the Council of Unions of South Africa (CUSA), the Trade Union Council of South Africa (TUCSA), FOSATU, SAAWU and NFW.

CUSA — Council of Unions of South Africa. Formed in September 1980. Rand based. 8 member unions. All black. Representing building, chemicals, steel and engineering. Paid up membership 19,000. Signed-up membership 36,019. General Secretary — Mr. Piroshav Camay. CUSA proclaimed its main objective as a completely black-led union federation, but has no specific economic or social programme beyond that. Funded by Western European affiliates to the ICFTU, British TUC, West German Catholic Development Fund and the Friederich Ebert Foundation.

FOSATU — Federation of South African Trade Unions. Formed April 1979. According to its annual report last year, the membership has risen from 59,460 to 94,617 since November 1980. It has a majority membership in 347 factories and union rights are being negotiated in more than 130 factories. Some of its affiliated unions nearly trebled in membership. It also claims that 75 white workers resigned from the SA Yster en Staal Unie to join their affiliate the National Automobile and Allied Workers' Union. It plans to organise in Northern Natal and other areas.

SAAWU is an unregistered trade union body. It sees its task as organising ALL workers. Its policy is non-racialism based on workers'unity. It strives to organise workers on the shopfloor. The guiding principle of the union is mass participatory democracy. This means that the workers decide the policy, direction and tasks of the union. SAAWU either organises workers into affiliated trade unions or representative workers' committees. The membership of SAAWU at the moment is mostly African, but it wants to organise all workers, whether they be Coloured, Indian or White. Its general secretary, Sam Kikine, claimed 26 affiliated unions with a membership of 75,000. SAAWU is also engaged in organising the unemployed workers. SAAWU has given courageous leadership to the workers in SA and the government is banning and detaining SAAWU activists. In the Wilson-Rowntree dispute the company and the Sweet Workers' Union, an affiliate of TUCSA, are cooperating against SAAWU and the interests of the African workers.

SAAWU is like a general workers' union on the lines of the old ICU. It is necessary to look at the reason for the failure of the ICU – it failed because it was unwilling to organise industrial unions, to introduce rank-and-file democratic control of union funds and elections. There is no reason why workers who are willing to join SAAWU should not be organised in industrial unions, say transport workers in East London, stevedores, railway and harbour workers, and those existing unions link up with unions of the same industries in the rest of the country.

TUCSA — Trade Union Council of South Africa. Last breakdown showed a membership of 299,455 — 73,859 whites, 187,180 Indian and Coloured workers, 38,416 Africans. Recently increased its affiliated trade union membership and last year claimed its 49 affiliated unions represented 361,000 workers of all races. This increase has been brought about mainly as a result of affiliated unions opening their ranks to black workers. TUCSA recently won the affiliation of the SA Artisan Association, a railway union which opened its ranks to black workers. TUCSA persists in its policy of supporting the establishment and not offering confrontation. During the strikes on the Pension Bill, its President Anna Scheepers urged workers not to press for the repayment of their pension money. It also denounces the unregistered unions for their rejection of the industrial council system.

NFW National Federation of Workers. Details of membership and affiliation uncertain. A general workers' union. See comment above relating to SAAWU the NFW also needs firm grounding on an industrial basis.

Other organisations catering for African workers include GWU – General Workers' Union. This general union has done tremendous work, and met with great success particularly in organising and obtaining higher wages and better conditions of work for stevedores, building workers, meat workers. Their work and achievements should be consolidated into democratic industrial unions.

The same applies to the TGWU. The recently established General Workers' Union of South Africa, a new exclusive black trade union established in Port Elizabeth which represents among others stevedores, bakery, textile, metal, hospitals, domestic staff, dairies, municipal workers, public transport drivers, sales representatives, clerical staff and the building industry. Some of these sections have unions. The situation should be carefully examined with a view to organising thoroughly democratic industrial unions.

Unaffiliated trade unions, unregistered: Now estimated to total 49,000 members, mostly African. Some of the larger unions are the Food and Canning Workers' Union, the African Food and Canning Workers' Union, the Non-European Municipal Workers' Union (Cape Town), the Media Workers' Association of South Africa (MWASA), Black Municipality Workers' Union (BMWU). These unions should be encouraged, together with the above trade union centres and general workers' unions, to establish a united co-ordinating body to bring about the unity of all registered and unregistered unions to work for united action by workers based on industrial unionism.

Political Direction

So much for organisational structures. There remains the question of policy. What is our attitude towards the competition that is now going on between the various trade union centres? Broadly one can distinguish five major groupings:

i. The extreme right wing represented by the South African Confederation of Labour.

ii. TUCSA, which works with the ICFTU, AFL-CIO-AALC and takes up a typically social democrat stance. They say "keep politics out of trade union work", operate within the existing social structures and aim at reforms without revolutionary upheaval.

iii. A mixed bag of black trade unions not affiliated to TUCSA, but having financial, organisational and ideological ties with the external agencies particularly ICFTU, AALC, and Friedrich Ebert Foundation. The leading bodies are FOSATU and CUSA.

Some sections in this group attempt to mobilise the members in the struggle against apartheid and for free trade unions without discrimination.

iv. A group of unions which do not receive support from the international sources mentioned above and are opposed to the regime. In this category fall SAAWU, GWU, PE GWU, Transvaal GAWU, GAWU, AFCWU, FCWU. The regime harasses, detains and bans their leaders.

v. A few unions like MWASA and BMWU receive aid from outside but are strongly opposed to the apartheid regime, are victimised by the regime, and have their leaders banned and detained.

The existing division and competition are the result in part of the attacks by the regime on militant trade union leaders who were banned under the Suppression of Communism Act and detained under the Terrorism Act. An additional factor is the intervention of international trade union bodies such as ICFTU, AALC, Friedrich Ebert Foundation, which promote divisions by financing different union centres and splitter groups. Their policy of avoiding confrontation with the regime and all forms of militant struggle has divided the trade union movement into two camps. One practises economism and avoids political action, while the other openly opposes apartheid. These contradictory attitudes are greatly strengthened because most subsidies are paid to the 'economist' non-political unions. Personal interests, ambitions and power-seeking are contributory factors which would not however come to the surface were it not for the encouragement given to individuals with such tendencies.

Langa Conference

On August 8, 1981, a conference was held in Langa, Cape Town, attended by delegates from all trade union centres, registered and unregistered, affiliated and unaffiliated unions representing 150,000 predominantly black workers throughout the country. The unions and coordinating bodies represented were FOSATU, Council of Unions (Tvl), SAAWU, GWU (Cape), FCWU, AFCWU, GWUSA, the Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers' Union of SA, General and Allied Workers' Union, the Industrial Aid Centre, BMWU, MACWUSA, Municipal Workers' Association (Cape Town). This was the most representative conference ever held of unregistered and registered trade unions. They took important decisions:

i. To reject the present system of registration designed to control and interfere in the internal affairs of the unions.

ii. To support each other in defiance of any abuse of investigative powers by the authorities.

iii. To support each other in defying restrictions on providing financial aid to striking workers.

iv. To reject the present Industrial Council system and recommend that unions which are not members of councils should not join them, and to request others to refer this issue back to their membership for endorsement.

v. To establish 'ad-hoc solidarity committees' in various regions to initiate solidarity action arising out of the meeting. These ad-hoc solidarity committees will be an important factor in developing greater unity between workers which belong to different unions and will strengthen the workers' decisions for militant action in support of their demands.

vi. Due to the severe difficulties created for workers by homeland authorities, the meeting resolved to send a delegation to Chief Minister Sebe to discuss his anti-union stance and the security of the workers in the Ciskei.

These decisions are of the utmost importance. The delegates not only spoke for the 150,000 workers they represented, but gave leadership to the whole working class in South Africa. We are confident that their decisions will stimulate discussion, organisation, action and further our revolutionary national democratic revolution.

The conference also emphasised another vital factor — the subjective question of the workers' consciousness and the amazing growth of self-confidence, a refusal to tolerate the usual brutal and high-handed methods of the racists and their agents in the police, courts and prisons.

What the upsurge in working class activity in recent years proves is that, although the white minority still control all the law-making processes and law-enforcing agencies, the press, radio and television, schools, universities, the economy, the military establishment and communications, it can no longer control the black workers' thoughts and is more and more hard-pressed to control their actions.

In the present situation, a great responsibility rests on the South African Communist Party.

The basic function of a Marxist-Leninist Party, the function which is universal to all Marxist-Leninist parties, irrespective of nationality, is that we are the revolutionary party of the working class, whose role is that of the vanguard in the fight for socialism. Our function is to pursue the path of socialism, to win adherents to our struggle for socialism and to raise the level of understanding of socialism among our workers, peasants and intellectuals and all population groups. Because the working class in our country is the pivotal force in the struggle for meaningful change, social progress and for socialism, our Party must place its main emphasis and focus on the working class. This most basic of all political concepts must be restated by us.

We cannot ignore and delay organising and leading our working class. We must recruit new personnel and give them an understanding of our role as set out by Lenin in What is to be done?:

> "Class political consciousness can be brought to the workers only from without, that is only from outside the economic struggle, from outside the sphere of relations between workers and employers. That knowledge comes from all classes, the state and government. To bring political knowledge to the workers the Social Democrats (read communists) must go among all classes of the population and they must dispatch units of their army in all directions . . .

"Every trade union secretary conducts and helps to conduct the economic struggle against the employers and the government. It cannot be too strongly maintained that this is still not social democracy (read communism), that the Social Democrat's (read communist's) ideal should not be the trade union secretary, but the tribune of the people, who is able to react to every manifestation of tyranny and oppression, no matter where it appears, no matter what strata or class of people it affects, who is able to generalise all these manifestations and produce a single picture of police violence and capitalist exploitation, who is able to take advantage of every event, however small, in order to set forth before all his socialist convictions and his democratic demands, in order to clarify for all and everyone the world-historic significance of the struggle for the emancipation of the proletariat."

The recent upsurge of the working class throughout 1980 and 1981 is in a large part a protest against national oppression, race discrimination and class exploitation. The working people are engaged in struggling against capitalist exploitation, but more specifically at the present time, against the forms that this exploitation takes under the system of apartheid. Nowhere else in the world are any people being deprived of citizenship on the ground of colour.

STRATEGY OF ARMING MASSES DISCUSSED

London THE AFRICAN COMMUNIST in English No 89, 2nd Quarter 1982 pp 77-87

[Article by Khumalo Migwe: "Further Contribution on the Arming of the Masses"]

[Text] The article "Has the Time come for the Arming of the Masses?" by Mzala (African Communist, No. 86 Third Quarter, 1981) raises one of the real fundamental strategic questions of our revolution. However, Mzala treats this question only from a strategic level and ignores (whether deliberately or not) the tactical aspects of arming the masses. "To recognise a definite form of struggle and not to recognise its technique," said Lenin, "is like recognising the necessity of taking part in particular elections while ignoring the law which lays down the technique of these elections"[1] In other words, Mzala's submission answers the question: What is to be done? but not the question: How is it to be done? or where to begin?

To "Arm the Masses" is to tread on a particularly delicate strategy of revolution. If implemented prematurely or untimely, the destructive effect on the vanguard movement can last for decades. It was with regard to this danger that Engels constantly warned that "strategies are not free creations of the mind of generals of genius" – strategies are the logical and practical theoretical conclusions engendered by practical life, they are theoretical developments that evolve from concrete situations of struggle or combat and guarantee victory. Jack Woddis once advised:

> "Revolution is a serious matter. It cannot be solved by subjective wishes or the bold use of revolutionary slogans. And serious revolutionaries have to take a responsible attitude towards the people workers, peasants, students, intellectuals, and others who feel on their backs any mistakes made by those who would claim to lead them."[2]

On the other hand, this strategic ground is delicate also because not to arm the masses when the need arises could lead to a dangerous gap opening between the people and their leaders. Indeed, if political leadership is said to be an art, it is this required ability of the leaders, with their finger-tips ever on the popular pulse, to detect the favourable opportunity and timeliness for a great revolutionary advance. le Duan reminds us that "as evidenced by the experience of all revolutions, one very important question, besides the preparation of political and military forces is to seize the opportune moment."[3] Failure to seize the opportune moment has led many a liberation movement to a rearguard position. The role of tailism does not fit a revolutionary vanguard.

A Disarmed People

In 1968, Oliver Tambo, the President of the African National Congress, in a statement entitled 'Freedom or Death', made the following remarks:

> "The founders of our nation . . . taught us that the African people were conquered because the Europeans had the guns and were organised. In addition, our forefathers fought separately and divided. In this way the Whites were able to defeat our peoples one by one."

Twelve years later, in 1980, Nelson Mandela, in a message smuggled out of Robben Island and finally released for publication by the ANC, hammered on the same historic fact:

> "The gun has played an important part in our history. The resistance of the black man to white colonial intrusion was crushed by the gun. Our struggle to liberate ourselves from white domination is held in check by force of arms. From conquest to the present the story is the same."

To those involved in the liberation struggle in South Africa, it is no longer an issue of controversy or even debate whether or not the oppressed could hope to achieve their freedom except by organising their own army of liberation; in fact, to raise the issue is to be blind to reality, for we are already engaged in armed struggle. Our present attempts to organise ourselves under the leadership of the African National Congress and to wield modern weapons against our racist tormentors, implies the awareness that unless we do so we shall deserve to be oppressed and exploited. The call to arm the masses is, historically speaking, in the tradition of our earlier armed resistance but now occurring in a qualitatively new situation.

An analysis of the political situation given by the National Executive of the ANC in 1973 stated:

> "In a struggle such as ours which pursues the strategic objective of seizure of power and not reforms or a negotiated transfer of power, the conscious and purposive participation of the masses in the struggle, on their own behalf and relying on their own strength, is of decisive importance."

This strategic objective is dictated by the military intransigence of the racist-capitalist ruling class. The ridiculous hope of a negotiated settlement in South Africa, shared by utopians and opportunists alike, will crumble before the reality of racist militarism and fascist uncompromise. In this regard as well, to call for the arming of the masses is most appropriate in view of our final objective: the unconditonal surrender of the Pretoria Boers to the armed people. The "Arming of the Masses" dialectically means the disarming of the racists, and this is absolutely necessary

The 1980 Revolutionary Conflagration

Anyone studying the course of events since 1976 the outbreaks of violent resistance by workers and students as witnessed from Cape Town to Kimberley, from Soweto to Bloemfontein, from Uitenhage to KwaMashu will confirm the timeliness of the call to turn from aimless, sporadic acts of violence to purposeful and organised mass violence linked with the broad movement for liberation. Undoubtedly, the "Arming of the Masses" is an entirely correct strategy in meeting a situation in which all doors to peaceful ways of effecting change have been slammed shut, and where the masses are themselves breaking an old pattern of peaceful struggle and adopting new violent forms of struggle.

Just as the December events of 1905 in Russia had demonstrated that the general strike alone was out of date, that the mass movement was breaking out of these narrow confines and giving rise to the highest forms of struggle, so have the post-Soweto events in general and the 1980 revolt in particular, shown that it is now impossible to confine things to a peaceful strike alone. A fearless and relentless armed fight is necessary. This logically calls for the arming of the masses, the immediate creation of fighting squads or "combat units" composed of a few people ready to go on the offensive against the enemy, armed with modern weapons where there was a stone must now be a hand-grenade, where there was a stick or an iron bar there must now be an automatic rifle.

During times of revolutionary upsurge, the ideal movement for the masses is the one that answers their most urgent aspirations; and the future will belong not necessarily to the organisation that has the most progressive programme but to the mass movement that is most capable of drawing the masses into concrete revolutionary struggle.

As early as January 1905 Lenin wrote from Geneva:

> "The general strike is rousing and rallying increasing masses of the working class and the urban poor. The arming of the people is becoming an immediate task of the revolutionary movement.
> "Only an armed people can be the real bulwark for popular liberty."

In the preceding period Lenin had fought against the use of terror tactics by small groups of conspiratorial intellectuals who disregarded mass organisation. Now, however, in 1905-1906, Lenin wholeheartedly supported the use of guerrilla warfare in the cities by small groups of workers, which took place as part of the mass struggle, and the Bolsheviks themselves organised "fighting squads" everywhere. These units of three or four (and at times even more) had the task to create strong points for the open mass struggle; to spread the uprising to neighbouring districts and to establish complete political freedom, if only at first in a small part of the country.

Certainly, in South Africa, where cadres of Umkhonto We Sizwe can go inside the country and carry out combat operations like the assaults on Sasol or the Voortrekkerhoogte military base, it is quite possible to create temporary training bases in some houses or mountains (even if for the duration of a weekend) and train small groups of carefully selected people from the factory floor, village, migrant workers' hostel, university or high school. In this way the primary task of the many MK cadres would be to multiply themselves among the people inside the country rather than all of them doing the actual fighting at this stage.

This means that such combat units (at the initial stage) are part-time workers or students, as the case may be, and part-time guerrillas as well. Our guerrilla war shall have assimilated the strategy of "Arming the Masses" the day ordinary workers, peasants, students, etc, have been given training in the Mzimkhulu, Nkandla or Knysna forests; or were instructed in some house in Soweto, Gugulethu, New Brighton or KwaMashu. Political work must be done sufficiently among the people so that they understand that "the unknown man in your midst is a freedom fighter".

The problem of police informers and administrative stooges (all of whom in fact constitute the major myth of the invincibility of the racist regime) will remain as long as the initiative of the liberation process has not been transferred from the leaders in exile to the local leadership inside the country as it arises in the crucible of the revolution. In spite of the enemy slander campaigns against revolutionary people, the masses know who are the real informers and stooges in their midst, and the people of South Africa have learned through bitter and sanguinary experience that to be indifferent to enemy agents is to create a fertile ground for their germination. Once a combat unit has been formed in a township, location or village, one of its major tasks is to mount an all-out elimination campaign against informers and police. No serious farmer continues to grow plants in a field full of rats. He first destroys them and causes others to run away before they can molest his plants. During the Sekhukhuniland revolt, police and administrative agents knows as "Rangers" were the first target of the people, their houses were raided and burnt thus giving warning even to those who were still nursing hopes of serving the enemy. This elimination of informers and police is a very important tactical aspect in the implementation of the strategy of "Arming the Masses" since it generates a really free atmosphere in our residential areas to conduct political education, organisation and finally arming of the masses. Without the reign of racist stooges in our townships and villages, our areas shall indeed be semi-liberated zones.

The Question of Political Preparation

The danger of conducting any form of guerrilla activity in a territory which has not been prepared politically, has been well understood by the South African liberation movement. We cannot undermine the importance of the painstaking, slow and often imperceptible work of political education which the African National Congress and its allies have always conducted and will always conduct. It is actually through political mobilisation that we are even able to select the people who should form the combat units. When it is said that the guerrilla is a fish and the people are the water, we usually have in mind clean and fresh water. Political mobilisation and education of the masses is this process of cleaning water, not because at any stage the people are on the side of the enemy, but experience of guerrilla warfare (particularly in those situations where it has failed to win victory) teaches that mass support should not be assumed but should be ascertained concretely.

In a statement in August 1965 the Central Committee of the South African Communist Party said:

> "Indeed, it should rather be said that without constant efforts to arouse the resistance and patriotic spirit of the people, activities of a purely military character will become isolated from the people and bound therefore to fail. The real advantage of the liberation forces over the planes, armoured cars and other superior equipment of the enemy, is the support of the masses. This is our decisive weapon."[6]

Now this means that there is in fact a more urgent need to have among the people political organisers, agitators of the people, etc. — people who, so to say, put the manure and the fertilisers in the field. Before we can have these political organisers, we cannot talk of arming the masses in certain areas — I deliberately say "in certain areas" because, concretely speaking, there are now numerous areas in South Africa which need no longer wait before the creation of combat units, and Soweto is an example. Nevertheless, even in areas like Soweto, where already thousands of children have been killed, maimed or driven into exile, there is a need to ascertain and not merely to assume mass support; even here there is a need for political work, without which guerrillas cannot survive.

Stressing this need for political work among the masses, Eduardo Mondlane, talking of the experience of the struggle in Mozambique, said:

"We had to establish a clandestine political force within Mozambique to prepare the people for the difficult task of liberating the country . . . Certainly one of the most important departments is the one responsible for clandestine political work within Mozambique . . . They prepare for action everywhere — ahead of the army, with the army and after the army. They are responsible for formulating political lines and transmitting them to local leaders. They establish cells everywhere in Mozambique and make sure that each cell knows what it must do and how its function fits into the party's strategy for the liberation of the whole country."[7]

The other vital aspect necessitating constant political work among the masses is to involve the masses in the most varied forms of struggle in order to attack all possible features of the ruling class state power. The revolution cannot be conducted by combat units alone. At times the very success of the combat units is made possible by a multitudinous number of struggles like strikes, etc. Talking of the liberation struggle in Cuba, Blas Roca rightly comments:

"Even through the armed struggle was a decisive means for achieving the overthrow of the tyranny and the triumph of the revolution, we should not underestimate the role played by the other forms of struggle, which co-operated in achieving these ends. The constant struggles, large and small, which were carried on in the cities and fields, outside of the field of military operations, and agitation which went along with them, kept the repressive forces of the government in check, prevented them from concentrating against the guerrillas, politically influenced many members of the army and the police, disorganising these forces and tending to paralyse them. The actions and mobilisations of every type, in city and country, co-operated effectively in helping the Rebel Army to defeat the offensives of the army of tyranny and finally to win the battle for revolutionary power."[8]

In South Africa, let us not forget, conditions have to a great extent politically educated the big section of the oppressed. The generation of those who sent delegates to the Congress of the People that drafted the Freedom Charter in 1955 is still very much alive; this, in fact, is the generation that has given birth to the Soweto heroes like Solomon Mahlangu. Talking of political education of the masses in South Africa can no longer mean attempting to make the people aware that they are oppressed or even that they need to fight — they are very much aware that they are oppressed; the 1980 political events are also only a small part of the testimony that they know they have to fight. The main question of political education and mobilisation at this time is the question of organisation and direction. This was the message written across the more than 20,000 angry faces who went to bury the comrades that fell at the Silverton Volskas Bank. Let us recall how Lenin criticised the schoolish approach to the question of the political education of the masses:

> "When the bourgeois gentry and their uncritical echoers, the social-reformists, talk priggishly about the 'education' of the masses, they usually mean something schoolmasterly, pedantic, something that demoralises the masses and instils in them bourgeois prejudices.
> "The real education of the masses can never be separated from their independent political, and especially revolutionary struggle. Only struggle discloses to it the magnitude of its own power, widens its horizons, enhances its abilities, clarifies its mind, forges its will."[9]

Enemy Reprisals — what then?

One problem of no less strategic importance is the inevitable racist counter-revolutionary measures. Logically, every action produces an equal and opposite reaction, and this is true not only for physics but also for the revolutionary science. In the history of revolutionary war, South Africa would be an exception if its ruling class did not unleash terror against the revolutionary movement and the people who support it. We must have no illusions about this question — if the racists react in the Soweto style to unarmed schoolchildren, if they can go to the scale of conventional warfare against the people of Angola because of the intensity of the armed struggle waged by SWAPO, we can only conclude that the people of South Africa may as well expect one of the worst repression measures that the world has ever experienced; there may be massacred villages, napalm-bombed townships, etc. There is nothing new about this in the history of liberation, there is no struggle without casualties.

Already the Pretoria fascists are murdering unarmed men, women and children even before we reply to them by our organised mass violence. To avoid arming the masses, therefore, for fear of the enemy's military reprisals, would only be a ridiculous way of ignoring our present annihilation by the fascist troops and police. When facing the problem of how to implement survival tactics, let us rather have arms in hand than be without arms, wondering how we can survive while the racists demonstrate their military prowess over our massacred children.

It may also be added in this connection that the enemy may not limit his counter-revolution to military action alone. His military chiefs have already indicated that four-fifths of the war effort must be devoted to win the hearts and minds of the people; he may therefore also include the carrot tactic of political reforms. It is noteworthy that the chief weakness of the guerrilla struggle led by the Malayan People's Liberation Army was both its inability to meet the imperialist carrot tactic of political and economic reform as well as their adoption of a defensive posture. In South Africa too, noting that it is finally not the Pretoria Boers but monopoly capitalism that is really ruling the country, we may be faced with the necessity to adapt our tactics to cope with political reforms rather than brute military repression.

However, even if it is the military tactics rather than the political ones that the racists will adopt as their principal counter-revolution, if the form of people's warfare is guerrilla warfare, the people's war is bound to win in the end. "There is only one means of defeating an insurgent people who will not surrender," writes Robert Taber, "and that is extermination. There is only one method to control a territory that harbours resistance, and that is to turn it into a desert. Where these means cannot, for whatever reason, be used, the war is lost . . . That military victory against true guerrillas is possible seems doubtful on the basis of modern experience, barring the use of methods approaching genocide, as applied notably by the Germans in certain occupied countries during the Second World War."

The South African people, moreover, have at their advantage the overwhelming numerical superiority over the enemy. Because of his numerical weakness, the enemy cannot go beyond certain limits in mobilising the army of repression, whereas on the other hand the masses of the people can mobilise a guerrilla army thrice the size of the enemy's limits and still have numerous men and women engaged in other non-combat forms of struggle.

The people's combat activities must have the aim to take from the enemy, little by little, the enemy's ruling power; in this way it becomes possible to talk of certain areas as liberated areas, that is, at first from the political point of view. A situation is created where the enemy's administrative organs are completely destroyed, his administrative stooges sent scurrying away like scared reptiles, leaving the township, location or village a people's territory. When the enemy's administration and other repression offices have been destroyed, and troops who come to patrol are constantly gunned down by armed units at night; when the people stop paying rent and other taxes in the township (partly because the rent offices are no longer there), we can then get the people to elect, democratically, leaders who represent their aspirations – nearly in the same way that in countries like Italy and France you have whole districts controlled by the progressive forces. This is also possible in South Africa but under conditions brought about by political mobilisation accompanied by an irrevocably determined guerrilla struggle waged by armed groups.

Thus to theorise about the impossibility of having liberated zones in South Africa is only a cheap way to ignore the tasks that are facing us. Certainly, the liberated zones may not take the classical form of defended territories in the developed stage of guerrilla warfare, but it may be quite possible to talk of politically liberated Soweto, New Brighton, KwaMashu, Mondlo, Gugulethu, etc. from the point of view that it is no longer the enemy that has power in these areas but the people. This will be a very important stage in the process of the mobilisation of the masses.

Strike Action — How much Power?

Can strike action alone bring down the racist state in South Africa? Can any solution that excludes the use of arms succeed in liberating us?

A number of political analysts have written a lot about the havoc that can plague South Africa if the black working class withdraws its labour which is the backbone of the South African economy. However, possibilities of change must be viewed in relation to South Africa as it really is, and not, as so often happens, in relation to a theoretical model extracted from manuals.

Strikes will undoubtedly continue to teach the South African workers the importance of united action, engender a greater spirit of militancy as well as win significant economic and political gains. But a workers' strike that could produce radical political change of the nature envisaged in the Freedom Charter, that is, that could lead to the overthrow of the racist state, needs to be a general strike that would involve a great measure of organisation by the liberation movement. The extreme difficulty (in practical terms) for the banned organisations to build up mass support on an underground basis which an overthrow of the state by strike action alone would require cannot be overlooked. As long as the racist ruling class continues to command the absolute allegiance of the army of suppression, any talk of a nation-wide stay-at-home or strike alone leading to the overthrow of the Pretoria Boers would only be cheap talk – theoretically logical but practically invalid. Strike action now and in future, like all other forms of political struggle, will only enhance the South African revolution when supported by the determined revolutionary armed struggle of the whole people.

Lastly, it would be appropriate to quote from the ANC National Executive statement entitled: "The People Accept the Challenge of the Nationalists" dated April 6, 1963:

> "The government will certainly be more ruthless than it has been. It already considers itself at war and is fighting a desperate battle. Every European citizen has been called to defend white supremacy. Whites have been called upon to sacrifice not only time and money but life itself.
> "It would be criminal on our part not to prepare the Africans throughout the country on a similar scale. No one can afford to be neutral in this situation . . . The times have changed, we must make only one call, WE DEMAND FREEDOM OR DEATH, there can be no middle course."

VARIOUS REGULATIONS FOR INTERRACIAL SCHOOL SPORT PLANNED

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 18 May 82 pp 11-12

[Text] In an article in the latest issue of DIE UNIE, the organ of the South African Education Union the statement is made that sport contact at a school level between whites and coloreds "has already entered the political arena" and that it remains the democratic right of a parent to decide what is good or not in school sport for his child.

The article consists of a memorandum drafted by the South African Education Association and titled: Pupil Participation in Sport Activities. The object of the memorandum is "to give guidance in...sport contacts at a school level between whites and coloreds" to Afrikaans-speaking educators.

According to that, sport in schools is a means of education, a coincidental educational matter, a means of contact above cultural boundaries (for example between Afrikaans, Jewish and English schools) as well as a means established for the purpose of serving the interests of the child. If it is not treated as such then it has no right to exist in the school.

Separated

Under the heading "School Sport in a Broader Sense" the assertion is made that school sport must serve the interests of the country on a broad scope.

Sport contact at a school level between whites and coloreds has already gotten into the political arena and it is the democratic right of the parent to decide what is good or bad for his child. The diplomatic immunity of children of diplomats or of ambassadors from black states or homelands is managed in the white schools.

School sport within and outside the school context must be separated and it can only be expected that the Department of Education in the various provinces be the one to provide facilities for the exercise of the sport within the school context. In the event that the school sport has an "unpedagogical" effect in the formation of the child then measures are to be expected.

It is being recommended that the necessary controlling entities be created for managing school sport between whites and coloreds, within the school context. Within a certain district there will have to be a league or competition in which only white and colored students, and students of black and Indian schools will compete with each other.

Arrangements

Besides this there is also to be a mixed league in which white, colored, black and Indian schools can participate. Wherever there are colored students in schools, these schools can choose where they want to be included.

"A parent who simply gives permission that his child may take part in a white competition will have his wishes taken into consideration and provisions will be made for this. Those schools which do not want to participate in mixed competitions will also have their wishes taken under consideration and they will not be included in the competition in question."

Rugby is being mentioned as an example and according to the memorandum the various controlling entities must make arrangements among themselves for those instances where students are involved in more than one competition.

SAFA ACCUSES SACOS OF OBSTRUCTING COLORED SOCCER

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 7 Jun 82 p 11

[Article by Billy Cooper]

[Excerpts] THE South African Football Association, (SAFA) a coloured affiliated body of the Football Council of South Africa has accused the South African Council of Sport (Sacos) of hampering with the development of sport in Coloured schools.

In a hard hitting statement at a Johannesburg Press conference on Saturday Safa chairman, Donny Gilmour, challenged Sacos and its president Hassan Howa to a man-to-man showdown to thrash out the issue.

Safa has made an appeal to the Coloured community to unite and accept the facilities offered by Safa which Mr Gilmour claims could help develop the Coloured youth in all sporting fields.

"We are not asking any of our youth to join us but simply to accept the coaching and financial help we have at our disposal," said Mr Gilmour.

Mr Gilmour alleges that Sacos have been behind a campaign in the Coloured townships and at primary and high schools intimidating both teachers and pupils from making use of Safa's aid.

Safa have called on all teachers to come out in the open and support Safa's case. "Sacos are not as strong as they make out they are at school level and if we can get an united front in this issue I believe it can be of tremendous benefit to our young sportsmen."

Mr Gilmour claims that because of Sacos' interference little progress is being made in promising Coloured sportsmen and women.

"Sacos offers no coaching and does nothing to encourage our youth. All we want is for every body to get a chance of using the coaches and financial assistance we can provide," Mr Gilmour said.

The FCSA under its coaching director Roy Bailey has a top-class football coaching programme but due to Sacos refusal to have anything to do with the FCSA no up-and-coming young Coloured footballers have been able to benefit from this programme.

"Sacos shout about practising non racialism but frankly we believe they do not practice what they preach in this regard," Mr Gilmour said.

"Sellouts"

He added that Safa were very disappointed in the people who put up plackards in the Coloured areas this week claiming that Safa were "sellouts".

BRIEFS

NEW LOGISTICS COMMAND--The Army has established a logistic command which will in future be responsible for the reception, storage, maintenance and supply of equipment to units. The new command will be headed by Brigadier Andrew Botes, formed Director of Army Stores. Command of the unit was handed over to him in Pretoria yesterday by the Chief of the Army, Lieut-Gen Jannie Geldenhuys, at a special parade at Defence Force headquarters. The army said that whereas in the past logistic units fell directly under the command of the Chief of the Army, they were now grouped together under the new command. "This organisational change does not imply a change in the system of logistic supply, but is part of the process of streamlining the organisation of the army. "An important task of the new command will be the reception, storage and maintenance and the supply to the distribution organisation in the SA Army of certain categories of equipment and stores. "Another important aspect of the functions of the command is technical maintenance and repair of vehicles and certain equipment. The command will handle equipment worth hundreds of millions of rands.--Sapa. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 5 Jun 82 p 8]

NEW NATIONAL MONUMENTS--Two new national monuments have been declared in the Transvaal--the former residence of a British army officer and a church. A British garrison was stationed in Potchefstroom from 1902 until the outbreak of World War I in 1914. The General's House, as the commanding officer's home was known, was the only one in the entire military camp which was built of brick. In 1923 the camp was taken over by the Witrand Care and Rehabilitation Centre and the General's House became known, as it still is, as the Superintendent's Residence. The little church which has been declared a national monument was consecrated by the first Anglican Bishop of Pretoria in Wakkerstroom in 1890. It was called St Mark's Church, but as the Anglican community in Wakkerstroom dwindled, the church was sold to the Old Apostolic Church of Africa, which still uses it as a place of worship. GRAIN ELEVATOR BLAST--A grain elevator was slightly damaged in an explosion at the Natal Agricultural Co-operative in Vryheid on Saturday night. The blast occurred shortly after midnight. Fire broke out but was soon extinguished, a police spokesman said in Pretoria yesterday. An explosive device is thought to have been the cause of the blast, but the spokesman declined to comment on the possibility of sabotage until forensic tests had been undertaken. No-one was injured, and the police are investigating, the spokesman said. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 7 Jun 82 p 12]

PLEA FOR FINGO GROUP--The General Secretary of the South African Council of Churches, Bishop Desmond Tutu, yesterday appealed on behalf of a Fingo community in the Eastern Cape which "may soon be formally be deprived by legislation of their ancestral home." Parliament would soon decide whether finally to remove the land of Fingo people in the Humansdorp-Tsitsikamma area, he said. He called on all churches to pray earnestly for the community starting on Sunday. The community was forced from its land four years ago "and reallocated in a Bantustan where their families have been broken up by migrant labour. "Every effort by the people to be allowed to return has been to no avail," he said. "May each Member of Parliament understand fully the gravity of the decision and bear in mind the command to deal justly," Bishop Tutu said.--Sapa. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 5 Jun 82 p 8]

MAIL TO TROOPS--The Defence Force has introduced a new border postal system which will ensure that mail reaches the troops in the SWA/Namibia operational area in less than half the time it used to take under the old system. From July 1, all mail, letters and parcels will be flown twice weekly to points along the border by the Air Force. Under the old system, most of the mail was transported by rail and road from Windhoek and Grootfontein. The SADF handles about 9-million postal items a year.--Sapa. BLACKS TO BE MAYORS--The select committee on the constitution tabled a comprehensive list of amendments to the Black Local Authorities Bill. The Bill, introduced by the Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof, earlier in the session is one of three pieces of legislation aimed at improving the circumstances of urban Blacks. Before second reading the Bill was referred to the select committee on the constitution under the chairmanship of the Minister of Internal Affairs, Mr Chris Heunis. Organisations which submitted written representations on the Bill--providing for the establishment of local committees, village and town councils for Blacks--included Inkatha, the Department of Co-operation and Development, the SA Institute for Public Administration and the Urban Foundation. Among the amendments proposed by the committee is that the heads of elected Black local authorities be designated mayoys and deputy mayors instead of chairmen and deputy chairmen as proposed in the original Bill.--Sapa. PIG IRON OUTPUT--Output of pig iron for the first quarter of 1982 showed an increase of 2,5 percent, compared with the same period a year ago, according to Seifsa. South Africa steel mills output for the first quarter of 1982, reflecting the continuing depressed export sales, showed a marginal increase on the same period a year ago. The ferro alloys manufacturing industries, together with the producers of manganese and silicon metals, advised that their first quarter output reflected an overall 13,0 percent increase compared with the very low production levels of the same period a year ago. Reasonable gains in the output of ferro manganese and ferro silicon were offset by a 3,3 percent drop in the output of the export-intensive ferro chromium sector and a decrease of some 20 percent in production levels of the manganese and silicon metals section. The first quarter output for iron castings, an important sector of South African foundry activity, reflected a decrease of 14,0 percent, compared with the same period a year ago. Tonnages reported for steel castings showed an increase of 3,5 percent and non-ferrous castings reported a 15,0 percent improvement on last year's comparative period.--Sapa. NEW COLLEGE PLANNED--A multi-million rand college of education, technology and business management is being planned for the Ga'rankuwa/Mabopane area. The college--expected to be completed by 1985--will be an integral part of the University of Bophuthatswana, the rector, Professor E Makhene, said yesterday. A site between Ga'rankuwa and Mabopane had been acquired for the college. The planned college will be known as the Odi Campus of the University of Bophuthatswana.--Sapa. PETROLEUM EXPORT VIOLATION--Pretoria--It was the purpose of the Reconstituted Nationalist Party and of its newspaper DIE AFRIKANER to shock the public with the publication of a confidential Telex from the South African Railroads regarding the export of SASOL [South African Coal, Gas and Oil Corporation] fuel to South Africa's neighboring countries. This was the testimony presented here yesterday by Mr Louis Stofberg, chief secretary of the party. He was testifying in the case in which the party's chief executive, Mr Jaap Marais, had to appear on the charge that he violated the Act on Petroleum Products. In pursuance with this act no information may be published on the origin and production of petroleum products or over negotiations or the transportation of petrol. The maximum penalty for such a violation is a fine of 7,000 rand or 7 years in jail. Mr Marais (59), who resides at Van Soelenstraat, Rietondale, Pretoria, denied guilt. The case has been postponed to 21 May. [Text] [Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 12 May 82 p 4] 7964

Kaunda's, Chidumayo's Statements, Sianga's Poem

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 May 82 p 1

[Text] PRESIDENT Kaunda has urged the National Commission for Development Planning to work out ideas which must be implemented for the benefit of people in all parts of the country.

Speaking before he held a working session with the NCDP Minister Dr Henry Mebeelo and his staff which included directors and deputy directors, Dr Kaunda said the work of the commission was not an easy one.

The commission had a difficult job in that it had to choose from many demands of the people which must be met from limited resources, both human and material.

He told workers that as chairman of the commission, he deliberately did not frequent the institution as this would give the impression that he did not trust them.

He hoped they would grow in their jobs and use their talents for the benefit of people who were the masters.

He was delighted to visit the commission which, he said, was a "very important centre."

Chairman of the Party committee at the commission Mrs Suya Chidumayo said the visit by Dr Kaunda was a great moment for all workers at the institution.

Workers valued the visit because it gave them great inspiration and boosted their morale.

She said the ailing economic situation in the country had made the work of the NCDP even more difficult.

From the submissions the commission received, it was clear that people's demands had risen while financial resources had declined.

Social planning could help bring about greater achievements. "There is need for socialist planners to attend courses in socialist countries."

She informed the President that 18 district planning units would be opened this year.

Despite strong resistance and unpopularity the commission was facing, it was determined to implement Party and Government policies, she said and later presented Dr Kaunda with a miniature hoe and a statue of a woman pounding maize.

And one of the economist at the commission Mr Stephen Sianga read a poem to the President dedicated to scientific socialism.

It reads:

In the bush a rugged hoe misses a rugged tree

In the town station a teenager shouts his lungs out

The hunger bites deeper and pushes them on in the office, His Excellency Dr K.D. Kaunda rakes his brains

Too many problems and too many solutions

Too many hungry and too many unemployed

Too many disillusioned and too many defections.

His solutions or rather his attempts demand scientific socialism,

The peasant and the teenager understand not

The defenders of neo-colonialism stand firm

The bishop distorts it

The capitalist maliciously condemns it

The solutions become targets of anger:

Why? asks the worker.

The leader learns a lesson and stands firm,

The hungry, the disillusioned, the exploited, the oppressed look to him with begging faces

To them he is the saviour and the feeder

They want him to do his job

All the progressives and history are with us: we move forward with scientific socialism.

Nation Expects Results from NCDP

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 May 82 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text] A POEM was read to President Kaunda in Lusaka yesterday when he visited the offices of the National Commission for Development Planning of which he is chairman. The poem, from Tennyson, read:

"So many worlds, so much to do, so little done, such things to be." That was indeed a very powerful message.

If anything, and for the benefit of the protesting churches, that is the language of scientific socialism.

In any given country or institution, planning is the key to success. Unfortunately in Zambia, only until recently have we given planning its rightful place. Hitherto it has been haphazard.

Since Independence in 1964 planning in Zambia has shifted from one ministry to another with confused results.

To give it the necessary impetus and a new dimension it was turned into a commission in 1980 under the chairmanship of President Kaunda.

But the President's visit to the commission's headquarters yesterday was very significant. It was the first time he has done so since its establishment in 1980.

By his own admission yesterday he had in the past, "deliberately not visited it regularly" perhaps to avoid creating the impression that he did not trust the many planners there.

The high point of his visit there yesterday was to clearly demonstrate his grave concern for the developmental planning process of the nation. This is shown by the pledge he made to the workers.

From now on he is going to visit the commission's headquarters every month and, if not possible, on a quarterly basis. Has something gone drastically wrong now with the planning commission to warrant that much of the President's time?

The National Commission for Development Planning (NCDP) is supposed to be a super structure looking at the developmental needs of the entire nation through the various agencies.

But there are worrying questions about its very existence and about its work so far. Is it true that it may be operating illegally; that it has no legal backing; that it is not established under an Act of Parliament?

What answers has it to the challenge that it has so far been acting merely as a conveyor belt of international capital to the Zambian off-shoots of that international capital, the so-called local "dissident" Zambian entrepreneurs?

Is it true that there is no project as such being undertaken by any Government agency like the Public Works Department (PWD) other than by the parastatals who also sub-contract to private companies with outside loyalties?

Why is it anybody's guess how transactions are done from the NCDP through the tender board to the recipient parastatal and on to the private sub-contractors?

A specific example is that of the NCDP itself. It is putting up an office complex costing over K200,000. The complex is to be commissioned any time from now. And yet the builder of the complex is a private company with serious connections with South Africa.

Surely couldn't the Ministry of Works and Supply have carried out this particular project and thus provide employment to Government planners, bricklayers, plumbers, carpenters at minimal cost to the Party and its Government?

Already there is a very big problem over international loans that have been offered to Zambia through the NCDP.

So many loans have been negotiated for, but nothing seems to be really taking off in terms of real development and our much avowed food production programme.

The over K90 million French loan has seemingly been diverted to buying French Renault buses and Peugeot cars for Tours and Lodges. The West German loan for over K82 million appears to have been shared among local companies with strong connections with West Germany.

This is a clear indication that national planning which has been going on so far has just been transporting international capital to local proteges.

Meanwhile, what cadre do we have at the NCDP to assist Zambia to overcome these contradictions and help her realise her goals according to the philosophy of Humanism? How credible are our planners and how seriously are they looking at the nation's developmental problems? How qualified are they?

The NCDP is in charge of the nation's capital Budget. How much does it know of the aspirations of the people? Is it involving the people or merely projecting for them from its drawing tables in Lusaka? How does it define the nation's priorities?

Is the NCDP able to interpret national projects politically? It is most welcome that Dr Kaunda will now be visiting the NCDP regularly. The nation expects results and not stories from NCDP.

MULEMBA SAYS FAILURE TO IMPLEMENT DECISIONS MAJOR UNIP WEAKNESS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 May 82 p 1

[Excerpt] ONE of the major weaknesses of the Party is its failure to implement decisions and resolutions reached at various meetings, Party Secretary-General Mulemba said yesterday.

Officially opening a seminar for Party committees at places of work attended by ward leaders at Lusaka's Mulungushi Hall, Mr Mulemba said that failure had led to a continuous discussion of the same problems at different Party forums.

It was because of that he appreciated the seminar as it would go a long way in increasing Party leaders' awareness on their role in the development of Zambia.

Party committees should be taken seriously because if effectively organised they could strengthen the Party and lead to increased productivity.

It was the Party's conviction that both workers and management had a vital role to play in the development of the economy but he noted that the goal could not be realised in the absence of efective and well organised Party committees.

He regretted that some companies in Zambia viewed Party committees with suspicion because they thought they were there to spy on them or take over their powers.

The duty of Party committees was to ensure that enterprises operated within Party policies, ensure discipline, instil political education among workers and to counter subversive activities and damage to company property.

Since Independence it had been the Party's objective to develop and sustain all the five areas of human endeavour.

● The Party has announced new election regulations in which veto powers have been delegated to ward, district and provincial committees.

Freedom House administrative secretary and Member of the Central Committee Mr Axon Soko announced the regulations in a supplement to the latest issue of the Government Gazette.

Under the new regulations, the Central Committee has delegated powers of approving candicates for Party elections to the ward committee for approval of candidates seeking election to section committee.

Powers have also been given to the provincial committees for approval of candidates seeking election to ward committees.

MINISTER SAYS UNZA MUST INCREASE OUTPUT OF MEDICAL GRADUATES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 31 May 82 p 1

[Text] IT will take Zambia between 65 and 80 years to produce the required number of doctors unless the University of Zambia increased its output of medical graduates, Ministry of Health permanent secretary Dr Joseph Kasonde said in Kitwe at the weekend.

The present ratio of doctors to the population was one doctor to 9,000 persons but the required ratio was at least one doctor to 3,000 people.

Of the total 700 doctors in the country, only 200 were Zambians at least 2,000 Zambian doctors a year should be trained for the situation to be satisfactory.

Dr Kasonde, who was addressing an annual general meeting of the Zambia Medical Association, northern branch in Kitwe, said of the 30 to 40 medical graduates from the University of Zambia every year, only 20 to 30 were Zambians.

"At this rate it would take 65 to 80 years to achieve (the country's medical) objective and who knows what the population of Zambia will be in 80 years?"

There was need for the university to increase its output of medical graduates, to monitor and guide post-graduate training doctors and to increase the use of para-medical personnel throughout the country.

To monitor the implementation of the three priorities, the Ministry of Health set up an appropriate procedure two years ago which had a manpower development committee headed by himself and which consisted of representatives from various medical fields inside and outside the country.

"This committee meets quarterly and reviews the output at various categories as a basis for planned training."

The committee, he said had three sub-committees, the para-medical sub committees, a sub-committee on pharmacists and a nursing sub-committee.

MINISTER: FOREIGNERS WITH RESIDENT STATUS IMPEDE ZAMBIANIZATION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 2 Jun 82 p 1

[Text] FOREIGNERS enjoying resident status have become a serious impediment to effective Zambianisation.

Minister of State for Labour and Social Services Mr Cosmas Masongo said this in an interview yesterday in which he urged the Government to review the Zambianisation policy.

For the policy to be more meaningful, it must have legal backing to make the decisions of the Zambianisation committee binding and effective.

"We must have physical Zambianisation, not the kind of Zambianisation where aliens cling to jobs just because they enjoy resident status."

If aliens wanted to be Zambian residents, they should find their own jobs where they would not deprive Zambians of a livelihood or position.

Mr Masongo who is responsible for implementing the policy said in the past, the Zambianisation committee had not been getting to the root cause of the problems of Zambianisation.

"I now have the facts and I would like the assistance of the Party and its Government to implement my programme by removing stumbling blocks from my path."

Emphasising the need for a law to back up Zambianisation, he said policy alone was not enough because although the committee might have the powers, it needed legal backing to seal its decisions.

"The law should force some people out. These people have remained in jobs which could be done by Zambians for years just because they have powerful full-backs and the committee cannot remove them because they have resident status.

"I am bitter and worried about this protective resident status because people enjoying this are even more arrogant than expatriates. I am fed up with this set up because I cannot move."

BADEA TO CONTINUE 'PROPPING UP INVESTMENTS' IN DBZ

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Jun 82 p 2

[Text] THE Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa (BADEA) has renewed its pledge to continue propping up investments into the Development Bank of Zambia.

Only weeks ago DBZ was singled out as one of the few African development banks that continued to run at reasonable profit and offer dividends to shareholders.

The pledge was given by African Development Bank (ADB) president Mr Willa Mung'omba at Mulungushi Hall during the signing of a K10 million loan agreement between the ADB and the DBZ.

And the BADEA's 1981 annual report just released in Lusaka recalls that in contrast to the profit of about K87,500 made by DBZ in 1975 the latest result underlined the bank's dynamism and sound management.

The operations of the DBZ which registered a net income in the region of about K2,625 million in the financial year ended March 31 last year had been highly profitable the report says.

"According to projections till 1986, the financial results of the institution (DBZ) should continue to be good."

The long term debt/capital ratio, at present standing at one could attain four in 1986 — 400 per cent being the ceiling authorised by such international agencies for local development banks — which highlights the scope of the bank's borrowing power.

The report confirms BADEA's board of directors' report after their meeting in Khartoum last November that Zambia was one of several African countries to benefit from loans totalling K40 million extended by BADEA.

In its Press release issued later in the same month the Arab Bank lent Zambia K10 million and praised DBZ for its sound operations and making good nett profits.

Similar assertion is contained in the BADEA's annual report which adds that Arab Bank's facility, to be reinvested by the DBZ, has been granted in the form of a K10 million line of credit on nine years maturity (after three years grace period) and annual interest at the rate of eight per cent.

Earned

"The DBZ's general good health, and its role in investment promotion have earned it the support of such leading development institutions as the World Bank, the KFW and the European Investment Bank," the report says.

The line of credit will help investment activity of the DBZ which was established in 1972 and specialised in agriculture, agro-industrial and industrial development. The bank began operations in January 1974.

The Zambian bank aims to promote investments, by supplying medium and long-term credits and equity participation in such sectors as manufacturing, agro-industry, transport, energy, tourism and mining.

By June last year, DBZ has 200 loans with a total commitment of about K116 million. In the course of the financial year ended March last year, DBZ considerably accelerated the pace of its operations, supporting 70 projects with a total commitment of about K49 million, the report says.

SIDA DIRECTOR RAPS DELAY IN GOVERNMENT'S SENDING OF FUNDS TO PROJECTS

Director's Interview

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Jun 82 p 1

[Text] THE Swedish International Development Authority is concerned at the "endemic" inability of the Zambian Government to promptly channel the SIDA's financial contributions to designated projects.

And unless the Government allowed cooperative unions to market crops at economical prices, the co-operative movement would collapse.

Speaking in an exclusive interview with the Times of Zambia before he left at the end of his two-week visit, SIDA director-general Mr Anders Forsse, said yesterday his organisation had been urging the Government to streamline its channeling of funds for more than three years.

SIDA found it difficult to justify before the Swedish government and parliament why its budget of cooperation with the Government should be increased if funds already donated were baulked in the administrative machinery.

"One of the problems we have found in our carrying out our cooperation agreements is that the routine practised by Zambian authorities when channeling out financial contributions to agree upon projects has been less than efficient.

The money was not deviated to other projects neither did it go missing but SIDA's concern was that it took a long time to reach its destination.

The delay was evident both in the way the Government dealt with payments from contributions from SIDA for local expenditure in terms of wages and rent and for foreign payments.

In his discussions with various Zambian officials he had been assured the matter was worrying the Government too and efforts to remedy the situation were being made.

He said this assurance was also given to him by President Kaunda when he met him at State House on Sunday.

NCDP Mismanaging International Loans, Grants

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 2 Jun 82 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text] AGAIN today we take issue with our planners at the National Commission for Development Planning (NCDP), not out of malice, but out of a genuine grave concern about its operations so far.

On Monday, quick in the footsteps of our weekend comments, came the publicly expressed anger from an honoured Swedish guest after his two-week visit to Zambia.

He was none other than Mr Anders Forsse, the director-general of the Swedish International Development Authority (SIDA).

He was openly riled with, and said SIDA was concerned at the "endemic" inability of Zambia to promptly channel SIDA's financial contributions to designated projects.

That could only be pointing to the red tape in the NCDP, for which Zambia has not only shamefully been disgraced, but also as a result of which Zambia may well lose the international goodwill she now wastefully enjoys.

Zambia has at present bilateral aid agreements with 24 countries: one in Africa, two in the Middle East; three in Asia; two in the Americas; and 16 in Europe.

She also has multilateral aid agreements with nine international aid agencies.

Out of all these all the aid that Zambia receives from Sweden is in form of grants. Swedish aid is one of the best Zambia has enjoyed. It is widespread and progressively generous.

So when the SIDA chief complains and is angry with Zambia, we should take serious stock of the operations of the NCDP.

SIDA's complaint is shared not only by most donor nations, but also by many concerned Zambians. So many loans have been signed but speedy and proper utilisation of those loans and grants is terribly lacking.

That points to a state of confusion at NCDP as to what the nation's priorities are; how to plan for the nation as a whole; where to site already determined projects; how to carry out local feasibility studies for those projects; and from which countries to shop for the necessary finance.

From the ad hoc manner in which things are going, it appears that the NCDP has scuttled Zambia's Third National Development Plan (TNDP), which should be our "bible" for development.

Are the projects now being negotiated for under that plan? What inventory is taken of the TNDP and what mechanism has the NCDP to ensure that a proper schedule for projects is followed and the TNDP adhered to?

As it is we have allowed the donor countries to dictate to us where they want to invest and why, and to carry out feasibility studies at great cost to the nation. Projects are not fairly distributed.

The West Germans have concentrated their aid in the North-Western Province; the Dutch in the Western Province; the Swedes in Western and Eastern provinces; the EEC in Luapula and Northern provinces; the British in Central and Northern provinces etc.

Is this not allowing a new "scramble" for Zambia? Is the Party and its Government aware of the possible dangers of this type of balkanising Zambia through NCDP's mismanagement of international loans and grants?

We should all help President Kaunda in ensuring that henceforth the NCDP carries its enormous task speedily and in the spirit of "One Zambia, One Nation".

PERFORMANCE OF ECONOMY DURING THIRD QUARTER 'SLUGGISH'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Jun 82 p 4

[Text] INADEQUATE foreign exchange caused by continued low copper prices and cobalt sales contributed largely to the sluggish performance of Zambia's economy during the third quarter of last year.

The latest issue of the quarterly Financial and Statistical Review of the Bank of Zambia says many industries were affected and operated below capacity because of the shortages of imported raw materials and other inputs.

The unfavourable foreign exchange position was evidenced by unsatisfactory external payments resulting in a deficit in the balance of payments.

Other developments in the economy during the third quarter of 1981 included increases in total domestic credit and total money supply and the persistent shortfall between Government expenditure and revenue.

Copper production declined from 148,000 tonnes at the end of the second quarter in June to 140,000 tonnes at the end of the third quarter while cobalt output fell from 735 tonnes to 486 tonnes during the same period.

Total expenditure which rose by 78 per cent during the quarter represented an improvement of 12 per cent on the corresponding quarter of the previous year.

As a result of these movements, the report says, the deficit of K40.6 million during the quarter was much smaller when compared with deficits of K77.6 million and K99.6 million during the previous quarter and the corresponding quarter of 1980 respectively.

The various Government receipts indicate that the largest share consisted of those from income tax followed by taxes on domestic goods and services which occupied the second position.

Taxes on foreign trade occupied the third position and the report observes that at K99 million receipts from income tax accounted for some 40 per cent of the total.

At this level income tax receipts rose by 22 per cent compared to the second quarter of 1981 but declined by 11 per cent from those recorded in the corresponding quarter of 1980.

Some 41 per cent of income tax receipts came from other taxes including Selective Employment Tax (SET).

The report explains that Pay As You Earn (PAYE) and company tax accounted for 32 per cent and 26 per cent of income tax respectively. — Business Review Reporter/Zam.

SACIKA SAYS EXISTING PRICING POLICIES OUGHT TO BE REVIEWED

Sacika's Speech

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 30 May 82 p 1

[Text] ESSENTIAL commodities sold on the black market in Lusaka cost up to 300 per cent of their controlled price, chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, Mr Sketchley Sacika said in Lusaka yesterday.

He said the purpose of price control was to protect the low-income groups but there was strong evidence those groups were highly vulnerable.

"If we are to deal with this problem adequately, the existing pricing policies ought to be reviewed to take into account the need to improve the profitability of the companies manufacturing essential goods."

Mr Sacika was speaking on "prices and incomes policy in Zambia" during the annual general meeting of the Consumers Protective Association at the University of Zambia's Ridgeway campus.

Judging from Press reports, one got the impression that the public had lost confidence in the nation's price control system.

But Mr Sacika said he wanted to make a few observations on the matter.

It was his feeling that such a lesson was all too familiar to most people, as cases of overcharging on controlled goods in conventional retail outlets and on the blackmarket continued to be the order of the day.

This was in spite of the relentless campaign by the authorities to wipe out the vices.

According to a survey conducted by the Central Statistics Office (CSO) last year, essential goods sold on the blackmarket in Lusaka fetched up to 300 per cent of their controlled price.

In rural areas where no conventional retail outlets or blackmarkets existed, people had to do without essential goods even if they had the money.

"The purpose of price control is to protect the low-income groups, and yet the evidence available strongly suggests that these groups are highly vulnerable," he said.

The small surplus of funds impeded investment and even day-to-day operations making impossible for the conglomerate to expand its operations and supply the market adequately.

While it was necessary to maintain some form of control on basic essential commodities, he thought the authorities should decide whether the present form of control was serving a useful purpose.

This was in view of the persisting supply constraints inhibiting effects on the expansion of industry because of low profitability.

Productivity, Prices, Income 'Vicious Circle'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 31 May 82 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text] THAT prices went up by only five per cent between December and last March compared to 9.9 per cent over the same period in 1981 (as reported in the latest quarterly of consumer price statistics) should not solace the Zambian consumer.

It is possible that the figures are based on calculations taken from Government-announced — or is it Government-controlled? — prices and as such they therefore do not reflect the true picture.

Legally there are price controls on the majority of goods, beverages, clothing and other services in Zambia but the official prices are on paper only.

What the consumer actually pays at the local market, grocery shop or retail outlet is many times over the gazetted price.

So it is rather naive to believe that in real terms inflation dropped to 8.9 per cent for the low income group and 11.1 per cent for the high bracket in March as compared with 14.4 per cent and 10.2 per cent in the same month last year.

Of course the Central Statistical Office admits that falling inflation does not mean dropping prices or even a low cost of living rate.

But as it is the national body its statistics should show the situation as it prevails.

When he addressed the Consumer Protective Association meeting in Lusaka on Saturday chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission Mr Sketchley Sacika expressed concern at the 300 per cent mark-ups of goods on the black market.

We agree with Mr Sacika that the present price control system needs review because it is misleading and therefore not serving a purpose.

Why restrict manufacturing companies from making profits when the restricted goods they produce fetch 300 or more per cent when sold on the black market?

In a way the controls are counter-productive in that they discourage companies which are already inhibited by foreign exchange problems from producing non-profit making items.

Another sore point related to prices is that of incomes. Already the Zambia Federation of Employers has voiced anxiety at the demands which trade unions have started to make.

Mr Sacika says for nine years incomes have not kept pace with price rises and consequently the standard of living of the people, especially the urban workers, has declined.

But we have to consider that employers are not making money because they cannot produce to targeted levels. It is either they increase wages bills and shut down in a short time or maintain wages at a containable rate and keep people in employment.

How can a company which used to produce 10,000 shirts a month three years ago but due to forces beyond its control makes 500 today be expected to increase wages by 45 per cent and stay open?

It is a vicious circle we have on our hands of productivity, prices and incomes.

MUZ CHAIRMAN WARNS ZCCM NOT TO MISINTERPRET COST SAVING MEASURES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 May 82 p 1

[Text] Mineworkers Union of Zambia (MUZ) chairman Mr Timothy Walamba has warned Zambia Consolidated Copper Mines (ZCCM) divisions not to misinterpret the new cost saving measures announced recently to avoid misunderstandings among the miners.

Commenting for the first time since the ZCCM's chairman and chief executive Mr Francis Kaunda announced tough measures aimed at averting a crisis in the mining industry because of the low copper prices and effects of the inflationary pressure, Mr Walamba said yesterday that operating divisions should conduct their briefings in good faith like their head office had done instead of confusing issues.

MUZ was happy with Mr Kaunda's briefing and agreed with him on most of the steps taken to save the industry from collapse.

"Our only concern is that the interpretation of the measures at the lower level of management might not be the same with that at the top level".

He blamed the confusion which followed the publication of the pension scheme for miners two months ago on mine officials who conducted the briefings as they had misinterpreted details of the scheme.

Mr Walamba welcomed the move to reduce expatriate labour by 500 because it would give opportunity to Zambians to rise.

'SERIOUS SHORTAGE OF FOOD' LOOMING IN MAGUMWI WARD, SESHEKE DISTRICT

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 May 82 p 2

[Excerpt] A SERIOUS shortage of food is looming in Magumwi ward of Sesheke district where rivers have already dried up, ward chairman Mr Edward Mutengaziko warned in Livingstone.

He asked the Government to extend the family relief by providing food after this year's draught which destroyed crops.

Despite efforts by farmers in his ward to grow food, most of them harvested nothing.

"Should the Government fail to give aid to this ward there is a likelyhood of loss of lives."

The Government should provide water because the only source, Machile stream, was rapidly drying up because of insufficient rains this year.

Electricity

"There is even fear that Magumwi School may close down as a result of having no water. I therefore request the Government to give directives to our local water affairs department to dig up open wells in places which I reported to our district council."

INVESTMENT IN AGRICULTURE 'NEEDED TO IMPROVE ECONOMY'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 31 May 82 p 1

[Text] FOR Zambia to improve her tottering economy there is need to increase investment in agriculture.

Chairman of the Economy and Finance Sub-Committee of the Central Committee Mr Elijah Mudenda said it was also vital to improve the efficiency of administrators and restructure the manufacturing industry.

He said these measures must be undertaken in the shortest time possible.

Speaking when he closed a joint ward and Party committees at places of work seminar at Mulungushi hall at the weekend, Mr Mudenda said apart from the world-wide economic trend, the present state of Zambia's economy was in part caused by its economic history.

At Independence Zambia did not inherit much of the economic infrastructure and the economy was heavily dependent on copper.

Zambia must institute its own measures of rehabilitating its economy in the face of a bleak international economy.

The ever-increasing bill for raw materials continued to be a foreign exchange drain.

"In the Zambian economy, therefore, the major task is to manage, generate and conserve foreign exchange. We have succeeded in diversifying the sources of revenue, but we have not yet succeeded in diversifying the sources of foreign exchange.

"Unless we solve this problem national development will be frustrated."

He said Zambia should now launch a programme to develop the organisational talents of its administrators so they could become more efficient.

Programmes of work must be instituted systematically and projects implemented efficiently.

He appealed to all Zambians to help get the agricultural industry off the ground. This effort should include more involvement in agricultural production by urban Zambians.

Urban and peri-urban communities could provide an opportunity for the youth to be gainfully occupied through farming.

The past season had shown how vulnerable the country was because it relied on crops grown during the rain season.

To avoid spending much foreign exchange on food imports targets for investment in agriculture should be higher than the nation's needs.

If Zambia consumed eight million bags of maize a year it should try to invest in such a manner as to produce 16 million bags, he said.

Passed

On the reorganisation of the manufacturing industry, Mr Mudenda said by importing raw materials the country's industries imported inflation whose costs were eventually passed on to the consumer.

Industries which depended on imported raw materials did not operate at full capacity when Zambia was short of foreign exchange. This resulted in shortages and redundancies from time to time.

He said the Zambia Consolidated Copper Mines had set a good example which ought to be emulated by a number of industries because it had rationalised both in terms of its structure and operations.

He praised the new spirit of enterprenuership evident in townships where people made lamp shades, display cabinets and baskets from local materials.

This informal sector must be given every support since it was making do without any support from financial institutions.

ZAMBIA RAILWAYS TO START MANUFACTURING OWN WAGONS SOON

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Jun 82 p 2

[Excerpt] ZAMBIA Railways will soon start manufacturing its own wagons to alleviate the shortage of rolling stock on the system.

This was announced yesterday to Member of the Central Committee Mrs Chibesa Kankasa when she toured new Zambia Railways workshops with 14 district political chairmen from the Women's League attending a political education course at the President's Citizenship College in Kabwe.

The company's chief mechanical engineer Mr Moffat Shankaya informed Mrs Kankasa the project was already well underway.

Mr Shankaya complained, that the company was facing an acute shortage of foreign exchange for spare parts to maintain a fleet of lomotive engines which had broken down.

Speaking at a luncheon at the railway training centre, Mrs Kankasa told the railways assistant general manager for administration Mr Cyrus Ndyamba and manager for industrial participation and public relations Mr Alex Lubinda that her delegation was impressed with the work of Zambia Railways.

INSTITUTE CONCERNED ABOUT 'CHRONIC' SHORTAGE OF BRICKS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 28 May 82 p 2

[Text] THE Zambia Institute of Architecture is concerned about the "chronic" shortage of bricks and why the problem has not been solved.

The association has invited people facing the bricks shortage to approach it for help.

The latest publication "IN SITU" says some projects were being affected by the shortage.

Local bricks were attractive and economically well-priced and that they required no foreign exchange but the institute could not understand why bricks should be in short supply.

"Why at this time of the year do we find our projects affected by the chronic shortages and why nasn't something been done to alleviate the problem?" it asks.

The institute has called on authorities with the relevant information on the abortive Nega Nega and Kapiri Mposhi bricks factories to give reasons why they were shut down.

"Unless the nature of the failure is understood, the community stands in danger of repeating the same mistake and thereby squander our limited resources."

It is necessary to have a centralised body to represent the needs of the building industry because this would enable potential developers to benefit from the opinion of others concerning construction matters.

SOME PARASTATAL COMPANIES FAIL TO SUBMIT CORPORATE PLANS TO ZIMCO

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 2 Jun 82 p 2

[Text] SOME parastatal companies have failed to submit their corporate plans to Zimco despite the last November deadline.

Corporate plan consultant at Indeco Mr Paavo Tahtinen told participants at the opening of a seminar for Zimco personnel in Lusaka yesterday that some corporate plans were still missing.

He said corporate plans aimed at controlling and directing economic activities were still being commonly regarded as a "waste of time within prevailing circumstances".

Corporate planning was an efficient instrument for identifying problems, anticipating changes and preparing companies to accept the changes to enable them to perform well with little resources available.

Mr Tahtinen noted that Zambia's annual growth at 3.3 per cent meant an annual population increase of 180,000. This coupled with high oil bills, unemployment figures, indicated a drastic need for parastatals to adopt corporate planning.

Anticipated foreign exchange earnings for the Indeco group in the next five years was K14 million, but about K220 million was needed annually to keep operations running.

Mr Tahtinen told participants drawn from a number of Zimco companies that they should learn the structure of the instrument which helped them to adopt efficient and professional management skills.

He said the final outcome of the process, a budget type set of figures, merely indicated the anticipated outcome of actions planned for.

MANAGING DIRECTOR SAYS ZAMOX MADE PROFIT THIS YEAR

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 28 May 82 p 2

[Text] ZAMOX made a profit of K3.7 million this year, managing director Mr Robert Lees said in Lusaka.

He said the Indeco subsidiary was poised for a major expansion programme which would include the opening of a huge nitro-oxide plant in December.

Mr Lees was speaking during the Zamox reception held at a Lusaka hotel on Wednesday night which was attended by Party and Government officials, heads of parastatal and private organisations.

Like any other industrial concerns his company had been affected by the world recession, high oil prices and foreign exchange problems.

But the company was operating efficiently and he commended the 500 workers throughout the country for their loyalty and dedication to duty.

"We made a profit of K3.7 million this year. I should thank Indeco who are the majority shareholders for their continued assistance."

Zamox was a large company producing almost all industrial gases required by the mines and other construction industries for welding.

The company supplied medical oxygen and it manufactured nitro-oxide for use in hospitals. Therefore, it was an important organisation as far as the economy of the country was concerned, he said.

On reports that some hospitals and other industries were experiencing a shortage of oxygen, Mr Lees said the complaints were not justified because there had not been a shortage of oxygen of late.

He conceded that in the past there had been a shortage of nitro-oxide in hospitals because Zamox was importing the stuff.

"But now we are opening in December our own nitro-oxide plant using locally produced ammonia nitrate from Nitrogen Chemicals in Kafue."

Nitro-oxide produced locally would not only meet the country's requirements but also for export to Zaire, Malawi and Tanzania.

On foreign exchange, he said his company was fortunate in that making oxygen meant using natural air.

Zamox manufactured other commodities such as dissolved acetylene which required raw materials and because of this the company had been hit by shortage of foreign exchange.

"We try to use local products whenever possible."

Explaining Zamox operations, Mr Lees said his company made two types of oxygen — liquid oxygen used in mines and gaseous oxygen used in cylinders.

Liquid oxygen was supposed to be stored in special containers and the company had recently imported a large number of them which were geared to increase the capacity of oxygen storage in customers' plants.

'NO DUAL CITIZENS BY 1983'--SAYS ZVOBGO

Bill Expected To Pass

Harare THE HERALD in English 25 May 82 p 1

[Text] NO ONE will be allowed to hold dual citizenship in Zimbabwe, by the end of this year, the Minister of Legal and Parliamentary Affairs, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, said yesterday.

He said a Bill to stop people holding the citizenship of Zimbabwe and another country at the same time had been prepared and printed and was now waiting for presentation to the House of Assembly when it resumes on June 16.

In an interview, the minister said the Bill would go through Parliament easily because it did not need 100 percent support. "We already have majority support for the amendment of the Constitution," he said.

Dr Zvobgo said the move was in the interest of the nation and did not expect any uproar from any community. He noted that many countries in the world had abolished dual citizenship.

"I do not see why any person should take serious exception in Zimbabwe. There is nothing sinister and all that we want is loyalty to the State," the minister explained.

On whether he had sought the opinion of the Republican Front and those who represented the white community, he said he did not see any point in doing that because he did not regard the RF as a true representative of the white community.

Dual citizenship was one of several other aspects of the Constitution which were not acceptable to the present Zimbabwe. It had been accepted at Lancaster House in order not to prolong the war.

Dr Zvobgo said the coming sessions of the House of Assembly and the Senate would be very busy because there were 30 Bills to be discussed. Most of the Bills had been printed and were ready for the resumption of Parliament on June 16.

The Bills would have total impact on changing the Constitution in line with the Government desire to transform the country. "We shall ensure that there is more than enough work for both Houses," the minister said.

End Split Loyalties

Harare THE HERALD in English 24 May 82 p 4

[Editorial: "Dual-Citizenship"]

[Text] ZIMBABWE would be a prouder, stronger nation were it not for the split loyalties of some of its citizens.

Some of these people have deserted the country when the going appeared tough — and at a time when their services were most needed here — to live in countries of which they are also citizens. And nothing will stop them returning "home" to Zimbabwe with proffered hands of reconciliation once they glimpse a rosier future here.

But who will regard such people as true allies in nation-building? Indeed who in their right minds will entrust the future and security of the country to such mercenary citizens?

One could cite other examples to support the argument against dual-citizenship in a country such as Zimbabwe which seeks to establish a non-racial society.

For this reason a Government Bill gazetted last Friday which proposes to repeal a section of the Constitution that permits dual-citizenship, is most welcome. The Bill also proposes to change another section of the citizenship chapter of the Constitution and so empower Parliament to make laws on citizenship.

For some these changes may be heart-rending, but they should be pursued to their logical end so that Zimbabweans are left in no doubt as to who belongs in this country both in word and flesh. Law-abiding non-Zimbabweans need not fear anything.

It should be admitted that at the time of independence the provision of dual-citizenship as a constitutional safeguard for the minority may have been necessary considering the apprehension caused by the war. But that necessity has surely fallen away with the declared Government policy of reconciliation which, in effect, means there is room for all who desire to be part of one Zimbabwean nation, regardless of their colour or creed?

With the security of the country threatened by the enemy next door, there is no doubt that the suspicion engendered by people holding dual-citizenships does very little to improve our race relations.

DROPPING OF LOBOLA REQUIREMENT CAUSES CONTROVERSY

Zvobgo Pronouncement

Harare THE HERALD in English 26 May 82 p 1

[Text] THE Age Majority Bill, to be presented to Parliament when it resumes on June 16, will not outlaw lobola, the Minister of Legal and Parliamentary Affairs, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, said.

However, when the Bill becomes law, lobola will no longer be a legal requirement to validate a marriage.

The Bill will set 18 as the age of majority for all Zimbabweans.

In an interview on Monday, Dr Zvobgo, who is also chairman of the Cabinet Committee on Legislation, said families would continue to charge and pay lobola if they wished to do so. "It will be a personal issue and not a legal one," the minister said.

CONSEQUENCES

He explained that reference to lobola was only one of the consequences of the Bill. Its main purpose would be to correct the minority legal status of African women.

Dr Zvobgo noted that in the past, a woman could not enter into a legal contract without the assistance of a male relative and she could not sue without the authority of her guardian. The system was unjust and unacceptable to a government with a social conscience.

He said that as a socialist country, Zimbabwe could not have one law for men and another for African women.

"At present all African women are legal minors from birth to death. Before marriage she is under the guardianship of her father or other male relatives. After marriage she passes into the guardianship of her husband and in the event of divorce, she reverts back to her father's legal guardianship.

"There are many other serious consequences of this perpetual guardianship", said Dr Zvogbo.

Hornets' Nest Stirred

Harare THE HERALD in English 28 May 82 p 16

[Editorial: "Lobola and Culture"]

[Text] DR EDDISON ZVOBGO may have stirred a hornets' nest when he suggested that when the Majority Age Bill becomes law, lobola will no longer be a legal requirement to validate a marriage.

This will not go down well with traditionalists who are likely to interpret the whole exercise as an attempt to do away with African culture altogether and as Government interference in a family's private life.

Before it was commercialised by some greedy parents, lobola was a form of a dowry in reverse, a small token of appreciation by a husband to his in-laws. Today, for whatever reason — some attribute it to the high cost of living and inflation — some young men are being made to pay as much as $3 000 for their brides.

Of course, legal changes now envisaged in the Majority Age Bill alone cannot force a change of attitudes. The new law will not force people to like each other but will lay down rules for justice between them. It will help women to stand on their own feet but cannot force them to do so any more than they can be forced to work or vote.

The proposed new law will simply enable women to be treated as adults.

All over the country — in the cities, the towns and the villages — the women have shown they are a force to be reckoned with, a power that no political party dare ignore. They played a decisive role during the liberation struggle and since Mexico, almost seven years ago, they have made great strides.

There is no doubt that women (who are more numerous than men) have been and, in some cases, still are the victims of sex discrimination. But equally, there is no doubt that some of these female activists are carrying things too far with their pin-pricking demands.

It is true that the vast majority of them, particularly those who were educated in the West, have been vociferous against lobola and even advocate the defeat of men. We also note that among them are those whose marriages have floundered, or who failed to get married.

We are glad that the Government is not doing away with lobola and has carefully skirted around the problem by saying it will be a personal issue and not a legal one. But, admittedly, it is a subject likely to generate more copy for us as people debate the advantages and disadvantages of lobola.

Further Details

[Text] A 26-year-old man was faced with a $2 000 lobola bill after he sought the consent of his girlfriend's father to marry her.

Mr Mukwasha Makwenyana, who works in the city, earns less than $400 a month. After paying rent, account and tax each month he is usually left with less than $70 for food and other general upkeep expenses. His financial situation sometimes takes a plunge when relatives show up unexpectedly from his home in Gutu.

But as a result of sacrifices in his budgeting Mr Makwenyana has so far managed to pay $600, "but there is still $1 400 to be paid. I think the Government should step in and take some decisive action to protect us. This is blatant exploitation," Mr Makwenyana remarked the other day.

In another case a young doctor who recently graduated from the University of Zimbabwe was charged over $2 000 for lobola.

Being the eldest in his family the young doctor has an added responsibility of taking care of his brothers and sisters and his parents who live on subsistence peasant farming.

"It was a severe punishment for him. The father-in-law showed no understanding at all. He was only interested in extracting a lot of money from the son-in-law. This is intolerable in independent Zimbabwe," said a sympathetic friend who was the bridesmaid at the wedding.

The two examples are a few of hundreds of cases where marrying a girl is now costing "an arm and a leg" for the boy. It is generally agreed that for everyone or two men who protest against lobola there are hundreds who accept their fate like sheep being led to slaughter.

The subject of lobola burst into the public spotlight after Zimbabwe gained her independence. Two women ministers attacked the practice but stopped short of advocating its outright abolition. The Minister of Community Development and Women's Affairs, Mrs Teurai Ropa Nhongo, and the Deputy Minister of Information, Posts and Telecommunications, Dr Naomi Nhiwatiwa, saw lobola in its present form as a handicap for the development of women.

"While lobola is exploitation of man (mukwasha) by man (tezvara) it is the woman who suffers," the Director of Legal Affairs in the Ministry of Community Development and Women's Affairs, Mrs Elizabeth Gwaunza, said, indicating the subordinate role of the woman as a wife.

A number of research studies indicated men generally opposed lobola while women supported it.

One study by the Riddell Commission saw the traditional custom of lobola being abused. "Instead of establishing a valued link between two families, lobola has been commercialised to an extreme degree, its size being dependent upon the earning capacity of the woman, usually in direct relation to her educational qualifications," noted the report.

A recent study on the position of the women in Zimbabwe which was sponsored by the Ministry of Community Development and Women's Affairs noted that nearly all the women interviewed supported the continuation of lobola. A small group advocated its outright abolition.

But the women who supported lobola were equally divided on whether the practice should be modified or not.

"Those supporting lobola saw the practice as a necessary token of gratitude from the mukwasha to the tezvara and a means of maintaining a social balance by stabilising marriage,"ssaid Mrs Gwaunza.

Unlike the hardline hawks, the doves among the pro-lobola ranks believed lobola as practised today had lost its traditional symbolic value and should be reformed. The hawks, on the other hand, supported their stand on the basis of the "rising costs of bringing up children".

The report made some recommendations calling for both short-term and long-term measures to deal with the problems of lobola.

"Considering the centrality of lobola to the socio-cultural value system of Zimbabwe, one measure would be not to make complete payment of lobola a precondition for the solemnisation of the marriage.

"There is also need to fix, by legislation, a ceiling on the maximum amount that can be paid as lobola and which could form the basis for the solemnisation of the marriage.

"Lobola should be viewed as essentially a private contract between the father-in-law and the mukwasha or umkwenyana," said Mrs Gwaunza.

On the long-term measures Mrs Gwaunza felt these would have to depend on whether society as a whole was ready for such changes.

But the report is deficient in that it carries no vigorous programme of action to educate the society against the abuse of lobola.

One observer noted that the thrust of the report was not so much to ease the suffering of the mukwasha in paying such huge bills, as to protect the interests of the woman.

"What the women want is to achieve equal status with men on the basis of the Declaration of Rights contained in the Zimbabwe Constitution, whether lobola is paid or not paid. This explains why some hawkish women advocates of commercialised lobola are also equally strong advocates of the women's liberation," the observer said.

The Ministry of Legal and Parliamentary Affairs and the Ministry of Justice have both been reviewing the African Marriages Act of 1951.

Under the Act a provincial commissioner had powers to "fix terms of marriage, if, after due inquiry, he is satisfied that such consent (from tezvara) is unreasonable or improperly withheld or refused".

The Minister of Justice, Mr Simbi Mubako, said this Act was never used and remained ineffective.

"The whole law of marriage will be reviewed. But next month the Minister of Home Affairs will introduce a Bill in Parliament that will make payment of lobola optional. All other aspects will continue to be reviewed," Mr Mubako said.

According to the Minister of Legal and Parliamentary Affairs, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, the Age of Majority Bill, due to be introduced in Parliament, will no longer make lobola a legal requirement to validate a marriage although families may continue to charge and pay lobola.

Observers see this as the Government's short-term efforts to at least weaken lobola. But it is noted that the father-in-law, instead of demanding cash payment as a precondition for the validation of marriage, will continue to demand after the marriage the balance of the inflated figure he would have charged.

"It all adds up to the same thing. It is like being asked to choose between death by an electric chair or death by starvation," commented a young man who has vowed not to marry until lobola is completely abolished.

EFFECTS OF NEW PRICE CONTROL REGULATIONS FEARED BY BUSINESS

Harare THE HERALD in English 24 May 82 p 1

[Text] THE Associated Chambers of Commerce of Zimbabwe has said some rural businessmen could go out of business as a result of the Government's new price control regulations.

In an interview at the weekend, the economist of the organisation, Miss Charity Mashongamhende, said that although the price control regulations were good, some people would certainly lose business in the rural areas because of several factors.

"Although it is too early to exactly say how badly the rural businessmen will be affected, it is clear that some will certainly lose business," she said.

EFFECTS

Miss Mashongamhende said the rural businessmen will mainly be affected by transport costs when they come into town to buy their goods.

She said a good number of them hire trucks to carry goods to their stores, groceries, etc. "These are some of the problems the rural businessmen face, although they are having a cautious approach to the new regulations."

She urged the rural businessmen to always keep the costs of the transportation of their goods before approaching the Government for exceptional cases to be considered.

"I think that genuine and exceptional cases should be considered to avert the possibility of some shops closing down."

Asked whether the commercial and rural businessmen backed the price control regulations, Miss Mashongamhende replied: "It is too early to say at the moment. They are having a cautious look at the whole situation. They are still studying the regulations in detail."

The new regulations came into force on May 1, and replaced the price freeze which was first introduced on December 17 last year.

The reason for the price freeze was to give the Government time to overhaul the whole price control system and make the necessary changes that would bring the price control into line with other related policies of the Government.

"Price control by the Government is necessary to avoid the exploitation of people, particularly in the rural areas where some businessmen were making exorbitant charges for their goods including basic essential ones," she said.

A NEED

She agreed that there was need for a structured system of reviewing applications for prices by businessmen for products under specific price control orders.

She also said there were certain areas in the regulations which were open to misinterpretation and the Ministry of Trade and Commerce "hopes to clarify certain points".

Miss Mashongamhende added: "The ministry has accepted that in some types of business, it would be impractical to follow the regulations to the letter. In such cases, the ministry will take a reasonable view."

STOP MOANING ABOUT CODE, INVESTORS TOLD

Harare THE HERALD in English 27 May 82 p 1

[Article by Tim Chigodo]

[Text] FOREIGN and local investors should heed the assurances given by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, and stop moaning about an investment code, the director of the Zimbabwe Promotion Council, Mr Jones Gondo, said yesterday.

"The Government has made it very clear that during the three-year development plan, 55 percent of the country's investment will come from the public sector while 45 percent will be from the private." Mr Gondo said in an interview.

He said the assurances given by Mr Mugabe and members of his cabinet should act as a guide to investment. There was no need for an outcry from both foreign and local investors.

Mr Gondo, whose organisation is involved in the promotion of Zimbabwe's economic potential locally and abroad, said there were international organisations operating in the country which came without any investment code.

"Why is there an outcry for a code when the Government has already given the guidelines," he said. Investors who were still not clear with the investment policy were free to go to Government offices or his office for more information.

The opening of embassies abroad by the Government had boosted efforts by ZPC to make the outside world aware of the potential for investment in Zimbabwe. The ZPC had been sending literature on the country's economy and organising briefing sessions for both local and foreign financiers.

Business tours had been organised for leading industrialists and foreign diplomats to familiarise them with the country's economic high points.

There was now a greater awareness among investors on the economic potential that existed in the country. The ZPC, in conjunction with concerted Government efforts to put Zimbabwe on the world map, had held exercises to counteract adverse publicity in the foreign Press.

Mr Gondo said businessmen who had visited the country had gone back encouraged and optimistic about the investment opportunities available. "They have had a pleasant surprise about the great economic potential in Zimbabwe," he said.

The ZPC arranged programmes for foreign businessmen to meet relevant officials in Government ministries and the private sector. The organisation worked out initially what the investors wanted before they arrived so that their itinerary was suited to their particular needs.

STOCK EXCHANGE SEEKS TO BROADEN BASE

Harare THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 21 May 82 p 1

[Text] THE four remaining brokerage firms forming the Zimbabwe Stock Exchange are making a "preliminary" investigation at present into a method of broadening the base of the exchange in view of its declining membership, said the chairman, Mr Bill Burdett-Coutts this week.

Commenting on what he described as "inaccurate" rumours that some of the few remaining members may go out of business soon, Mr Burdett-Coutts said that no one he knew of was quitting the exchange at the moment. At present there are 11 brokers among the four firms.

"All I can say basically is that there is no crisis facing the exchange," he told The Gazette.

But according to a detailed report which appeared in the Financial Mail, Johannesburg, last week, a crisis meeting to discuss the future of the dwindling Zimbabwe stock market was held earlier this month.

The report said the result was a decision to investigate inviting participation by the "so-called Non-Member Institutions." The NMIs, which include merchant banks, were to discuss the issue with the Harare Stock Exchange committee this week, after briefing the Treasury on the situation.

The report referred to the slump in stock market turnover in Zimbabwe in the last year, during which time the brokers had managed to maintain viability by dealing in South African stocks with Johannesburg.

Referring to record low index figures for the mining and industrial share markets in the past 12 months, the Financial Mail said that individual investors had dropped out of the market and that institutions, pushed by the Government into increased holdings of Government-prescribed, stocks, had not been active either.

The collapse of the gold price, the slowdown in the South African economy and the weak Rand had all served to discourage Zimbabwean investors from dealing in the Johannesburg market, the report continued.

REDUCED MARKET

"At the meeting last weekend, at least three of the four remaining brokerage houses said they either wanted to shut up shop or maintain a much reduced market presence."

The Financial Mail said that bearing in mind the very substantial holdings of equities by institutional and individual investors, the possibility of bringing in the NMIs seemed designed to enable the brokers to pass on most of the responsibility for making a market to the merchant banks and investment houses. These were better placed to absorb overheads.

"It is also a sensible move because nobody wants to see a market with only one or one-and-a-half broking firms," said the publication.

"The fact is that a stock market is a vital ingredient of any effective capital market structure. Zimbabwe, which will have to draw heavily on domestic financial resources to fund its Z$4,6 billion three-year development plan, simply cannot afford to allow the market to go to the wall."

The report ended by saying that the Zimbabwe exchange had been through some very thin times in the past, including UDI in 1965.

"But whether it can survive the combined adversity of a socialist Government, a totally depressed minerals sector, an exodus of investors and falling corporate profits squeezed by escalating costs and Government-imposed price controls, remains to be seen."

BEIRA PIPELINE UNLIKELY TO OPEN THIS YEAR

Harare THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 21 May 82 p 1

[Text] PROBLEMS of finance and security which have dogged the long-delayed opening of the Lonrho-owned oil pipeline from Beira to Mutare are still unresolved. There is little hope at present that refined oil products will be able to flow into Zimbabwe through that route this year.

Overseas sources now report that Lonrho is facing great difficulties in arranging insurance cover for the vital pipeline over the Mozambique stage of its route to Mutare. It is believed that the pipeline again suffered an attack by dissidents in Mozambique last month, but there has been no information on whether it was badly damaged.

Other negotiations which have delayed the flow of refined oil products through the pipeline into Zimbabwe, long after the previously announced target date earlier this year, concern the tariff to be paid by the Zimbabwe Government to the Mocambique Railways and Government.

According to Swiss reports published by The Gazette recently, the Mozambique Government was seeking a tariff of about $95 per tonne of oil carried through the pipeline over its territory. This would include compensation for the loss of revenue to the Mocambique Railways (CFM) which would follow the loss of oil freight and also a tariff of about $10 payable to the Mozambique Government for allowing the piped oil to pass through its territory.

It is believed these negotiations were concluded with the Mozambique Government recently.

However, in addition to these costs the Lonrho organisation, which originally built and has repaired the pipeline at a cost of many millions, is also seeking payment from the Zimbabwe Government for carrying the oil products through its installations.

Lonrho is now reported to have dropped its original asking price of about $25 per tonne piped, down to about $20 per tonne, to be adjusted at a lower price on a sliding scale over a period after ten years.

However, the Zimbabwe Government has not agreed to this price and it is understood that a tariff of only about $10, similar to that agreed with the Mozambique Government, has been offered to Lonrho.

Negotiations about the price appear to be still under way.

If the Lonrho price of about $20 per tonne were to be added to the $95 believed to have been agreed with the Mocambique Government, the oil would cost at least $115 to be pumped through to Mutare. It would then have to be railed from Mutare to Harare at an estimated cost of another $30 or so per tonne, making a total of about $145 per tonne.

HIGHER THAN DURBAN

This would appear to be much higher than the cost of about $100 per tonne to rail refined diesel products from Durban, South Africa, or the average cost of railing oil products from Maputo of about $90 per tonne.

So at present it would seem that either of these rail routes would present a more financially attractive and safer alternative, in view of the security situation threatening the Beira oil pipeline route.

However, the Zimbabwe Government obviously wishes to have various oil routes at its disposal in order to avoid being too heavily dependent on any one route.

A financial spokesman said in Harare last week: "If the transport cost of bringing refined oil products, whether bought from Algeria or on the spot market, were to go above the $140 per tonne mark from Beira to Harare, then it would obviously not be an attractive or viable proposition, especially in view of the security situation presented by the Beira route."

However, the present shortage and high cost of bringing oil products into Zimbabwe by rail is presenting considerable problems to the Government. It is estimated now to be costing almost $200 million a year and according to recent reports of the Income Tax revenue this amount is about $12 million more than the entire tax revenue collected from all companies in Zimbabwe last year of $189,5 million.

DECLINING PROFITS ENDANGER MINING INDUSTRY

Harare THE HERALD in English 22 May 82 p 1

[Text] ZIMBABWE'S mining industry is in a serious position, with declining profits and most companies expecting a loss this year, the president of the Chamber of Mines, Mr Roy Lander, said yesterday.

Speaking at the chamber's annual meeting he said the Government had to recognise the threat from low world prices and higher interest rates and wages.

Mining houses were not exploitative. "But our fundamental viability is at stake and I hope the Government fully understands the seriousness of the situation.

"What concerns me greatly is whether we can remain cost-competitive internationally. Regrettably, I simply do not expect our most hopeful price increase forecasts to be sufficient to match cost rises in the short to medium term."

The major mining houses had seen their profits, after interest payments and tax, decline from $86 million in 1980 to $40 million last year, he said.

"Right at this moment the position of the industry is very serious indeed, and I do not think it is sufficient to hope that metal prices will recover in the third quarter of this year, or even in early 1983."

He said he did not want to project what would happen this year. "But without exception, the major mining companies expect the situation to be significantly worse; most of them expect to make losses."

The Government had already come to the rescue of copper producer MTD (Mangula) and was now holding talks with Rio Tinto Mining (Zimbabwe).

Mr Lander said that last year the larger mining companies received a return on capital investment of only 4 percent. Long-term Government stock offered a return of 13 percent. In 1980 mining sector investors received 10.4 percent.

The wage and salary bill for this year could be about $100 million more over a year than before independence, an increase which could not be sustained.

Legislation preventing the dismissal of employees for indiscipline had also created headaches.

As for future State participation in the industry, he said that it was in the best interests of all concerned to get the best price for their products. Everything would be done to make the Mineral Marketing Authority work as efficiently as possible.

BRIEFS

REPATRIATED MINERS--Local mining companies with connections in South Africa have been asked by the Ministry of Labour and Social Services to reemploy some of the 5 000 Zimbabwean miners being repatriated by South Africa. A Ministry of Mines spokesman said: "It is likely that quite a number of the repatriated miners have acquired skills in South Africa that would be useful for Zimbabwe's mining industry, although the industry is in the grip of the worst recession for 20 years." With a 5,2 percent slump in mineral production last year, 23 mines have closed down from the beginning of the year with another 15 impending closures. A spokesman for the Ministry of Mines said: "In the long term, prospects for Zimbabwe's mining industry are very good. We have a large variety of minerals, so we are not dependent upon one only." [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 22 May 82 p 1]

STATE MINERAL SALES--The takeover of mineral marketing operations by the State would be gradual, the Minister of Mines, Mr Maurice Nyagumbo, said yesterday. He was speaking in Harare when he opened the 43rd Annual General Meeting of the Chamber of Mines. The Mineral Mining Corporation would either buy minerals from the producers, negotiate contracts on their behalf or authorise producers to conduct their own sales. "Mineral production is vital to our country, so all that Government is doing is to assume the authority to have some control over the disposal of minerals which until this time has been entirely in the hands of private enterprise." The corporation would conduct dealings on behalf of the producers, who would receive the entire proceeds, except for a nominal commission to cover expenses. It would not be responsible for the marketing and production of gold since this was adequately covered by the Reserve Bank. The Government was also moving swiftly towards the formation of the Zimbabwe Mining Development Corporation, which would be the vehicle for promoting Government investment in the mining industry. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 22 May 82 p 3]

ZRP SWITCH TO DATSUNS--The Zimbabwe Republic Police is to gradually phase out the Peugeot 404 as patrol cars and replace them with the Datsun Bluebirds. A police spokesman also estimated that, within the next two years, a large percentage of the force's four-wheel-drive vehicles would be Datsuns or Nissans. The ZRP introduced the Bluebird as a patrol in June last year, and to date, it represents about 40% of the force's patrol-car fleet. "The Bluebirds were chosen because they can be used as a patrol car and as an executive car. We are also evaluating the Datsun Laurel as a possible successor to Peugeot 504s for deputy commissioners, and as a highway patrol vehicle," the spokesman said. The ZRP is also going to replace the Landrovers and the Kudus with the Datsun Patrol four-wheel drive vehicle. With

101 already in use, the spokesman estimated that in three years time, every police station in the country will have the Datsun Patrol or the Datsun Tracker. He also disclosed that the force had ordered replacement motorbikes. Among others on order was the Yamaha 550P which is not yet on the world market. It is expected to be on Zimbabwe's roads in November. [Text] [Harare THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 21 May 82 p 1]

MERGER OF RAILWAY UNIONS--All five railway unions have agreed to merge, the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, announced in Bulawayo yesterday. Speaking at a brief Press conference Mr Kangai said the agreement to unite followed a morning meeting attended by trade union representatives and the Minister of Transport, Mr Farai Masango. The union also agreed to set up a committee comprising one representative from each of the five merging unions with an alternative member from each union. The committee would work out the modalities of establishing one union, Mr Kangai said. The committee will be chaired by an independent member appointed by Mr Kangai and it was expected to complete its task within "three to six months". The merging unions are, the Railways Associated Workers' Union, the National Union of Railwaymen, Railways Association of Locomotive Enginemen, Amalgamated Engineering Union and the Railway Association of Enginemen. Mr Kangai praised the merger agreement saying it was in line with Government policy of one industry one union. "If they have on union it is to their mutual advantage. The Government will find it easy to communicate with their representative and this will save a lot of time in negotiations with the management," Mr Kangai said. FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

NOTE

JPRS publications contain information primarily from foreign newspapers, periodicals and books, but also from news agency transmissions and broadcasts. Materials from foreign-language sources are translated; those from English-language sources are transcribed or reprinted, with the original phrasing and other characteristics retained.

Headlines, editorial reports, and material enclosed in brackets [] are supplied by JPRS. Processing indicators such as [Text] or [Excerpt] in the first line of each item, or following the last line of a brief, indicate how the original information was processed. Where no processing indicator is given, the information was summarized or extracted.

Unfamiliar names rendered phonetically or transliterated are enclosed in parentheses. Words or names preceded by a question mark and enclosed in parentheses were not clear in the original but have been supplied as appropriate in context. Other unattributed parenthetical notes within the body of an item originate with the source. Times within items are as given by source.

The contents of this publication in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U.S. Government.

PROCUREMENT OF PUBLICATIONS

JPRS publications may be ordered from the National Technical Information Service, Springfield, Virginia 22161. In ordering, it is recommended that the JPRS number, title, date and author, if applicable, of publication be cited.

Current JPRS publications are announced in Government Reports Announcements issued semi-monthly by the National Technical Information Service, and are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U.S. Government Publications issued by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Correspondence pertaining to matters other than procurement may be addressed to Joint Publications Research Service, 1000 North Glebe Road, Arlington, Virginia 22201.

GASOLINE STORAGE TANK EXPLODES--Cabinda, 17 Jun (ANGOP)--A temporary gasoline storage tank with a capacity of 90,000 liters exploded on Tuesday in the depot of the Angolan National Fuel Distribution Company in Cabinda, northern Angola, the ANGOP correspondent in that town reports. This incident, which has happened once before, was caused by excess temperatures caused by sun rays, Candido Feijo, an official at the Ministry of Petroleum affirmed. Candido Feijo also assured that with work on the construction of a permanent fuel tank scheduled to begin in the latter part of this year, and according to the project already established, such accidents will be avoided. It will be recalled that last March, 3 months after the outbreak of fire at the same installation, a storage tank of 45,000 liters of gasoline also exploded under the same circumstances. CHIEF OF STATE SETS FORTH ECONOMIC POLICY

Brazzaville MWETI in French No 585, 20 May 82 p 3

[Interview with Congolese Chief of State Col Denis Sassou-Nguesso by Francoise Masson and Yves de Schaetzen; date and place not specified]

[Excerpts] Question: The primary goal of the 1982-86 5-Year Plan is, and we quote, "to mobilize all national potential to end the current deterioration of the national economy." To what factors do you attribute this deterioration and what measures do you intend to take to remedy it?

Answer: Neocolonial economies, in general, are sick economies, in crisis. For historical reasons, they were export economies which were not intended in any way to satisfy the needs of the population. Their structures corresponded to the purposes assigned to them. They are also too dependent on foreign countries.

With the world economic crisis, such poorly structured economies, dependent on foreign countries, have been seriously affected, what you call the "deterioration." Other factors, which are no less significant, have also played a negative role: the frailty of natural resources and indebtedness deriving from the country's legitimate wish to acquire industrial equipment and develop itself.

We have fought and are still fighting against this neocolonial economy. We are looking for ways and means to provide our economy with the direction and new structures which will enable it to overcome the crisis.

The measures already taken and the measures which we intend to take are absolutely aimed at providing our country with a sound economy.

With regard to our balance of trade, today we are enjoying, thanks to petroleum, a credit balance in the case of exports. The Congo exported 2 times more than it imported in 1980. Besides these petroleum exports, our intention is to implement a policy of exporting raw materials with added value: timber, coffee, cacao, already processed.

With regard to our indebtedness, we have already amply expressed our desire to improve our financial situation: In our budget in 1981, we allocated 28 billion CFA francs for debt servicing, or more than 20 percent of the total debt.

We Reject Haste

Beyond these specific measures, all our future approaches and choices will satisfy three requirements: analysis, coordination and the human aspect.

We reject haste. The directives of the Third Special Congress of the Congolese Labor Party, held in March 1979, have finally been observed, although the economic situation has improved in the meantime. The preparatory work for the 1982-86 5-Year Plan lasted more than 2 years. The whole year of 1981 was devoted to studies and analyses. Allocations for the national budget will be made within a framework of coordination of both regions and sectors, so that resources will be used consistently and harmoniously. Such coordination will take place at all levels: the National Planning Council and in the various sessions of the Central Committee.

But the principal factor is our constant aim of improving the quality of our citizens' work and their commitment to the goal sought. So that everyone will feel responsible and a necessary part of achieving the collective welfare!

Our efforts therefore concern literacy, the promotion of more efficient systems of education and training, the improvement of skills and the motivation of workers and civil servants.

Oil: We Hope To Reach Production of 7 Million Tons in 1984 and Maintain It

Question: Considering that you are best informed about your country's oil prospects, based on the most exact and most recent figures available to you, what are the reserves of the People's Republic of the Congo and what is its annual production capacity from 1982 to 1986?

Answer: As you are very well aware, at the end of 5 years it is difficult to provide exact figures for both reserves and resulting annual production.

Nevertheless, at the present level of prospecting, the technological resources used and the economic environment, in particular the price of petroleum, we estimate production for 1982 at 5 million tons, with an increase of 1 million tons annually, reaching a growth rate of 7 million tons annually beginning in 1984.

With regard to the future, some fields discovered, with a low rate of recovery, represent sizable reserves: thus the Emeraude field represents more than 500 million tons. Considering the exploration effort being made by the exploiting companies, despite the natural decline of fields already under production, we can expect a certain degree of stability in this level of production.

My Country's Membership in OPEC Is Desirable

Question: If these reserves warrant the possible membership of the People's Republic of the Congo in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, do you want your country to become a member of that organization or do you instead hope that it will not join? In terms of the choice which you will have to make, what are your motives?

Answer: We think that the Congo meets the criterion of membership in OPEC, since petroleum is the main component of its gross national product. Our country's membership in OPEC is desirable in view of the significance of the petroleum sector in its economic development. We thus wish to combine our effort with OPEC's program and benefit from its ability to defend the interests of its members.

This desire to belong to OPEC goes far beyond a policy of defending petroleum prices; it is evidence of a desire to contribute to the development of the continent's countries, in particular through financing granted by OPEC funds. It is also part of the struggle of Third World countries to protect their raw materials.

Question: Since oil is often a source of artificial wealth and thus goes to the head of a country's inhabitants who, like yourself, see their production increase considerably and suddenly, what measures do you intend to take to prevent, on one hand, excessive expenditures from being made as long as the black gold flows and, on the other, to prevent the country from again being put under the supervision, once the oil is depleted, of the International Monetary Fund, as was recently the case?

Oil Will Not Go to Our Heads

Answer: Artificial wealth, that artificial expression seems too harsh. If such wealth is in fact not the result of a nation's collective effort, its wise use will nevertheless lead to positive lasting efforts. The Congo will make the most of its oil production to bolster its economic and social development. Our economic policy, established during the proceedings of our party's Third Special Congress in March 1979, is based on a self-centered and self-motivated strategy of development. This strategy is implemented in the 1982-86 Plan, which is now being completed.

For us, oil is only a means of building an independent, prosperous and job-producing economy that will not be dependent on that uncertain and nonrenewable resource. Oil will therefore not go to our heads, as you say.

The CNPF Mission and the Private Sector Will Be Most Welcome

Question: One of the specific problems of the People's Republic of the Congo is to combine, in its development policy, a public sector which considers your country's socialist choices and a foreign private sector often called on to support this development policy.

What guarantees and what reasons can you give private investors, in particular the mission of the National Council of French Employers [CNPF], which will visit Brazzaville in 1982, for taking a chance on your country?

Answer: The Third Special Congress of the Congolese Labor Party clearly stated that there would be three sectors in our country: the government sector, the semipublic sector and the private sector.

The fact of accepting the coexistence of these three sectors is a guarantee in itself. Partnerships with the government can be formed in the semipublic sector or, for those who wish to do so, investments can be made in the Congo in the private sector; only the Congolese Investment Code, which protects the mutual interests of the partners, must be observed.

The area left open to private initiative is clearly defined. A self-respecting government honors its commitments. If it observes the rules, the private sector will be protected and encouraged. We are particularly pleased over cooperation with French employers. The dialogue will be positive and advantageous for both partners. The CNPF mission to Brazzaville will be most welcome. We will provide it with the new Investment Code, will analyze the plan's various choices according to sector and will establish by joint agreement the specific slots where the action of the French private sector will be favorable to our development.

A line of credit for 1 billion CFA francs, made available to the National Development Bank of the Congo during 1981, is intended to encourage the creation of PME [small and medium-size businesses] in the Congo: This measure will definitely be to the full benefit of the private sector.

1982-86 Plan Intended To Stop Regressive Process of Hinterland

Question: In the 1982-86 Plan, what are the major industrialization or development projects whose implementation you personally hold dear? In other words, what are your priorities?

Answer: The Brazzaville/Pointe-Noire route is today being given priority as a direct result of its railroad facilities. This polarization of economic activity is being carried out at the expense of the hinterland and since the latter's potential is being developed less and less, it is entering a regressive process which is accelerating.

The 1982-86 5-Year Plan was conceived in terms of a fundamental goal: to reorganize the country, to reconquer it, to unify it and, within the framework of Congolese territory thus structured, to build a powerful production sector apart from petroleum. The priorities themselves were established for actions to industrialize and free the country: development of roads, the railroad system, opening of river and ocean ports, airports, post offices, improvement of the telephone, radio and television system, national supply of energy and drinking water, provisions to all regions, installations and equipment ... as well as measures to encourage agricultural, forest and fishing production.

All of the projects comprising the plan are based on one prerequisite: that everyone must assume responsibility for his work and his role.

Question: In the same way, do you anticipate requesting more aid from Arab funds?

Answer: The Congo intends to develop its cooperation with all countries of the world, with the exception of a very small number of them, which includes South Africa. However, Arab-African cooperation is part of South-South cooperation, whose reinforcement has been recommended in various meetings of Nonaligned Countries and the Group of 77.

The UDEAC Is Sometimes Too Timid

Question: Are you satisfied with your country's membership in the Customs and Economic Union of Central Africa [UDEAC]? If not, what are your country's suggestions for improving its operation?

Answer: The UDEAC's existence has been an excellent thing for Central African countries; it is evidence of the desire of member countries to act in concert. With regard to customs and in certain areas, the union has certainly been a success, whereas in other areas, such as industrial coordination, labor issues and opening up the market, the UDEAC has exhibited timidity and a great deal of inertia as a result of micronationalism.

During the last summit meeting in Brazzaville, the Congo made proposals for reorganizing the union and considered the prospect of expansion to include other Central African countries, in keeping with the conclusions of the Lagos economic conference.

NEW ECONOMIC PROGRAM TO FOSTER ORDERLY DEVELOPMENT

Djibouti LA NATION-DJIBOUTI in French 13 May 82 p 3

[Article by Mohamed Moussa Ali, director of planning: "The Economic and Social Planning Law: 'Control Panel for Development' "

> [Text] After explaining in an earlier article (LA NATION, No. 11, 18 March 1982) the need for a choice, in the interest of the nation, between development planning and "guesswork that cannot take into account the aspirations of all, the potentialities, and the hidden snags in all economic sectors," Mohamed Moussa Ali, director of planning, speaks today about the content and the objectives of the law on economic and social planning which has just been passed by the National Assembly after lengthy examination and debate by the Council of Ministers.

The economic and social planning law is the result of studies on the socio-economic situation before the plan. It constitutes the control panel for organized economic development..

Indeed, preparation of the planning law and its objectives required as a first step the definition of the state of the national economy. An overall analysis by sectors on the basis of a material and documentary evaluation was established.

In the various studies, we divided the nation's economy into a certain number of sectors, including

1 Agriculture, animal husbandry, fishing
2 Rural hydraulic engineering
3 Industry and energy
4 Building and public works
5 City planning and housing
6 Health
7 Employment and training
8 Tourism

9 Transport and telecommunications
10 Education
11 Trade, etcetera

The preparatory work was completed with the valuable assistance of members of the National Planning Commission and officials of the technical services.

The economic and social planning law is in the form of a legal statute. For the moment, it is composed of 95 articles.

Its scope is described in a document entitled "general framework of application of the planning law."

This study approaches demographic problems (with reservations pending the results of the census), potentialities of the economic sectors, and development prospects. From that the technical planning law is developed, with stipulation of the goals to be reached and the institutional means to be implemented.

Finally, means of financing the development are explored.

Under the heading "demographic prospects" we establish the evolution of the population by age groups. We point up the level and the size of the working population, the school-age population, etcetera.

We consider, according to the norms and the theoretical food wheel, the population's food requirements and its size during the three-year period, and also the number of physicians and paramedical personnel corresponding to the growth of the population.

Finally, we estimate, on the basis of six (6) occupants per housing unit, dwelling construction needs corresponding to demographic growth.

These considerations make it possible to determine the degree of development that we must attain.

The economic and social plaaning law adopted by the government and the National Assembly covers the period 1983-1990. One three-year plan will cover the first period. The second period will be covered by the utterance and execution of a second, four-year, plan by the Republic of Djibouti.

As a matter of fact, since the law was adopted at the beginning of 1982, it will be implemented in part during this very year.This is a normal consideration, since the plan in question is a flexible one. The first three-year plan will be completed between the end of 1982 and the beginning of 1985.

Terms of the Economic and Social Planning Law

Establishment of the planning law constitutes one of the essential points of the Planning Administration Office. After a very careful study and an analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of the nation's economy, we felt that five (5) basic directives should dominate the progress of our economy for 7 years.

Each economic policy defined is accompanied by a group of ways and means to achieve it.

The scenarios are as follows:

1 reduction of food stuffs dependency
2 reduction of energy dependency
3 promotion of industry
4 fight against urban and rural poverty
5 strengthening of Djibouti's role as a large international maritime city

Thus they contribute to improving the national population's standard of living reducing regional social inequalities making our economy more integrated, thus less foreign-orientated reducing the foreign currency drain training the men and women of our country better

1 Reduction of foodstuffs dependency

Our balance of trade is showing a large deficit; in 1976 and 1979, imports were respectively valued at 21.3 billion Djibouti francs and 31.5 billion Djibouti francs. Exports for the same period amounted to about 2.8 billion Djibouti francs and 2 billion Djibouti francs. The deficit is about 18.5 billion Djibouti francs in 1976 and 29.4 billion Djibouti francs in 1979.

After an analysis of the potential of the agriculture, animal husbandry, and fishing sector, the objective for the three-year plan will be to reduce our food needs in fruits and vegetables by 10 percent.

The services responsible for this sector have estimated easily irrigable areas at 211,200 hectares.

This objective features the development of Scheketti (40 hectares), in the Gobaad area, the agricultural area of Grande Douda, the farm at Attar, etcetera.

In parallel with these projects, the productivity of existing areas will be improved by the provision of production equipment, strengthening research capability, and stepping up the spread of information to increase management personnel numbers.

In the animal husbandry and fishing sector, seven (7) development projects are identified:

(development of fishing, improvement of animal health, etcetera) Overall, investment of 3.5 billion Djibouti francs is envisaged. When these projects are completed, hydraulic engineering development will be undertaken for cities, villages, agriculture, etcetera

2 Reduction of energy dependence

The goal of this policy is first of all to assure that the city of Djibouti's energy needs are amply met. It features the extension of electrical installations and the construction of electric power stations. Then pursuit of geothermal research. If that turns out to be conclusive, geothermics will have an impact on the promotion of industry and electricity production criteria as well as on the flexibility of the investment code..

This policy features the drilling of exploratory wells and geoscientific studies, etcetera.

3 Promotion of industry

This policy has been defined to contribute to criteria for economic integration, saving foreign currency, and above all, creating jobs. The projects thus identified are the following: cement factory, dairy products plant, food products plant, fertilizer preparation plant, etcetera.

For the industry-energy sector, the required investment envelope is about 11 billion Djibouti francs.

4 Fight against urban and rural poverty

The goal of this policy is to reduce social inequities through better price and trade regulation to preserve the purchasing power of the most disadvantaged. And also to fight effectively against domestic and foreign inflationary effects..

It is also characterized by diversification of supply sources to combat shortages, foster competition, etcetera.

Its object is to increase access possibilities for all social categories of the population to health, education, and employment.

It is the expression of economic and administrative decentralization and deconcentration.

The cost of these projects as a whole is believed to amount to about 6 billion Djibouti francs, apportioned as follows:

health (including a professional training center): 1.7 billion Djibouti francs; education (including Balbala CES [Social Studies Center]: 3.2 billion Djibouti francs; employment (including Balbala CFP [Professional Training Center]): about 1 billion Djibouti francs.

Completion of these projects is expected to aid in the implementation of full-time education and rational technical training, and the recycling of service personnel. It is also expected to lower the number of those not attending school, which is still very high among our people.

5 Strengthening the role of Djibouti as a great international maritime city

The present state of the infrastructure and transport sector is satisfactory. The only inadequacy is in the national road system. In view of the role attributed to tertiary sectors, port activities will be increased through completion of the container terminal and the cold storage warehouse.

Djibouti airport will be provided with a larger freight area. Extension of the passenger terminus and development of the duty-free and industrial zone will be undertaken. A certain number of additional measures are expected to be taken to increase Djibouti airport's role in facilitating the development of insular and lanlocked countries (reference: Uganda, Rwanda in 1978)

A railway rehabilitation and renovation project is under way. During the course of the three-year plan and the subsequent four-year plan, every proposal contributing to the strengthening of Djibouti's role as a great regional distribution, transit, and connections center will be considered.

6 Means of financing

At the moment the Republic of Djibouti has a budget that is dominated by "operating costs." The portion reserved for investment and equipment is still very modest.

In addition, the country has very little truly national production activity. The nation's financial resources are also very limited. Thus a very large part of the funding for the development plan will come from abroad.

On the national level, the financing policy for the objectives of the planning law will be as follows:

start the activities of the National Bank of Djibouti and apply the monetary policy (compulsory reserves, rediscounting, etcetera) make the development fund operational (a major handicap in the credit policy is the total lack of medium and long-range credit, therefore a total clamp on the country's development) get national private savings into circulation create an encouraging climate for small and medium industrial enterprises

The three-year plan has a funding requirement of about 70 billion Djibouti francs.

With our available foreign credit, which depends upon confidence, political security, and economic stability:

With carefully selected and truly negotiable investment holdings:

We can promote economic and development activity for our country. With the development plan and the economic planning act, our country has a steering wheel...we mean an economics steering wheel.

STATEMENT OF RPP PARTY ELECTION PLATFORM

Djibouti LANATION-DJIBOUTI in French 13 May 82 pp 1, 12

[Text] The Republic of Djibouti is presently passing through a significant turning point in its recent history, for it has started along the path of struggle agains underdevelopment in all its forms and manifestations.

This important stage, which involves the time to come and the future of our sone and daughters, requires the adhesion of everyone. It is with all together, in unity and peace, that this war can be won.

The independence already achieved is not an end in itself, it is the start of a relentless fight, and each of us must make sacrifices for the sake of our country's future.

The wisdom of our people under the enlightened leadership of his excellency the president of the republic, president of the RPP [People's Rally for Progress], has taught a lesson to all the detractors, prophets of doom, who have seen their partiality put down and destroyed for ever, for our people, in unity has chosen to live in the peace that was so dearly bought.

The People's Rally for Progress, at its first congress on 4 March 1979 in Dikhil, assigned itself as objectives, among others, the union of all the men and women of Djibouti in a great tide of renewal, turning their backs for ever on divisiveness, dissension, amd tribalism, and buckling down to the principal, primordial task, which is the building up of our country and the fight against underdevelopment, the sworn enemy of Third World countries.

Turning One's Back on Tribalism

Remember that in Dikhil, on 4 March 1979, our president did clearly stress what is expected from the RPP; here I quote our president and founder's words: "From now on the fight is not to be carried on in the same way; the combat will be in a different form, since the objective to be achieved is of a different nature."

After the various visits made by the president of the republic throughout the country, and on the strength of total, unreserved popular support, the idea of creating the RPP party emerged as essential.

All the men and women of this country needed to have a platform through which could be expressed all current opinion, provided that it was not against national interests. At this historic meeting, the party held out its hand and earnestly appealed to citizens as a whole to join this popular movement in union regained at last, and for the defense of the republic's interests.

With the same intention, a law relating to national mobilization was promulgated by the president of the republic, president of the RPP, El Hadj Hassan Gouled Aptidon; it is intended to pull together the efforts of all men and women of the country to make possible the economic and social transformation of the nation, strengthening of our sovereignty and our unity, as well as democratic development of our institutions.

Citizens, the second congress, which was held on 4 March 1982 at Tadjourah, provided the RPP president, El Hadj Hassan Gouled Aptidon, with an opportunity to repeat these sacred objectives. The second congress gave a special place to concerted action in unity.

National Mobilization of Human Resources

Among other tasks, the law on mobilization assigned our party that of assuring through its initiatives and its actions that citizens join and participate in national mobilization.

Aware of its task, the RPP is now starting an election campaign, which for the first time in our history is under the banner of peace, justice, egalitarianism, and progress.

This campaign does not accept individual desires: it concerns our future and the future of our children, the future of the children of this nation.

Citizens, the RPP list, based on the principles that our party defends and the goals for which it labors, must be the list of every man and woman of Djibouti.

Your active participation and your support as activists are duties at this historic stage, for the fight being waged by the RPP is a fight for the future of every one of us.

I am sure that thanks to the level of awareness of our people, and to its customary perspicacity, we shall be able to put plenty of heart into this election, for the way is long and it is together that we can win against destitution and poverty so that our development may flourish.

Long live the president of the Republic! Long live the RPP! Long live the voters! Long live the Republic of Djibouti!

The RPP is presenting to men and women voters of Djibouti for their vote on 21 May, a list of 65 members in which all components of the nation are represented.

For 21 May 1982, it is by no means indispensable to advertize a detailed platform, for RPP candidates must apply the guidelines defined by the party at its creation, at Dikhil on 4 March 1979, and confirmed on 12 June 1981, at the time of the election of our president and head of the government, El Hadj Hassan Gouled Aptidon by universal suffrage, and of which a few items from the concrete, realistic goals proposed to you for the future are given below:

Guaranteeing national independence, territorial integrity, unity, peace, and social and economic progress

Maintaining civil rights and assuring that human rights are respected

Giving individuals freedom of choice as to residence, job, education, and permit expression of opinions without victimization.

Our democratic experience will continue to develop, with, as its goal, the building up of a society founded on mutual respect, equality of opportunity, justice, liberty, and solidarity.

In the domain of foreign policy, we shall continue to maintain good relations with all countries, with the exception of Israel and the racist minority regime in South Africa, which we are opposing with all means possible.

Our country intends to pursue effectively its policy towards consolidating its membership in the Arab nation and giving its lasting support to the fight of the brother people of Palestine for the recovery of its inalienable rights and the liberation of all the occupied Arab lands, including the holy city of Jerusalem.

Our country will remain faithful to the OAU and its ideals.

Our efforts will be aimed at the promotion of contact and dialogue among our neighbors so that first apeasement and then definitive peace may be brought about in the Horn of Africa.

Economic Matters

The liberal economic regime which is very favorable to development of initiative and responsibility will be maintained and affirmed. We shall be careful, however, that it does not turn into uncontrolled liberalism that would generate situations harmful to our development.

A special place will be made for the agricultural sector, and for food products in particular. Experiments like those at Mouloud, Attar, and Kaninle (PK 20) will be encouraged and extended to other regions, particularly in the north of the country.

Lastly, we have to win the battle against thirst throughout the country as rapidly as possible.

Tertiary Sector

Trade, telecommunications, transport, and tourism as well as all the services that make up the essential part of economic activity today will receive particular attention.

Thus the facilities and equipment of the country's main tools for development: the port, the airport, modernization of the railroad tracks and equipment, the roads, in the interior as well as nearer to neighboring countries, will gradually brought up to modern standards.

Industry

In addition to projects for the cement factory, the dairy, the Obock fishery, a few small agro-alimentary industries will be developed very soon at Kaninle (PK 20).

Extraction of Lake Assal salt and use of geothermal energy are certain to create new poles of economic development in the near future.

The three-year plan currently being worked out, and the training of highly qualified local professionals, the real driving power behind our economy, will make it possible to arrive at balanced, effective growth.

To reach these goals, it is indispensable that the administration be adapted to the new requirements by simplification of its operations and by putting an end to notorious inadequacies and formalism.

A new psychology will be introduced into political and governmental life; it will tend to discourage the speculative, personal profit mentality that is detrimental to the general interest.

Research, and the ability to organize and to think will be developed in Djiboutian professionals, to enable them to define our future as truly responsible officials.

Social Affairs

Great efforts will be made to define with precision the best system of preventive and therapeutic medical care. A new health policy and the firm will to perfect the present organization will render new objectives accessible, including, among others, the long-awaited completion of the new hospital.

We shall be fighting, then, the scourges that keep our country in a state of submission: sickness, hunger, ignorance, not to mention unemployment, which still affects whole families and young people newly entering the job market.

This new program has been broadcast over and over again by the national media, as well as by the broadcasting services of main offices of the People's Rally for Progress.

Men and women of Djibouti, nearly all the 65 RPP candidates soliciting our votes on 21 May for a five-year mandate are known to you, are faithful to our traditions, our customs and the simple habits of our people, but in addition, they are activists of the People's Rally for Progress.

These candidates' main traits are:

Patriotism

Faith in our independence, our territorial integrity, our unity in peace at home and abroad

The underlying condition of national mobilization and the party ideals, whose continuity guarantees stability and development in all domains.

BILATERIAL RELATIONS BETWEEN SPAIN, NATION 'ENDANGERED'

Madrid ACTUALIDAD ECONOMICA in Spanish 20 May 82 pp 23, 25

[Article by Carmen Remirez de Ganuza]

> [Text] After almost 3 years of Spanish cooperation in Equatorial Guinea, suspicions on both sides have complicated and endangered the bilateral relations. With aid cited at almost 11 billion pesetas, the Spanish Government has decided to cancel available credits in order to limit them to previously quantified projects.

When Spain appointed itself lead vehicle for aid and cooperation with its old and abused colony, Equatorial Guinea, an independent republic since 1968, no one denied that it would be a difficult path, full of uncertainties, but what is certain is that both the governmental and business circles in Spain held more than a discreet amount of optimism.

To begin, the Spanish Government undertook a complete phase of "emergency aid" which extended from August 1979, date of Macias' overthrow, until January 1980, and which in sustaining grants alone supposed a figure of 600 million pesetas. Already by the beginning of 1980, the aid had taken its course and was defined within cooperation programs, although without adopting any preestablished generalized plan. Only the Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation signed by the two countries in Madrid on 23 October 1980 offered any coherence, legal at least, to this avalanche of Spanish "generosity" designated to cover the most urgent needs. No less than 11 billion pesetas had been spent by the Spanish state in this endeavor as of 31 December 1981, but by then the ill winds from the gulf had begun to shake the relations between the two countries.

Starting from Nothing

The starting point could not have been more desperate. On the minus side there were not even any hotels; the few cars in operation had their doors held on by ropes; the Bank officials concentrated on stopping growth and there was not even one typewriter that really worked. The delegates from the Bank of Spain on the first expedition to Guinea confronted not only lack of light and water, but also officials who had not been paid in 6 months, since only Macias held the keys to the coffers. But the already known stories aside, the important thing is that the Republic of Equatorial Guinea would that August 1979 open itself up to foreign aid with no currency to back it up. The only thing that was left, not subject to control, were the remains of the first issue of 2.5 billion bipkweles made in London during Macias' time--the Guinean peseta having disappeared with the advent of independence--and a second issue of 1.08 billion bipkweles, that Macias himself brought back from London to store in his Mogono palace, without giving any notification to the Bank, and which was declared void by the government arising from the so-called "coup for freedom."

It was, therefore, necessary to create a monetary network from virtually nothing. In the first place, a devaluation of the ekwele took place on 1 June 1980 whereby the peseta ceased to correspond, as it had up to then, to the ekwele, in order to be adjusted to two bipkweles. This was followed by espousing the two alternatives of stamping the money still in circulation or creating a new issue from Spain. Political reasons, favoring the elimination of the vestiges of the dictator, and practical reasons, the plundering of Macias' palace at the time of the coup and his indiscriminate division of spoils that he himself made to win over converts at the last moment, made the second alternative advisable. Additionally, the possibility of the return of the money deposited in bordering African countries could lead to the collapse of the economy, and that made the new president opt for ordering the Spanish Mint to issue 6.2 billion bipkweles in bills and 61,040 in coin. That was on 3 August 1980, the anniversary of the coup for freedom, and between 15 March and 16 April of the next year, the monetary exchange was established, brought about in the most rudimentary fashion, not only through the bank, but also by trucks moved especially to the villages, thereby affecting 97 percent of the coin and bills in circulation.

Today the Equatoguinean ekwele still does not have an international rate of exchange. But for the time being a financial structure exists which makes it possible to channel the monetary operations in the country; the Bank of Equatorial Guinea is the issuing bank; the Credit and Development Bank is the State and development bank--both of which existed prior to the coup, but which were nonoperational until being reactivated with the aid of the Bank of Spain--and the Bank of Equatorial Guinea in Spain, Guinextebank, was opened on 31 October 1979 by a mixed partnership created between the Foreign Bank of Spain and the Bank of Guinea, which underwrote 50 percent of the $1 million in capital.

Ill Winds

It was necessary to create not only a monetary network, but also one for transportation, food, aid, technology and administration. And this is the task being undertaken by the Spanish Government through grants entrusted to the State General Budget Office; concessionary credits given to finance equipment and services, to be administered by the Spanish Fund for Aid and Development (FAD); commercial credits, also for financing the acquisition of equipment and priority items, authorized by the Foreign Bank of Spain; and through contributions of capital from parastate enterprises. But from the outset some difficulties appeared. The first assistance was delivered directly into the hands of the authorities, and it was discovered a short time thereafter that much of the foodstuffs had been sold, and considerable amounts of medical supplies had made their way onto the black market. It was only at the beginning of 1980 that some control measures started to be taken, such as the mediation by the Red Cross for the distribution of merchandise. There have been more irregularities: the only control placed on the commercial credits, for example, consists of verifying that the export prices are correct. Official sources of the Spanish cooperation commented to ACTUALIDAD ECONOMICA, "It is known, for example, that some of these credits intended for trucks have been divided among a few friends. But that does not admit more control for the Spanish side. There is a buyer, which is the Chamber of Commerce, and a seller, which is the Spanish firm; the price of the product is controlled, and once it is in the hands of the buyer, he does with it whatever he pleases."

But the resentment is even stronger on the Guinean side. Perhaps because of an ill-conceived nationalism and the anti-Spanish education over 10 years, the government of Obiang Ngeuma has placed not a few obstacles to the Spanish initiatives to control the channeling of all of this aid. It was just a short time ago, last 18 November, when the Spanish Government presented a project for economic agreement which included, among other measures, the presence of three Spanish executive advisors within the still faltering Guinean administration: one in the Bank, another at the Department of Business and Finance, and a third for control of the Budget Office. "Technically, it was very good," says a high official from the office of Hispano-Guinean Cooperation, "but politically it was untenable because it did not take into consideration the strong resistence it would arouse from the Guinean administration." Paradoxically, the country that was clamoring for the aid of another country did not permit the other to control and share the responsibility for the development of that aid.

"At this time bilateral relations are good, very good," say well-informed sources, "but it must be said that they are very difficult relations; it seems that they were afraid that Spain would lead another coup d'etat."

First, the Project

All of this has had its effects. Specifically at the Donors Conference held in Geneva in April, the Spanish Government showed a change in policy; it has committed to granting 1.6 billion pesetas in concessionary credits over the next 3 years, with the reservation that, as opposed to the credits of this nature approved to date, these would not set aside available capital, but rather they will be sent to cover, without encumbrances, the project for which they are designated, which may not be modified or increased. Therefore, the project is approved, then follows its funding. It now remains to receive acceptance and the order of priorities decided upon by the Guinean Government. And along side this new credit aid, the 1 billion pesetas approved in the 1982 Spanish budget remain in place to be channeled into Guinea in the form of grants.

CRITICISM OF FIRESTONE OPERATIONS EXPRESSED

AB170957 Accra Domestic Service in English 0700 GMT 17 Jun 82

[Press review]

[Text] The GHANAIAN TIMES comments on the rape of the country by foreign businesses which, from the onset, she had offered the most liberal terms in the whole of West Africa. The paper takes up the operations of the Firestone Company, now Bonsa Tire Factory, since its inception in 1967. It says the government handed to the company a fully developed rubber plantation with the building of a tire factory almost completed. It was also offered 60 percent of the total shares after a reported nominal transfer of $100,000. In return, Firestone promised to transfer its exclusive technology to Ghana, train the Ghanaian management and produce personnel so that in 5 years, the country could boast of a tire manufacturing facility fully operated by Ghanaians.

It says after 14 years of operation, the company complained of insufficient foreign exchange to import raw materials for the tire plant despite the firm being allowed to freely indulge in the barter trade. It exports natural rubber to its plant in Ohio, United States, and to its other plants in other countries in return for needed raw materials.

The paper does not see why after years of operation and without fulfilling its promise of technological transfer for the factory to operate at full capacity, an agreement with the company should subject the country to operate in accordance with the law of Ohio, in the United States. The TIMES would also like to know who in the attorney general's department is an authority on the laws of the states in America to negotiate a technical service agreement with a private firm committing the country to up to between $25 and $50 million or more as turnover tax.

DELEGATION TO ATTEND LAMCO BOARD MEETING

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 4 Jun 82 pp 1, 10

[Text]

It is still not certain what will become of the 96 Lamco workers which the company wants declared 'redundant', — a move which the Liberian Government has so far opposed.

The Minister of Lands, Mines and Energy, Dr. Fodee Kromah, who is set to travel tomorrow night to New York for the ensuing Lamco board meeting, told our reporter yesterday that the decision affecting the 96 will be decided at the ensuing meeting, scheduled to take place in New York next week.

The Minister gave a hint that he may have an answer to what now seems to be a jigsaw puzzle regarding the fate of the workers, but he would not say what it is.

He, however, said he would like to assure the public that whatever decision taken by the board "would be in the best interest of both the Government and the employees." But he insisted that it would be premature to give the Government's decision on the case.

Ever since last year Lamco has been seeking permission from Government to proceed with the redundancy act on the 96 of its Liberian employees, because it says these workers are unproductive and keeping them would be a further drain on its already scarce economic resources.

Lamco is one of those companies which have suffered greatly from the world recession, that has resulted, among other things, to a drastic decline in the price of iron ore. The company is simply not selling as much as it used to, and prices have fallen.

However, Government has been reluctant to approve the redundancy on the 96 employees, because it is not convinced that it is absolutely essential to the company's cost-saving measures.

The Government is arguing further that it gave Lamco a great deal of help sometime last year, when it dismissed more than 200 workers for engaging in an illegal strike, against the PRC decree banning all strikes. The company had not asked that these people be dismissed, and Government has not asked for their replacement.

The Minister of Labour, Mr. David Dwanyen, spoke forthrightly on the issue during a meeting with Lamco general manager John Pervola early last month. Mr Dwanyen told the management that chances were "slim" that Government would acceed to the request to declare the 96 workers redundant.

Recalling that Government had not asked the company to replace the 209 workers sacked following the illegal strike last year, Mr. Dwanyen asked, "What next now and how far do we go to continue pleasing Lamco?" He added, "We cannot please investors to displease our people.

Observers believe that the Labour Minister was concerned about the already precarious employment situation in the country and was afraid that such an action would make matters worse. Moreover, it might lead other companies to believing that they could make the same request and expect it to be granted.

But a related issue, also to be discussed at the meeting, according to Dr. Kromah, is the survival and bridging programme devised to keep the company alive up to 1987-88. This was necessary in view of the high cost of materials and spare parts and the low price of iron ore on the world market.

He said the high grade ore in the Lamco mines would soon be exhausted.

The company had presented to Government an eight-point alternative programme, part of which was a proposed reduction of its employees roster between now and 1988.

Another major issue to be discussed in New York would be the retirement of Lamco's $17 million indebtedness to Granges International which, he said, had assisted the company over the years.

Dr. Kromah, however, pointed out that paying off such a huge amount would have an adverse effect on Lamco in these critical times.

Dr. Kromah also revealed that cooperation between Lamco and Bong Mining Company would be discussed at the meeting. This cooperation, he noted, would include the linking of railroads between the two companies, so as to prolong their life span.

He said with this cooperation Lamco would be able to utilize the concentrator at the Bong Mining Company to process its low grade ores. Government has appealed to the European Economic Community (EEC) for $1.9 million to carry out a feasibility study for the program, Dr. Kromah said.

The Liberian delegation will include Finance Minister G. Alvin Jones, Justice Minister Isaac Nyeplu, Planning Minister Byron Tarr and technical experts from the various ministries.

The delegation is due to return late next week.

DOE TO PRESIDE OVER DEVELOPMENT MEETING IN LOFA COUNTY

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 4 Jun 82 p 1

[Text]

The Liberian leader, C-I-C Samuel Kanyon Doe, is to preside over a development meeting tomorrow in Lofa County considered as one of the most progressive political subdivisions of the country.

It is for this reason that the Head of State is to leave the capital today at the head of a ten-member party for Voinjama, Lofa County.

The discussions which are expected to focus on major development activities within Lofa, will bring the Head of State face-to-face with elders, chiefs and citizens of the county.

The three-day development meeting in Voinjama is also expected to feature discussions between Dr. Doe and businessmen operating in Lofa.

According to LINA press release, Head of State Doe has invited all citizens of the county, employed by the government of Liberia and residing in other parts of the country, to be present in Lofa for the meeting.

The Head of State's official party includes Col. Abraham D. Kollie, Secretary General of the PRC; Maj. Robert B. Nowoku, Member PRC; Maj. John Nyumah, Member of the PRC; and Internal Affairs Minister, Col. Edward Sackor.

Others are Maj. Yudu Gray, Minister of Rural Development; Brig/Gen. Rudolf Kolaco, Deputy Foreign Affairs Minister; Ambassador Charles Handsford, Chief of Protocol at the Executive Mansion; Capt. Willie A. Givens, Deputy Minister of State for Public Affairs; and Gen. David K. Wright, Aide-Camp to the Head of State.

GOVERNMENT, BEA TO NEGOTIATE 'LARGEST PRIVATE INVESTMENT PACKAGE'

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 1 Jun 82 pp 1, 6

[Article by J. M. Cassell]

[Text] Officials of the Government of Liberia, and the Bea Mining Corporation are to begin negotiations today at the National Investment Commission on what has been described as the largest private investment package under the PRC regime--$63M.

The project which is expected to be undertaken by the Bea Mining Corporation and the Government of Liberia, will provide jobs for about 2,000 Liberians. The Government of Liberia will have a 50 percent share in the corporation.

The President of the Liberia Mining Corporation (LMC), Mr. James Pirtle who is also head of the Bea Mining Corporation and his chief negotiator, lawyer Peter Ragg, arrived in Monrovia Monday to begin negotiations with representatives of the Finance and Justice Ministries and the National Investment Commission.

NIC's Chairman Major Dew Mayson said in an interview Monday that the corporation had already completed its feasibility studies, adding "when this project is approved and documents are signed it will serve as the largest private investment since the coming to power of the People's Redemption Council."

At a press conference upon arrival at the Robert's International Airport, Mr. Pirtle said it was the interest of the Bea Mining Corporation to pursue this project no matter what the odds are.

In order to plan for the future, now is the time to be working on this Iron Ore Project."

Mr. Pirtle said it has been demonstrated that there will be a demand for Iron Ore in the near future.

According to Pirtle, Ore from the Bea Mountains have already gone through a testing process at the Colorado School of Mines in the United States of America. And besides, a feasibility study on the Bea Mountain in Grand Cape Mount County has already been completed. The results were favourable.

After the agreement with the Liberian Government, he said the mining scheme will be implemented. He however did not say how soon this will be done.

The Legal Counsel of the Bea Mining Corporation, Counsellor Toye C. Barnard, also present at the airport, said the negotiations with the Liberian Government for a concession agreement serves as the second phase of two-fold scheme. The first phase, according to Counsellor Barnard, was the Arthur G. Little Study wherein a comprehensive study was conducted to determine the features of the Bea Mining concession, among other things.

Bea Mountain will be like any other concessions in Liberia with schools, hospitals and clinics, says the Legal Counsel.

Mr. Barnard said a railroad passing through Mano River (Cape Mount County) will connect Bea Concession area with Monrovia.

OVER ONE MILLION DOLLARS IN CHECKS UNCLAIMED BY BOL DEPOSITORS

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 2 Jun 82 p 1

[Article by Klon Hinneh]

[Text]

Checks totalling $1.5 million for depositors of the defunct Bank of Liberia (BOL) have not been claimed, an official of the National Bank of Liberia disclosed yesterday.

The NBL is therefore appealing to depositors having accounts with the liquidated bank to collect their checks to avoid any embarrassment.

Mr. D. Andrew Mason, officer in charge of examination and supervision at the National Bank told the Daily Observer that the $1.5 million represented the balance of $10.1 million set aside by government to pay depositors recently.

Mr. Mason said the checks would be out-dated after six months. He however declined to state what course of action NBL will take after the six month period.

He said tellers stationed at the BOL daily to disburse the checks were paying out less than five checks per day.

Mr. Mason added that depositors who might have lost their saving book and as such are afraid to collect their checks, should go to the bank with proper identification to be helped out.

Asked whether he did not think some of the depositors were out of the country, he said more than 100 letters have been received by NBL from depositors who are out of Liberia, designating certain individuals to sign for their checks.

According to Mr. Mason, these letters have been notarized to varify signatures, and honoured by NBL subsequently.

He added that NBL will not honor telegrams from out-of-the country depositors since telegrams cannot be notarized.

ROK TRADE MISSION ARRIVES, MISSION OF ENTREPRENEURS TO FOLLOW

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 4 Jun 82 pp 1, 6

[Article by Napoleon A. Teague]

[Excerpt] A 17-man Korean trade mission, currently visiting Liberia to explore investment possibilities, would like to see increased Liberian exports to that Asian nation to narrow the existing imbalance of trade between the two countries.

Mr. Young Gak Shin, Director of the Korean Traders Association, told the NEW LIBERIAN Thursday at the Roberts International Airport upon the arrival of the mission here, that in 1981, Korea's export to Liberia totalled some $310 million against a little over $50 million worth of Liberia's export to that country.

Mr. Young said one of the basic aims of the mission's visit to Liberia is to establish a framework upon which, future trading between his country and Liberia could be intensified.

JOINT MISSIONS

Very shortly, according to Mr. Young, a joint Korean trade mission comprising enterpreneurs from the private sector and government economic experts will be visiting Liberia to hold further discussions with officials of the Liberian government geared at developing stronger economic ties between the two countries.

He said it is the belief of members of his mission that Liberia has great potentialities which need to be developed for the future, "being one of the better nations with which Korea has bilateral economic relations."

Mr. Young said since the visit to Seoul by a Liberian government delegation headed by Dr. Samuel K. Doe, Head of State, the cooperation between Korea and Liberia has been cemented.

NUMBER TWO

As a matter of fact, he said, Liberia ranks, second only to Nigeria in Africa in term of trade with Korea. "Our goal now is to promote and encouraged more imports from Liberia. We want to buy more Liberian goods," Mr. Young added.

The current group of Korean businessmen visiting here are exclusively from the private sector of that country's economy. According to Mr. Young, members of the mission have brought along samples of their products to be displayed here.

DELEGATION RETURNS FROM USSR

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 4 Jun 82 pp 3, 6

[Excerpt] The ten-man Liberian delegation which left here last month for Soviet Union on an inaugural flight abroad the Soviet air line, AEROFLOT, returned home Monday.

The Chairman of the delegation, Commerce Minister E. Sumo Jones, in an interview said the trip was upon the invitation of the Soviet Union Civil Aviation Ministry.

Minister Jones emphasized that the tour which took the delegation to Moscow, the cities of Kiev and Leningrad, was unofficial. He however said Liberian officials used the occasion to hold bilateral talks with Soviet Government officials to explore new avenues of cooperation between the two countries.

Liberian government officials who held discussion with their Soviet Counterparts included Posts and Telecommunication Minister Dr. Sarr Abdulai Vandi, Agriculture Minister Captain Alfred Fromoyan and PRC advisor on Political and Economic Affairs, Major Bai Gbala.

Agriculture Minister Fromoyan in an interview said he held discussion with Soviet agricultural authorities on bilateral assistance for the development of Liberian fisheries and the possibility of exchanging technical experts in this area.

The Liberian delegation which left here on May 21, is the first delegation to

FAO OFFICIAL SUGGESTS TRAINING PROGRAM IN FOOD STANDARDS

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 4 Jun 82 p 3

[Text]

The Food and Agriculture Organization Regional Representative in Africa, Dr. E.O. Idusogie, has called on the Ministry of Commerce, Industry and Transportation to be active in the preparation of food standards for the protection of consumers in the country.

Dr. Idusogie made the call yesterday when he called on Commerce Minister E. Sumo Jones at the ministry on Ashmun Street, Monrovia.

He also suggested a training program in food standards and said the FAO would provide a consultant to work with the Bureau of Standards in the ministry.

Minister Jones welcome the FAO offer and said that his ministry has formulated a plan to strengthen the Bureau of Standards to make it viable so as to seek the interest of government, producers and consumers.

A Commerce Ministry release noted that in 1980 the ministry conducted a workshop in food and nutritional planning, which was coordinated by the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare.

He said other agencies of government and his ministry which participated in the workshop, drafted a national food and nutrition policy.

Dr. Idusogie's presence in Liberia during the past two weeks was in connection with the food and nutrition program initiated jointly by the FAO, the WHO and the OAU Commission on Food and Nutrition for Africa.

NATION MEETS IMF CEILINGS BY PAYING ALL SCHEDULED DEBTS

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 3 Jun 82 pp 1, 10

[Excerpt]

Liberia last Friday met the ceilings of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) by paying all of the country's scheduled debts, thus paving the way for continued assistance from the world funding body.

The Finance Minister, Mr. G. Alvin Jones, told the Daily Observer yesterday that Liberia's success in meeting the "very difficult but necessary targets imposed by the IMF" was the result of several months of hard work and sacrifice, culminating in a few days of intense and delicate negotiations involving Government's economic and financial experts, the IMF, the United States Government and a few commercial banks.

As an immediate result of this achievement, Liberia is to receive nearly $20 million from the IMF to cover the country's external debt services, the quarterly oil bill as well as salaries to Government employees and other expenses. Part of this money is to be disbursed this month.

According to Mr. Jones, the first $8 million (or $7 million in Special Drawing Rights — SDR), will come from the IMF's Compensation Financial Facility (FCC), soft loans which the Fund lends to help offset the losses sustained in the fall in the prices of Liberia's export commodities, such as iron ore and rubber.

Another $12.5 million will be disbursed as the last trench for portion) of the IMF's $65 million loan provided for budget support during the year 1981-1982.

New Agreement

As important as these immediate disbursements are, the more significant implication for last Friday's achievement is that Liberia can definitely expect from the IMF another year of budget support for 1982-83, which support is critical to the country's economic stability.

Mr. Jones said Liberia is the first African country to meet all the conditions for IMF assistance for two straight years.

The IMF representative to Liberia, Mr. Robert Sharer, told the Daily Observer that because Liberia has met the IMF conditions, the Fund can be expected to offer at least $65 million for the next budget year, and possibly more.

An IMF Mission is due here later this month, at Government's invitation to negotiate the support programme for the budget year 1982-83.

FIRESTONE INCREASES PRICE TO RUBBER PRODUCERS AS SUBSIDY

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 1 Jun 82 pp 1, 10

[Article by Kenyahk Best]

[Text]

The price of rubber on the local market is to go up by eight cents, beginning today, June 1, 1982.

This means that while until yesterday, Liberian rubber producers were selling their non spec coagulum and cup lump to the Firestone Plantations Company (FPC) at 14 cents per pound, today the company will begin buying the same rubber at 22 cents per pound.

Disclosing this to the Daily Observer yesterday, Mr. Harry Hermerling, head of the company's Special Project for Revitalizing the Rubber Farm Programme, said Firestone was making the increase at its own expense, to subsidize Liberian rubber producers, so as to enable them to produce more rubber.

'Favourable Impact'

The company is to make a formal announcement to Liberian farmers today, at a meeting in the Superintendent's office in Kakata, Gibi Territory, at 4 o'clock p.m.

The news of the price increase has been greeted with relief both by the Government and the Liberia Rubber Planters Association (LRPA).

Mr. George Padmore, acting LRPA president, described it as "encouraging", and the Acting Minister of Agriculture, Mr. James D. Sirleaf, Sr., said it would have a favourable impact on the economy.

Drastic Decline

The action by Firestone comes at a time when there is a drastic decline in rubber production among Liberian rubber planters, owing to the meagre price of 14 cents per pound, which has made it uneconomical for many rubber planters to continue tapping their trees. Many could not even meet their payrolls.

The result has been that thousands of rubber farms, especially small and medium sized ones, have been forced to close down their operations, and some owners of large farms have also threatened to close or sell their rubber estates.

Statistics from Firestone's rubber purchase operations show that in one month alone, from March to April 1982, the number of DRC pounds of rubber bought from local farmers dropped by 330,000 pounds, from 1,367,900 to 1,037,293 pounds.

But the comparative figure for April 1981 shows an even more drastic decline. In April 1981, the company bought 1,842,121 DRC pounds which, compared to April 1982 shows a loss of 804,828 pounds.

When the going was good, and rubber was being bought at more than 30 cents a pound, production was much higher. For example, for the same month of April of 1979, farmers sold to Firestone 2,187,785 pounds of DRC at 32.4 cents per pound. In 1980 the price was 32.5 cents. The fateful year was 1981, when the price plummeted to 14 cents.

The repercussions of this immediately began to show in the number of farmers that show up to sell their rubber. Three years ago Firestone had on its records some 5,197 farmers registered and most of them were producing. By 1981 the number of active producers had declined to 1,670 farmers.

And the figure is decreasing by the week. Mr. Hermerling told the Daily Observer yesterday that on April 23, 1982, there were 148 active farmers; but at May 31, five weeks later, the number had declined to less than a hundred!

Sales Tax

This decline in rubber production has had a devastating effect on the national economy, as the Head of State has tried to get across in his speeches on the economy. Not only has it contributed to unemployment, but has also adversely affected the direct Government revenue earnings.

For each pound of rubber that is sold Government gets a sales tax of 1 cent, if the price is more than 20 cents. This means that since 1981 Government has received no tax from farmers for the sale of rubber, because the price was below the tax margin.

Automobile Decline

Asked what was responsible for the sudden drop in the price of rubber, Mr. Hermerling listed three main factors, the most important of which, he said, was the decline in the sale of automobiles in the United States of America and other parts of the world.

He said General Motors Corporation alone has laid off 40,000 workers because people just stopped buying cars. Most of the world's natural rubber is used by auto manufacturers for making car tyres. The second reason for the decline in the price is the cost of fuel.

People found it too costly to run their own cars, so they pooled or used the public transport. Those who bought automobiles preferred smaller ones, with smaller tyres.

The third reason, he said, is due to the global recession — there just isn't enough money around for people to spend, he stated.

Processing Plant

He said the fuel crisis had also seriously hurt the synthetic rubber industry, because this type of rubber, which is artificial, is a biproduct of the petroleum industry.

Asked how much Firestone would need to spend to subsidize the price, Mr. Hamerling said over $2 million. He said the company had just installed a new processing plant, which would cut the cost of processing rubber. It was the savings from this that would be used to subsidize the new rubber price, he explained.

He stated that the main reason for the decision to increase the price of rubber was two-fold. First, to help the Liberian economy; and second, to encourage the farmers to produce more rubber to be absorbed by the new processing plant.

The new plant has the capacity of processing some 80 tons a day, he stated, but Firestone's own rubber can only supply about 15 per cent of that amount; hence the dependence on the local Liberian producers to keep the rubber leaking.

Monitoring Purchases

The acting president of the Liberia Rubber Planters Association, Mr. Padmore, welcoming the news of the price increase, said he was sure it would encourage many Liberian farmers to re-open their farms. Those who did not close could be expected to maximize their efforts to produce more, he added.

Mr. Padmore then called on the Ministry of Agriculture to do something to help the farmers to return to their farms. Asked how the Ministry could help, Mr. Padmore suggested that MOA should institute a system for monitoring Firestone's purchase department, to make sure that the farmers get a fair deal in their sale of rubber.

He said farmers were concerned that one day they would get 43 per cent DRC (dry rubber content) and the next day it would drop by 10 per cent or more. "This makes the farmers feel insecure or dissatisfied", he explained.

Mr Padmore also made a plea to Firestone: that they consider assisting with the transportation of rubber from the farms. He said the company could transport the commodity at a cheaper rate than the farmers. He was optimistic that Firestone would give consideration to this suggestion.

Supply Store

The Acting Minister of Agriculture, Capt. Sirleaf, said his Ministry had not yet been officially informed of the Firestone decision, but he nevertheless welcomed it.

He said he was sure many rubber planters, including himself, would re-open their farms, the employment situation would improve and Government would be sure to get some revenue from the sale of rubber.

His only concern, he said, was that those farmers whose farms had closed may find it difficult re-opening, because his experience had been that once you close a farm, the cups, spouts, wire and other farm supplies disappear.

People steal them and to re-open you have to re-supply — and that's costly", he added.

Mr. Hermeling, who has been in charge of Firestone Cavalla in Cape Palmas for the past eight years, said that in addition to the price increase, the company would re-open its farm supply store in Harbel, to make it easier for farmers to get their supplies.

Firestone would also re-introduce its rubber advisory service; that means placing the company's expertise at the disposal of needy farmers.

CLUE INTERESTED IN CONTINUING MINERAL EXPLORATION

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 2 Jun 82 pp 1, 10

[Excerpt]

The president of Coastal Liberian Uranium Enterprises, Inc., (CLUE), Mr. George Nivers, yesterday gave assurances to the Liberian Government that his company was still very much interested in continuing its mineral exploration here.

In a telephone call yesterday to the Minister of Lands, Mines and Energy, Dr. Fodee Kromah, from the company's headquarters in Houston, Texas, U.S.A., Mr. Nivers said the rumor that CLUE was closing down and getting out of Liberia "was not true".

He assured Dr. Kromah that if the company contemplated such a move, the Government would be duly informed, in conformity with the concessions agreement.

The long distance call came in the wake of widespread rumors that the company was pulling out of Liberia, following its sale of most of its equipment and its laying off of 75 per cent of its workers.

The Daily Observer, in its May 13th issue, carried a story in which CLUE's general manager, Mr. Leslie Kaye, denied the rumor and explained that the laying off of personnel and sale of some of the company's equipment were due to the fact that during the rainy season, the company usually scaled down its operations and concentrated on lab work.

CLUE has been operating in Liberia since 1977, in a uranium exploration exercise, with the option to mine uranium and two other minerals, if they were found. So far the company has spent close to $12 million in the exploration.

Mr. Kaye explained that the company had become somewhat disenchanted by current decline in the importance of uranium on the world market.

Minister Kromah, in an interview with the Daily Observer, said the decline was due to the closing down of many nuclear plants in the United States, owing to pressure from the environmentalists.

He confirmed that the company's operations are currently restricted to lab work. He said they had collected samples which are now being analyzed in their labs here and in Denver, Colarado.

The company had further integrated the geological, geophysical and geochemical results obtained from their exploration and fed the data into a computer. The result has been a data based map on which they pinpointed some important areas of mineralization.

'Exclusivity'

Dr. Kromah said the St. John River zone was observed to be a significant mineralized area which was worth studying further to determine its economic mining prospects.

For this reason, he said, the company had requested that Government grant them "exclusivity", or the sole right to explore the area and to mine whatever minerals they found there.

But after careful analysis, the Government turned down the request because it was felt not to be in the best interest of Liberia, Dr. Kromah said.

It was felt that the area was too large and could have up to a half dozen different minerals, for which it would not be wise to grant to one company the exclusive right to mine, he explained.

For the company's part, they were afraid that what they discovered might be given to other companies, if the right to mine were left open.

But, Mr. Kromah added, "it would not be in Government's interest at this time to give the whole area to one company.

EGYPTIAN DRUG DONATION

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 3 Jun 82 pp 3, 6

[Excerpt] Sixty-three cartoons of assorted drugs, including aspirin, chloroquine and antibiotic were Tuesday presented to the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare by the Egyptian Government.

Presenting the drugs at the JFK drug depot, Egyptian Ambassador to Liberia, Mr. A.F. Hay, said the presentation of the drugs was in compliance with the technical cooperation, and bilateral relation existing between Liberia and Egypt which he said has been firmly strengthened by Head of State Doe's recent visit to that country.

He said the Egyptian Government and its people would continue to do everything possible to maintain and develop the existing excellent cooperation between the two countries.

Accepting consignment of the drugs, Health and Social Welfare Minister, Mrs. Martha Sandolo-Belleh, thanked Ambassador Hay for the drugs.

Minister Belleh said the gift was a manifestation of the friendly ties between the two countries, and said the drugs would also help to solve some of the Ministry's problems in its efforts to ensure continued supply of drugs to rural clinics.

CHINESE SAID SATISFIED WITH PRODUCTION AT RICE PROJECT

Blantyre DAILY TIMES in English 26 May 82 p 1

[Text] THE leader of a five-man Chinese Technical Co-operation Inspection Mission, Mr. Mao-Ying Tziu said members of the mission were satisfied with the production of rice with the help from Chinese technical experts at different rice schemes in the country.

He was speaking at Chileka International Airport on departure yesterday after a week's visit to Malawi to inspect different Chinese aided rice schemes that members of the mission were very happy to see high rice production in all the rice schemes.

Mr. Mao-Ying, Director of Bureau of Agriculture in the Ministry of Economic Affairs in the Republic of China (ROC) said the mission was also happy to see farmers working very hard and co-operate with Chinese technical experts in the growing of paddy rice.

He noted that the ROC made a good contribution to the agricultural development of Malawi and "I hope the relationship between the two countries will improve from strength to strength."

Mr. Mao-Ying pointed out that farmers in the country could increase the production not only of rice but also of other crops with the co-operation between the Chinese experts and the farmers here.

"After appraisal of our agricultural co-operation programme between our countries, all members are satisfied with the work that has been carried out here because of the support from government authorities, the people and our assistance," he noted.

Mr. Mao-Ying added that the mission will make a report about their inspection in Malawi when they got back home.

TEA PRICES--BLANTYRE, Tuesday--Malawi Tea continues to fetch fairly good prices at both local and international markets, according to a Tea Brokers Central Africa Ltd. auction report in Limbe. According to the report 233,030 kg. of tea were sold on auction, during the week ending May 18, at an average price of 111.12 tambala--a slight decrease on last week's figure of 267,070 kg. of tea sold--and .09 tambala cheaper than last week, but much better than last year's prices. "There was a fair general demand of better grade teas, while poorly made teas and offgrade fannings were again a weak feature," says the report. Malawi's crop figures continue to rise and now stand at 19.8 million kg. at the end of April this year and compares well with south India and Kenya with 20.1 million kg. and 20.6 million kg. respectively. Only Sri-Lanka was well ahead of all three countries at 36.2 million kg. the report says. [Text] [Blantyre DAILY TIMES in English 26 May 82 p 1]

ISLAMIC LEADER PUBLICIZES LETTER TO SOVIET ENVOY, ACCUSES OPPONENTS

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 10 May 82 p 5

> [Text] Serious accusations were leveled against the MMM by Mr Yousouf Mohamed, one of the leaders of the Mauritian Islamic Party (PIM), during a meeting at Plaine Verte yesterday, attended by some 2,000 persons (official estimate). Citing a 24 September 1971 letter to the Soviet Union's ambassador to Mauritius from Mr Herve Masson, Sr., former member of the MMM Politburo and former chief editor of the newspaper LE MILITANT, Mr Mohamed alleged that the MMM "had already appealed in writing for Russian financial and military assistance."

In the same letter, the MMM "Shadow Cabinet" supposedly solicited the Soviet ambassador's intercession with his country's government in order to help the MMM "establish contacts with other socialist governments and worldwide revolutionary organizations, notably with the GDR and the Afro-Asian People's Solidarity Organization." It was also specified in the letter that these requests should not be considered "exorbitant," in light of the benefits that the USSR and all the socialist countries would derive from having the MMM take power in Mauritius and from a revolutionary transformation of the regime. All the more since, if one is to believe the letter cited by Mr Mohamed, "Our position in the Indian Ocean could quickly make us a sort of little Afro-Asian Cuba."

This revelation was the main purpose of the PIM meeting at Plaine Verte yesterday. Besides Mr Mohamed, four other speakers addressed the gathering, namely Mr Raouf Jeerooburkhan, who chaired the meeting, and Messrs Issac Lallmohamed, Rashid Mohamed, Ismael Nawoor and Sidick Naudeer. A notable absence, however, was that of Mr Ahmed Hyderkhan, former assistant police commissioner, who was one of the founding members of PIM. In fact, Mr Hyderkhan has not chaired PIM meetings for over a month, supposedly for "health reasons." According to PIM leaders, he is currently being treated at a clinic on the Island of Reunion.

Let us emphasize that none of the five party speakers spared the PSM [Mauritian Socialist Party] or its leader, Mr Harish Boodhoo. In fact, the PSM was presented to the citizens of Port Louis as being "a real danger to the Moslem community as a whole."

The letter which Mr Yousouf Mohamed brought to light was worded as follows:

"24 September 1971

"To the Soviet Ambassador to Mauritius

"Mr Ambassador,

"With the events which came to a head in April and September becoming a serious political and social crisis, it seems that a fall of the government, followed by general elections, could well occur within the next few months, unless, of course, a rightwing dictatorship were to be installed by repressive means.

"Be that as it may, the MMM, you are undoubtedly aware, enjoys widespread popular support and must consider the first hypothesis and be prepared to assume power and its responsibilities. It is in view of this possibility that we have formed a 'shadow cabinet.' It is in this regard that I address you today.

"1. Following a first meeting with your assistant, Mr Leonov, it was my understanding that the USSR might be willing to help us very discreetly. As a first favor, Comrade Leonov asked me to publish the Brezhnev Report in full in LE MILITANT. In return, funds would then be released to the MMM. This has never been done. Through an intermediary, Leonov informed me that we had to wait for your return.

"Could I ask you to consider this question as soon as possible? My newspaper is in fact having financial problems, and must deal with numerous court cases. Moreover, to Mauritian public opinion, the publication of that text signifies collusion between the USSR and the MMM!

"2. In your absence, I met two of your colleagues and gave them a list of topics which I should like to discuss with the embassy.

"a. What would be the attitude of the USSR in the event that the MMM should come to power through elections or by other means?

"On the other hand, if we should have to face brutal repression and if the case should be submitted to the United Nations, could we count on the support of the USSR?

"c. Could the embassy help us, even indirectly, in establishing contact with other socialist governments and worldwide revolutionary organizations, especially the GDR and the Afro-Asian People's Solidarity Organization? A comrade assures me that you would be ready to do so through the intermediary of the Moscow Afro-Asian Committee.

"d. Could a disguised form of financial aid be given to us (for example from party to party)?

"e. Would it be possible to obtain some study or travel scholarships for certain members of the MMM chosen by us?

"I don't believe these requests are exorbitant, considering the benefits that the USSR and all the socialist countries would derive from having the MMM take power in Mauritius and from a revolutionary transformation of the regime. Our position in the Indian Ocean could quickly make us a sort of little Afro-Asian Cuba.

"Therefore, Mr Ambassador, I hope that my letter today will receive your closest attention and that you will accept all my best wishes."

After reading this letter, Mr Mohamed remarked that he would be unpatriotic if he didn't attack the MMM. He said that he would rather lose the elections by criticizing the MMM than betray the Mauritian people and the Moslem community. In the speaker's opinion, the MMM has remained fundamentally Marxist. Masson's letter proves it. In the same fashion, the real nature of the MMM has been hidden by keeping Mr Dev Virahsawmy out of the spotlight.

As a whole, Mauritians are demanding change nowadays. However, what change should be chosen? Mr Mohamed has insisted that the electorate should not opt for a change which would "strengthen the country's ties to the same Russia which continues to destroy Afghanistan." Such a change would not be in the Moslem interest, because with the accession of a Marxist government, Saudi Arabia would close its doors to Mauritians and the emigrant workers would be repatriated. Today, Mauritius needs a change of regime which would put an end to corruption and waste, and would establish social justice for all.

Mr Mohamed then denied having negotiated for an important loan from Arab countries on behalf of the government. He said he had never done any such thing. Only government ministers have such powers. Commenting on an anti-PIM tract which is currently circulating in Plaine Verte, Mr Mohamed denied having had anything to do with Sir Gaetan Duval during the coalition government. He had chosen to remain in the coalition government in order to make sure whether or not the rights of Moslems were protected.

PARTY SPOKESMAN RESPONDS TO CRITICISM

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 10 May 82 p 5

[Report headlined: "Mr P. Berenger: 'A Personal Initiative'"]

> [Text] Reacting to the statements made yesterday by Mr Yousouf Mohamed, and to Mr Herve Masson's letter, Mr Paul Berenger told LE MAURICIEN this morning that it was a "personal initiative which didn't bind the MMM."

Mr Berenger emphasized that this letter is over 12 years old. "It must be remembered," he said, "that at that time, when Herve Masson declared in LE MONDE DIPLOMATIQUE that Mauritius should be a little Cuba, he was severely reprimanded and censured by the MMM with which he was in disagreement concerning the Soviet Union. This disagreement, among other things, subsequently led him to leave the MMM. As for us, our attitude toward the Soviet Union, from the 1968 tank invasion of Czechoslovakia until the present day, including the events in Poland and Afghanistan, has always been perfectly clear. Our attitude has never been the one expressed by Herve Masson on his own account in that letter."

PIM DENOUNCES PAN SPOT ADVERTISEMENTS

Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 9 May 82 p 6

> [Text] The Mauritian Islamic Party (PIM) opposed the decision of the National Alliance Party (PAN) to make use of television "spots" on television. In their view, such a policy discriminates from the start against those who do not have the means to pay for such promotional advertisements and proves that the government is ready to use television for any means whatever. They also deplored "the low attacks" made by means of these publicity "spots."

According to the PIM spokesman, those responsible for these publicity "spots" took unfair advantage of the trust of "people who did not even know that these films were going to be used for the purpose of political propaganda."

Yousouf Mohamed, leader of the PIM, also condemned the decision made the previous week by the minister of information reserving to himself the power to accept or to reject any promotional advertisement at his discretion. The PIM, he added, is frustrated in the face of such favoritism. He also criticized the members of the PAN who attacked Libya during the publicity spot Wednesday night without at the same time giving the country's representatives the right of reply on MBC/TV. "We condemn the low attacks of these apprentice politicians," he emphasized.

Moreover, the leader of the PIM warned the government authorities against any attempt to attack the Libyan embassy. According to information given by Mohamed the government is thinking of closing the Libyan Embassy a few days before the elections. Such a decision, he indicated, runs the risk of causing a general uprising.

The PIM leader also castigated those who criticize Saudi Arabia, and the PSM [Mauritian Socialist Party] for its remarks about the Libyan embassy.

Furthermore, Mohamed demanded details from the government and from the leaders of the MMM/PSM coalition about granting unemployment benefits. He also asked that the government define the criteria it intends to follow in recruiting the unemployed.

Mohamed made an allusion to the promises made by the leaders of the MMM/PSM alliance with regard to the abolition of export tax on sugar produced by small growers. He labeled such a promise "an empty electoral husk" and indicated that the members of the MMM and PSM who have sat in parliament ought to know that small growers are not affected by the export tax.

Mohamed also criticized the promises of tax reductions made by the MMM/PSM alliance and demanded that its leaders explain how they plan to go about paying for unemployment benefits while granting tax reductions at the same time.

He alleged that the candidates of the PIM and its leader in particular are presently the object of a slanderous campaign conducted in Port Louis by the MMM with the sole purpose of discrediting them.

Furthermore, Mohamed gave permission to all interested to make inquiries about his bank account and denied rumors circulated in some areas to the effect that he had received money from a foreign power.

He also maintained that some PIM candidates had been threatened by notorious persons and hoped that the campaign might proceed peacefully.

MIDEAST INTEREST IN MAURITIAN LABOR FORCE GROWS

Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 25 Apr 82 p 7

[Text] The Middle East is besoming increasingly interested in the Mauritian labor force. Abdallah Lefevre,of Saudi Oger, a Saudi Arabian construction company, is in Mauritius at the moment to recruit about 50 Mauritians. They will be hired for construction of palaces at Medina and Mecca, in Saudi Arabia.

The persons recruited are mainly engineers, building technicians, electricians, and cabinet-makers. They will leave in 2 groups of 25.

Mr Lefevre expressed a wish to visit the workers recruited on their worksites. He also went to the Industrial Trade Training Center (ITTC) at Beau-Bassin, and to the School of Industrial Technology at the University of Mauritius to get an idea of the courses offered. Mr Lefevre is leaving Mauritius this week.

Saudi Oger Company employs 14,000 persons, and specializes in high quality building construction.

In his turn, John Wright, general manager of the Amra Hotel in Amman, Jordan, will be in Mauritius around 10 May. He is coming to recruit about 100 persons, particularly cashiers, cooks, barmen, bellboys, hotel waiters, a party chef, a restaurant manager, a laundry manager, a floor supervisor, and an assistant accountant. Wages range from 1,800 to 6,000 rupees a month. Mr Wright will be accompanied by Mr O'Carroll, an official from the same hotel.

A few days ago, 250 persons were recruited by the Fast Contracting Company, Limited (FCC), and the National Quarry Company, Limited (NQC), of Saudi Arabia (L'EXPRESS, 17 April 82). Another 70 will be recruited in July and August by the FCC.

In addition, about 50 workers left a week ago for the Palestine-Meridien Hotel in Iraq.

In addition to Saudi Arabia, Iraq, and Qatar, Jordan is interested in Mauritius.

Editorial Note: Foreign manpower employed in Saudi Arabia is distributed as follows: 800,000 Yemenis, 400,000 Filipinos, 250,000 Palestinians, 250,000 Koreans, 200,000 Pakistanis, 150,000 Indians, 100,000 Thai, 200,000 Syrians and Lebanese, 45,000 Americans, and some 40,000 British. SAUDI ARABIA SEEKS TO RECRUIT 250 WORKERS

Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 17 Apr 82 p 7

Up to yesterday afternoon, about 200 Mauritians had already been interviewed and selected. The rest will be following in the next few days. Those now being recruited, truck drivers, electricians, mechanics, foremen, supervisors, laboratory technicians, and construction workers, among others, will be working in a factory that produces prefabricated house construction modules. About 70 more Mauritians will be hired in July or August to work on the construction sites.

Fast Construction Company, which is part of the Dallah Group of Companies, like the National Quarry Company, Limited, has obtained a contract for construction of 1,200 homes of three types, in the 350 to 434 square meter (3,000 to 3,600 square foot) range. The contract is worth 245 million American dollars (about 2.7 million rupees). The majority of the homes are built with prefabricated elements. Construction started in January, 1981, and will be finished in September 1984 [words missing] at the Djedda construction site. "The results are good. They are doing well," he said.

Mr Nasr stressed that several sports facilities as well as medical facilities are made available to Mauritian workers in Saudi Arabia.

LP OFFICIAL HITS MMM OBSTRUCTION OF AIRPORT PROJECT

Port-Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 10 May 82 p 6

> [Text] Sir R. Ghurburrun: The MMM prevented us from going ahead with the northern airport. It was in the presence of a tired, drowsy and untalkative Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam that the Swastika Club of Pointe-aux-Piments celebrated its 18th anniversary on Friday. Sir Seewoosagur's two fellow candidates of district No 5, Sir R. Ghurburrun and V. Boodram, were also present.

In a brief address, Sir Seewoosagur asked Mauritians to concentrate their efforts on ensuring the development of the country. He congratulated the leaders of the club for their activities and for having held high the torch of Mauritian youth.

In a diplomatic speech, Sir Robin congratulated the young people of the club for their voluntarist spirit which has maintained the existence of this association for 18 years. Without the clubs, young people who are unemployed today are inclined to give themselves to drugs or alcoholism. The speaker placed the unemployment problem in a world economic context (inflation and recession) and in a national one (these last 5 years the country has undergone floods, cyclones and drought in addition to strikes which were a blow to the country's economy).

Moreover, he accused the MMM of having prevented the government from going ahead with the northern airport project and declared that, if victorious, he would refuse to repay this debt. Furthermore, Sir Robin expressed satisfaction at the government's accomplishments, notably the changes in the Napoleon Code, which from the begining of this year gives legal recognition to Hindu and Muslim religious marriages. On this score alone, he cried, the feminine population of Asian origin should give their support to the Labor Party.

V. Boodram spoke for a few minutes about the government's achievements, notably free medical treatment, the electrification of the island, and the improvement of road infrastructure etc.

MUSLIM GROUP CIRCULATES SECTARIAN TRACT

Mauritius THE NATION in French 9 May 82 pp 1, 8

> [Text] A sectarian tract in circulation in the country. The Muslim core of the MMM, which according to words attributed to a party leader represents 90 percent of this ethnic group, is demanding its rights. The group Al Fateh is taking the task upon itself in a tract written in a style similar to that of a pro MMM weekly. In sum, the tract comes straight out with claims of which the leadership of the party is not unaware.

The core group demands:

1) That Friday be the public holiday for Muslims and not Sunday. The constitution should guarantee this right.
2) That a piece of ground near the citadel or the Montagne des Signaux, of a reasonable altitude at least, be sold to the Libyan Embassy, which would build a mosque on it. (Muslims have the right to have such a scared place, as the Hindus have Grand Bassin and the Creoles have Marie, Reine de la Paix).
3) The Muslims be drawn in sufficient numbers from the public and private sectors.
4) That two Muslims be appointed to the Public Service Commission, to the Police Service Commission, and to the Local Government Service Commission.
5) That an embassy be opened in Tripoli but that that in Cairo should not close its doors.
6) That a fifth of radio and television time be reserved for Muslims.

The Muslim core group insists that six important ministries be granted them: education, health, agriculture, housing, employment and commerce. Names put forward are: Khodabux, Maudarbaccus, Kasenally, Gendoo, Sobadur and Uteem.

No precise details are given on the role the Kader Bhayat would have but it is clear that, being in the first rank, he is entitled to a key post, probably that of deputy prime minister.

But the tract contains an important message also: "Zette ou le corps nette dans sa bataille quie pe vini. Soutenir tous candidats MMM and PSM avec intelligence [Support all MMM and PSM candidates intelligently] Oune trouve couma election candidats musulmans fine deroule la campagne--on conne que bisin vote avec intelligence cette fois-ci." The word "intelligently" appears twice as if to stress its importance.

On Friday the MMM newspaper omitted the message, alleging that the tract emanated "from the right." However, the leadership of the party was not unaware of the claims of this particular group. Al Fateh merely circulated them in written form.

LIBYAN AMBASSADOR WARNED--The Libyan ambassador to Mauritius, I. al-Jaddy, has again been warned by the Mauritian government after his embassy made a gift of airline tickets to three Mauritian trades union officials without first informing the Mauritian government. In a diplomatic note delivered to the Libyan mission, the Mauritian government recalled the terms of a communique that it sent out last 30 January. In the communique the Mauritian government had specially drawn the attention of the Libyan representatives in Mauritius to invitations to Mauritians to visit Libya, and asked them to first obtain the government's authorization. Moreover, the government indicated that it should be notified in advance of any contributions of money of goods. It would seem that the Libyan diplomats gave explanations that have not quite satisfied the government. The Libyan representative explained that he never had any intention of infringing the government-imposed restrictions under the terms of the diplomatic communique. The airline tickets are believed to be connected with an African conference that was to take place in Tripoli. [Text] [Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 24 Apr 82 p 1] 12149

RECRUITMENT OF PHYSICIANS REPORTED--The Public Service Commission is currently studying records on doctors that it has interviewed with a view to filling the posts left vacant by doctors who have gone off to try their luck in Saudi Arabia. About 25 doctors will be recruited as quickly as possible to go to work in government medical services. Even though only 19 doctors left for Saudi Arabia, several more positions became vacant when certain other state physicians went abroad on "leave without pay." It was in March that the PSC [Public Service Commission] published the job openings. Interviews of doctors who were candidates have been spread over the past 2 or 3 weeks. The doctors appointed will start work as soon as possible to fill the vacancies as soon as possible. At present there are about 65 doctors registered with the Department of Health who would like to belong to the civil service. The minister of health can only recruit doctors as his annual budget permits. In the present case, appointments will not burden the budget, since only replacement of doctors who are resigning is involved. [Text] [Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 26 Apr 82 p 7] 12149

MMM INJUNCTION REFUSED--The request for a writ of temporary injunction made to the supreme court by the secretary general of the MMM, Paul Berenger, asking it to pass a temporary judgment ordering the MBC [Mauritian Broadcasting Corporation] to stop broadcasting a Labor Party film was refused yesterday by his Lordship Judge Victor Glover. Me Aneerood Jugnauth, who appeared on behalf of Paul Berenger, maintained that certain sections of the film were highly defamatory to P. Berenger and that the injury done to the latter could not be compensated for by damages. In his decision, Judge Glover held that some sections of the film were defamatory. Nevertheless, he affirmed that he could not prohibit the broadcasting of the film over MBC/TV for reasons he gave in his decision. After the supreme court's decision, Paul Berenger indicated his intention to institute defamation proceedings against MBC and those in the Labor Party responsible for broadcasting the film. GNPP LEADER REPORTED LOSING CONTROL OF PARTY

[Text]

IT is now certain that the Great Nigerian People's Party (GNPP) is heading for another split.

Gongola State Governor, Alhaji Abubakar Barde told the New Nigerian in Lagos that the GNPP leader, "Alhaji Waziri Ibrahim has lost control of the party."

He said that the GNPP National Congress scheduled for June 12 would decide whether or not to expel Alhaji Ibrahim. Alhaji Barde added that "FEDECO will know that he (Waziri) has been legitimately expelled", if the party decided so.

Asked to comment more on the forthcoming national congress, Alhaji Barde said that Alhaji Waziri Ibrahim was expected to preside "but if he is absent, his deputy will preside and if expelled, he (Waziri) stands expelled."

Alhaji Barde said he tried to see the GNPP leader on Monday but was told that he had gone to Kaduna for business.

Governors of the two GNPP-controlled states, Gongola and Borno were present at the PPA summit meeting in Lagos.

The Gongola State Governor said that nobody ordered him not to attend the PPA summit meeting.

Last Friday, Alhaji Waziri Ibrahim told a news conference that the PPA had collapsed and ordered Alhaji Goni to stop attending the 12 governors' meeting with immediate effect.

The PPA summit meeting was attended by all the leaders of the PPA and their governors except the GNPP leader, Alhaji Waziri Ibrahim and the Bendel State Governor who had not arrived when the first session of the meeting began.

In a related development, the National Party of Nigeria (NPN) called on the Federal Electoral Commission and the law enforcement agencies to investigate the allegation of Alhaji Waziri Ibrahim that most of the information filed by the PPP for registration were faked.

The call was contained in a statement issued in Lagos by the acting National Publicity Secretary of the party, Mr Sonny Arinyedokiari.

Mr Arinyedokiari noted that Alhaji Waziri's revelations on the PPA and PPP deserved to be investigated with all seriousness by the FEDECO and the law enforcement agencies so that those responsible for the "detestable act" could be brought to book that the idea of a PPP would not work.

On Monday, the new Borno State GNPP chairman disassociated the GNPP from both the PPA and PPP and ordered the state gover-

NECESSITY OF REDUCING POLITICAL OFFICES TO BE EXAMINED

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 13 May 82 p 16

[Article by Clement Eluaka]

[Text] THE House of Representatives is to set up a ten-man committee to examine the necessity of reducing the number of federal political office holders in the country.

It would also re-examine and reappraise all major contracts awarded by the Federal Government.

A motion to this effect was tabled on the floor of the House by the leader of the House, Alhaji Yunusa Kaltungo.

It was reliably gathered that a resolution to table the motion was reached at a meeting of party leaders in the House with the Speaker, Chief Edwin Umie Ezeoke.

However, the motion stipulated that salaries and estacode allowances of members of the National Assembly be slashed by 10 per cent respectively.

This motion further explained that the exercise was to assist the Federal Government in its efforts of revamping the country's flagging economy.

Supporting the motion, Mr. Funsho Akinyosoye (UPN, Ondo) said that it was necessary that members took the lead in assisting the Federal Government in going austere.

He urged the proposed committee to look into the problems of inflated contracts and its priorities.

In his contribution, Mr. Dagogo Princewill (NPN, Rivers) observed that the proposed reduction in member's salaries was a panicky measure adding that it was unnecessary and uncalled for.

He, however, called for total eradication of estacode allowances for members.

Mr. J. U. Ugeh (NPN, Benue) suggested that the President and Vice President's salary be reduced by 50 per cent and 40 per cent respectively, while those of ministers be slashed by 30 per cent.

WARNING ISSUED ON TOO MUCH AUSTERITY

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 13 May 82 p 1

[Editorial: "The Limits of Austerity"]

[Text] JUST about everybody, including its political opponents, is agreed that the austerity measures imposed by the federal administration to pull our economic chestnuts out of the fire are quite in order. Some may, with good reason, question the wisdom of the National Assembly giving near-absolute powers to the President to put things back in shape, but few would doubt that he has so far put them to good and acceptable use. Still we would like to caution the administration against misjudging the public mood to go along with the austerity measures by proceeding to impose other measures which are unjustifiable. Already, we can detect signs of this.

In his letter to the National Assembly about his government's decision to cut the pay (by 12½% from April 1) and whittle down the perks enjoyed by political office holders, President Shehu Shagari said similar measures would soon be taken for the public service. We think the federal government should reconsider this decision. Already, the Nigeria Labour Congress is issuing ominous threats against all governments, should workers' pay be cut. And quite predictably the Academic Staff Union of Universities is kicking against the suspension of their new and better salary structure and threatening to down their chalks again. There cannot be a worse time for stikes than now, especially when, as in this case, they are avoidable.

We are not however urging some rethinking on the matter simply because workers are threatening to strike. Rather it is because there is not much justification in subjecting the public servants too to such cuts in their income. True these hard times call for all-round sacrifice, but lets face it, the public service pay structure is hardly the source of our present economic misfortunes. The structure is something that has been arrived at after commissions upon commissions, dating all the way back to the colonial times. This systematic approach is in sharp contrast to the arbitrary manner in which political office holders in all parties fixed, against all public outcry, not only their salaries but also took care of their little comforts at considerable public expense. This and our generous treatment of the business (especially the non-manufacturing) sector are the main source of our woes.

We do think there is a good case for trimming down some of the priviledges enjoyed by those in the higher hierarchy of the public sector, but to cut public sector pay right across the board, would be unfair. It is afterall the middle and lower income group, the majority of whom are in the public service, who will bear the brunt of the austerity measures.

AUSTERITY MEASURES REPORTED RAISING PRICES

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 11 May 82 p 9

[Text] PRICES of some commodities apd services have gone up since the Federal Government introduced measures to redeem the country's economy.

A market survey conducted by the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) in some parts of the country, however showed that the rise in prices vary according to places.

In Port Harcourt, prices of some foodstuffs rose sharply in the past two weeks. For instance, a bag of rice which before the austerity measures sold at 45 Naira, now sells at 65 Naira, while a bag of beans rose from 90 Naira to 120 Naira.

The quantity of meat which people bought for about 5 Naira at the main market a month ago now costs twice that price.

However, prices of gari and yam have remained constant.

The survey showed that stalls for imported fabrics at the major markets in the city, remained sealed up by their owners following increased raids by customs officials.

At present, a taxi ride in Port Harcourt costs 20 kobo for short distances while passengers pay 10 kobo a drop.

Some bus drivers interviewed said that new fares would come into effect soon.

In Sokoto, a bag of American rice now sells at between 68 Naira and 70 Naira instead of 45 Naira for which it was sold before the new measures. Thailand rice sold at 28 Naira before, now costs between 58 and 60 Naira a bag.

The rice of a 10-kilogramme packet of semovita has risen from 7.50 Naira to 9 Naira while that of two-kilogramme packet shows an increase of about 40 kobo.

A tin of groundnut oil sells at 18 Naira, showing an increase of about 3 Naira while the price of palm-oil remained at 18 Naira per tin.

A measure of local rice, beans and gari however shows only a slight increase of between 20 kobo to 30 kobo per measure.

In Bauchi, a measure of long grain rice which sold at 1.70 Naira before the announcement now sells at 2.50 Naira while the Thailand rice which sold at 1.30 Naira per measure now sells at 2 Naira and a measure of gari which sold at 1.50 Naira now sells at 1.70 Naira.

A small tuber of yam which sold at about 1.50 Naira now sells at 2 Naira while a measure of ma[illegible] and guinea corn now sells for 5[illegible] kobo instead of 40 kobo.

Prices of groundnut oil and palm-oil a[illegible]d other essential commodities like, sugar, milk, soap and tooth paste have however not been affected.

The prices of a 50-kilogramme bag of imported rice which rose to over 70 Naira at the commencement of the measures had come down to 55 Naira.

Prices of the various types of imported vegetable oil have also increased by between 30 kobo and 50 kobo, depending on the brand.

The prices of beverages, most of which are locally produced remain unchanged while between 10 kobo and 5 kobo has been added to the cost of imported sugar depending on the size.

There have been increases in the prices of building materials.

Sanitary wares, including baths, wash hand basin, stainless sinks, fitting and water heater have had their prices increased by between 10 per cent and 40 per cent, while various types of wall tiles produced locally now carry an increase of more than 50 per cent.

A textile dealer have complained of poor sales in the last five months.

A market woman, Alhaja Humain Alaga, attributed the poor sale since the beginning of the year to the poor condition of farmers who had little or nothing to live on.

Another woman, who preferred to remain annoymous, lamented "the whole of yesterday I made no sale."

Petrol dealers in Suleja and its environs have raised the price of fuel.

A litre of petrol now sells between 23 kobo and 25 kobo instead of 20 kobo.

Fuel pumps at the petrol stations have been adjusted to record extra cost for the fuel per litre.

Some dealers told NAN "now can we buy something at Sokoto and sell it at the same price without making a profit."

In Kano, the fuel crisis which began last weekend persisted. A drum of petrol is now sold for 100 Naira instead of 40 Naira.

A NAN correspondent observed that motorists were willing to pay "anything for any quantity of fuel they could get."

One of the motorists who claimed to have abandoned his vehicle for three days in petrol station said that he was compelled to pay 10 Naira for a bucket of the commodity.

Traders have resorted to transporting fuel in drums and jerrycans from Kaduna and Plateau states for sale at exhorbitant prices in Kano.

The vehicles abandoned at petrol stations in Kano are those owned by both the Federal and State Governments.

As the situation deteriorated transportation between Kano and other cities had been partially paralysed, the correspondent said.

Shortage of fuel had also been bitting hard in Sokoto in the past two weeks.

Road side dealers were having a field day by selling a gallon of petrol for between 1.50 to 2 Naira.

Scores of motorists and motorcycle onwers sometimes abandoned their vehicles, and went to work in taxis as they could not afford the price of the fuel.

Many of them who had queued for hours at filling stations to fill their tanks were often told at the last minute that there was no fuel.

The secretary of the state-owned Rima Transport Corporation, Alhaji Muhammadu Datti Garba, said on Thursday that the situation would be restored to normal "within a few days."

He said that the shortage was as a result of technical problems at the Kaduna Refinery and assured the public that 13 tankers with a total capacity of 312,000 litres were being awaited.

He said that the corporation's two filling stations in the state capital were busy selling fuel to the public and that rationing had been introduced in government ministries and parastatals.

PROS, CONS OF PRESS CENSORSHIP DISCUSSED

National Assembly Approval

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 13 May 82 p 16

[Text]

THE National Assembly has endorsed the proposed for press censorship during future elections in the country.

This followed the decision of the joint conference of the National Assembly on the Electoral Bill 1981 yesterday which approved the setting up of a National Advisory Council on Federal Government owned mass media organisation.

The press censorship during election was as result of a new clause inserted in the electoral bill by the House of Representatives during deliberation on the bill to the effect that the press would be monitored three months before elections and one month after.

However, the National Advisory Council would comprise of one representative each of all the contesting political parties and its chairman elected from among the members while an official of FEDECO would be nominated as its secretary.

The national advisory council according to the joint conference should allow programme on political activities appear on radio and television network to ensure a free and fair election.

Before this provision was endorsed, it generated a lot of opposition from members who saw it as abnoxious. Those who supported it argued that it would afford all political parties equal opportunity to sell their ideas to the electorate through the mass media.

The provision sailed through by a single vote cast by the chairman of the joint conference, the Deputy Senate President John Wash Pam.

Other amendments passed by the joint committee are that FEDECO should pay the fees of all polling and counting agents employed by all candidates during future elections in the country.

Also, the joint conference adopted a provision which mandated FEDECO to declare null and void the election in any constituency where the number of votes cast exceeded the number of registered votes.

The joint conference rejected a House of Representative amendment which provided that FEDECO should recognise the faction of a party which commands a simple majority in the National Assembly and state assemblies.

It empowered FEDECO to retain for a period of 12 months all documents relating to an election conducted by it.

Senator Criticized

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in english 15 May 82 p 1

[Editorial: "It's a Non-Solution"]

[Text] NEXT time Senator John Wash Pam, the Senate Vice-President mouthes words about the need for a free press, pressmen can tell him to go "tell it to the marines" and they would be right: after what he did on Wednesday, he can hardly convince anyone that anything he says for the press are not said tongue in the cheek. As the chairman of the joint conference of the National Assembly on the 1981 Electoral Bill, his alone it was to settle the question of setting up the dubious (at best) National Advisory Council (NAC) to censor the press, three months before and one month after the elections. There was a tie between those for it and against and so it was left to the senator to break the tie. It was most unfortunate that he chose to break it against the press.

Thanks therefore to him, at least the federal owned mass media may read or sound like the Hansard of the National Assembly—boring, wordy and all that—for four months around the elections. During that period irreparable damage could be done to the credibility of the press. As we said on November 27 last year when we first spoke against the idea of NAC, nobody doubts that the fears of politicians not in power about an unfair use of the press by those in power, are valid. But such fears are even more valid for state-owned media. On this count, the idea of NAC is discriminatory against the party in power at the centre except if similar bodies will be set up by the state assemblies.

However all this is really unnecessary and unwise. First of all, elections are won at the polls, not in the mass media no matter what influence people attribute to them. If this were not so, Malam Aminu Kano's PRP and Dr. Nnamdi Azikiwe's NPP for example, would not have stood a cat in hell's chance of winning any elections in 1979 after all that was said about their taxes. By the same token, the UPN which seems to enjoy the widest favourable publicity in the country's mass media as a whole, would have won the last presidential elections. Secondly, thought it is difficult for politicians to trust each other enough to guarantee fair competition, there is no substitute for such mutual trust if we are to become politically developed. To harry helpless pressmen may be all too easy, but it can only aggravate an already not-so-good state of reporting by the mass media. The National Assembly should therefore think again before sending the bill for the President's signature. The solution to partisan reporting lies in finding means of deterring politicians in power from playing at being editors rather than those not in power joining in.

MUSLIMS URGED TO PROMOTE ISLAM

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 15 May 82 p 7

[Text]

MUSLIMS have been called upon to help in the promotion of Islam in all ways possible.

The Emir of Kazaure, Alhaji Ibrahim Adamu, made this call in Kazaure at the opening ceremony of a mosque at the Federal Government Girls' College, Kazaure.

This he said was necessary in order to spread the message of Islam far and wide which in turn would help evolving a peaceful society.

The emir said that as brothers, muslims should unite to enhance the greatness of Islam. He further called on all Muslims to be guided by Islamic instructions and regulations in their day-to-day affairs.

The emir urged the students to be of good behaviour. He appealed for aid from individuals and organisations for the upkeep of the mosque.

In a brief lecture after the opening ceremony, a judge in Kano State Sharia Court of Appeal, Alhaji Naibi Suleiman Wali, explained that Islam was based on the acceptance of Allah as the creator, as well as the only one worth being worshipped.

This acceptance, the Sharia Court judge went on include the acceptance of Prophet Mohammed as the only messenger of God who is worth emulating by all Muslims.

He described the Holy Koran as a book of guidance to Muslims in their daily dealings and urged the students to utilise the mosque to study the Koran and its applications. He finally enjoined them to live in peace and harmony with one another as well as obey their teachers.

Also speaking at the ceremony, the Chairman of Kazaure Local Government, Alhaji Haruna Abdullahi Amaryawa, who chaired the occasion prayed Allah to reward all those who contributed in anyway to the building of the mosque.

He reminded Muslims of the importance of observing all their daily prayers in congregation.

The mosque has a capacity of accommodating 100 worshipers.

LAGOS GOVERNOR SUED FOR INSTALLING CHIEF

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 17 May 82 p 16

[Text]

THE Governor of Lagos and the state Executive Council have been ordered to appear before a Lagos high court today, to explain why they should not be committed to prison for contempt.

The contempt is in connection with a court order of January 13, this year, restraining the state governor and three others from installing Chief Adamo Fagbemi Onikoyi as the new head of the Muti Onikoyi Chieftaincy Family, pending the determination of the consolidated suit.

Other defendants in the case include the state Commissioner for Local Government, the state's Attorney-General and Commissioner for Justice, and Chief Adamo Fagbemi Onikoyi

The Muti Onikoyi Chieftaincy Family had urged the court to order the state government to honour the declaration that Idowu Oladapo Fafunwa was the only ruling house of the Muti Onikoyi Family

In a fresh suit filed this week, the plaintiffs said that the defendants had flouted the court's order by installing a new Onikoyi of Lagos

The affidavit stated that the installation and capping of Adamo Fagbemi Onikoyi took place on January 13, this year—the very day on which the order was made

SENATOR ANAH, NPP ON FURTHER PARTY ALLIANCES

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 24 May 82 pp 1, 21

[Article by Moses Olorode]

[Excerpt] THE National Party of Nigeria (NPN) together with factions of the NPP, GNPP and PRP may work out an alliance for the purpose of fighting the 1983 and future elections.

Dropping the hint at an interview with the New Nigerian in Lagos over the week-end, leader of a faction of the NPP, Senator Anah said it was a logical step to take in view of the realignment moves in the "other camp".

He confirmed that his own faction of the NPP was cooperating fully with the NPN just as the Zik's faction was doing with the Unity Party of Nigeria (UPN). Senator Anah's faction has 15 members in the National Assembly.

He said he saw nothing wrong in cooperating with the NPN and hinted that "there may be a possibility of a merger or an alliance in the not-too-distant future".

He would however, he added, talk confidently of an alliance depending on what the PPA decided to do now or in the future.

"If they merge as a political entity, there's nothing preventing us from merging with the NPN and the other factions of the GNPP and PRP to form a party which can resist the onslaught of any political grouping in the country", he declared.

Factions which he said would eventually team up with the NPN are the Anah-led NPP, Mahmud-led faction of GNPP and Aminu Kano-led PRP.

On accusations by the Zik-led faction of the NPP that the Anah group was enjoying undue federal patronage in publicity, Senator Anah denied the allegation and stated that Dr. Azikiwe was merely speaking out of frustration.

He described Dr. Azikiwe as a "selfish politician" who would stop at nothing in preventing the other factions from being heard in public.

He said Dr. Azikiwe's accusation was without foundation because according to him, the national mass media had all along been carrying balanced news, adding, "Zik merely wants to prevent the authentic NPP which I lead from being mentioned in any mass media."

Senator Anah pointed out that Dr. Azikiwe's faction of the NPP was merely being fidgety about the problem which his Anah's faction was posing to them, adding that he was bent on giving Zik's faction a serious battle, "and if possible flush them out of political existence".

OJUKWU'S REACTION TO HIS PARDON PUBLISHED

'Forgive Me'

Kaduna SUNDAY NEW NIGERIAN in English 23 May 82 p 16]

[Text] MR. Chukwuemeka Odumegwu Ojukwu is preparing to come back home from the Ivory Coast where he has been in exile for the past 12 years. Speaking to a Correspondent of the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) in Abidjan at the weekend, Mr. Ojukwu, who was recently pardoned by President Shehu Shagari, said his home-coming could have been early but that he has to look for someone to take care of his business in the Ivory Coast.

He said he was coming back to settle in his village and rest, after these years.

Mr. Ojukwu said he would not think of going into politics now, adding that he would be going back home with an open arm to meet and work with his people.

It was believed in Ivory Coast that Mr. Ojukwu may likely return to Nigeria by the end of this month or first week in June.

Mr. Ojukwu told the BBC correspondent that since the day the news of his pardon was announced by President Shagari, his family and himself have been having very busy nights as his telephone has always been jammed with several calls from various parts of the world.

He said he even had to disconnect the telephone. Since his sojourn in the Ivory Coast after the civil war, Mr. Ojukwu has established a successful business in that country. In a statement he issued in the Ivory Coast earlier, Mr. Ojukwu commended President Shehu Shagari for granting him pardon.

He also commended the President of the Ivory Coast, his Exceliency Houphet Boigny, the ruling party and the people of the Ivory Coast, for their hospitality.

"I return with my hand outstretched in friendship and with malice towards none," Ojukwu said in the statement, adding "those who I thought had wronged me, I had long since forgiven, to those who think I have wronged them, I pray equal forgiveness."

["Full Text of Ojukwu's Statement" (signed) Emeka Ojukwu]

[Text] HIS Excellency, Alhaji Shehu Shagari, the President of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, in a communique issued in Lagos on the 18th of May, 1982, had invited my return to Nigeria at my earliest convenience. This invitation has brought to an end my twelve years of exile in the Republic of the Ivory Coast. May the almighty, the most compassionate be praised.

I am naturally very happy at the news and wish to express my deepest gratitude to his Excellency and to the entire people of Nigeria. I wish also to thank my host, his Excellency, Monsieur Felix Houphouet-Boigny, the President of the Ivory Coast, his party, the PDCI-RDA and the most generous and most hospitable people of the Ivory Coast for harbouring me all these years. I am honoured to have had the privilege of learning at the feet of one justly called the sage of Africa, of admiring and studying, at first hand, the Ivorian miracle and of establishing a deep, and I pray, permanent friendship with a people to whom I shall always feel indebted.

It is with great pleasure that I accept my country's invitation. With haste, I shall return to my fatherland and join the ranks of her striving peoples to serve her best interests. For years, unity had proved elusive therefore I wish to dedicate myself to the cause of national unity—to strive selflessly with men and women of all religion, all tribes and all political parties in the search of that unity, which for so long has separated Nigeria from glory and her true greatness. I return with my hand outstretched in friendship and with malice towards none. Those who, I thought, had wronged me, I have long since forgiven—to those who think I have wronged them, I pray equal forgiveness. My return has been made possible by the joint effort of all Nigerians both at home and abroad. My thanks therefore go to all Nigerians whereever they may be. My thanks go also to my many friends, non-Nigerians who have stood by me throughout all adversity, who have helped me both morally and materially during this my journey across this desert. Let me take the opportunity to assure them all that the confidence thus nobly expressed shall not be in vain but rather amply justified. I return home in the interest of unity, in the spirit of total national reconciliation and in the service of progress. I return to my fatherland to serve the people at whatever level they only may decide.

I will shortly indicate the date of my actual return to Nigeria but in the meantime, I wish once again to express my sincere gratitude to President, Alhaji Shehu Shagari, to his government, and to all Nigerians, without whom this reconciliation would not have been possible, and to President Houphouet-Boigny whose care has reserved me to be present this memorable day.

The war is ended, there is neither victor nor vanquished. Give peace in our time oh Lord.

'DAILY STAR' FAVORABLE TOWARD OJUKWU PARDON

Enugu DAILY STAR in English 22 May 82 p 1

[Editorial in the column "Front Page Comment": "Significance of Ojukwu's Pardon"]

[Text]

THE long awaited amnesty for the former Biafran leader, Col Chukwuemeka Odumegwu Ojukwu, has come at last. The news was released after President Shagari's consultation with the National Council of States which met early in the week in Lagos. We are overjoyed when we realise that the clemency to Ojukwu came on the same date our editorial asked for immediate pardon for Ojukwu.

WE place on record the invaluable role played by the National Council of States which unanimously gave approval to the memorandum by the President in respect of the presidential clemency to the former Biafran leader. We hereby commend members of the Council of States whose instrumentality has secured Col Ojukwu a free pardon.

FURTHERMORE, we can never lose sight of the effective part played by the leadership of the Nigerian Peoples Party in the issue. The Owelle of Onitsha and the leader of the party, Chief (Dr) Nnamdi Azikiwe had consistently spoken of the need to do away with partisan politics and grant Ojukwu state pardon which he deserved. The Anambra State Governor, Chief Nwobodo, had on his part, remained totally committed, from his relentless and unequivocal pronouncements and appeals, towards the free pardon for Col. Ojukwu. In fact, the NPP as a party must be commended for the various parts it played in this regard.

IT is our honest belief that, with his wealth of knowledge, experience and expertise, Col Ojukwu will certainly contribute in no small measure towards the development and unification of Nigeria. There is no doubt that Nigeria will stand to gain when he finally returns home.

THE significance of this state pardon could be evaluated from many different perspectives. For one thing, it has portrayed members of the National Council of States as responsible and responsive leaders who listen to people when they cry out. For this alone, they again endeared themselves to many Nigerians.

AGAIN, Ojukwu's state pardon will go down in history as the right step in the right direction taken to put a final end to the memories of the last civil war and its consequences. The state pardon has given unqualified credence to the popular slogan: "No victor, No vanquished" which epitomised the end of the war.

NIGERIANS, especially from the Igbo speaking areas who constituted the then Republic of Biafra can now heave a sigh of relief and rejoice that all those who were involved in one way or the other in the execution of the civil war in the country have been restored freedom.

THE clemency has ministered a most suitable antidote for the psychological pains which the Igbos have been suffering due to the 'wanted man' declared on the former leader.

LIKE we said earlier in our comments, our uppermost concern was to see Ojukwu back in Nigeria as a free citizen who can go about his business without fear.

IT would not make any marked difference if any particular person, group of persons or political party had single handedly fought the course for Ojukwu's pardon. This was why we emphasised that the issue should not be politicised in any way.

NIGERIANS, nay, the Igbos in particular can now rejoice along side with their counterparts in the North to welcome back home their sons as they now have the freedom to come home when they will. Once again we thank members of the National Council of States for demonstrating their fatherly role in this issue.

ONDO GOVERNOR: 'SICK' ECONOMY TO GET BETTER SOON

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 24 May 82 p 40

[Text]

ONDO State Governor Michael Adekunle Ajasin yesterday predicted that Nigeria's sick economy would recover within the next six months.

Speaking on the "Ogun Radio" programme — 'Meet The Press' — Chief Ajasin said he was sure the recession would improve soon. "I don't think it will last for, say, more than six months from now, he predicted and added:

Attitude

"I think the oil is back and the OPEC attitude has improved".

Governor Ajasin spoke on why the production of cocoa had been slumping rapidly in the state, well-noted for generating revenue from the crop.

The Governor disclosed that the state could not get farmers to work on the cocoa farms, adding that "there was no sufficient incentive now for farmers".

He pointed out that the government had been advocating a return to the Marketing Board system so that the government would get money to help the farmers.

On the economy of Ondo State, Governor Ajasin said the government had been getting the Federal Government to be interested in the 'BITUMEN' deposit just discovered.

Bitumen, the Governor said, was regarded as "tar-sand from where you could extract petroleum too".

Governor Ajasin said the government would continue to pay its workers remunerations monthly, the economic situation notwithstanding.

Saying that the economic crisi had affected every state, Governor Ajasin announced that Ondo State had been "forced to leave out some projects because we cannot get external loans for them".

DISAGREEMENT BETWEEN EX-POLICE INSPECTOR, SENATE

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 19 May 82 p 16

[Article by Alaye Gbenoba]

[Text] THE suit filed by the former Inspector General of Police Alhaji M.D. Yusuf against the Senate will be heard today by a Lagos high court.

In the suit, the former police chief is seeking the order of the court to restrain the Senate from inquiring into his alleged involvement in the illegal transfer of 11 million Naira out of the country.

Plaintiff is claiming that if the Senate was allowed to inquire into his alleged involvement, it would amount to a breach of his fundamental human right.

Others who were joined in the suit as defendants are the President of the Senate, Dr. Joseph Wayas, the Clerk of the National Assembly and a Lagos lawyer, Mr. Fred Egbe.

The investigation into the illegal transfer of the money arose from the petition which was forwarded to the Senate by Mr. Egbe alleging that 11 million Naira was transferred out of the country through the S.B. Shipping Line and that the former Inspector General of Police was aware of the transfer.

When the suit was mentioned yesterday at a Lagos high court, Mr. Sowemimo from Chief Sobo Sowemimo's chambers for Alhaji Yusuf asked for an adjournment to enable him file some few relevant papers in connection with the suit.

But Mr. J.A. Kester representing the defendants opposed the application on the ground that it was premature to bring the application.

Mr. Justice Oladipo Williams however granted the application and indicated that the suit will be heard today.

FEDERAL MONEY FOR DAMS IN KANO STATE

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 14 May 82 p 1

[Text]

THE Federal Government has embarked on the construction of three dam projects at a cost of 150 million Naira, to boost agriculture in Kano State.

The projects are the Hadejia Phase One Irrigation Project to be executed at a cost of 70 million Naira, Kadawa Irrigation Project at 47 million Naira and the Challawa Gorge Dam to cost 30 million Naira.

These were made known by the Special Assistant to the President in Kano State, Alhaji Lawal Kaita, at an interview in Kano yesterday.

Alhaji Lawal Kaita was speaking on development programme being carried out by the Federal Government to develop and improve the state since the present administration came to power in 1979.

The Special Assistant said, work on the Challawa Gorge Dam has already been completed while work is progressing smoothly on the Kadawa Irrigation Project. He said contract for the Hadejia Irrigation Project had been awarded.

He said the irrigation projects when completed would boost the Green Revolution programme in the state as farmers within 50 kilometres radius of the project site would be able to carry out farming activities throughout the year.

Alhaji Lawal Kaita said the Federal Government had continued to provide fertiliser to farmers in the state to boost their production.

Last year alone, he said, over 30,000 tonnes of fertiliser were distributed to farmers adding that about 50,000 would be made available to farmers this year.

Alhaji Lawal Kaita said, the Federal Government has also established industries in the state among which include the National Trucks and the burnt brick industry.

Speaking on road projects executed, Alhaji Lawal Kaita said over 50 million Naira was spent on road construction.

Among the roads constructed, he said, included the Kano-Gumel-Hadejia Road, 240 kilometres at a cost of 36 million Naira; Kano-Katsina Jibia Road, 173 kilometres at a cost of 9.5 million Naira and the Kano-Daura Road at a cost of 5.8 million Naira.

The Special Assistant said various steps have also been taken by the Federal Government to improve the communication system in the state.

He said work on the 10,000 emergency telephone lines was nearing completion with six new post offices built in various parts of the state and 320 postal agents trained to be deployed to each local government area.

Alhaji Lawal Kaita said in spite of the unco-operative attitude of the state government, the Federal Government was able to carry out its housing policy in the state by building 2,000 low cost housing units adding that another 1,000 units would be built during the current financial year.

NEED FOR REVISION, REVOCATION OF LAND USE ACT ANALYZED

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 12 May 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Let It Be"]

[Text] LATELY the Land Use Act has come under attack from various influential quarters. Some traditional rulers, notably, the Oba of Benin, Omo N'oba Erediauwa II and Alake of Egbaland, Oba Oyebade Lipede, and several leading politicians have called for its review or outright abrogation. The main reason for such calls is that the Act has been all too easily abused. And so it has. The arbitrary manner in which Governor Jim Nwobodo of Anambra State, for example, revoked the occupancy rights of some of his political rivals in Enugu last year is a case in point. Another is the recent revocation of the same rights of the Kano Golf Club by the Kano State Government on grounds of "over-riding public interest." Many more but less dramatic instances cannot be ruled out.

Since the Act has been amenable to abuse, shall we then review or abrogate it? The New Nigerian thinks there is a need for review but finds the wisdom that it should be abrogated questionable, because there is hardly a thing which cannot be abused. Of course, some things are more amenable to abuse than others. But then the Land Use Act has not been any more abused than the previous land tenure system. Can the Oba of Benin, for example, swear that traditional rulers had not abused land whose ownership were vested in them?

The principle of the Act is, we think, quite sound. Its argument that no one should own land but only have right of occupancy may not sit well with the philosophy of our mixed economy but it does, at least in theory, allow for equal access to land by both the weak and strong. Some of its provisions may be flawed but the thing to do is to correct them rather than throw the whole Act away. In this respect the most serious flaw is the provision that the governor in whom ownership is vested on behalf of the people can revoke right of occupancy for "overriding public interest." To guard against arbitrary use of this provision, the public must be involved in determining what is public interest. No one alone should be allowed to decide that.

WARNING ISSUED ON RELIGIOUS CLASHES IN KEFFI

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 18 May 82 p 4

[Letter by Muhammad Abubakar Siddiq in the column "Your Views"]

[Text]

SOME time last month, a Christian evangelical group visited Keffi and staged provocative sermons. In the course of the said sermons, the Reverend maintained that he was once a Muslim but found nothing important in it; that was why he apostated. He went further and quoted verses from the Holy Qur'an and distorted them; that he did for two days.

Luck however, ran out of the Rev. and his clique. This is because in the second day, their reckless, absurd and unbridled utterances drew the attention of the Divisional Police Officer in charge, who, due to his conviction that such utterances is capable of igniting a serious religious clashes, and in his capacity as the custodian of peace and its forestaller in the division, charged the Rev. to court.

The DPO misconceived the fact that the two religions do not weigh equally in the eyes of the Plateau Government, even for the sake of averting religious chaos.

The measure taken by the DPO to prosecute the Rev. was not taken lightly by the Plateau State Government. This is because a letter was sent with immediate dispatch instructing the presiding judge to strike out the case once it came up for hearing. Monday the 26th of April was the date fixed for hearing.

From all indications, the Rev. and his clique heard leakages about the government's order, so Christians trooped up in hundreds and besiege Keffi in a militant mood and conducted yet a more offensive preaching on the Friday preceding the date fixed for hearing.

They preached for two days, and on the said Monday, they held a procession of unlawful assembly across the town and went straight to court numbering about five hundred or even more, chanting provocative slogans and hailing Solomon Lar for a job well done and celebrating their gallant victory.

I learnt that their presence in the court was a nuisance because even court procedures were disrupted. The case was accordingly struck out in compliance with the government's directives.

Now, the question which abounds in the minds of Keffi people is; if in Plateau State the government is pro-Christianity and controls the judiciary, what of the police command, is it controlled also by the state? The people are left wondering as to what line of action the DPO is now taking.

Two years back in Yelwan Shendam, a Muslim body was not only-charged to court, but straight away shooting which claimed many lives. It was meted out to them on the orders of the state government.

The Muslims are not fools, they are critical about all these developments. In fact, when a fool turns to call a wiseman a fool, he is not only making a laughing stock of himself but is staging a sensational madness.

It is a good thing that the Keffi Muslims exercised restraints throughout this period of provocations. This I believe was emanated from their conviction of the fact that the NSO and all other organisations whose responsibilities was keeping the country peaceful, are on the alert to make accurate reports on the issue, because they dont believe in taking law into their hands. But if these organisations felt that this typical preaching deserve no condemnation, then the people concerned can seek another redress.

So we are by this letter calling on the Plateau State Police Commissioner and the IG to wade into this case in which the DPO, acting in their representative capacity, was forced to drop, so as to avoid clashes. The Muslims have condoned it four times.

DISAGREEMENT ON OIL PIPELINE NOTED

Kaduna SUNDAY NEW NIGERIAN in English 16 May 82 p 16

[Article by Emman Udoka]

[Text] The refusal by the Nigerian Ports Authority (NPA) to allow the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC) to route a pipeline through the Calabar Port to its (NNPC) Calabar fuel depot, will now cost the tax payer an extra 15 million Naira.

This is because the NNPC now has to spend 18 million Naira to install its pipeline through a new route to its Calabar fuel depot, as against three million Naira it should have spent if it were allowed to route the pipeline through the Calabar port, as in the original plan.

The Deputy Manager of the Pipeline Operations Divison of the NNPC, Dr. G. S. Ihetu, who disclosed this to the Sunday New Nigerian in Kaduna, revealed that whereas only one kilometre of pipeline was needed to link the Calabar fuel depot to a jetty through the Calabar port, the new route for the pipeline was three kilometres long.

Saying that this was responsible for the 15 million Naira increase in the cost of the pipeline link, Dr Ihetu added that it will now take his corporation "a longer time" to install the pipeline through the new route to a jetty (yet to be completed) where refined petroleum products would be received from the Warri refinery by barge and pumped to the Calabar fuel depot.

As a result of this hitch, the Calabar fuel depot, which was completed about two years ago, is yet to start functioning.

Sunday New Nigerian investigations also revealed that two other fuel depots at Gusau in Sokoto state and and Gombe in Bauchi state have also been lying idle for about two years now.

According to the Pipelines boss, Dr. Ihetu, this is because the Kaduna refinery could not produce enough fuel to feed these depots due to the non-functioning of its heavy crude refining unit, since the refinery was commissioned two years ago.

Attributing this to "problem we are facing at Eskravos with facilities for receiving imported heavy crude" for the second distillation unit of the Kaduna refinery now lying idle, Dr Ihetu expressed the hope that "by the end of this year, we will be in a position to install these facilities."

Right now, negotiations are going on over the source of foreign crude for the affected unit of the Kaduna refinery, the Pipelines boss revealed, adding that as soon as the importation and pumping of foreign heavy crude to Kaduna begins, enough products would be produced for the fuel depots now lying idle in the northern states.

Meanwhile, the computer equipment for the control of operations in the 3,000 kilometres network of oil pipelines in the country is still lying virtually idle in the main control room of the Kaduna refinery.

Sunday New Nigerian investigations revealed that, to function effectively, the equipment has to depend on adequate installation of telecommunication facilities in the country.

But, following the inadequate provision of these facilities in the country, the equipment — which should be operated by remote control — is still being operated "the hard way" (manually), since its installation two years ago.

In his comment, the NNPC Pipelines boss, Dr. Ihetu, noted with regret that the installation of the telecommunication facilities needed for effective functioning of the equipment "should have been completed by now if this was treated exclusively as an NNPC project."

But, according to Dr. Ihetu, the project was "tied to other telecommunication projects being executed in the country and as such the equipment has to wait for all these projects to be completed before it can function effectively."

IRATE PORT WORKERS DESTROY PROPERTY

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 18 May 82 p 9

[Article by Sunday Uranta]

[Text]

PROPERTIES worth more than 300,000 Naira were destroyed over the week-end when workers of the Nigerian Ports Authority (NPA) went on rampage in Port Harcourt.

Eye witness account said that the workers marched on the ports authority's administrative block to protest against the reorganisation exercise embarked upon by the authority.

However, at a stage, the demonstration took a different turn and the workers started to smash windscreens, window panes and destroy other properties.

Following the rampage, work at the Port Harcourt Wharf was brought to a stand still for more than five hours as both staff of the Nigerian Ports Authority and port users took to their heels.

Sources said that the dock workers' grievance was in protest against a decision of the ports management to reduce the number of gangs (labour force) to eight instead of the former 32.

The sources added that the workers expressed the fear that the reduction might affect some of them.

When security men were later called in to restore law and order, one of the demonstrating workers was arrested while others fled.

Meanwhile, the Ports Manager, Mr. Okon Abia Bassey has expressed shock at the action taken by the dock workers, noting that it was wrong for people to take the laws into their hands.

But in his own reaction, the Chairman of the Dock Workers Union, (DUN) in the state, Mr. A.T. Jack, maintained that his men would not return to work until the NPA revert to its former working condition of 32 men per gang per hook a day, pointing out that the authority would not make profits on stevedore charges at the expense of the poor labourers.

In another development, the Senior Staff Association of Shipping, Clearing and Forwarding Agencies has called on the Federal Government to return the control of all private jetties to the Board of Customs and Excise and the Nigerian Ports Authority (NPA).

Making the call last week-end at a press conference, the National President of the association, Mr. Adeyemi Obe, said that the Federal Government should also appoint some Nigerians with wide shipping experience to serve with the two bodies.

NATIONAL BOARD BLAMED FOR LOW COTTON PRODUCTION

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 18 May 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Cotton and Textiles"]

[Text]

AS with all local manufacturers, those of textiles now have another opportunity of a life-time in the protective measures imposed against imports, to mature and prosper. They once had such a chance during the civil war years but they blew it. The result of course was that as soon as consumers were allowed a choice they turned their backs on local textile materials. This second time around, textile manufacturers must not allow the golden opportunity to slip by. Not only are they now even more protected against external competition, but also a walk along any street in our cities would show that it is increasingly becoming fashionable to dress in traditional outfits albeit with a bit of modern touch here and there.

This said, however, it is needless to point out that no amount of exertion on the part of the textile manufacturers can be fruitful without adequate imputs — in particular the principal imput, cotton. If we are going to have a textiles revolution this time, the Nigerian Cotton Board (NCB) must be up and doing to ensure that enough cotton is available to the textile industries. Right now it is not and has not been since the decline of agriculture nearly two decades ago. The reasons are not too far to fetch. Foremost is poor pricing.

The price of cotton has now been raised from 456 Naira per tonne to 510 Naira for the current season. This compares favourably with other cash crops. However, the right price is still only half the solution to the pricing problem. The other half is to ensure that farmers actually get the price. Here we must look again into the Local Buying Agents (LBA) system of purchasing, not only cotton, but other crops. The LBAs have since become notorious as a group that reap where it does not sow; farmers do the back breaking jobs, and the LBAs reap the benefits. But if the textiles industry is to take off at all, it is necessary, though not sufficient, that we should devise a marketing system which ensures that farmers get their labours' worth.

RICE SCANDAL REPORTED IN KADUNA STATE

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 13 May 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] SEVERAL thousands of bags of rice meant to be supplied to the Kaduna State Distribution Agency (KSDA) by some contractors have been reported "missing".

A report sent to the Deputy Governor of Kaduna State, Alhaji Mu'azu Aliyu Ahmed by the Director of Audit of the state, Malam Dalhatu Bello, accused the agency itself of "poor business administration".

The contractor companies mentioned by the Director of Audit are Messrs Amigo Nigeria Enterprises of 19, Adele Road, Apapa, Lagos; Messrs Hamda Ventures Limited of 65, Marina, Lagos, and Messrs Dalorima Merchants Limited of 11, Burma Road, Maiduguri.

According to the Director of Audit, Messrs Amigo and Hamda Ventures, were to supply 60,000 bags of rice each to the agency while Dalorima Merchants were to supply 80,000 bags.

The Director of Audit alleged that "some of the terms common in all the three contracting agreements entered into between the agency and the contractors" were violated resulting in irregularity of supply to the agency.

"It is amazing to note that so far only 27,600 bags out of the 61,454 bags that arrived in Lagos for the agency was delivered by Amigos", he said.

He alleged that 32,400 bags costing the agency 1,149,461.70 Naira were not delivered.

He said "since Amigos were able to deliver some portion of the total quantity of this rice, it goes without saying that they are aware or in fact answerable for the missing batch".

This, the director said, meant that Amigos were to be held responsible for the 1,149,461.70 Naira.

After reviewing the alleged violation of contract agreement whereby prices in the agreement were lower than what Amigos quoted, the director said "the amount recoverable from Amigos should stand as 1,140,461.70 Naira."

The Director of Audit similarly reviewed the perfomance of the other two companies and said 2,325,024.47 Naira was paid out by the agency to Dalorima Merchants but the agency had so far received 77,703 bags of rice as against the 80,000 bags expected from it.

He said Dalorima were paid 200,000 Naira by the distribution agency to transport 80,000 bags of rice from Apapa to Kaduna at 50 Naira per tonne but only transported 77,703 bags.

Because of this, the Director of Audit said, Dalorima Merchants were overpaid 5,742.50 Naira.

In addition, he said, they were also to refund 16,732.80 Naira "being the cost of 630 bags of rice lost in transit through their transporters from Lagos to Kaduna".

He said the total amount of money recoverable from Dalorima was 22,475.30 Naira.

On Hamda Ventures, the Director of Audit said, "Hamda Ventures Limited would appear to have lost 2,768 bags of rice when they delivered to Kaduna, 57,232 out of the 60,000 bags of rice they were supposed to have delivered from Lagos"

He said Hamda Ventures were therefore to account for 93,170.88 Naira being the cost of the missing 2,768 bags of rice at 33.66 Naira per bag".

Commenting on the agency's stores record, the Director of Audit said "the failure of the entire store staff to record and maintain proper stores records made it difficult for me to examine the details of issues made by them and to ascertain exact balances remaining and quantities missing".

He added "it is sad to note that of the 162,565 bags of rice received and documented by the same stores staff, only less than 20,000 bags of rice representing about 12 per cent of the rice were covered by stores issue vouchers and, even so, no entries were made in the stores ledger".

He observed that about 4,000 bags of rice "could be missing" from the stores

The Director of Audit also alleged that, Alhaji Abdu Ali was issued 1,200 bags of rice costing 44,400 Naira adding that "up to the time or writing this report, the distribution agency has neither received the said amount from the man nor even knew his whereabout"

KADUNA GOVERNMENT DENIES RICE SCANDAL

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 15 May 82 pp 1, 13

[Article by Sulaiman Gambari]

[Text]

THE Kaduna State Government has condemned the recent allegations made by the Speaker of the state assembly, Alhaji Abubakar Dan Musa, that it was involved in a rice scandal.

Refuting the allegations yesterday at a press conference in his office, the state Commissioner for Internal Affairs and information, Mr. Mataimaki Tom Maiyashi, described the allegations as false and baseless.

Narrating the circumstances leading to the importation of nce into the state, the commissioner explained that when the Federal Government issued import licences to all state governments for importation of rice owing to its short fall in the country, each state government took precautionary measures it deemed fit to ensure safe procurement of the commodity.

He said the Nigerian National Supply Company (NNSC) which could have ensured adequate distribution of the commodity to all the state governments had been relieved of this function by the Federal Government and instead appointed the Presidential Task Force to perform the functions of the NNSC.

Mr. Maiyashi explained that under that circumstance the state government then decided to use experienced local suppliers, Messrs Amigos Nigeria Enterprises Limited, Hamda Ventures Limited and Dalorima Merchants Limited.

He said the state government had taken Amigos Nigeria Enterprises Limited to the court vide Suit No. LD/51/82, for its failure to complete supply, adding, that the short deliveries made by Messrs Hamda Ventures and Dalorima Merchants were subject to insurance claim.

He said about 1,389 bags of rice valued at 52,782 Naira had been supplied by Dalorima Merchants pointing out that a balance of 200 bags estimated at 7,600 Naira was yet to be received from the same company.

The commissioner emphasised that it was only the state government that had secured 10,000 tonnes of rice at 5.96 million Naira as compared to the remaining states in the country which had procured theirs at seven million Naira and above. He added that out of 5.96 million Naira expended for the importation of rice a total of five million Naira had already been returned to government cofers with a balance of 96,000 Naira yet to be returned before the close of the transaction.

Commenting on the allegation that Alhaji Abdu Ali, had been issued with 1,200 bags of rice at a cost of 44,400 Naira and was yet to supply the commodities or the money to the state distribution agency, Mr Maiyashi said that Alhaji Abdu Ali won the contract because of his connection with the Ahmadu Bello University (ABU) Zaria.

He stressed that the distribution agency helped the ABU by allowing the contractor to supply the said commodity direct to the university in order to avert a repeat of the rice crisis in the university that led to a loss of life.

He disclosed that Alhaji Abdu Ali had been handed over to the police in Zaria for prosecution since October last year for his failure to meet the agreement.

Commissioner Mataimaki, however, said that the state Assembly should have passed in to law the Anti-Hoarding Bill submitted to it by the executive since October 1980 if the legislature had the interest of the masses at heart as claimed by Alhaji Abubakar Dan Musa.

BRIEFS

UNION REJECTS GOVERNMENT ORDER--The Academic Staff Union of Universities (ASUU) Ahmadu Bellow-University, (ABU), Zaria branch has rejected the directive of the Federal Government to suspend the implementation of the university salary scales until further notice. The union described the directive as "short-sighted, ill-advised unnecessary, discriminatory and provocative". A communique issued at the end of a general meeting in Zaria at the weekend, the union called on the federal government to show some sense of realism and avert the threat to industrial peace on the campuses as failure to immediately withdraw the directive would inevitably lead to a resumption of strikes on the campuses. The union warned that if the federal government persisted in its ill-conceived path of action, it would mandate the national executive council of ASUU to resume the suspended industrial, action with immediate effect. The communique which was signed by both the Chairman, Mr. George Kwamashie and the Secretary, A.R. Mustapha cautioned the federal government against doing anything that would worsen the already precaricus financial position of the universities. It was the view of the union that the current crisis in the economy was mainly as a result of the criminal mismanagement of the economy through inflated contracts, liberal issuance of import licences, deliberate over-invoicing and payment of unexecuted projects. PENALTIES FOR ELECTORAL OFFENDERS--The National Assembly Joint Conference on the 1981 Electoral Bill adopted several amendments which stipulated penalties for electoral offenders in future elections in the country. The amendments which were proposed by the House of Representatives stipulated a term of two years imprisonment without an option of fine for any polling officer who fails to report at his station on election day without lawful excuse. Similarly, any such officer who fails to discharge his lawful duties without lawful excuse shall be liable to two years imprisonment. In addition, the conference decided that any electoral officer who announces false election results would be liable to a term of imprisonment for two years. CALABAR AIRPORT TO OPEN--The new terminal being built by the Federal Government at the Calabar International Airport is to be officially opened later this year. Aviation Minister, Mr. John Kadiya, made this known in Calabar while exchanging views with the Cross River State Governor, Dr. Clement Isong. Mr. Kadiya who was in Calabar to inspect projects being executed by his yesterday is likely to continue for an indefinite period because the local education officials who are supposed to intervene and arrest the situation were reportedly nowhere to be found. Most teachers interviewed by the New Nigerian yesterday lamented that the Chief Education Officer (CEO) of the Local Education Authority who was to negotiate with the officials of the Nigerian Union of Teachers (NUT) had not been seen for sometime now. When I called at the office of the CEO along Abubakar Kigo Road for comments his secretary told me that he had gone on leave. But a dependable source close to the Local Education Secretariat said that the CEO was not on leave as claimed by the secretary. Rather, he said, the CEO had gone for further studies at the Ahmadu Bello University (ABU) Zaria. Contacted, the Nigerian Union of Teachers (NUT) Secretary, Mr. Lucas S. Zamani admitted that primary schools teachers were on strike. He said he could not comment on the situation as he had been instructed not to speak to the press by state executive council of the union. ARMS, AMMUNITION SMUGGLING--A Nigerian student in the United States was on Wednesday arrested for attempting to smuggle 10 pistols and 522 rounds of live ammunition into the country by the special task force of the department of Customs and Excise at the Murtala Muhammed Airport, Lagos. The suspect, a bio-chemistry student in Texas arrived on a Pan-Am flight from New York. The pistols and ammunition were cleverly concealed in a big size Aiwa radio cassette recorder which he carried as a hand luggage. On interrogation by customs officials, the suspect with passport number 0174547 expressed surprise when the discovery was made. "I was embarrassed because of what I saw when the recorder was opened," he added. Furthermore, the suspect alleged that he was asked to deliver the recorder to somebody he could not identify at the Port Harcourt Airport. 'My friend in the United States who asked me to deliver this recorder is going to be seriously dealt with when I get back, I will kill him,' he said. The case had since been handed over to the legal department of the Customs and Excise. [Yinka Kwesi Guedon] [Text] [Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 21 May 82 p 7]

EMIR ON IMPORTED RICE--The Emir of Yauri, Alhaji Shuaibu Yakubu Abarshi, has observed that the continued importation of rice will forever remain a stumbling block to mass production of the local variety in the country. Speaking to the New Nigerian in his palace at Yauri on Wednesday, the emir said people would continue to yearn for imported type of rice thereby discouraging our farmers from producing our own variety in required quantity. Expressing happiness that the government had increased the price of cotton, he hoped the same encouragement would be extended to farmers producing other types of crops. Alhaji Shuaibu also appealed to the authorities to provide efficient rice processing machines to all rice producing areas in the country. He felt that more assistance should be given to the small-scale farmers, who he said, were real farmers "and not just to the richmen who farmed for fun. The emir then expressed regret that the whole of Yauri Division had no post-secondary institution. He said the people of Ngaski faced serious road and water problem, adding that while the water the people in the area drank was infested by guinea worm, their roads were almost impassable. FAKE NAIRA NOTES--Police believe that fake Naira notes are now in circulation in the country especially in Imo, Kano and Plateau states and warn members of the public, banks and commercial firms, to check properly all monies brought to them, with a view to detecting the fake notes. The notes which are dull and blurred in appearance and have no security thread, bear serial numbers A/68971101; B/582999 and B/589003. Anybody found in possession of these fake notes should be reported to the nearest police post, without delay. Also uncovered is a new device being employed by some unscrupulous elements who use very young girls to spy on their targets for criminal activities, in order to steal their property. It said that these undesirable elements give out these girls to visitors who spy on their "new found lovers" and inform their masters, who then steal the visitors' belongings. The police also warned motorists over the tendency to leave valuable property on car seats as these constitute open invitations to thieves. SHIPPING LINE SCANDAL PROBE--The Board of Directors of the Nigerian National Shipping Line (NNSL) has set up an internal commission of inquiry to investigate the kick-back scandal allegation against a staff of the company by its former employee. The inquiry followed the front page publication by the Punch Newspaper on April 26, 1982, in which an allegation of receiving a kick-back from a Japanese Company was made against a top staff of the NNSL. The probe, which has already started working is made up of three directors of the company with its company secretary/legal adviser as secretary to the commission. The findings and recommendations of the commission of inquiry is to be submitted to the board within one month. [Text] [Enugu DAILY STAR in English 14 May 82 p 1]

VICE PRESIDENT CRITICIZED--Three successive times, the people of Anambra State have accorded very befitting receptions to Mr President. They have consistently done him proud because he truly represents his high office in our state. Can't his Vice borrow a leaf from him? Can't he learn to come here as Mr Vice President and not as an NPN timber and calibre? [STAR Sermon] [Text] [Enugu DAILY STAR in English 17 May 82 p 16] The greatest fun, and at the same time, the greatest truth in nature is that the smallest unit is the strongest force. Whosoever fails to recognize and reckon with this truth, is most obviously on pitiable path of self destruction. And so, the minority states are poised to unleash their full force: Shagari must drop Ekwueme or Shagari must go. This is the greatest "Executive chase." The principle of self-survival must interpaly. The option is clear. [STAR Sermon] [Text] [Enugu DAILY STAR in English 18 May 82 p 16]

AUSTERITY MEASURES CRITICIZED--In his letter to the National Assembly about his government's decision to cut the pay packets of his ministers by 12-1/2 per cent from April 1, Mr President made known his intention to apply similar measures to public servants. It is most obvious that nothing can be as unfortunate as any attempt to implement such an intention. To be frank, the side effects of the austerity policies of the Federal Government are already too hard on innocent citizens. Let, for Heaven's sake those who ruin the economy of the nation be made to pay for it through slashes in their salary packages. [Text] [Enugu DAILY STAR in English 19 May 82 p 16]

RESEARCH CENTERS ESTABLISHED--The Federal Government has set up 22 research institutes towards the promotion and development of manpower resources in the scientific and technological fields. This was announced in Lagos at the weekend by the Minister of Science and Technology, Dr. Wahab Dosunmu, during a graduation ceremony at the apprentice training centre of the Metal Box Toyo Glass. Chief Dosunmu said although there were more than 30 polytechnics and colleges of technology in the country, it was evident that "we do not have enough pool of skilled manpower to meet the demands of our fast-growing economy." This was why the Shagari administration had given top priority to the development of manpower resources in the scientific and technological fields. Apart from the 22 research centres already established, there were plans to establish five more, he added. Dr. Dosunmu said the task of providing the necessary scientific and technological base for the country's development was enormous. He called for the harnessing of all available talents and resources in both the public and private sectors. The minister said that one of the major constraints in the rapid economic development of the country was the lack of human resources both in quantitative and qualitative forms to cope with the new capital investment and the innovative technology. He said it was in acknowledgement of the country's need to have a large pool of technically trained manpower that the last military regime found it necessary to embark upon the very expensive 'crash' technical training programme in overseas institutions. The minister praised the Metal Box Nigeria Limited and the Metal Box Toyo Glass Nigeria Limited for supplementing the government efforts through the establishment of apprentice training centres for their employees. WARNING ON BARRACKS RELIGION--The General Officer Commanding (GOC) First Mechanised Division, Brigadier Alfred Aduloju, has warned on the proliferation of religious worship by woldiers and their families in the barracks. He said that religious sects outside the Catholic, Protestant and Islamic faith, were not permitted to operate within the army barracks. According to the latest issue of Soja, a news bulletin of the Nigerian Army, the GOC gave the warning while declaring open a two-day seventh annual Christian Women Fellowship Convention held in Kano recently. Brigadier Aduloju explained that most religions had "many practices which run counter to barracks regulation and consequently affect the morale and fighting efficiency of soldiers" [Text] [Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 24 May 82 p 24]

THREATS TO CHIEFS FAVORING UNIFICATION REPORTED

MB210711 Mbabane TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 21 Jun 82 p 1

[Text] A number of chiefs and other pro-unification South African Swazis have been threatened with death.

Some of those threatened with death have fled their homes, according to sources from Kangwane.

The threats, believed to have been made by forces loyal to former Kangwane chief executive councillor, Mr Enos Mabuza, followed the announcement by the South African Government last week that Kangwane and the Ingwavuma will be incorporated into Swaziland.

The sources said the forces were determined to kill all leading personalities who favour incorporation and destroy properties.

The sources also refuted Mr Mabuza's recent claim that out of about 20 chiefs in Kangwane only two wanted incorporation. In fact, the source, said only 12 chiefs there were against the unification and 15 are in favour.

In a reference to the referendum demanded by Mr Mabuza to test the views of South African Swazis on the unification, the source dismissed such an idea.

"There was no referendum when the Swaziland was arbitrarily annexed into South Africa. So, why a referendum when the land is being returned to its rightful owners," he asked.

In a reference to a statement by the Azanian People's Organisation (AZAPO) expressing its opposition to the unification of the Swazis, the source expressed surprise at such an outburst.

These, he said, were the people who run to Swaziland to seek protection whenever things become difficult for them in their own country.

Children of such prominent black leaders in South Africa as Nelson Mandela (ANC leader serving life sentence on Robben Island) received their education in Swaziland.

He added: "Numerous other South African freedom fighters have been granted asylum in Swaziland. The people (the AZAPO) are now biting the hand that feeds them."

The source described the deal with South Africa as a breakthrough. But, he said it was also a big challenge to the Swazi nation.

NATAL GROUP SEES 'REMOVALS' CONTINUING

MB181055 Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 18 Jun 82 p 4

[Text] Removals from "black spots" in "white" areas to homeland resettlement camps appears to be continuing despite suggestions by government spokesmen that removals would stop, says the Association for Rural Advancement (AFRA).

In its latest report AFRA, a Maritzburg-based organization which monitors removals in Natal, says three developments in April made some observers believe that "black spot" removals were to stop. These were:

--the government announced it was abandoning a major relocation in Lebowa.

--a speech by the chairman of the Commission for Co-operation and Development, Mr Hennie Van Der Walt, in which he said: "In the light of the new government policy of economic development it was necessary to review whether some of the black spots needed to be removed."

--a speech by the nationalist MP for Klip Rover, Mr Val Volker, in which he said that black landowners in "white" areas who were farming their land economically should not be moved.

The high cost of relocation--probably about R180,500,000 at today's prices to move the 230,000 people on freehold black land in Natal alone--could also discourage continued removals, AFRA said.

But, despite these facts, evidence suggested that "far from stopping further removals the government is still determined to push ahead with the programme that necessarily involves the forced relocation of thousands of blacks in Natal and elsewhere," the report said.

The report lists several areas in Natal where people are earmarked for removal and where preparations to relocate the communities continued even after the three developments in April.

COMMENT ON NEED FOR CUBAN WITHDRAWAL

MB221036 Johannesburg Domestic Service in English 0500 GMT 22 Jun 82

[Excerpts] The final implementation of the western settlement plan for South-West Africa, is subject to the satisfaction of twin--Siamese twin--requirements: the acceptance by all parties of the three phases of the plan, and the departure of the Cuban forces from Angola. The prime minister, Mr Botha, put it straight on the line at the weekend. We cannot, he said, enter phase three unless the Cubans are withdrawn from Angola.

The vital connection between the two requirements was also spelled out by President Reagan six weeks ago. He said then: In southern Africa, working closely with our Western allies and the African states, we have made progress toward independence for Namibia; these negotiations, if successful, will result in peaceful and secure conditions throughout southern Africa. And, he added: The simultaneous withdrawal of Cuban forces from Angola, is essential to achieving Namibian independence, as well as creating long-range prospects for peace in the region.

The function of the Cuban proxies is to destabilize by whatever means the region in which they operate. The more particular reason is the danger they represent to the holding of a fair election in South-West Africa. They provide support in depth for SWAPO in its campaign of terror and intimidation; they give substance to any threat which SWAPO may make to the voters to continue hostilities unless it wins the election; and generally an atmosphere free of duress which is essential for a true expression of the sentiment of the electorate will not be possible to achieve with the Cubans across South-West Africa's border.

A free and fair election in South-West Africa is part of the securing of stability in the region as a whole. The presence of the Cubans in Angola threatens both. Hence, the insistence of the president of the United States and the prime minister of South Africa that they should go.

STANDARD BANK ALARMED OVER MONEY SUPPLY RISE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 9 Jun 82 p 18

[Text]

STANDARD BANK says South African money supply continues to rise at an alarming and excessive rate.

During the first 1982 quarter, broadly defined M-2 rose 41 percent on a seasonally adjusted annual basis, against 21 percent the previous quarter, it said in an economic review.

M-2 rose 25 percent in 1981 and 27 percent in 1980.

The main statistical cause for the sharp rise in money supply in the first quarter was a substantial increase in bank credit to the private sector, it added.

Standard Bank said South African banks had borrowed heavily overseas in the first quarter to ease the effects of a domestic credit squeeze.

Preliminary calculations show South Africa's annualised current account balance of payments deficit rose to R6,5-billion in the first quarter this year from 1981's record deficit of R3,95-billion, it said.

It said, however, there were strong reasons for assuming the actual current account payments deficit for 1982 would fall considerably from the first quarter's annualised level.

Standard Bank said it was increasingly reported that import volumes were easing as the slowdown in the domestic economy worked through the system.

Imports should decline in the second half this year, given the steep decline in the value of the rand and introduction of a 10 percent import surcharge earlier this year, it said.

Gross gold and foreign exchange reserve which totalled R3,[illegible] billion at end-Ap[illegible] against R3,71-billion [illegible]t end-1981, were well short of the cost of three months imports, which was a traditional safety measure for the reserves, it added.

As the currency component of the reserves was only R47-million at the end of April, there was considerable need for overseas borrowing to bolster the reserves, Standard Bank said.

The fall in the reserves and the continuing high current payment deficit had caused the authorities to encourage banks and other private and public sector bodies to borrow overseas, it said.

Such borrowing boosted money supply further and had to be neutralised by sales of Government stock to drain liquidity, it added.

Standard Bank said the South African authorities were reluctant to take severe anti-inflationary measures when the economy was well into a downswing.

South African inflation, as measured by the consumer price index, is running at an annualised 16,56 percent; its highest level for 62 years.

DETAILS ON BOMB EXPLOSIONS IN PAUL PIETERSBURG GIVEN

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 4 Jun 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] Police launched a nationwide manhunt yesterday for the saboteurs responsible for six bomb explosions which rocked the small northern Natal town of Paulpietersburg on Wednesday night.

The blasts, which came only a few hours after two Johannesburg salesmen were attacked by suspected terrorists near the town, damaged a fuel depot, railway lines and a transformer.

They also destroyed two petrol tankers and a diesel tank. Nobody was injured in the explosions, for which no one has claimed responsibility yet.

All the explosions occurred about midnight on Wednesday night. Four occurred near the Kemps List mine, one at a Total fuel depot and another at the Paulpietersburg railway station.

Firemen battled for hours to contain a blaze caused by the blast at the fuel depot, only managing to extinguish the flames late yesterday afternoon.

Eyewitnesses said the flames had leapt hundreds of metres into the air.

The explosion also set alight an oil store and two petrol tankers.

Damage was reported to be extensive.

A railway transformer and a diesel tank were damaged in explosions in the vicinity of the Kemps List mine.

Police said the explosions--believed to have numbered four--had occurred at about 11 last night, on a railway branchline leading from the mine to the main Paulpietersburg-Vryheid line.

The head of the railway police in Natal, Brigadier C Robbertze, said minimal damage had been caused by the blast which rocked the Paulpietersburg railway station shortly before midnight.

He said the explosion had caused a minor traffic disruption but everything was back to normal by yesterday morning.

The explosives had apparently been placed in a signal box next to the railway tracks.

The type of explosives used in the blasts had not yet been determined.

Only hours before the blasts, two freelance representatives for several Johannesburg firms, Mr G Viljoen (52) and Mr Ben Ludick (18), both from Jeppe, were allegedly attacked by two men dressed in khaki jackets and wielding automatic weapons.

They told police they had been watching television at about 6,30 pm in the back of a panel van parked at a roadside rest site about 5 km outside the town when the suspected terrorists struck.

The victims said they had been beaten and robbed of their wristwatches before being tied to trees.

They apparently managed to free themselves shortly after their assailants had made their getaway.

A police spokesman said Mr Viljoen had received slight chest injuries in the attacks. The organisation has threatened to step up its attacks on key installations throughout the country.

Rail links and petrol depots are among its known targets.

UNIONS' WITHDRAWAL FROM TUCSA REPORTED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 9 Jun 82 p 9

[Text]

CAPE TOWN. — The National Union of Distributive Workers and the National Union of Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers have decided to resign their affiliation with the Trade Union Council of South Africa (Tucsa).

In a joint statement, they said: "While recognising that Tucsa had done important work in obtaining progressive changes to industrial legislation which we whole-heartedly support as far as they go, these unions have found themselves in disagreement with the support which Tucsa has given to some aspects of those changes which directly affect them.

"Thus, among the reasons for the decision to resign from Tucsa, are differences over those aspects of Tucsal policy on some of the changes to labour legislation.

"Over the last few years, the unions have found themselves in disagreement with Tucsa on other issues, such as the proposal to invite Mr B J Vorster, former Prime Minister and State President, to officially open Tucsa's 25th annual conference in 1979, and later, the council's attitude to prominent trade unionists accepting membership of the President's Council and the contemptuous attitude towards university graduates who take positions in trade unions. In certain area divisions there is resistance amounting not only to lack of support, but to antipathy for the struggles of some groups of workers for improved conditions.

"More recently, there has been the council's unnecessary 'distancing' of itself from the protests of the Food and Canning Workers' Unions at the death of their Transvaal official, Dr Neli Aggett, and the call by those unions and others on their membership for a half-hour work stoppage of mourning and protest.

"Tucsa's semantic quibbling in opposition to the vital issue of detention and solitary confinement without charge or trial, as set out in the petition of the Detainees' Parents Support Committee, undermines Tucsa's own declared support for the rule of just law, this at a time when two officials of unions in our Association of Distributive and Allied Workers were in detention. One of them Emma Mashinini, has now been released without charges against her, After more than 5 months in detention. The other, Alan Fine, has twice appeared in court without being charged, and is still in prison after being detained in September 1981.

RAIL LINE BOMBED; PASSENGERS UNHURT

[Article by Chris Ocklers]

[Excerpts] The driver of the packed passenger train which was bombed by saboteurs in the eastern Transvaal at the weekend said yesterday if he had been going a little faster the explosion could have caused the worst rail disaster in South Africa's history.

Mr J. A. Odendaal of Komatipoort said the bomb had been placed on the rails on a corner only 30m from a bridge over the Elands River.

"We could easily have plunged into the river with great loss of life and serious injury," a shaken Mr Odendaal said in a telephone interview yesterday. The train was carrying nearly 350 people and was on its way from Maputo to Pretoria."

Meanwhile, a massive manhunt has been launched for the saboteurs by the railways police assisted by SA police and commandos.

The explosion took place shortly after 2 a.m. on Saturday. The train, carrying mainly black passengers, was brought to a halt only a kilometre outside Waterval Onder station.

The bomb rocked the locomotive and caused a metre-wide crater. Miraculously fifteen passenger carriages filled to capacity did not derail although the sleeping passengers were jolted awake by the blast.

Mr Odendaal and his assistant, Mr P. G. Wolmarans, also from Komatipoort, were slightly injured and treated at the Waterval Boven Hospital for internal injuries, bruises and shock. No passengers were injured.

The commissioner of the railways police, Lieut-Gen Hannes Visagie, said last night it was not yet known what type of explosives had been used in the attack but said it could easily have been a terrible disaster.

"The bomb exploded on a curve on the line and near a bridge over a river. It could have been much worse. Nobody has as yet claimed responsibility but it would appear to have been the work of the African National Congress."

RAND DECLINE SEEN BOOST TO COAL

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 9 Jun 82 p 18

[Text]

Mining Editor

SOUTH Africa's export revenue from coal could increase by as much as 25 percent this year, but the bulk of the increase will result from this year's lower rand/dollar exchange rate.

If it were not for this, the earnings growth would probaly be only 10 percent against the previous year's 42 percent.

According to the latest Standard Bank economic review, South Africa last year earned R977-million from its coal exports, despite the fact that volume only increased marginally from 29,2-million to 29,9-million tons.

The bank cited various reasons for this year's expected levelling off in exports.

One of them is a substantially smaller dollar price increase this year, compared with last year and another is a decrease in demand because of the economic stagnation.

The bank says although South Africa will be well placed to take advantage of a renewed upturn due to the planned commissioning of additional transport capacity from mid-1983, the local industry is likely to encounter increasing competition in world markets from several other coal-exporting countries, which are also gearing up for renewed export growth.

The bank also points out that there was a marked change in the supply patterns of coal last year.

One of the results of this was that South Africa, which ranked first in 1980 as an exporter, lost its position to the US.

Transport capacity constraints last year played a part in this.

The bank points out that the present weakness of the world steam coal market has significantly limited local exporters' ability to raise contract prices for 1982.

This is in contrast with the situation last year when price increases of 30 to 40 percent were negotiated in dollar terms on new contracts.

This year's increases have been limited to only 7 to 8 percent.

Average prices for this year are, however, some 10 to 12 percent up on last year due to the renegotiation of historically low prices on several older contracts.

Coal exporters will therefore rely on the declining rand/dollar exchange rate both for the bulk of their growth in export revenue this year and to mitigate the negative impact on their profit margins resulting from the substantial slowdown in the rate of dollar price increases at a time of escalating domestic cost increases.

Standard says it is very unlikely that the rand/dollar rate will decline much below its present level for the rest of the year.

The average rand/dollar rate this year is still likely to be some 15 percent lower than last year's average of 1,14.

The bank estimates this year's export revenue from coal at R1 200-million, representing an increase of 25 percent on the previous year's figure.

WOOL CROP REPORTED BEST IN YEARS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 9 Jun 82 p 18

[Text]

SOUTH African wool production in the 1981/82, August to June, marketing season rose almost four percent to 105,73-million kg greasy basis from 101,8-million kg in 1980/81, a wool board spokesman said.

He said 1981/82's output was the highest in 10 years and it was one of the best growing seasons in recent years.

The effects of a drought, which has affected some wool growing areas since December 1981, would only be reflected in 1982/83, he added.

In the wool growing areas in the southwest of the country, farmers had sheared 20 percent more wool per sheep because of fine winter weather, the spokesman said.

Sheep numbers were slightly lower at 28,3-million at the start of the season, against 28,9-million the previous August.

Some 92-million kg of producers' wool, representing 90,5 percent of offerings, was sold at auction during 1981/82, compared with 95,8-million kg, 96 percent of offerings, in 1980/81, he added.

The spokesman said a feature of the season was demand for long fine and superfine wools, while demand for short strong types fell off sharply in April.

He said centralisation of South African wool sales in Port Elizabeth had been successful in helping combat rising costs.

Main importers of South African wool were Britain, West Germany, France, Italy, Japan and the US in the past season, he added. —

STOPPING UNREST--South African Council of Churches [SACC] general secretary Bishop Desmond Tutu has outlined four points which he says will stop unrest in South Africa. Tutu was delivering his annual report to the national conference of the SACC in Johannesburg last night. He said the four points were: a commitment to a common citizenship for all South Africans; abolition of the pass laws, detention without trial and lifting of banning orders; stopping all forced population removals; and instituting a common education system. Tutu said if South African Prime Minister Pieter Botha adopted these points, many black leaders would urge their people to give him time to get rid of apartheid. BUTHELEZI REACTION--Kwazulu chief minister Gatsha Buthelezi is angry about remarks made at the weekend by Prime Minister Pieter Botha on the land deal. Carmen Rickard has the story: [Rickard] Mr Botha was quoted as saying that the government was trying to bring together people who belonged together historically and culturally. This Buthelezi has described as deliberately distorting a serious situation. He and all the other members of Kwazulu's legislative assembly have announced their intention to visit Ngwavuma to discharge what he called their moral obligation to tell the people there of the central government's intention. Meanwhile, the government's plan has been unanimously supported by the Natal head committee of the National Party this weekend. This is in stark contrast to announcements of new Republic Party and progressive Federal Party decisions to oppose the move in conjunction with Swazulu officials by referenda, protest meetings and petitions. An emergency session of the Natal Provincial Council is also to be held in a fortnight to consider the matter. Carmen Rickard in Durban for Capital News. EXPLOSION SUSPECTS--Three people had been detained for questioning in connection with bombings of fuel tanks at Paulpietersburg and a grain silo at Vryheid, a spokesman for the police division of public relations said in Pretoria yesterday. The men were being held in terms of security legislation, the spokesman said. Two other terrorists believed to have been responsible for sabotage had been fully identified. The police are offering a substantial reward for information leading to the detention of the two men still on the run. The public was requested to be on the lookout for them and to report any information to the nearest police station. The wanted men are Mr Bheki Sam Mchunu (26) (alias Simon Ceī or Jōyini Jele) of Piet Retief and Mr Galokwake Thembinkosi Sithole (29) of Nqutu near Dundee. COVERNMENT ISSUES STATEMENT ON SOUTH AFRICAN LAND

[Text] The border adjustment with South Africa will not affect employment opportunities and the improvement of the living standards of the people in the affected areas.

Their social and welfare benefits will also not be affected, said the minister for foreign affairs, Mr R. V. Dlamini, in a government statement on the land deal with South Africa.

Speaking at a press conference at Lobamba, Mr Dlamini said: "There will be no forced movement of people from their present areas."

The full text of the minister's statement, which was the first official reaction to the South African parliament last Thursday, said:

"I wish to refer to the statement made in the South African parliament on Thursday, the 6th May 1982, [as printed] by the honourable minister for foreign affairs, Mr R. F. Botha when replying to questions asked by members of parliament on the border adjustment talks between the Kingdom of Swaziland and the Republic of South Africa in which he said, and I quote:

"The whole issue should be seen against the background of tidying up as far as possible the legacies of imperialism.... The determination of the boundaries of Swaziland in the colonial era of the 19th century left numerous Swazi tribes outside Swazi territory, and this is a fact. The Swazis in South Africa have the same language, customs and culture as the Swazis of Swaziland and they acknowledge the king of Swaziland."

The minister continued: "I could add: As much as all their chiefs are still recognised by the king of Swaziland today.

"It is in that background that the world should view the border adjustment talks between the Kingdom of Swaziland and the Republic of South Africa. The international community should also understand that in fact there has never been any mutually recognised boundaries between the Kingdom of Swaziland and the Republic of South Africa."

What the two countries are doing, therefore, Mr Dlamini continued, is to try and settle this problem amicably, and thereby heal the wounds caused by the accidents of history.

"Therefore, the recent statement made by the honourable minister for cooperation and development, Dr P.G.J. Koornhof, in which he announced the moves and steps that have been taken towards amicably settling the border adjustment talks between our two governments, is most welcome to his majesty's government and the entire Swazi nation.

"Swaziland's claim to these lands is based on historical facts and substantive evidential documents. The creation of homeland governments over these areas was a unilateral decision by South Africa much against the interest of Swaziland, who protested vehemently against these acts."

On the question of citizenship, the minister of foreign affairs stated that the border adjustment settlement will not affect anybody in either employment opportunities and the improvement of living standards of people in the affected areas, or the social and welfare benefits.

Further, there will be no forced movement of people from their present areas, Mr Dlamini assured.

On the economic and industrial development of these areas, Mr Dlamini said: "With the help of our friends the Kingdom of Swaziland has made [word indistinct] economic and industrial development in the last 14 years. According to the International Monetary Fund, Swaziland is one of the very few Third World countries that have a viable economy.

"Swaziland is ready to tackle this problem as vigorously and as objectively as she did when she regained her independence in 1968. Along with the economic and industrial development programme, there will be, of course, a sustained programme of developing human resources. In doing all this the kingdom will maintain her policy of open partnership and free enterprise with friendly nations.

"Swaziland is a member and signatory to the principles enshrined in the charters of the United Nations, the Organisation of African Unity and the Nonaligned Movement. Swaziland is also an active member of the Commonwealth of Nations. This country was admitted into membership of these international organisations holding in hand its membership of the Southern African Customs Union and was accepted as such," he stated.

"It is on record that the border question between Swaziland and South Africa dated back to the last century during the reign of King Mbandzeni. In the period 1910 to 1966, Swaziland was in frequent contact with the United Kingdom Government on the question of its borders. South Africa was also in contact with the United Kingdom. In 1967 the British Embassy, at the request of the Swazi nation, informed the government of the Republic of South Africa to hold the matter in abeyance until Swaziland became independent. Accordingly direct discussions between the two independent states were commenced in 1969--a year after Swaziland had regained her independence from the United Kingdom. Therefore, the allegation that Swaziland is being wooed by South Africa into its constellation of states is not only wishful and speculative thinking, but a dangerous and deliberate attempt to destroy genuine efforts to maintain peace and tranquillity in southern Africa. Swaziland is a sovereign and independent state and was exercising her rights under international law when she entered into bilateral negotiations with South Africa over the question of border adjustments."

On liberation movements such as the ANC, the minister for foreign affairs said Swaziland will not allow itself to be used as a springboard to attack its neighbours.

"Swaziland is a signatory to the United Nations Convention for Refugees. Swaziland, like any other state, will not allow her territory to be used as a base for attacking any of her neighbours. It must be remembered that Swaziland under international law may only provide transit facilities to genuine political refugees from any of its immediate neighbouring states. It must be borne in mind that since independence Swaziland has continued, in close consultation with the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, to provide this facility at great expense and sacrifice. Everyone concerned knows this fact," he said.

"I wish, therefore, to stress that the current threats by the prophets of doom and disunity are designed to serve these men's parochial and selfish political interest; and are in no way related to the welfare and political progress of the blacks in South Africa. Nor are these pseudo politicians concerned with promoting economic stability and a political climate conducive to a peaceful resolution of our complex problems in this region.

"Swaziland is now ready to welcome back all her sons and daughters. This has been the cry of their parents for years," he continued.

"We are all Swazis. We need each other and all the skills we can muster to exploit the vast natural resources God gave us," Mr Dlamini concluded.

SWAZILAND TO BE IN TWO PARTS AFTER LAND DEAL

MB181107 Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 18 Jun 82 p 2

[Article by Patrick Laurence, Southern Africa editor]

[Text] Swaziland will consist of two separate blocks of territory after the addition of land from South Africa under its "border adjustment" accord with Pretoria, it was learnt yesterday.

Apart from those parts of Kangwane which lie on its northwestern border, Swaziland will absorb a piece of land--known as Nsikazi--separated from the rest of the country by a corridor of South Africa which carries the main railway line from Johannesburg to Maputo.

Situated near the towns of Nelspruit and White River, Nsikazi was due to be excised from Kangwane under the 1975 consolidation proposals but is included in an official map of the ceded land released in Pretoria yesterday.

"Swaziland will look like a Bantustan," the chief executive councillor of Kangwane, Mr E. J. Mabuza, remarked at a news conference.

Mr Mabuza, backed by a 40-strong Kangwane delegation of councillors and chiefs, was involved in talks with Dr Piet Koornhof, minister of co-operation and development, in an 11th-hour bid to dissuade Pretoria from going ahead with the deal.

But even before the talks were complete a statement was released, in which Dr Koornhof reaffirmed that South Africa and Swaziland had agreed to a frontier adjustment providing for the cession of three blocks of Kangwane and the Ingwavuma region of Kwazulu to Swaziland.

Dr Koornhof confirmed in his statement that Pretoria demanded that Swaziland accept all South African-born Swazis as a pre-condition for the land transfer.

"The border adjustment is a step towards fulfillment of the long-cherished ideal of the Swazi people--who have for long been deprived of Swazi citizenship by an accident of history--to be united under one king in one country," he said.

Dr Koornhof stressed that all existing "rights, privileges or benefits" possessed by the South African Swazi would not be forfeited as a result of their change in citizenship.

"The South African Government, in legislation now being prepared, will specifically provide for the retention of the right to remain in, or to find new employment in, South Africa," he said.

"It has also provided that those who have section 10 qualifications will not forfeit them."

A cooly angry Mr Mabuza told newsmen that all but seven of Kangwane's 45-member legislative assembly had opposed the incorporation of Kangwane into Swaziland.

"But all our submissions have, without exception, been contemptuously ignored," he said.

Mr Mabuza alleged that members of the security police and the national intelligence service had visited Kangwane to assess the feelings of the people on unification with Swaziland.

Referring to "strange men who visited our chiefs in the night," Mr Mabuza said: "They identified themselves as members of the security police and the national intelligence service."

He could, if necessary, name the chiefs and men who visited them, he added.

TAC ANNUAL REPORT NOTES MANY IRREGULARITIES IN PARASTATALS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 1 Jun 82 p 1

[Article by Simeon Ileta]

[Text] MOST parastatals are in arrears in preparation and submission of accounts for audit purposes. The majority have failed to get clean audit reports and some are operating at loss, according to the Tanzania Audit Corporation (TAC) annual report for 1981 released in Dar es Salaam yesterday

The report says the standard of accounting in parastatal institutions has remained poor attributing this to ill-defined statutory regulations, poor management, ineffective boards of directors, inadequate control by parent ministries, absence of standard accounting practices, lack of internal audit and shortage of accounting staff.

Out of the 282 audits finalised during the year, only 85 annual accounts have been awarded clean audit reports, 138 have been given qualified audit reports, 43 have got 'adverse opinion' reports while 16 accounts have got 'disclaimer of opinion' reports.

According to the report, 110 of the audited accounts disclose losses or excess of expenditure over income while 117 accounts disclose profits or excess of income over expenditure.

Leading in making losses, according to the report, are the Sugar Development Corporation — 90.84m/- as at June 1980; the Tanzania Zambia Railway Authority — 86.96m/- (June 1979); Mwanza Textile Ltd — 41.92m/- as at December 1980, Kilombero Sugar Company — 18.66m/- (June 1980); Mtibwa Sugar Estates Ltd — 13.29m/- as at June 1979 and National Housing Corporation — 12.15m/- as at June 1977.

Those which made profits include the National Bank of Commerce — 462.42m/- as at June 1980; Tanzania Posts and Telecommunications Corporation — 163.49m/- as at December 1978; Bank of Tanzania 111.29m/- (June 1980); Tanzania Cigarette Company — 70.59m/- (December 1980), Tanzania Electric Supply Company 57.16m/- as at December 1979, Aluminium Africa Ltd — 56.68m/- (December 1980) and the Tanzania Petroleum Development Corporation — 53.29m/- as at December 1979.

The report says it is evident that most parastatals in the country have lacked proper accountability.

Outlining constrants to the external audit of parastatal organisations in Tanzania, the report says at present most of the statutes do not set the period within which parastatals must submit accounts for audit and the penalties for failure to do so.

As a result, it says, many parastatals are submitting accounts for audit at their will.

On management, the report says a number of parastatal organisations are functioning without effective managerial talent.

Some heads of parastatals, the report further discloses, are neither qualified nor experienced in the fields pertaining to the operations of thier parastatals as a result of which they either tend to rely too much on the advice of departmental managers thus losing executive authority or they choose not to rely too much on the advice of departmental managers resulting into making faulty decisions.

The report says that the current practice of transferring a head who proves to be inadequate from one institution to another makes it difficult for the managers to be held accountable for the failures as a result of which many lapses in parastatals are left unchecked.

It suggests that managers should be given the chance and facilities to manage one parastatal for an appreciable length of time coupled with a management training programme.

It further says that a number of boards of directors of parastatals do not seem to realise their important role in the direction of parastatal organisations they have been entrusted to manage. Many have become inactive and are not holding regular meetings to review the operations of the parastatals and guide management accordingly.

Out of 220 management audit reports issued by TAC as at June 1981, only 99 such reports were stated to have been tabled and deliberated upon by the boards concerned, the report discloses.

Parent ministries have also came under attack in the report which notes that some are not even aware of the many irregularities taking place in parastatals under their control. They do not follow up to ensure that their parastatals prepare their accounts timely.

The TAC's clientele increased from 373 in July 1980 to 398 by the end of June 1981, the report says.

NATION BECOMES TWELFTH AFRICAN STATE TO SIGN OAU RIGHTS CONVENTION

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 2 Jun 82 p 3

[Article by Simeon Ileta]

[Text]

TANZANIA has become the 12th African state to sign the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) Convention on Human and People's Rights.

According to the Head of International Law Section in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Ndugu Elikunda Elly Mtange, Tanzania's embassy in Addis Ababa has been directed to sign the Convention which was adopted at the OAU Heads of State and Government summit in Nairobi, Kenya last year.

Later reports from Addis indicated that Tanzania signed the Convention at a ceremony which was also attended by OAU Secretary General Edem Kodjo. It was not immediately known who signed on behalf of Tanzania.

Ndugu Mtango said the signing of the convention commits Tanzania and other signatories morally to fulfil the obligations laid down in the Convention.

He said the signatories would then be required to ratify the Convention after which they would be legally bound and would be party to the Convention.

Countries which have signed the charter so far are Tanzania, Mauritania, Togo, Gabon, Somalia, Congo, Guinea, Egypt, Sierra Leone, Mali, Senegal and Rwanda.

The decision to draft the Charter was taken by the African Heads of State and Government at their annual summit in 1979 at Monrovia, Liberia.

The convention underlines, among other things, equality of all people before the law, equal right to protection of law, right to practice religion, right to objective information, right to move freely, right to self-determination, right for development, right to work and to receive equal pay for equal work.

Under the convention, all types of slavery, slave trade, torture, cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment of peoples are prohibited as well as arbitrary arrests and detentions.

It also underscores the freedom of people to move freely from their countries of residence and assorts that "expulsion of non-nationals shall be prohibited, and no economic, political or other reasons would justify such a measure."

The convention further guarantees the right to asylum but emphasises that every person enjoying the right should not engage in subversive activities against his country of origin or any other state party to the convention.

If the convention is ratified by a simple majority of 26 member states, it would empower the OAU to establish a Commission to protect human rights in Africa.

According to the Convention, the Commission would consist of 11 members chosen among African personalities with the highest consideration for their high morals, integrity, impartiality and competence in matters of human rights who would serve in their individual capacities.

Commission members would be elected by secret ballot for a six-year period by the assembly of heads of state and government from a list of persons nominated by the state parties to the convention.

Among other things, the commission would be charged with formulating and laying down principles and rules aimed at solving legal problems relating to human rights and fundamental freedoms, ensure protection of human rights and co-operate with other African and international institutions concerned with promotion and protection of human rights.

The commission would be required to submit to the ordinary session of the heads of state of its proceedings after which the assembly would take measures intended to protect human and peoples' rights.

Reports from Addis Ababa said the OAU Secretary General has appealed to member states to ratify the charter urgently.

INDIA GIVES SUPPLIES CREDIT TO REHABILITATE NABICO

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 29 May 82 p 3

[Text]

INDIA has given Tanzania a 54 million/- supplies credit to help rehabilitate the National Bicycle Company (NABICO) which closed down early this month due to lack of raw materials.

The company has also sent 363 of its workers on a three-month compulsory leave, starting May 1. The 363 workers have been paid a month's salary only. The company has now remained with only 152 workers who are doing maintenance and other administrative work.

The National Development Corporation (NDC) General Manager, Ndugu J.A. Mwambungu, said yesterday that the Government of India has also agreed to provide staff who will help to strengthen the NABICO management. Since it was commissioned in 1978, the plant has had five acting managers.

He said that there had been an element of poor management at the bicycle plant after the India-based bicycle company, Atlas withdrew its promise to provide managing staff in the first few years' of NABICO's existence.

Initially, the plant was supposed to produce 60,000 bicycles yearly but the Government decided to increase the capacity to 150,000 bicycles per year, and the plant's specifications had, therefore, to be changed.

At the moment, the factory has experienced problems in production overheads, because some machines produced more components than others. The overproduction of some of the parts have also caused the unnecessary consumption of more raw materials.

The company has never been able to reach the 150,000 target. Last year, it produced about 13,000 bicycles only. The plant produces bicycle rims, chain wheels, pedal cranks, handle bars and also assembles the parts into bicycles.

Ndugu Mwambungu said that the re-opening of the plant in the next two months would depend heavily on the availability of raw materials.

ZANZIBAR INCREASES PRICES OF 'LUXURY,' SOME CONSUMER ITEMS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 2 Jun 82 p 1

[Article by Abdallah Yakati]

[Text] THE Zanzibar Government has raised the prices of beer, spirits and cigarettes by between four and 20 per cent effective yesterday. Current increases which also touch a number of consumer items, are expected to cover a 21.9million/- deficit in the budget, but prices of essential foodstuffs remain unchanged.

Presenting the budget package to the House of Representatives here yesterday, the Zanzibar Minister for Finance, Ndugu Mohamed Ramia, said alongside the need to cover the budget deficit the review in prices for the affected items had been necessitated by increases in production costs.

Under the review, half a litre of beer will now sell at 21/50 instead of 21/-; while the price for locally produced whisky shoots-up to 185/- from 150/- a bottle.

A packet of cigarettes selling at 8/- will now cost -/25 more while the price for soft drinks now at 4/50 a bottle in bars and hotels has been increased to 4/70.

Baking flour which sells at 2/50 a pound will cost 3/- and sponge matresses selling between 400/- and 600/- are now to cost 30 per cent more to 520/- and 780/- respectively. A ticket for a cinema show has been increased by a shilling.

The Minister said the Government was aware of the high cost of living, but he added that most of the affected items could be considered as luxuries.

Ndugu Ramia received a standing ovation when he announced that prices for sugar, rice, shoes, cement, corrugated iron sheets, baby foods and textiles were not affected.

During the current budget, the government made no changes in the prices of all consumer items.

The Minister told the House that during the 1982/83 fiscal year, the government projected a total revenue of 1.3 billion/- with recurrent and development expenditures of 793,666,985/- and 574,740,250/- respectively.

The expenditures represent an increase of about 13 per cent over the current estimates.

On revenue, the Minister explained that parastatals are expected to contribute some 4.6 million/- to the government coffers. The Zanzibar State Trading Corporation (ZSTC) alone is to contribute 383 million/- mainly from the export of cloves.

Sales tax revenue has been projected at 170 million/- or 21.4 per cent over last year's estimates.

He said the increase of revenue from sales tax was due to the expected rise in imports from abroad.

Export and import duties are planned to generate another 70 million/-, higher than last year's estimates due to increases of exports and imports during the period under review.

Income Tax during the year is projected to net 20 million/- compared to last year's 16 million/-. The increase of four million/- or 25 per cent is due to new salary levels for civil servants.

Special levy is to bring in 33 million/- against 15 million/- last year. The 18.9million/- increase would result from new prices for beer, spirits, cigarettes and other luxuries.

Ndugu Ramia informed the Representatives that the government expected to get about 316.7million/- as loans and grants from external sources to finance various development projects in the Isles next year.

The Minister, however, cautioned that the government capacity to achieve development very much depended on the level of productivity in agriculture and industry which he described to be very low at the moment.

Briefing the House on the 1982/83 Annual Development Plan yesterday morning, the Minister of State (Planning), Ndugu Mohamed Faki, said out of 578 million/- to be invested in the Plan, the development of agriculture is expected to consume 135 million/-.

Industries are projected to take over 100 million/- while development of natural resources has been earmarked to spend 40.6 million/-.

Development of electricity, water resources and their distribution are to consume 24.6 million/- while the construction sector is to take 27.2 million/-.

GOVERNMENT TO FEED FLOOD VICTIMS FOR NEXT THREE MONTHS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 29 May 82 p 1

[Article by Simeon Ileta]

[Text] FOOD victims in 14 out of the 25 villages of Kyela District whose food crops and stocks were washed away early this month will be fed by the Government for the next three months, it was learnt yesterday.

The Mbeya Regional Development Director, Ndugu Matiku Nyitambe, told the Daily News in a telephone interview from Mbeya that at least 483 tonnes of cereals a month would be needed to feed the affected villagers.

He said that the region in collaboration with the National Milling Corporation (NMC) were now mobilising all the resources at their disposal to make sure that the food, which he said was badly needed, reached the flood victims within the shortest possible time.

Ndugu Nyitambe could not disclose the number of people nor the number of families that are to get government food relief but he said that not all the families in the 14 affected villages would be given free food.

He said the Kyela Area Commissioner's Office had carried out a survey and had already completed assessing and determining which families needed assistance and the amount of food each family would require.

Although all villagers were affected by the floods in one way or another, some managed to save some amount of their food stocks and would, therefore, have to make do with their stocks, Ndugu Nyitambe said.

He stressed that those who would be assisted by the Government would be only those whose food crops and stocks were washed away by the ravaging floods caused by heavy rains in the southern district.

The 14 villages are Masebe, Mwambusye, Bwato, Ndobo, Lusungu, Kikuba, Lukwego, Ilopa and Mpunguti-kama. Others are Ndola, Lugombo-Mwaya, Kilwa, Kajunjumele and Lubaga.

Ndugu Nyitambe said the region had in the meantime started distributing maize and beans seeds to all the affected villages ready for planting.

He said it was expected that if the affected villagers planted the seeds during the dry season which is starting shortly, they would be able to feed themselves after three months.

The floods had already subsided as the rains had now stopped, he said adding that most of the villages, however, were still inaccessible because of mud.

He said most of the roads were still impassable, and most of the bridges had been washed away by the floods. The region, however, had completed estimates for funds required to repair the bridges as soon as possible, he added without mentioning the required amount.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF SOCIETY OF ANIMAL PRODUCTION CONFERENCE

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 29 May 82 p 1

[Article by Wence Mushi]

[Text] THE Government has been asked to increase resources allocated to the livestock sector to enable it meet the growing demand for livestock production. The call is among some 16 recommendations adopted at the end of a four-day conference of the Tanzania Society of Animal Production.

The society noted that the budget for livestock development if reduced would make it impossible for the industry to meet the growing demand for livestock. No figures were supplied.

The Society also called for development and commercialisation of the traditional livestock sector having 99 per cent of the total stock in the country.

Noting that many people rely on livestock for their living and that land for grazing was being exchroached upon, the Society urged development of new grazing areas in the understocked regions.

They also recommended that the National Livestock policy now under preparation be thoroughly explained through seminars and simple booklets to livestock keepers and extension staff.

Preparation of the policy was disclosed here by the Minister for Livestock Development, Ndugu Herman Kirigini, when he opened the conference.

The Participants to the conference also urged co-ordination between the various ministries involved in land use planning to develop the sector.

They suggested a study of the possibility of a local stock for trypanosome tolerance and also for an integrated approach of tse tse control and land utilisation. They also called for special assistance to small scale dairy farmers in Kilimanjaro Region in the form of expanded grazing areas and species to help sustain the animals.

Further development of water buffaloes as multipurpose animals for draught, milk and meat should be undertaken.

They also called for measures to find alternative sources of high quality but in expensive animal feed ingredients. Companies involved in animal feed manufacturing should indicate the actual composition of their feed, they added.

They further urged that poultry management handbooks be supplied to poultry farmers and extension staff to keep them abreast of latest technics and information on poultry management.

The conference was attended by livestock experts from various institutions in ministries within the country and peasants from livestock-keeping areas were also in attendance.

RTC STATEMENT EXPLAINS CEMENT INDUSTRY'S NEW PRICING SYSTEM

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 30 May 82 p 1

[Text] THE government has empowered regions to fix the price of cement after considering actual transport costs from factories and to the final destinations throughout the regions.

A statement issued by the Ministry of Trade in Dar es Salaam yesterday said cement prices would no longer be fixed on a pan-territorial or regional basis.

Only the ex-factory price of the building material would be fixed at the national level, the statement explained.

The ex-factory price is now 1,261/- a tonne instead of the hitherto price of 1,217/-, it added.

Regional development directors as assistant price commissioners would have to work with their prices committees to study carefully the actual transportation costs before fixing the wholesale and retail prices for the Regional Trading Company (RTC), the statement said.

"In short, effective now, the price of cement will differ between regions depending on the region's location relative to the cement factories", the statement explained.

The statement explained that the new prices to be set for the respective regions and their various districts would be legal and should be adhered to unscrupulously. Those who contravened the new prices would be liable for punishment according to the Price Control Act of 1973.

The statement explained that under the new pricing system, the cost of transporting cement would be met by the buyer instead of being paid for by the cement factories under the hitherto pricing arrangements.

RTCs should liaise with factories on the mode of payment for the transport costs to the factories so that their cement quotas were shipped to the regions in time.

All cement factories have been asked to adhere to the monthly cement distribution and quota allocations to the regions and contractors.

PROBE TEAM CALLS FOR FRESH LOOK AT POLICY OF PRINTING INDUSTRY

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 30 May 82 p 1

[Article by Habbi Gunze]

[Text]

A PROBE team appointed last March to investigate activities of Printpak (Tanzania) Limited and the impact of newsprint shortage on Government newspapers' circulation has called for a fresh look into the whole policy of the country's printing industry.

The team's report, presented to the Prime Minister's office in Dar es Salaam in the presence of newsmen, recommended a number of measures regarding Printpak's operations.

The team's Chairman, Ndugu Paulo Misigalo, M.P. (Tabora urban), reading the report, said Printpak was lacking in the technical personnel and suggested that its administration be given technical training.

Charges of extravagance and mismanagement on the part of Printpak regarding use of imported newsprint which early this year led to drastic reduction in the circulation of the Daily News and Sunday News, have been cited in the report.

Ndugu Misigalo said this situation had contributed to the reduction of the daily circulation of the two papers, which dropped from 50,000 (Daily) and 60,000 (Sunday) to 35,000.

While acknowledging that there was an acute shortage of foreign exchange with which to import newsprint, the report observed that there were elements of extravagance and mismangement of whatever available newsprint.

It pointed out that there was evidence that some newsprint reels declared by Printpak as unworthy were sold to private printers instead of being salvaged for company use.

The team also discovered that weighing machines for newsprint "waste" were not functioning properly, hence giving faulty recordings. The use of such machines, the report said, could have resulted in underselling of "waste" newsprint.

The report observerd that while there was shortage of newsprint, private "sports and entertainment magazines' printed by Printpak thrived."

The report said because of these actions, Printpak failed to print such journals as Research published by the National Scientific Research Council. The printers also failed to honour a University of Dar es Salaam contract for a calendar.

It added that Printpak had a contract to print books for the Ministry of National Education MTUU and UPE programmes, but failed resulting in severe shortage of books for primary schools in the country.

The team maintained that because of these failures, eight children have to share one book instead of two as planned by the Ministry of National Education.

The team also expressed concern over what it described as the mushrooming private printing firms in the country, adding that there was also evidence that some of the newsprint from the few with licences to import found its way into small printing houses.

The report said there were a total of 92 printers in the country, 56 of which were in Dar es Salaam alone.

According to the report whose full details are yet to be made public, only 12 companies last year got foreign exchange to import newsprint. The number was reduced to eight this year.

The report also says that there has been improper handling of newsprint and other materials at Printpark's main stores, adding that the store do not keep proper records.

It recommended that a platform weighing machine and a forklift be provided to the company to efficiently handle the newsprint materials. The report also suggested that measures be undertaken to ensure that newsprint "waste" is converted to Printpark's use rather than selling it to other printers.

The other probe team members were: Ndugu G.M. Mayeke, MP (Newala) and Ndugu M.J. Masenga of the Tanzania Audit Corporation.

AVIATION JET FUEL SUPPLIES FOR INTERNATIONAL AIRLINES CUT

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 30 May 82 p 1

[Article by Charles Kizigha]

[Text] THE Government has decided to reduce supplies of aviation jet fuel to international airlines operating into the country by 45 per cent because of production problems at the Tanzania and Italian Petroleum Refinery (TIPER).

The Minister for Water and Energy, Ndugu Alnoor Kassum, told the Sunday News in Dar es Salaam yesterday that the aviation gas reduction measures became effective last Friday. Air Tanzania Corporation (ATC) is not affected, he added.

Ndugu Kassum said the decision to reduce aviation fuel supplies was reached following consultations between the Government and the airlines representatives through oil companies.

The Minister said the 45 per cent reduction from the airlines' normal supplies was a temporary measure and the Government was in the process of finding a permanent solution to the problem.

The measures taken, took into account interests of the national as well as those of the international airlines which have been asked to cooperate fully, he said.

Ndugu Kassum said the airlines have been asked by the oil companies to reschedule their aviation fuel intake so that the current operations were not affected.

He explained that this was not the first time that oil companies have advised and assisted the government and international airlines to take appropriate fuel conservation measures when a situation of this nature arose.

"Indeed, a few weeks ago as a result of reduction of jet fuel, similar measures were taken by oil companies after consultation with the Government", the Minister said.

He said that the little fuel that was being produced at the TIPER refinery would continue to be supplied to the oil companies.

The Managing Director of British Petroleum (BP) Tanzania, Mr. N. Callander, said that foreign airlines and ATC were consuming about 170 tons of aviation fuel a day. Out of the 170 tons, he said, 40 tons were supplied to ATC daily by BP Tanzania—the sole supplier of aviation fuel to the national airline.

Mr. Callander said that 55 per cent of the international business (foreign airlines) of 130 tons, was done by BP Tanzania.

He said his company supplied fuel to Alitalia, the Dutch Royal Airline (KLM), Swissair, Air India, Lufthansa, Zambia Airways and Uganda Airlines.

The Chairman and Managing Director of ESSO Standard, Mr. Peter Tristem, said that TIPER was so far able to produce 45 per cent of the jet fuel it used to produce because of some technical problems.

It was therefore only logical to supply the users of avation fuel with what was being produced.

He said that his company advised its customers to fly into Tanzania with a lot of fuel and pick very little or nothing from the country.

Mr. Tristem said that ESSO was usually supplying about 50 tons of fuel a week to its customers which include British Airways, Air France, Pakistan International, Scandinavian Airlines, Sabena, Aeroflot, and Ethiopian airlines.

SEMINAR PARTICIPANTS IDENTIFY FACTORS RETARDING RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 1 Jun 82 p 1

[Article by Halima Shariff]

[Text] POOR leadership, project mismanagement and embezzlement of funds have been identified as the factors in retarding rural development.

The observation was made by participants to the on-going four-day seminar at the Kivukoni CCM Ideological College yesterday when discussing reports by short-course students on selected villages in Morogoro (Rural), including Kilosa and Kilombero districts.

Discussing reports on Kiroka and Mkuyuni villages, the participants said that poor leadership badly affected production in villages and contributed to the lagging behind of socialist-oriented undertakings.

It was discovered during a visit by the participants to some of the villages that some leaders were involved in stealing village funds and were also unable to supervise development projects in their respective villages.

Reports presented at the seminar yesterday cited two incidents where some 23,000/- and a total of 7,000/- disappeared in Mkuyuni and Kiroka villages respectively. It was alleged that that Mkuyuni village chairman and secretary were the culprits.

Participating in the discussions, Ndugu W. Mkama of the Kivukoni College said that efforts should be made to educate rural authorities on management of projects and village funds.

Ndugu Mkama emphasised that it was important to determine the viability of a project before it was launched, adding that, short of this would make the village suffer losses.

Therefore, he added, district and regional authorities should assist the village leaders in managing village projects.

Contributing to the discussion, another participant, Ndugu G.L. Millinga said districts and regional authorities should mobilise resources in the villages in order to improve the living standards of the villagers.

Ndugu Millinga explained that this would help the villages to become self-supporting instead of asking for subventions from the government.

The seminar also underscored the need to educate villagers on the importance of electing responsible leaders and also enlighten village leaders on their resposibilities.

Another participant, Ndugu Musaa A. Kimbuli called upon the Party to mobilise for socialist-oriented projects in rural areas in a bid to hasten rural development and construction of socialism in the country.

Ndugu Kimbuli who is the Party Secretary in Kiroka Village, said that village development and construction of socialism in the country has been a slow process because most people took "socialism as an attitude of mind" (Ujamaa ni Imani).

He explained that the political slogan was not wrong but it was misinterpreted by most people. They took it as an excuse not to participate fully in the village activities.

There were also no stern measures taken against people who failed to participate in village projects. This gave room to individual projects to flourish, he said.

Since Tanzania aspires to become a socialist state, he said then the Party should seek ways to ensure the masses understood the significance of socialist-oriented activities in building a socialist society.

The participants will today hear reports on Misongeni village in Morogoro, and Msolwa and Kidatu villages of Kilombero district.

ZANZIBAR RTCS TO BE REORGANIZED TO IMPROVE EFFICIENCY

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 1 Jun 82 p 1

[Article by Abdulla Yakuti]

[Text] Zanzibar's internal trade sector is shortly to be reorganised in a deliberate move by the government to improve efficiency in the distribution of essentials.

Announcing the new set up to affect Regional Trading Companies (RTCs) to become effective next July, the President of Zanzibar Ndugu Aboud Jumbe said RTCs now operating under the Isles' Ministry of Trade would be placed under the Ministry of State in the Office of the Vice President.

Ndugu Jumbe who was addressing Zanzibar's five Regional Commissioners who were accompanied by the five Regional Trading Company managers at State House here yesterday said under the new set up, regional commissioners will be held responsible for any shortages of essentials occurring in their respective zones.

He said the RCs being chairmen of RTC Board of Directors, will have to ensure that the companies purchase enough supplies to satisfy demand.

He said in case of shortage of funds, the RC will have to liaison with the central government through the Ministry of State to ensure that the RTCs are provided with adequate funds for the purpose.

Ndugu Jumbe said the Ministry of Trade shall continue to handle imports from abroad, but added Regional Trading Companies shall have to ascertain that they get their allocated share of the imported items in good time.

MINISTER PRESENTS PAPER ON ROLE OF CONTRACTORS IN DEVELOPMENT

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 2 Jun 82 p 1

[Text] CONTRACTORS have been challenged to form consortiums to manufacture basic construction materials and to influence development of appropriate designs which would utilize locally available materials.

The Minister of State in the President's Office, Ndugu Clement George Kahama, told a National Construction Council seminar in Arusha yesterday that dependence on imported materials and inappropriate designs were the major factors behind escalation of construction costs and delays in projects implementation.

Presenting a paper on "The Role of Contractors in National Development," Ndugu Kahama said the current shortage of building materials was not an excuse for doing nothing but that it was an opportunity for contractors to develop new and flexible ideas to overcome it.

He lamented that contractors had not grasped this challenge. They played a passive role of tendering and contracting, doing little else to mitigate the shortage of materials and to influence "inward-looking" decision making and designing of projects.

Noting that many designers lacked field experience in construction, the minister said contractors should take the initiative in criticising unduly expensive designs at the tender stage.

He said readily available materials should replace imported ones even if this meant alterations to the initial design, adding that this would reduce imports and simplify construction.

Ndugu Kahama, recalling that contractors who were mainly private utilized nearly half the national annual budget told the seminar that the money had to be earned, adding that delays in public capital projects affected the income earned from the investment.

The days when contractors would merely sit back to be invited to tender and get paid from "some bottomless pit" of government finance were gone, he said. "We are all now learning the hard lesson that this particular pit is not bottomless," he added.

The minister urged contractors to create plant hire pools to ensure maximum use of plant and equipment which, he added, were currently left idle for long periods.

He reminded them that although the machinery belonged to the contractors, they were imported with public funds and that the nation had the right to oversee their utilization.

Ndugu Kahama also challenged contractors to initiate property development projects such as construction of commercial offices, hotels and recreational facilities. "There is no shortage of demand for such facilities in the country," he urged.

He discouraged optimism in preparing tender programmes.

Meanwhile, the minister said the government would continue to hire foreign experts in fields where Tanzanians had not gained experience until such a time when local personnel would take over.

"To do otherwise would be a false economy, or may be false pride of the most ill considered nature and would have a lasting and severely detrimental effect on our projects," he pointed out.

GOVERNMENT OF JAPAN DONATES BAGS OF RICE

Kampala UGANDA TIMES in English 20 May 82 p 12

[Article by O. Nabukonde]

[Text] The Government of Japan has donated to Ugandaoover 20,000 bags of rice valued at 117.7m/- (332.4m Japanese Yen).

The rice, packed in 60 kg bags was handed over to the Permanent Secretary in the Ministry of Commerce, Mr William Semogerere, by the General Manager of Uganda Garments Industry, (UGIL) Mr. Kashiwada, at a ceremony held in Kampala on Tuesday.

According to the General Manager of Foods and Beverages, Mr. Wilson Okwenye, "the rice is part of 1.8m tonnes which the Japanese Government has pledged to donate to the Uganda Government."

He said that in addition, Japan had promised to deliver agricultural machinery and implements to Uganda to aid in the recovery of the agricultural sector.

Mr. Okwenye explained that when the whole consignment of rice arrived it would be sold equitably all over Uganda and will raise over 110m/- which will be set aside for the development of future agricultural projects.

He said that 95m/- will be expected as government revenue through payment of duty and sales tax during the sale of the rice.

Receiving the rice, Mr. Semogerere thanked the Japanese Government for the aid it was extending to Uganda.

He outlined other areas of assistance and cooperation between Uganda and Japan and hoped that relations in these fields would continue smoothly.

On behalf of the Japanese Government, Mr. Kashiwada observed that Uganda was experiencing similar problems like the Japanese people after the war.

He pledged Japan's support to Uganda towards the rehabilitation programme to ensure that the economy picks up again and the country regains her previous glory.

The ceremony was attended by the Secretary to the Treasury, Mr. Ekinu; the Chairman of Uganda Advisory Board of Trade, Mr. Okurut, and other officials from the Ministry of Commerce.

BRIEFS

REHABILITATION OF KILEMBE MINES--The first step towards restoring Uganda's copper mine to production will be taken early next month (June) when a British firm of mining begins a six-month feasibility study. Seltrust engineering, of London, has been awarded the contract in association with the European investment Bank, to to examine the prospects for rehabilitating the mine, concentrator and smelter as well as the economic viability of developing new cobalt and sulphuric acid plants in the complex. A spokesmann for Seltrust said in London that Kilembe Mines, which had been closed for three years, had played a big part in the economy of the country, with copper the third most important export in the economy after coffee and cotton. The Uganda Government attached great importance to the rehabilitation of the mine and the the development of cobalt and acid plants which it was hoped to link with the phosphate project in Tororo, for the production of fertilisers. The result of study if approved by the Uganda Government the spokesman went on to say, would provide a basis for seeking funds for its implementation. MUGABE'S PARIS PRESS CONFERENCE REPORTED

Harare THE HERALD in English 31 May 82 p 1

[Article by Keith Atkinson]

[Text]

PARIS.

NO constitutional preparations for a one-party state in Zimbabwe were in progress at present, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said in Paris yesterday, at the end of his visit to France.

A one-party state was a remote matter, but it "is our goal". Such a system would unite the people, but a referendum would be held first on the issue.

"We know the people will not say no and anyway we are as good as a one-party state now."

The Prime Minister was giving a Press conference at the end of his three-day visit to France.

Questioned about acquiring land for resettlement, he said that 162 000 families would be resettled in the next three years and only after existing funds were exhausted would more be asked for from Britain.

"It is not right to tax the people who were deprived of land 90 years ago, but so far Britain has been magnanimous in responding to our requests."

The Press conference was also attended by the Minister of Finance, Economic Planning and Development, Dr Chidzero, who said that $500 million from Zimcord had so far been committed and disbursed. Within two years the balance of $800 million would be committed.

On relations with South Africa, Mr Mugabe said the position of France was positive and that country would be more vigorous in future in accelerating change in South Africa and Namibia.

He said it was not for Zimbabwe to dictate to France what should be done but it had been pointed out that for sanctions to work it would need a united policy from all nations.

Mr Mugabe said there was no contradiction between trading with South Africa and calling for sanctions as it had been made clear that, for Africa to participate, provision would first have to be made to alleviate the hardships that would be faced by certain African countries.

The Prime Minister declared that the relations with South Africa were only of an economic nature and other government relations would never occur whether of a political or informal nature.

Discussions with the French government had centred on both bilateral and international relations.

Zimbabwe and France had identical views on international matters, he said.

On the bilateral front, France would provide 8 200 tonnes of wheat to Zimbabwe to help overcome the effects of the drought.

● Ziana-Reuter reports that Mr Mugabe said Zimbabwe was striving to reduce dependence on South Africa's railway system for exports to overseas markets.

"But South Africa is trying to wreck our efforts," he added. "There are constant acts of sabotage, not only to harm the economy of Mozambique but to constrain us to stick to the use of the South African rail system."

He said rail lines to Maputo and Beira were "sabotaged at the rate of one incident every week or every fortnight".

He added: "Acts of sabotage are carried out by the so-called Mozambique Resistance Movement sponsored by South Africa which assists dissidents hiding in the forests of Mozambique with supplies sent by helicopter.

"Zimbabwe is trying to use the British-owned Lourho oil pipeline which is also constantly sabotaged," he said.

Mr Mugabe leaves for Greece today.

FINANCIAL PROTOCOL WITH FRANCE SIGNED

Harare THE HERALD in English 29 May 82 p 1

[Article by Keith Atkinson]

[Text] ZIMBABWE yesterday signed a $37 million financial protocol with France.

The pact was signed by the Minister of Finance, Dr Bernard Chidzero, and the French Minister of Economics and Finance, Mr Jacques Delors.

At the signing ceremony, Dr Chidzero said the protocol would go a long way towards cementing the relationship between the two countries.

It consists of a treasury soft loan to Zimbabwe over 25 years, with a grace period of seven to 10 years depending on the project.

Of the sum, $8m is earmarked for the development of industry, and the balance of $29 million is to be spent on social services and industry.

Particular areas include training centres, agricultural machines, district hospital equipment and civil aviation projects.

Dr Chidzero said the technical co - operation package with France may be expanded and that discussions had been held with the International Monetary Fund on the issue of revitalising the economy.

Last year the financial protocol was for $31 million and a spokesman for the French government said this had almost been exhausted. The loan will be tied to the purchase of French equipment.

Earlier in the day Dr Chidzero met members of the CNPF, a national French organisation of business managers, and said foreign - controlled companies might be allowed to take over local firms if the move benefited Zimbabwe.

On the question of foreign investment, he told businessmen that Zimbabwe was aware of the issues of security of investment, levels of return on capital and remittability of profits.

"We are prepared to discuss the matter of a code of investment but we believe our constitution is all the security that is needed."

After two years a company could disinvest its capital if it was not happy with the situation and after adjustments, excess investment could be remitted over a six-year period, said Dr Chidzero.

At a meeting it was announced that tenders for an EEC - supported coal feasibility study would be sought next month and the Minister of Industry and Energy Development, Dr Simba Makoni, said coal had a very important role to play in meeting Zimbabwe's future fuel needs.

He also mentioned that the steel industry would receive specific mention in the forthcoming three-year development plan. "It is a priority area to modernise the steel industry," said Dr Makoni.

The Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, had lunch with the French President, Mr Mitterrand at which he said that ties between the two countries should grow as they both believed in the same philosophy.

Mr Mugabe was to hold discussions with other French ministers in the afternoon, and today he goes to Lyon, where he will visit a hydro-electric power station and a French co-operative.

ZANU (PF) BUSINESS VENTURES TO FINANCE PARTY

Harare THE HERALD in English 3 Jun 82 p 1

[Article by Tim Chigodo]

[Text] ZANU (PF) has embarked on a number of business ventures to raise funds to pay its debts and to become self-supporting, the party's secretary for finance, Senator Enos Nkala, said yesterday.

In an interview, he said that the party had established a company, the Zimbabwe Development Corporation (ZIDCO), to generate funds needed to settle debts now amounting to $500 000, incurred after independence. The company, which was already operational, would be involved in manufacturing, farming, engineering, estates management and import and export ventures.

"We should be financially sound and self-sufficient in two years," he said. Senator Nkala, who is the Minister of National Supplies, said the Minister of Manpower Planning and Development, Dr Frederick Shava, was the chairman of the new company while the Minister of Local Government and Town Planning, Mr Enos Chikowore, and Mr Adam Wenyimo, were directors.

The party would establish farms in every province and engage in the manufacture of clothing, furniture and spare parts. The minister said ZANU (PF) already owned 60 houses and six farms throughout the country.

ZIDCO would administer party estates and would collect rents from the houses. The company would be expanded to cover various fields and more directors would be appointed, he said.

The structure of the company and its activities had already been worked out. "We want it to be a bamba zonke company," Senator Nkala said.

ZIDCO had already imported rice which was now being sold all over the country. The Jongwe Printing Company would also generate funds for the party.

This year, the party was expecting to realise $286 000 from the farms after the harvest. More money was also being raised from party joining fees, subscriptions and donations.

The minister paid tribute to the tours carried out by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, and the restructuring exercise of the party which had resulted in a lot of funds coming from the provinces. A total of $20 000 was coming from six provinces every month, except for two where the restructuring programme had not been completed.

All the money the party had brought into the country after the war had been spent on rehabilitation of disabled former combatants, buying houses for officials and paying for party offices. "The party had to start from nothing after independence," Senator Nkala said.

After tours of the provinces by Mr Mugabe, the party finances were better than they were a year ago. There had been a "clean-up exercise" of officials who misappropriated funds and practised tribalism in the provinces.

The exercise would be introduced in other areas. The minister warned that the party would not tolerate officials who took the people's money for their personal gain.

A number of officials who were found to have misused party funds had been removed and replaced with new leaders. "We shall continue to clean out all corrupt officials," Senator Nkala said.

The party had been receiving bills for debts incurred by some officials after independence and had agreed to pay because they were incurred in the name of the organisation.

The minister said a plan for the new party headquarters was being worked out and construction would start as soon as $500 000 had been collected.

Senator Nkala said the plan would have to be approved by the ZANU (PF) Central Committee before work could start.

He appealed for more donations from all the people and organisations in the country so that construction of the new headquarters could start without delay.

FIRST OF NEW GROWTH POINTS OPENED AT MUPANDAWANA

Harare THE HERALD in English 29 May 82 p 1

[Text] THE first of Zimbabwe's 500 proposed new growth points was opened at Mupandawana centre in Gutu yesterday.

Launching the $1 million scheme, the Minister of Local Government and Town Planning, Mr Enos Chikowore, said it was hoped that the completed centre would serve the needs of 300 000 people in the surrounding communal lands.

This move towards the establishment of 500 growth points across the land was aimed at bringing services nearer the people, rather than the people having to walk long distances to obtain them.

The new centre, Mr Chikowore said, was evidence of what the Government was achieving in the communal lands.

"The Government has adopted, among other development programmes, the creation of growth points and service centres in rural areas as a means of bringing services to the people. The growth points and service centres policy is part of the process of national transformation in which the Government is directing its efforts to the provision of facilities," the minister said.

Facilities to be expected with each growth and service centre included schools, clinics, banks, postal services and markets for agricultural products.

Saying that he wanted to see the establishment of light industry in the area soon, the minister added that he would ask the Ministry of Community Development and Women's Affairs to establish a factory to produce uniforms for the army and school.

"We, as a Government, have seen that there are certain malpractices in the production and distribution of uniforms," he said.

It was hoped that such developments would help to create more employment opportunities, while the provision of basic amenities would improve the living standards of the people.

Mr Chikowore told hundreds of people at the opening that Mupandawana was a natural central point linking a road network serving Nyanda, Chatsworth, Chivhu, Buhera, Zaka and Bikita.

The minister announced that:

- Allocation of stands for new businesses at the centre could now proceed because problems which had resulted in the freeze in further development had been resolved;
- Leases for business, commercial and light-industrial stands could now be issued;
- Title survey was also being discussed; and
- The Government aimed to eventually hand over control of the centre to local authorities.

"Our intention is that in the near future the district council will take over the administration of such centres, but the process is going to be gradual."

The official opening ceremony was also attended by the President of the Senate, Mr Nolan Makombe, and the Deputy Minister of Roads and Road Traffic, Mr Nelson Mawema. Both are members of Parliament for Victoria Province.

FULL RIGHTS FOR 'REBEL' MPS PROMISES MUTASA

Harare THE HERALD in English 4 Jun 82 p 1

[Text]

INDEPENDENT MPs will be provided with facilities similar to those given to the Republican Front and the UANC when Parliament resumes on June 16, the Speaker, Mr Didymus Mutasa, said yesterday.

The MPs who resigned from the RF to be independent, would also be protected from adverse criticism. "It is my duty to protect them," Mr Mutasa said in an interview.

He had already instructed the secretary to Parliament to recognise the new group and provide facilities given to others. The MPs had responded to the call for unity by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe.

The move by the MPs was in line with Government thinking. "They are unlike other parties which resist change," the Speaker said.

He explained that he could not encourage the breaking-up of parties into small groups, but at the same time he could not stop those who wanted to align themselves with the Government.

Mr Mutasa said the coming session would see a three-cornered fight by the MPs and he was bracing himself for that. There would be a fight between independents and the RF on the one hand, and the Government and non-Government MPs on the other.

ZAPU members were likely to take a completely different stand following the dismissal from the Government of their leader, Dr Joshua Nkomo, by the Prime Minister.

"It is going to be a very interesting and busy session," the Speaker said.

On change of dress, he said there were several ideas which had to be considered. He would only wear his formal dress at the opening of Parliament and after that he would dress in ordinary clothes.

Mr Mutasa has been holding discussions with the President of the Senate, Mr Nolan Makombe, on what dress could be suitable. "I personally am against the colonial dress," he said.

He warned the two MPs at present outside the country, Mr Dennis Walker and Mr Ackim Ndlovu, that they would lose their seats if they did not attend Parliament for 21 consecutive days when it resumes. Mr Walker is RF MP for Bulawayo North while Mr Ndlovu is ZAPU MP for Matabeleland South.

The two MPs left the country without informing the Speaker. Mr Walker is overseas and Mr Ndlovu in Zambia.

FOUR-POINT ACCORD SEALS MUGABE'S GREEK TRIP

Harare THE HERALD in English 2 Jun 82 p 1

[Text]

ATHENS.

ZIMBABWE and Greece yesterday signed four agreements — on the promotion of tourism, the development of agriculture and regional planning, the development of handicrafts and the training of pilots for Air Zimbabwe.

Explaining the agreements during a Press conference here yesterday the Minister of Finance, Economic Planning and Development, Dr Bernard Chidzero, said that under the tourism accord the Greek government had undertaken to provide assistance and advisory services for the country's tourism industry.

The Greek government has also agreed to provide Zimbabwe with advisory services in the development of agriculture and regional planning in the second accord while the third entails the promotion of handicrafts such as basketry, weaving and other related projects.

Under the fourth agreement, the Greek government had undertaken to train pilots for Air Zimbabwe, Dr Chidzero said.

There were already six Air Zimbabwe pilots training in Greece.

Yesterday morning the Prime Minister went sightseeing when he visited the Acropolis.

Mr Mugabe called his trip "a tremendous success".

"There has been a tremendous response from all countries I visited and a willingness to continue aid and accelerate action on several questions," he told a news conference. "It's been a tremendous success."

He found support for speeding up the independence of Namibia and "the need for peace" during his talks in France, Belgium, Britain, Italy and West Germany.

He said Zimbabwe could learn from Greece's experience in regional agricultural planning, the tourism and handicraft industries and in civil aviation.

"For Greece, ties with Zimbabwe are a stepping stone to other relations in Africa," he added.

Mr Mugabe said he discussed with the Greeks bilateral relations, African affairs, the Middle-East situation, the Falklands conflict and disarmament.

"Our views were identical on all these matters," he said. "Greece and Zimbabwe are both socialist-ruled and are birds of a feather."

The Zimbabwe premier leaves today for the Netherlands.

● Mr Mugabe paid a glowing tribute to Greek nationals resident in Zimbabwe for their contribution to creating what he called commercial intercourse among the people in the rural areas.

POLICE FORCE SET FOR BIG CHANGES

Harare THE HERALD in English 4 Jun 82 p 1

[Article by Bill Hipson]

A PROMOTION list for senior ranks in the police has been drawn up to reflect the Government's policy of black advancement.

Confirming this yesterday, the Minister of Home Affairs, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, said the promotion list was a test of loyalty for many white officers. Those who went off in a huff because they were not included were people of doubtful loyalty.

According to sources several whites have been ent, chief superintendent promoted to superintendand assistant commissioner, but as many have been deprived of their acting ranks with the loss of their commands and acting allowances.

Dr Ushewokunze said in an interview: "Any police officer who is aggrieved by this promotion exercise never had his roots in Zimbabwe.

"Having said that, I hasten to add that the very few white police officers still in the country certainly will be promoted within the not too distant future, that is after the correction of the historical imbalance that has always existed."

A feature of the promotion list is the elevation of several black CID officers to senior assistant commissioner.

The sources say that one of these will soon be appointed Officer Commanding CID, making it the first time the post has been held by a black officer.

Also included in the promotions are black patrol officers and section officers who have been given the ranks of chief inspector and superintendent.

Asked to comment, Dr Ushewokunze said: "The promotions are in conformity with the Government policy of black advancement. For the first time in the history of Zimbabwe black officers are being given a chance to have a go at it.

DECISIONS

"In the past, blacks were treated as just an additional pair of hands, but the Government's attitude now is that they must join the ranks of decision-makers.

"In the final analysis they are all potential stayers as compared to our white colleagues who are potential leavers. The black policeman must start doing his duties now. This is his birth place and he can't boast of dual citizenship."

The minister said the majority of white officers were going to stay simply because they wanted promotion.

"It can be taken as understood that most of them are waiting for what they call green pastures eleswhere. Some want promotion because on a higher salary they will get better pensions to retire with elsewhere. Some want promotion so that they can remain longer to give time for their insurance policies to mature. Some want to hang on basically until something good comes their way.

"It is a test of loyalty for those still within the country. Those who will go in a huff are people of doubtful loyalty, who, in 90 percent of cases, will find their way to South Africa."

ALL APPRENTICES TO BE BONDED TO STATE

Harare THE HERALD in English 4 Jun 82 p 1

[Article by Simomo Mubi]

[Text]

ALL apprentices in Zimbabwe will now be bonded to the State and will have to work in their trade in the country for the same time they spent training, or pay for it, according to regulations gazetted today.

Under the Emergency Powers (Apprenticeship) Regulations 1982, apprentices will also have to pay 10 percent of their salary to a central Government fund.

At the end of the period of bonding, the money collected would be paid back with interest at bank rates to the individual. If they leave before the period of bonding has expired, then the money would be kept by the Government.

Apprentices who had no wish to remain in Zimbabwe after their apprenticeships could have their contract cancelled within 30 days from today.

After this period if an apprentice terminates his contract or completes it and then decides to leave the country without the permission of the ministry, he will have to pay for the training received.

Those who completed their training would not now be issued with their journeymen certificates until the end of their bond.

Explaining the need for the regulations, the Secretary for the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development, Dr Ibbo Mandaza, said Zimbabwe's loss of skilled manpower through emigration was astronomical and the resultant shortages were becoming critical.

In 1980, 875 apprentices completed their training and during that period 898 qualified skilled workers emigrated.

In 1981, 664 apprentices completed their training and 1 078 skilled workers emigrated. Since January this year, 467 people have completed their apprenticeships and so far 341 skilled workers have left the country.

Dr Mandaza said Zimbabwe also had 1 200 people being trained in South Africa with Zimbabwean scholarships and they gave no indication that they wished to return.

"This country has literally become a free international technical training college," he said.

The Government's concern over the drain of skilled manpower was shared by representatives of industry. The chairman of the manpower committee of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Zimbabwe (ACCOZ), Mr Eric Davis, said: "It is essential that this country retains its trained manpower."

The general manager of the Astra group of companies, Mr Trevor Hansen, said: "We would like to ensure the retention of our skilled manpower."

Dr Mandaza said many employers were annoyed by the way in which they had been left by journeymen in whom they had invested time and money.

He said many companies had asked the Government to grant them permission to bond apprentices, and the regulations were promulgated in consultation with industry.

"The intention of these regulations is not to stop people from leaving the country if they wish, but we want to encourage a system where those unlikely to leave Zimbabwe will have the priority opportunity to be trained," said Dr Mandaza.

The regulations were one aspect of a larger Manpower Bill to be introduced into Parliament at the next session. The Bill would aim to "standardise and formalise our role as a co-ordinating machinery for human resources", he said.

Before the Minister of Manpower Planning and Development, Dr Fredrick

Shava, left with the Prime Minister two weeks ago on a European tour, he had instructed Dr Mandaza to consult all sectors to draw up a comprehensive national training policy.

As a result plans had been proposed to establish a national manpower council consisting of various bodies, such as the Mandata council, which would be an advisery body to the ministry.

REASONS FOR ECONOMIC BOOM DISCUSSED

Harare BUSINESS HERALD in English 3 Jun 82 p 1

[Article by David Linsell]

[Text]

MINIMUM pay rises since 1979 have not necessarily been the main influences behind higher consumer demand and increased output in Zimbabwe's manufacturing sector.

This is one of the main findings of an analysis carried out by the Confederation of Zimbabwe Industries at the request of the Ministry of Industry and Energy Development, to assess the effects of minimum wages legislation upon manufacturers.

CZI generally concludes that, while the increase in minimum pay has contributed to growth in consumer demand and the expansion of manufacturing industry, it would be premature to conclude that it was the only, or indeed, the main factor.

Capacity levels, labour intensity, the proportion of output destined for local and export markets, and anticipation of further pay rises also have to be considered.

"And major exogenous factors such as changes in foreign exchange allocations, fluctuations in demand, changes in skilled manpower available, regulations affecting dismissal and wage levels above the minimum have often had a marked effect on firms, which have frequently concealed the direct effects of Minimum Wage Legislations," says CZI.

In 1980/81 the increase in the value of retail sales was 59.2 percent, compared with 22.7 percent in 1971/2, the last record period.

"Hence there can be little doubt that the record increase since Independence has been due to unique circumstances prevailing in the past two years, notwithstanding higher rates of inflation and the exclusion in retail sales figures for those retail outlets with a turnover of $20 000 a year and less."

INCREASED

The CZI analysis also shows that wages of workers in higher grades have frequently been increased with the rises awarded to the lower paid.

"Often the effect on the total wage bill of companies for higher grade wage increases has been a larger total increase than for those workers being paid the minimum."

Expansion of public sector employment, higher increases for teachers and grants paid to ex-combatants, have fuelled the national wage bill and boosted consumer demand.

The cost of teachers' salaries has risen from $90m. in 1979 to $197m. in 1981 and those for civil and public servants from $215m. to $263m. in the same period, due to both the increase in minimum wages and the employment of 13 400 more people since independence.

In addition pay for members of the national army rose from $59m. in 1980/81 to $118m. in 1981/82, while demobilisation gratuities were estimated at $43m. for the current financial year.

Furthermore, there has been an increase of 57 700 people employed in the non-agricultural and non-service sectors of the economy between March 1980 and December 1981.

While the overall effect cannot be strictly defined, CZI states that the resettlement and reconstruction programme has had its own significant impact on consumer demand in the last two years.

AVAILABLE

The introduction of free primary education and free health care for those earning under $150 a month has resulted in grants and contributions for the former rising from $5m. in 1979 to $39m. in 1981 while the cost of medical services rose from under $40m. in 1978/79 to $96m. in 1981/82.

"This money is now available for direct consumer spending, rather than having to be channelled into primary school and medical health fees."

The post-Independence boom saw the first significant expansion in the economy since 1976 and therefore consumer demand was directly affected by the "pent up" demand of the recession years.

From 1975 to 1979 the value of retail sales, at current prices, rose by only 25 percent compared with 56 percent from 1971 to 1975.

With the easing of UDI constraints the value of imports went up by 87 percent to $478 million from 1979 to 1981.

Allocations for manufacturing industry for raw materials also leapt by $104 million (plus 77 percent) and provisions for replacement machinery in 1980 and 1981 were nearly three times as high as during the previous five years.

"Thus pent up demand and the easing of supply constraints are extremely important factors contributing to the post-Independence consumer boom," cautions CZI.

Finally, part of the manufacturing sector's increase in production has been channelled to the import-export market.

In 1979 about 10 percent of output was sold abroad, however, between 1979 and 1981 the value of manufactured exports rose by $11 million.

But if iron and steel exports from Ziscosteel are excluded—considering the slump in 1981 — then manufactured exports for that same period were up $27 million, a rise of 24 percent.

"Thus one needs to view with considerable caution the opinion expressed in the recent (March 1982) Reserve Bank Quarterly Economic and Statistical Review that 'the further rise in wage levels will ensure buoyant domestic consumer demand during 1982'," warns CZI.

MUGABE WOOS FRENCH INVESTORS

Harare BUSINESS HERALD in English 3 Jun 82 p 1

[Article by Keith Atkinson]

[Text]

THE Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, would welcome foreign private investment and found greater enthusiasm amongst French businessmen to come to Zimbabwe than in the other countries on his European tour.

In return, a leading French businessman said his country had a high level of technical and management knowhow to offer, extensive experience of working in Africa, and a strong aggressive financial market.

However, of central interest in France at the moment is the working relationship between the private sector and the socialist government.

STRONG

Much has been said of Zimbabwe's socialist brotherhood with France but as a spokesman for that country's Foreign Affairs department said: "Our country is an example of a strong, working mixed economy."

Companies such as Renault have been state-run for nearly 40 years. But the only state-appointed person is the boss and on average he stays in the chair for at least 10 years.

There is a strong continuity of management in the company and it is run on strictly profit-making lines.

In the wider context, France has established a new elite which to a certain degree pervades the government and business community of the country.

ADVANCED

This elite comprises the people schooled in the "grand ecoles". There is no direct equivalent here but an advanced polytechnic university is close to the mark.

However, it is apparent that with socialism there have come changes and some confusion.

One firm has had its holding company nationalised, and certain banks which hold shares in it.

But the firm itself has not been nationalised, nor have there been any changes at management level.

The new government came into power on the platform of reform, but the traditional economy has been slow to adapt.

An example has been the call for shorter working hours. Some demands were for between 30 and 35 hours a week. The present compromise has been to drop the time from 40 to 39 hours.

A similarly difficult area for the socialists is France's relationship with Southern Africa.

France has strong economic ties with South Africa, both import and export, and is involved in the development of South Africa's nuclear power for energy.

Official government policy though is to diminish trade links with South Africa and to establish stronger links with the other countries in the region, including Zimbabwe.

French companies are following closely on the heels of the government. Amongst the firms interested in Zimbabwe are car manufacturers, makers of civil aviation equipment, bankers and textiles.

A major concern was the difficulty to get into the market because of the shortage of foreign exchange.

Of possible future benefit will be the financial protocol signed last week in Paris with this country, which is to assist industrial and rural development.

Also the Minister of Finance, Economic Planning and Development, Dr Bernard Chidzero, told the French business community that the entire system of exchange allocations was being studied as "we do not just want to maintain the status quo".

Mr Michel Rocard, the French Minister of Planning and Regional Management, told Business Herald that France's aim in the Third World was to help these countries counter the effects of the recession, as well as to escape the domination of the American dollar.

He said: "The world is in a mess and we must try to help this situation. Zimbabwe has a place in our global view of diminishing the risks of social explosion and wars."

TOP TRADE UNIONIST SUSPENDED FROM UNION ACTIVITIES

Harare THE HERALD in English 2 Jun 82 p 1

[Text]

THE Government yesterday took the unprecedented step of suspending a top trade unionist from all union activities in Zimbabwe.

Mr Dickson Ndawana, assistant secretary-general of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions and general secretary of the Agricultural and Plantation Workers' Union, will remain suspended pending the outcome of investigations into alleged non-payment of rent for trade union offices at Sinoia Street in Harare, Mr Ignatius Chigwendere, Chief Industrial Relations Officer, told a news conference. In April this year, unions operating from a building in Sinoia Street were served with an eviction order for not paying their rent.

The eviction order, served by the High Court, demanded that the ZCTU should pay the landlord $2 750. The organisation explained that it no longer occupied the offices, which served as headquarters for some unions affiliated to it.

RECEIPTS

Said Mr Chigwendere: "It is known that tenant organisations were paying their rent. Facts available seem to suggest that these trade unions were paying money for which they hold receipts. But the money did not reach the landlord."

He said a committee had been set up to inquire into the situation and until the committee reported its findings to the Government, Mr Ndawana was barred from any trade union activity.

He warned trade unionists that any misuse of trade union funds was considered a serious offence and the culprits would not be allowed to lead a trade union for five years.

When all trade union leaders were required by law to account for their funds, they should do so. Failure to do so could not be looked upon with sympathy by the department of industrial relations and this might result in their accounts being investigated.

Also to be accounted for were all donations given to the trade union from external organisations, Mr Chigwendere said.

ECONOMIC COOPERATION WITH ITALY REPORTED

Harare THE HERALD in English 2 Jun 82 p 7

[Text]

ITALY'S participation in the economic activities of Zimbabwe covers many areas, with special emphasis on the productive sectors.

At the moment Italy is in fifth place among the countries buying Zimbabwe products, and exports from Zimbabwe to Italy include cotton, hides, asbestos, metal alloys and tobacco.

A spokesman for the Italian Embassy in Harare said Italy occupied ninth place on average among the countries exporting to Zimbabwe.

Italian exports include industrial machinery, tractors and other agricultural equipment, electrical equipment, yarns and cloth.

These are some of the reasons why the Italian National Day today has significance for the people of Zimbabwe.

The day, June 2, was chosen in 1946 by the people of Italy who were called upon to decide by referendum on a monarchy or a republic. Today the Italian National Day is known as the Day of the Republic.

This day marked a radical institutional change which was achieved in a peaceful and democratic manner.

It made its mark on Italian history at a crucial moment in the political and material reconstruction of the state only a year after the end of the Second World War.

This day is also the anniversar of the election of the Constituent Assembly, which was responsible for the drawing up of the first constitution of the republic. The constitution came into force at the beginning of 1948.

And today Italy is participating in various ways in the economic recovery of Zimbabwe.

Pledges made by the Italian government at the Donors' Conference are at present being implemented with the financing of projects including planning in the rural areas, the development of electrical sources and the supply of equipment for civil aviation.

Italy has also contributed in the programmes of international organisations granting aid to Zimbabwe, especially the United Nations and the European Economic Community.

In addition to its grants to UNICEF and the Food and Agricultural Organisation, Italy has pledged $7 million to Zimbabwe in bilateral grants.

There was also an Italian contribution for co-operation in health and another $5 million for Hwange II power station.

Italy has pledged soft loans worth $36 million for 1980-82 plus another specifically earmarked for Hwange II.

Under the joint programme of primary health care in Zimbabwe, a group of 10 Italian doctors and one co-ordinator were to be sent to Zimbabwe for two years. They will be followed by another group for the same period.

The doctors started work at the beginning of June last year in Harare before they were posted to hospitals at Chipinge, Rusape and Mutare.

Further co-operation in health was still being examined and considered an embassy spokesman said.

Meanwhile the Prime Minister Mr Mugabe, visited Italy for four days during his seven-nation European tour.

Discussions centred around the implementation of economic and development co-operation and future development, an embassy Press release said.

Given the complexity and scope of development activities in Zimbabwe, the leaders of the two governments agreed on the need for an overall rather than a yearly development programme.

The embassy also announced that several scholarships were being offered to Zimbabweans by the Department of Development Co-operation of the Italian Ministry of Foreign Affairs for the academic year 1982-83. All applications for these scholarships have to be submitted to the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development at Earl Grey Building in Harare.

There were also some graduate and post-graduate scholarships for 12-month periods.

HOVE REAFFIRMS GOVERNMENT SUPPORT FOR SWAPO

Harare THE HERALD in English 2 Jun 82 p 7

[Text] THE Government supports SWAPO as the sole, legitimate and authentic representative of the Namibian people in their just struggle for independence, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr Richard Hove, said yesterday.

At a function in Harare to mark Tunisian National Day, he said the Government could not placate Pretoria or its quislings in Namibia at the expense of SWAPO.

"We stand for nothing short of a genuinely fair and free election in Namibia.

"South Africa, through its apartheid system and denial of social, economic and political rights for the majority black population constitutes a grave threat to international peace and regional security."

Mr Hove warned that South Africa's acts of aggression and provocation against neighbouring states formed a sinister attempt at the economic and political destabilisation of the region.

"We will continue to oppose resolutely this destabilisation with all means at our disposal and to support the liberation forces in the context of the Organisation of African Unity and the United Nations."

Zimbabwe also firmly supported the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination.

The Government condemned the intransigence of "the Zionist entity" on the question of its withdrawal from Arab territories which it occupies illegally in defiance of international law.

The Tunisian Ambassador, Mr Moncef Kedadi, said his country opened an embassy in Harare because his government wanted to prove that their support during the liberation struggle was the prelude to fruitful co-operation in all fields.

Tunisia's constitution spelt out its commitment to participate in the liberation of people all over the world — especially the Middle East and Africa — for justice and dignity.

The country supported the fight for the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, independence in Namibia and the abolition of apartheid in South Africa, said Mr Kedadi.

SADCC INVESTMENT CODE BACKED BY MUBAKO

Harare THE HERALD in English 1 Jun 83 p 1

[Text]

SADCC countries should draw up an investment code to ensure they receive maximum benefits from multinational corporations, says the Minister of Justice, Mr Simbi Mubako.

He was opening a 10-day workshop at the University of Zimbabwe on legal ways of making sure developing countries got maximum benefits from multinational companies.

Speaking "as a participant and not as Minister of Justice", Mr Mubako said:

"If a common approach has to be adopted, SADCC would need to appoint a strong team of economists to agree on the economic issues which all the countries regard as vital in relation to foreign investment and foreign corporate presence."

He said the countries had to choose an equally strong team of legal experts to draw up a draft "SADCC Investment Code" by each government before it could be presented for adoption and implementation.

Developing countries in Southern Africa would then be sure that inviting in transnational enterprises would promote industrialisation, and political and social independence.

"We, the SADCC, must present a common front and be ever alert to the danger of transnational corporations playing one of us off against the other and blackmailing us with the threat of losing our foreign investment to another country if we do not relax our conditions of agreement."

He said multinational companies were a united entity and SADCC countries had to ensure that they negotiated with such corporations with an equally unified approach.

Each country had to have a clearly defined economic policy aimed at maximising the benefit it received from foreign investment. It was necessary for the Government to know and direct operations of the corporations from the beginning.

"It is the final agreement concluded between the corporation and a country which will determine whether the corporation will advance the country by using its natural resources, stimulating its economy and generating employment, or will simply milk the country dry by draining its resources and foreign currency reserves and then withdrawing when it has taken all it can."

All foreign investment had to be registered to enable the host country to have access to accurate information on the exact amount of foreign investment.

In the process of allowing a transnational enterprise in, he said, developing countries usually ran the risk of importing obsolete or overpriced technology.

"An SADCC investment code would have to contain clauses regulating the ability of investors to remit their profits abroad or to repatriate their invested capital. This would be among the most difficult clauses to get the multinationals to agree to."

On repatriation of capital, he said it was usual to ask the corporation to prove that it had attempted to find a local buyer before being allowed to sell its capital to another foreign investor.

He said developing countries lacked capital, know-how and sometimes the initiative to exploit their own natural resources or to sell them to the world and this could be overcome by inviting multinational companies which would train local manpower in the process.

African countries had encouraged such investment by granting tax reliefs, freedom to repatriate profits and guarantees against nationalisation or dispossession of property without compensation.

In many cases, he said, the capital at the disposal of multinational companies was very much greater than the combined gross national products of several developing countries in which they operated. If their operations in those countries were successful, they ended up controlling a major portion of the economy.

"Some companies have undoubtedly caused the countries economic harm by indulging in foreign exchange fiddles and it is evident from the domestic scene that some of these companies are geared solely to obtaining the maximum benefits for the proprietors at the expense of workers, members of the public and even the country."

Mr Mubako said developing countries now saw multinational companies as potential threats to their sovereignty.

The workshop is being attended by delegates from all SADCC countries, except Angola, and international organisations that include SIDA, EEC and UNIDO.

TUNISIA WILLING TO PROMOTE TRADE, TRA_NING

Harare THE HERALD in English 1 Jun 82 p 6

[Text]

TUNISIA, which celebrates its national day today, wants to promote good relations with Zimbabwe by participating in the training of local manpower.

The Tunisian Ambassador to Zimbabwe, Mr Moncef Kedadi, said in an interview that his country could provide high-level experts in various fields to train Zimbabweans.

In the field of trade, Tunisia was prepared to sell phosphates, olive-oil, wine and textiles to Zimbabwe and buy tobacco and minerals.

The Tunisian Embassy in Harare, which opened six months ago, was still waiting to be briefed on Zimbabwe's needs by the Government, he said.

Mr Kedadi said his country had helped Zimbabwe during the struggle for liberation and was now prepared to take part in reconstruction and transformation.

STRUGGLE

Tunisia had a history of struggle which ended in June 1955 when the country was granted internal autonomy and President Habib Bourguiba returned from exile.

On March 20 the following year the country became completely independent and the Republic of Tunisia was declared with Mr Bourguiba as the first president.

Tunisia was a founder member of the Organisation of African Unity. Mr Kedadi said he attended the inaugural meeting in Addis Ababa in 1963. Since then his country had supported the struggles for liberation that had swept the continent.

Speaking on the growth of the OAU recently, President Bourguiba said that 19 years ago the continent provided itself with a privileged instrument of dialogue, solidarity and co-operation. But he warned that the attacks on its unity were numerous.

Tunisia covers 164 150 km² of which about 25 000 km² are covered by the Sahara Desert.

The country was not rich in oil but has enough for its own needs, said Mr Kedadi.

"Since 1956 our Government invested in the country's manpower needs because of a lack of wealth and natural resources.

"Our president said that if we invest in our manpower resources, our people will create wealth," said Mr Kedadi.

Manpower training in Tunisia still takes up about a third of the country's total budget.

Now after 26 years of independence, Mr Kedadi said, Tunisia was able to send trained people to assist other African countries who need manpower, teachers and experts.

"This is why we are keen on assisting Zimbabwe's manpower training programme," Mr Kedadi said.

PHOSPHATES

He said Zimbabwe was at the moment importing phosphates from Yugoslavia and Turkey while Tunisia was the main exporter to Turkey. Tunisia could supply Zimbabwe directly, he said.

His country also bought lots of Zimbabwe tobacco which was being blended with Tunisian tobacco.

He said trade between Zimbabwe and Tunisia had to be strengthened because it would be a cheaper and better service than going beyond Africa for goods with which the two could supply each other.

"We need more trade on a south-south basis instead of the present north-south imbalance," he said.

Mr Kedadi said that he had been posted to southern Africa as an envoy "because my country will not rest until all Africa is liberated from foreign control and domination".

His country's constitution commits Tunisia to fighting for the liberation of all the world, "especially the Middle East and Africa".

"We opened an embassy here because we need to be present in this part of Africa to fulfill our mission for the liberation of all Africa. We want to show the people of Zimbabwe that we are on their side and want to be close to the battlefield in Namibia and South Africa," said Mr Kedadi.

HEALTH-FOR-ALL CAMPAIGN GETS UNDER WAY

Harare THE HERALD in English 29 May 82 p 9

[Article by Tim Chigodo]

[Text] THE Government has embarked on a vast programme to ensure that every village has a protected water supply and every family a pit latrine, the Minister of Health, Dr Oliver Munyaradzi, said in Harare yesterday.

The ministry would train 900 village health workers every year. They would go and live with the people in the rural areas to advise them on better health and living.

The programme was being carried out in conjunction with the Ministry of Community Development and Women's Affairs and other related ministries. "It is a serious programme and we are vigorously pursuing it," the minister said in an interview.

The Government wanted every village to have a protected water supply and a pit latrine in each house. "I have no doubt that in a few years' time, we will have succeeded," Dr Munyaradzi said.

The Government was also encouraging family planning throughout the country, especially in rural areas.

The Child Spacing Association under the Ministry of Health was educating women on the necessity of child spacing. The Ministry of Community Development and Women's Affairs was spearheading the programme.

Besides the loop and the pill, now being used after the banning of depo provera, mothers were also being encouraged to breast feed for longer periods, up to two years. Longer breast feeding had been found to reduce early pregnancies, the minister said.

Although breast feeding would be difficult for working mothers, it should be used by all the people, in addition to the contraceptives.

The rise in malaria and sexually - transmitted diseases (STD) was causing great concern. Dr Munyaradzi said there had been a sudden increase in venereal diseases since independence because of the new mobility of the population.

Malaria was widespread. Most of the patients who suffered from it died, especially if they were not diagnosed and treated. "It is a very serious situation," he said.

The Government had no plans to ban the use of DDT to kill mosquitoes. Although the insecticide had adverse side effects on birds and vegetation, any move to replace it would be "costly and disastrous".

On drug-taking, he said the practice was common among young people, especially those from the middle and high class communities. There was also a general abuse of tobacco and alcohol, which the minister considered among drugs, but drug-taking was not yet a serious national problem.

He said the future of private doctors and hospitals would depend on the expansion of the public medical health service and its ability to provide health for all. The Government was improving public health, including specialist services, so that there would be fewer people going to private practitioners.

The Government, meanwhile, was improving salaries and conditions of public health workers in appreciation of their contribution to the country's development.

GOVERNMENT TO PROVIDE FREE LEGAL AID TO ALL

Harare THE HERALD in English 31 May 82 p 1

[Text] The Government is to provide free legal aid to all Zimbabweans as it has done with health and education, the Minister of Legal and Parliamentary Affairs, Dr Eddison Zvobgo, has said.

"The Government believes in socialist justice as opposed to private and expensive personal justice," he said.

In an interview Dr Zvobgo said the task of "freeing" legal aid would be undertaken by the department of law promotion under the bureau of legal advice, one of the three main divisions in the legal section of his ministry.

"The Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, attaches great importance to the department of law promotion. The Government believes people must know what the law is. This will promote compliance with the law," said the minister.

The department of law promotion would carry out public legal education programmes in the press, radio and television as well as in schools.

Local authorities would be requested to hold meetings and conferences.

Law promotion officers would be stationed in various parts of the country to advise people free of charge who could not afford private legal practitioners.

While the department would provide free legal advice on criminal and civil matters, it would not at present actually represent people in court, said Dr Zvobgo.

The research department, also to be set up in the ministry, was intended to transform the constitution as quickly as possible in order to bring it in to line with Zimbabwean aspirations.

"The Prime Minister and the Government place a high priority on constitutional developments," said the minister.

The research department will concentrate on the study of the Lancaster House discussions and constitution with special reference to citizenship, the declaration of rights, Parliament, election sessions, public service, prison service, the judicature, police and the defence forces.

Outmoded statutes will also be weeded out by this department: "The Government hopes that this division will produce a systematic and harmonious body of law easily understood by the general public," said Dr Zvobgo.

Of the parliamentary division of his ministry, the minister said: "This has been most difficult to construct because Zimbabwe is the only country in the Commonwealth with a minister of parliamentary affairs.

"But this has resulted in a very interesting and meaningful challenge," he said.

One of the many tasks of this part of the ministry would be to assume responsibility over all political parties getting funds from external sources but State funds would be provided to qualified political parties.

"This would help to ensure national security," said Dr Zvobgo.

HIGH COURT UPHOLDS DETAINEES' RIGHT TO LAWYERS

Harare THE HERALD in English 3 Jun 82 p 1

[Text] A SENIOR policeman acted unconstitutionally by preventing the Deputy Commander of the Zimbabwe National Army Lieutenant-General Lookout Masuku, and the former ZIPRA head, Mr Dumiso Dabengwa, from seeing lawyers while in detention.

In the High Court yesterday, Mr Justice McNally ruled that the two military men should be allowed to hire legal practitioners "without delay".

The judge concluded in a judgment handed down in Harare that the men's wives were correct in claiming that an order signed by the protecting authority for Harare North, Senior Assistant Commissioner Geoffrey Hedges, on March 26, preventing their husbands seeing lawyers in prison, was unconstitutional.

He ordered Mr Hedges in his official capacity, the Minister of Home Affairs and the Commissioner of Police jointly to pay the legal costs of Mrs Zodwa Dabengwa and Mrs Gift Masuku for the application.

The two former ZIPRA men were picked up on March 10 at their Bulawayo homes by members of the Central Intelligence Organisation under the Emergency Powers (Maintenance of Law and Order) Regulations.

The Prime Minister's Office later announced that the detentions were connected with investigations into the discovery of arms caches on ZAPU-owned properties around the country.

Mr Justice McNally said he agreed with the claim by Mr Adrian de Bourbon, for the two wives, that Mr Hedges' order went against the letter of Schedule 2 of the Constitution by preventing the men from obtaining and instructing lawyers after they had been told why they were detained.

The schedule required that any person incarcerated under any law allowing for preventive detention be told within seven days of his arrest why he was being held and then be allowed to obtain legal representation.

The schedule was separate from the Declaration of Rights, said the judge, and therefore the police order could not claim the legal protection of the relevant section of the Emergency Powers Regulations.

Orders made in terms of the section could not be considered to contravene the Declaration of Rights, but they could, as they had done in this case, go against the schedule.

The judge said he did not agree with the argument of Mr Simbarashe Muchechetere, for the State that General Masuku and Mr Dabengwa were not in preventive detention.

He was satisfied, he said, that the word "detention" when used in the regulations, meant "preventive detention" and not "ordinary detention" as postulated by Mr Muchechetere.

Mr A. de Bourbon instructed, by Mr Bryant Elliot, of Scanlen and Holderness, appeared for Mrs Dabengwa and Mrs Masuku.

PLANS ANNOUNCED FOR TWO BIG SUGAR PROJECTS

Harare THE HERALD in English 31 May 82 p 3

[Text] MWENEZI. Rural development cannot be meaningful without the full participation of the people themselves, the Deputy Minister of Industry and Energy Development, Mr Dzikamai Mavhaire said here on Saturday.

Addressing hundreds of people, the deputy minister said people should not let themselves be on the receiving end only but form an important component on the developmental process.

He announced that two sugar industries had been planned for Rutenga and Chisumbanje so as to relieve the country's demand for sugar, adding that the Chisumbanje sugar industry would be in full operation by the end of this year and early next year for the one planned for Rutenga.

On completion, Mr Mavhaire said, the Chisumbanje industry would be the biggest producer with Rutenga taking second place and Chiredzi which is already established would occupy third place.

"Apart from reducing unemployment and generating foreign currency, these projects will go a long way towards uplifting the quality of life in the rural areas," said Mr Mavhaire.

Turning to education, he said as from next year, the Government will supply every child with school uniforms. The decision had come in view of the current shortage of uniforms and the exorbitant prices that retailers were charging.

Mr Mavhaire appealed to the people to watch out for disenchanted political elements who were bent on disrupting the country's political stability.

Speaking at the same occasion, the ZANU (PF) deputy provincial secretary for the province, Mr Thomas Ziki, called for partnership of goodwill and mutual trust between local government authorities and ZANU (PF) party officials in the area.

"Local government authorities should always work hand-in-hand with their local party officials because ZANU (PF) and the Government are two sides of the same coin," Mr Ziki said.

STATE CHALLENGES RULING--The High Court ruling on Wednesday that the Deputy Commander of the National Army, Lieutenant-General Lookout Masuku, and the former head of ZIPRA, Mr Dumiso Dabengwa, must be given access to their lawyers is to be challenged in the Supreme Court. A spokesman for the Attorney-General's office confirmed yesterday that a notice of appeal had been filed with the Supreme Court. In a judgment handed down on Wednesday, Mr Justice McNally ruled that a senior policeman had acted unconstitutionally in preventing the two men from seeing lawyers while in detention. Both were detained under Emergency Powers Regulations on March 10. The judge ruled that the two men should be allowed to instruct legal practitioners of their choice without delay and be allowed to communicate with them. Their lawyer has seen them, following Wednesday's ruling but said yesterday he was not sure whether or not he would be able to see them again now that an appeal had been lodged with the Supreme Court. He was seeking clarification of this from the Supreme Court, he said. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 4 Jun 82 p 1]

EXCESSIVE PAY--There is concern over the number of engineering firms "poaching" artisans with excessive pay offers, the chief industrial relations officer, Mr Ignatius Chigwendere, said in Harare yesterday. He said at a Press conference that the practice was particularly bad in Hwange and Triangle areas. "The tendency has been one of poaching artisans at wages that are above the maximum set by law-abiding engineering firms countrywide. We have already drawn the attention of these firms to the disastrous consequences of their activity so far as such activity undermines efforts to curb inflation." He said that in addition to higher wages, it was obvious that some firms were intent on "beating the law" through indirect inducements. He said foreign companies could not be allowed to torpedo the internal arrangement, creating conditions where inflation of unmanageable proportions resulted from wages that bore no relation to Zimbabwe's standard of living. Mr Chigwendere said a meeting would be held this week to organise a single Zimbabwe railways union. At present, he said, there were five unions: Railways Associated Workers' Union, National Union of Railwaymen, Amalgamated Engineering Union, Railways Association of Locomotive Enginemen and the Supervisor Staff Association. Each of these was expected to send representatives to a meeting in Bulawayo on Friday. The ministry-appointed chairman was Mr Ephraim Matsika, the regional industrial relations officer for Manicaland. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 2 Jun 82 p 1]

THOUSANDS QUIT ZAPU--GWANDA--More than 2 500 people have switched from ZAPU to join ZANU (PF) in Matabeleland South in the last two months. A ZANU (PF) spokesman said at the end of a party provincial annual general meeting yesterday that the figure was impressive considering the circumstances under which party organisation was being carried out in the province. "It has not been an easy thing to bring the new members to the party fold because the province is the frontline zone of clandestine activities of election-defeated parties," he said. Party officials in the province were hard working, but their work was being hampered by dissidents who "victimised people heard speaking languages different from their own". FERTILIZER FROM JAPAN--The Japanese government yesterday gave 5 100 tonnes of urea fertiliser to Zimbabwe. The ambassador, Mr Seiken Sasaki, said his country realised the importance of agriculture in Zimbabwe and was helping in that field. The gift was the second of its kind, 2 350 tonnes of urea having been given to the Government last year. The Deputy Minister of Finance, Senator Moton Malianga, accepted the urea on behalf of the Government. He said new settlers were receiving more land and the urea would be valuable in increasing their productivity and output. On how the fertiliser would be distributed, the managing director of the Zimbabwe Fertiliser Corporation, Mr Bill Collett, said a rationing system was in operation. He said the urea was worth about $1,4 million. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 29 May 82 p 9]

W. GERMAN EXPERTS--Three experts from the Federal Republic of Germany are in Harare to work with the Geological Survey for about two years. A statement from the West German Embassy in Harare said that the assistance to the survey was one of the projects of technical co-operation agreed upon by the two governments. West Germany had committed about $850 000 to the survey. The three experts were: Dr I. Lepper, a sedimentologist; Dr M. Resch, a crystalline geologist, and Mr H. Palloks a coal geologist consultant. HOUSING OFFICIALS IN CUBA--The two Deputy Ministers of Housing, Mr Robert Marare and Mr Mudomeni Chivende, are on a 12-day tour of Cuba to study its housing policy, a ministry spokesman said yesterday. Of particular interest to Zimbabwe was the "brigade system" under which communities provided labour and the government provided building materials and capital, the spokesman said. The Government wanted to establish this system in both urban and communal areas, he said. The two deputy ministers are due back on Saturday. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 2 Jun 82 p 3]

MORE QUIT ZAPU--About 1 000 ZAPU members have resigned from the party to join ZANU (PF) in Mashonaland Central, the MP for the area, Mr Naison Muriyiwa, said yesterday. Among those who quit ZAPU was the district chairman for Concession, Mr Clever Mhlanga. Mr Naison Muroyiwa, said ZANU (PF) secretary for the Mashonaland Central province, said one man from ZANU (Sithole) has also joined ZANU (PF). Displaying ZAPU membership cards surrendered to ZANU (PF) officials in the province, Mr Muroyiwa said all the former ZAPU followers had joined voluntarily. "There is no force used, as some people would like to think." The MP said the new members were most welcome. He said the move showed that the Year of Transformation proclaimed by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, was beginning to bear fruit. Mr Muroyiwa thanked the Greek communities in Bindura, Glendale and Concession for their gifts towards the building of the new ZANU (PF) headquarters. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 2 Jun 82 p 7]

ELECTORAL WALKOVER IN BINDURA--Bindura town council elections due to be held on Sunday are unnecessary because all the eight ZANU (PF) candidates have been elected unopposed. A ZANU (PF) MP for Mashonaland Central, Mr Naison Muroyiwa, said that the results of the elections were a clear indication that only one party existed in the area. The new councillors elected are: Mr Martin Poshayi, Mr Isaac Miti, Mr STandord Chigwida, Mr Simon Gwature, Mr Miadah Samathy, Mr Anthony Dzumbunu, Mr Wilbert Ngwena, and the only woman councillor, Mrs Betty Chikava. HWANGE BUILD-UP--Development of the new opencast pit at Hwange Colliery is progressing almost according to schedule as more new equipment is delivered to the site. The most spectacular piece of machinery is the walking dragline, an integral part of the $128 million development. Steel sections of the circular base of this giant excavator are being fitted together in preparation for welding. When completed, the entire superstructure of the 3 300-tonne machine will swivel on 120 rollers on its 17.7 metre base. Welding the huge base will take 2-1/2 months, after its segments have been meticulously levelled and aligned. Only when this operation is completed can erection of the rest of the dragline begin. It is expected to be in operation in July 1983. Meanwhile the build-up of other equipment continues. This week Zimbabwe Earthmoving Machinery Co. Ltd (ZEMCO) announced that it had been awarded a major contract for the supply of Caterpillar coal haulers and other machinery by Wankie Colliery Company Ltd. ZEMCO's general manager, Mr Pat Patterson, said that his company will provide six off-highway tractors to haul 91-tonne bottom-dump coal wagons, a further track-type tractor, a wheel loader and a rubber tyred dozer. In addition to the colliery contract, he said that his company would be supplying the Electricity Supply Commission with two Caterpillar wheel loaders and a twin-engined scraper for coal handling at the new Hwange power station. ANTI-SOCIALIST COMPANIES WARNED--Owners of some multi-national companies operating in Third World countries may be opposed to the socialist policies of the countries, the Acting Prime Minister, Mr Simon Muzenda, said yesterday. Addressing about 400 members of staff at the Philips electronic company offices in Harare, he said multinational companies working away from their headquarters were often "remote controlled". "The forces which control them may be opposed and even be irrationally antagonistic to our proclaimed, socialist aspirations. This can lead to misunderstanding, suspicion and unnecessary conflict." At the end of his tour, he officially opened a workshop at the complex. "In building this training school your company is demonstrating some understanding of the skills constraint," he said. "We look very favourably upon those who use their own resources to provide technical training for workers." The Government had said that expatriates were only a stop-gap measure until the country built up its own technical resources. The full-time training officer for the school, Mr Fred Robinson, said about 10 students would be included in the first intake and possible double the number in the second. "We are starting on basic courses such as electronics and telephone switching," he said. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 4 Jun 82 p 1]

SPY'S POSSESSIONS SOLD--Property which belonged to the boss of a South African spy network who fled Zimbabwe in January was sold in Harare yesterday. The auctioneers who handled the property declined to divulge its value. The goods were confiscated earlier this year under the Confiscation of Enemy Property Law and Order (Maintenance) Act. The goods were the property of Mr Geoffrey Burton Price and were auctioned at a house disposal sale conducted by a firm of Harare auctioneers. Some of the items included a brass opium pipe, New World junior encyclopedias, a leaded glass oak writing bureau, swimming pool equipment, golf clubs, lots of children's toys and books and a motorcycle. In March the Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office, Mr Emmerson Munangagwa, named Mr Price as the boss of a spy ring operating in Zimbabwe. Mr Munangagwa said the spy first went to Britain but was now in South Africa. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 29 May 82 p 1]

ZANU (PF) YOUTHS REMANDED--Thirty ZANU (PF) youths were this week remanded in custody by Chiredzi Magistrates Court to June 15 on charges of contravening the Law and Order (Maintenance) Act and interfering with public security. A 16-year-old juvenile was placed under parental custody on the same charges. The youths are alleged have assaulted and injured five ZANU (Sithole) supporters and set fire to property and premises of two Sithole supporters in Tshovani suburb last Saturday. The five casualties were reported to have received treatment at Chiredzi and Triangle hospitals. Refusing the 30 accused bail, Chiredzi magistrate Mr M. D. Purcell, said the country should be protected from these acts of lawlessness. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 3 Jun 82 p 3]

COST OF LIVING UP--The cost of living for lower income urban families rose 5,1 percent in the first quarter of this year compared to 6,2 percent for the better-off families in the same period. Figures for the poorer groups are issued quarterly by the Central Statistical Office. The main causes of the 5 percent rise were higher prices of green vegetables and fresh fruit, higher rents in Bulawayo and smaller increases in the prices of clothing, footwear and household goods. Transport costs rose marginally. In the same quarter the better-off faced substantial rises in the wages of domestic workers and rents and smaller increases in the prices of food, clothing and household goods. Figures for this group are issued monthly and between February and March there was a rise of 0,2 percent. [Text] [Harare THE HERALD in English 3 Jun 82 p 3]

AFRACA FACES FINANCIAL PROBLEMS

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 2 Jun 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] Financial support for the African Regional Agricultural Credit Association (AFRACA) which had been coming from sources outside Africa is likely to be reduced if not completely withdrawn.

This was the indication given by the Secretary General of the Association Dr K. Opuku-Owusu when addressing the first West African Centre for Agricultural Credit Training (WACACT), which was opened in Freetown on Monday at the Institute of Public Administration and Management, Tower Hill.

The Centre was opened simultaneously with the first seminar on the theme "Training for Trainers."

The West African Centre for Agricultural Credit Training (WACACT) is a sub-regional Training Centre for AFRACA.

Dr Opuku-Owusu said the problem was due to inflation and economic recession in these countries.

The Secretary General outlined the objectives and programmes of his organisation and disclosed that the third assembly of the association would take place in Arusha, Tanzania in November this year.

In his opening speech, the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, Dr Abass Bundu said that the seminar was designed to assist the efforts of the participating countries examine their present credit training structures and practices with a view to achieving better management of their credit facilities and developing an improved delivery system for small farmers and rural entrepreneurs.

He regretted that despite its important role in the socio-economic structure, agriculture still remained underdeveloped.

The Minister noted that agriculture now commanded a high priority in Sierra Leone's current national development plan and welcomed the holding of the first seminar on agricultural credit and banking in Freetown.

The Chairman for the occasion, Dr J. S. Funna who is Governor of the Central Bank said that the Bank of Sierra Leone had continued to attach the highest importance to diversifying activities which make them more responsive to the requirements of the environment.

Formed as a sub-regional centre from the African Regional Agricultural Credit Association (AFRACA), the West African Centre for Agricultural Credit Training (WACACT) embraces the Gambia, Ghana, Liberia, Nigeria and Sierra Leone.

It was established under the FAO-Finnish Government Cooperative in Freetown.

The seminar which ends on June 23 is hosted by the Bank of Sierra Leone.

STATEMENT ISSUED ON PROBLEMS OF REFUGEES

AB190915 Luanda ANGOP in French 1755 GMT 18 Jun 82

[Text] Luanda, 18 Jun (ANGOP)--The Angolan secretary of state for social affairs revealed in a public statement in Luanda today that refugees make up 1 percent of the population of Africa and appealed for international solidarity and necessary assistance in their behalf.

Referring to refugees outside the country, the statement indicated that the republic of Angola has made arrangements to have them repartriated in an organized manner.

In Angola itself, there are 73,000 refugees. Out of this number 50,000 are Namibians, 18,000 are Zairians and the rest are South Africans. To this end, the office of the Angolan secretary of state for social affairs pointed out that for the past 6 months the Angolan government was responsible for expenses for transportation and food which, to date, amount to nearly $1.2 million.

The office of the Angolan secretary of state for social affairs is being supported by the UN High Commission for Refugees, which has sent a variety of agricultural equipment. The office has also issued guidelines for the improvement of the agricultural sector, the implementation of the infrastructure to supply water, health protection, and improvement of housing conditions for the refugees.

The statement from the office also pointed [out] that in the refugee program for next year, priority will be given to self-help projects and the agricultural sector. Food aid from the world food program has also been earmarked.

The permanent state of war being waged by the racists of the South African regime against Angola prevents the populations of the war-affected provinces (Cunene, Kuando-Kubango and Huila) from facing the task of national reconstruction, the office added, pointing out that racist South Africa's aggression further complicates the refugees' situation.

The statement also mentioned reports made by the Angolan people to assist Namibian patriots in Angola, following the illegal occupation [words indistinct].

OFFICIAL'S SPEECH AT ILO SESSION REPORTED

AB181338 Luanda ANGOP in French 0900 GMT 18 Jun 82

[Text] Luanda, 17 Jun (ANGOP)--In a speech made recently at the 68th session of the international labor conference, Angolan Minister of Labor and Social Security Horacio Braz da Silva pointed out that changes aimed at better economic and social prospects depend on the physical and intellectual resources of young people integrated in the productive output of every country.

In the same speech, Braz da Silva mentioned the difficulties confronting some states in their efforts to employ rural manpower. The difficulties are aggravated by the natural tendency of youths to leave rural areas for urban centers, in particular in underdeveloped regions. In this regard, he called for the implementation of concrete measures within the framework of international cooperation. They would lead to the implementation of rural development programs, which implies the training of cadres for the management and administration of agricultural cooperative societies.

He also expressed satisfaction with the decision of the ILO labor conditions and environment division to make available to Angola a team of experts of the international program for the improvement of working conditions and environment. He explained that the Angolan government has placed great hopes in the implementation of a program aimed at improving labor conditions for Angolan workers as soon as possible.

The minister denounced the social insecurity facing African migrant workers in west Europe, most of whom are over 50 and will return to their homelands ill or mutilated.

He also spoke of the achievements of the Angolan government in its policy on labor and social security. According to the minister, these achievements include the updating of wages to reflect the cost of living which has gone up by about 30 percent and the introduction of comprehensive labor legislation, which is already in force, to replace all colonial regulations. Unlike those regulations under which the status of workers in the public service was different from the status of private sector workers, the new legislation is aimed at integrating the two sectors with identical rights and duties.

In a reference to the problem of the protection of women before and after maternity, he pointed out that they enjoy 90 days of maternity leave without losing their salaries or other benefits.

The People's Republic of Angola has been elected to the presidency of the anti-apartheid commission of this ILO session.

LARA NOTES NEED FOR MORE ATTENTION TO HUAMBO PROVINCE

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 13 May 82 p 3

[Report on press conference in Huambo by Lucio Lara, member of the Politburo, by Ramiro Aleixo; date not specified]

[Text] Lucio Lara, member of the Politburo and Central Committee secretary for organization, recently paid a working visit to Huambo Province, where he worked intensively with the politicoadministrative structures in connection with the fulfillment of directives from higher authorities aimed at strengthening the party's ranks and stepping up the revolutionary process. He also familiarized himself with the socioeconomic and military situation.

During his stay, the party leader held a press conference with the mass media (ANGOP, JORNAL DE ANGOLA, and television) in which he discussed questions concerned with efforts to raise the political awareness of the working masses in that province, the increased aggressiveness of the racist regime in South Africa, and economic development for solving the various problems which affect the country and prevent certain goals from being achieved.

Asked to describe the current politicomilitary situation in Huambo Province, Lucio Lara began by saying that all of us "are aware that action by the external enemy on our country's borders has, to some extent, encouraged action by internal reactionary forces and the puppets in areas such as this one, which are of basic importance to Angola. We can therefore say that in general--both in the party and in the government--there is a need to pay more attention to the situation in Huambo Province, which is a major hub and which the enemy is attempting to use as a base from which to launch his commando operations. And this is especially true as a result of South Africa's latest invasion, with its occupation of part of Cunene and the permanent infiltration by puppets, mercenaries, and so on, who are preparing to carry out actions against our people, our economy, and our development.

Huambo Province: Politically One of the Country's Best

"We can say that politically, Huambo Province is one of the best in the country: one where the people respond consistently to the party's directives and words of command and the government's efforts. If they do not do more, it is precisely because of the difficulties we have been experiencing in several economic areas and especially because of a certain lack of support. The level of support could certainly be higher if all the central structures would solve the problems of the provinces equitably so as to prevent major differences between some provinces and others, and if everybody really had his mind on the need to solve a few basic problems in the various sectors of our economy and in our social development.

"It is obvious that the party and government have been doing that work with some shortcomings that are understandable, considering a few mistakes and a few errors which have been duly denounced and detected and which attempts are being made to correct.

"We know that we are in the Year of Economic Organization, and we have seen that our People's Generalized Offensive Against Liberalism and Disorganization has not developed sufficiently in the provinces. We can say that in Luanda, it is beginning to take root in the rank and file, which is, after all, the group that can best help to correct what needs to be corrected in the struggle against errors and to report sh rtcomings, cases of dishonesty, and so on. What we all want is for all of Angola to be engaged in the offensive against liberalism and disorganization, particularly in the city of Huambo, the capital of a very big, rich, extensive, and populous province to which not much attention has really been paid.

"Necessarily, people's vigilance also plays a basic role here. We had the opportunity to participate in a meeting by the tenants' committees, and we saw that the population is committed to the tasks planned by the party and government to prevent the enemy from achieving his goals, which are to destroy and destabilize our economy and our social activities. In general, then, we can say that the politicomilitary situation in Huambo Province is not an absolutely normal situation, but it is one which is under complete control by the party, the government, and the defense and security organizations."

The Central Committee's secretary for the Department of Organization emphasized later on that "the party and government have been concerned to take appropriate and timely steps to fill in some of the gaps--and they are many--that we find in our political, economic, and social activity. But lately, a great effort has been made in that direction, and there has been perfect coordination in Huambo Province among the party, government, and defense and security organizations aimed at unifying their actions to guarantee greater security for the inhabitants and the economic units and insure that they will function better. Their functioning is always relative, of course, because we know that there are difficulties of various kinds. We inherited an industry that is heavily dependent on other countries for raw materials, and we know that the current economic situation make it difficult, in view of international and even national circumstances, to import the necessary raw materials so that everything will function normally.

We Are Disorganized in Our Search for Solutions

"And then, we have shortages in this or that sector. We cannot yet supply our own needs and be self-sufficient in many sectors as we could before. We feel that we can be self-sufficient. And that is precisely the problem that must be solved and is being solved in cooperation with the organizations for agricultural production, which is one of this province's greatest resources.

"Obviously, all of this requires the participation of the inhabitants who, as I said a short while ago, have been participating to the best of their ability in this area. We are still a little disorganized and inexperienced in seeking solutions to many problems affecting the masses and, in general, the collective organizations. But despite everything, we sense that the inhabitants of Huambo Province have a great determination to cooperate with the party and the government in improving their own situation. And that effort is visible not only in the city's inhabitants, who hasten to cooperate in response to appeals from the party and government: it is also visible in the attachment we find in these areas to the military forces and the ODP [People's Defense Organization].

"We find great enthusiasm here in the ODP, which has been making a considerable effort to preserve tranquillity in villages which are the targets of enemy action and where, many times, it is possible for certain massacres to be carried out with impunity. And from that standpoint, the ODP has been acting quite effectively and with sizable support, which shows that such an effort is really being made among the inhabitants.

"If it were not for the sizable support the puppets receive from the South African racists, I feel that this province would very rapidly reach the stage of self-sufficiency."

Asked at a later point to express his opinion of the work that has been done by the new structures of the Party Provincial Committee, which was elected at the provincial conference, he said that it has given proof of the resolute commitment to carrying out the party's directives, both as regards fulfillment of the guidelines issued at the first special congress and in carrying out other more recent directives in connection with organization. He also emphasized that as regards organization of the economic sector by the organs of people's government, there has been a real effort on the part of party officials. This leads him to feel that as time goes on and experience is gained, those efforts will begin to bear fruit, and then the members of the Provincial Committee will feel even more encouraged to continue on the path they have been following.

According to decisions reached at the provincial conference this year, the Party Provincial Committee is to engage in intense activity to reduce the unequal distribution of essential items that exists between the rural areas and the city and also to do away with the long lines. Those efforts have not been highly successful, however, because the industrial sector in particular is not able to respond due to hindrances caused by the operation of central structures. To some extent, their faulty operation hampers party action and the fulfillment of the goals set by that sector. The reporter then asked Lucio Lara if it were not necessary to establish a central organization in the province to deal directly with the problems preventing fulfillment of the production plans, especially since Huambo is considered the country's second most important region as far as production is concerned.

After saying that the question amounted almost to a proposal, the leader said that that concern "will be resolved as the commissariat that has been established gets on its feet. In other words, according to the new laws passed by the people's government, each province will have a commissariat made up of members of the party and government who will be responsible in the various sectors for proposing relevant solutions in each case. That is obviously not enough: the problems are very vast and are not all independent of each other--the problems are interrelated, and the fact that production plans are often not fulfilled in some enterprises is also due to a certain inability on the part of the managers of the enterprises themselves to forecast properly. They calculate their forecasting ability--their production capacity--to be above what is normally possible due to all the difficulties that exist as a result of disruptions in the supply of raw materials and the accidents along the way that occur in all sectors. And then everyone is very amazed because the enterprise did not fulfill its production plan.

Get Used to Correct Planning

"I believe that to some extent, the speech by comrade President Jose Eduardo dos Santos on 4 February indicates the solution to those problems. That is, within the enterprises that produce items which are essential to the people and for which the people are waiting, we must seek to instill an awareness of the need for those firms to be managed by comrades and compatriots who are really capable not only of planning but also of foreseeing their own ability to fulfill those plans. In that way, we will be more realistic and sometimes less ambitious and, therefore, more successful in fulfilling the plans. We will really know what we need to import and what we are capable of producing, and we will not always be presenting figures which are often pure fantasy and do not help in any way to solve our economic problems.

"But the guiding agency will always be the plan. As the planning organization gains its own experience--because there is the national plan and there are the provincial planning offices--as that entire organization gains experience in forecasting, calculating, and requiring fulfillment, which is also very important, we will be capable of achieving what we propose to produce and do. And in fact, there will no longer be a degree of fantasy in what we say we are going to do. Some enterprises join the process of socialist emulation and then drop out because there is no raw material. But why was it not foreseen before joining in socialist emulation that there would be no raw material? In other words, there are a number of questions of this kind that must be resolved. And by resolving those questions, we are certain that we will improve our people's living conditions considerably and have a better idea of what we need to import and what we ourselves are going to produce."

Party Stronger and More Aware

Another matter discussed during the dialogue had reference to the role of party militants in the rank-and-file structures, basically as far as raising the consciousness of the working masses in each workplace is concerned.

After saying that it is not easy to relate the organization to the entire set of problems represented by imperialism's aggressiveness, he emphasized that obviously, "we need a strong, cohesive, and aware party. And we have the feeling, and it is not wishful thinking, that our party is becoming stronger and more aware. Today we are witnessing a much more alive expression of the rank-and-file organizations--they are more demanding in terms of the higher-level organizations and in terms of compliance with regulations, statutes, and the duties of members, officials, leaders, and so on. I believe that this is a very valid indication of the general increase in awareness.

"We are preparing for the growth of the party. And that growth cannot be viewed lightly. It must be viewed precisely within this framework. The party's growth will be effective to the extent that the party as a whole is more aware at this moment. In view of imperialism's aggressiveness, it is obvious that the party must play its role, which is always that of leader and guide. The party must be sufficiently and permanently sensitive so that in every case, its actions will permit us to offer ever-increasing resistance to the aggressions of imperialism.

"And at this moment, we can say that the conditions are very precisely defined. An extraordinarily dangerous aspect is the fact that we have this enemy called racist South Africa, whose actions are being encouraged at this moment by the conduct of the U.S. administration and which has the effrontery and shamelessness to announce that it will undertake an act of aggression in depth inside the People's Republic of Angola in retaliation for the in-depth operations that SWAPO conducts over there.

We Must Be Aware of Our War Situation

"It is necessary that the mass of the party be aware of this fact. It is necessary that the mass of the party understand how South Africa has this impulse to announce to the world that it is going to attack our territory in depth. It is absurd and against all the laws that govern human relations. It means that we are up against a beast, meaning an animal that has absolutely nothing human about it. This is one aspect which must make us reflect so that our people will know what kind of enemy is confronting us. Because only in that way can we always be prepared, as we have been until now, to resist. And we must be all the more prepared considering that the enemy is doing this at a time when it can take advantage of the diversion being provided in the world at the moment by that war--let us call it that--between Great Britain and Argentina over the Malvinas Archipelago, which has very skillfully diverted all attention to itself.

"The problems in the Middle East and southern Africa and the threat that currently hangs over Europe because of the missile issue--all of that is being sidetracked today to allow concentration on the question of the Falklands. And South Africa wants to take one more opportunity to make one of its habitual intrusions in depth.

"We--above all our people and the party--must be alert and prepared as always to resist those acts of aggression. It is clear that in this instance we must appeal to the international conscience, since we can turn to the United Nations, the OAU--which is a little weak at the moment--the nonaligned countries, and, in fact, especially our people. We also have access--we cannot be unaware of it--to direct support from our Cuban comrades and the equipment given us by our comrades in the socialist countries, particularly the Soviet Union. And with that support, we must, as always, continue to resist and to give our support to our comrades in Namibia who are struggling for their independence, since it is from their territory that South Africa attacks our country.

"I therefore think that at the party level, there is a need for each militant to be alert to this situation: for each militant not to lose sight of it and become diverted by other problems in explaining what is happening and mobilizing the people, so that he will not feel that things are happening simply by chance. He must understand why this is happening--that South Africa really intends to continue the destabilization of the People's Republic of Angola and, in so doing, to prevent the MPLA from being the guiding force in Angola. Clearly, in engaging in its diversions, it is continuing to arm mercenaries to attack the countries of southern Africa. South Africa has decided that the enemy to be beaten is the People's Republic of Angola and the MPLA-Labor Party."

But We Are on the Right Path

In concluding his press conference, Lucio Lara explained the general situation in the country as follows:

"The country is experiencing tremendous difficulties, most of them due to the war that has been imposed on us. But some of them are also due to the fact that we have not yet attained what we can call our 'cruising speed' in terms of economic organization and government organization. Also because not all of our workers and officials are really committed to the revolution and to their work. So we have difficulties that cannot be concealed. They are revealed in the economic and social fields, and we cannot yet carry out the decisions and directives of our congress in the fields of education and culture as planned. We still have many gaps. We are not paying the attention to our children that is essential. We have problems related to the workers themselves: their living conditions, working conditions, and wage conditions. All of that is being taken care of as far as possible.

"But in the midst of all that, we can point to huge victories of which we feel quite proud. While we do not want to make comparisons, we feel that few African countries--we are limiting ourselves to our own continent--have achieved such victories after so many years of independence. We can say that we are on the right path.

"If it were not for the difficulties caused by the war, we would be farther along than we are. It is true that we must correct many errors from which we suffer and which have been inherited from the colonial society and our own inadequacies. We can say that there has not yet been enough time for the 'youth born of the revolution' to complete his elementary education. Not enough years have passed. Our cadres still belong to two societies: they lived in the old society and have adapted to the current one.

"All those difficulties are in the process of being overcome. There is much more experience, a greater interest, and a greater determination in many sectors to solve the problems completely.

"In the midst of all this, more attention must really be paid to the provinces. It is true that Luanda is a giant in our country. It absorbs much of our energy. This is a necessary phase, but it must be gradually thought about and corrected. I believe that from this standpoint, and despite all the difficulties, there are many victories and many positive things to convince us that we are on the right path."

FOREIGN MINISTER SAYS PAN-AFRICAN FORCES 'GUARANTEE OF SECURITY'

Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 29 Apr 82 p 1, 2

[Text] "A special OAU summit meeting on Chad will have the advantage of providing an overall solution to the problems we are now facing," said Acyl Ahmat Alkabache in an interview with the national press on Tuesday. The country's chief diplomat considers the advance of the FAN [Northern Armed Forces], the presence of the pan-African force, and the conflicts within GUNT [Transitional National Government] burning issues requiring rapid resolution.

However, the crisis the OAU is going through over the admission of the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic makes it questionable that the special summit requested by Chad will be held.

As for the pan-African forces, the state minister considers their presence "a guarantee of the population's security." Nigeria, which supplied three batallions instead of the two anticipated by the OAU, has been forced to withdraw its third batallion from the pan-African contingent because of its own economic difficulties. Most of the troops will perhaps stay on beyond 30 June 1982 and, with the agreement of the GUNT, will be financed by the United Nations. The UN Security Council will meet to discuss the subject.

Mr Acyl said the possibility of negotiations with the FAN would be proposed to the whole government, but he feels everything is clear: either one negotiates with the FAN or one does not. But behind-the-scenes wrangling and wise men's activities are unworthy of a government which, moreover, is contested by the president and the vice president. He cried out that Hissene Habre is Chadian too, except that he is considered a criminal. Touching on the possibility of a government reshuffle, the state minister questioned the nature of this change of teams. Would this take the wishes of the people into account? The chief diplomat feels that a government is needed which is capable of establishing the administrative and economic structures which can get Chad out of its lethargy. "It is not normal," he concluded, "for us to be under the cover of Libyan troops at one time and of OAU troops at another time."

MINISTER PREDICTS AVERAGE COTTON HARVEST--State Minister for Rural Development Lossimian Naimbaye, who presided over the agricultural conference in Moundou, has returned to Ndjamena. This first conference of its kind since 1979 enabled agricultural sector cadres to take stock of the past season. On the whole, it was an average one. Cotton production was 71,000 tons of cotton seed, and food crops were about what they should be despite some pockets of drought. Mr Niambaye said that this almost satisfactory result for a country at war should not induce farmers to rest on their laurels. The 1982-1983 season promises to be better. Everything has been put in motion, and unless something unexpected happens, cotton production could reach 120,000 tons. There is enough fertilizer to allow a good season despite the lack of plows. The only thing worrying the state minister for rural development is that the rains might be late. [Text] [Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 29 Apr 82 pp 2, 3] 9855

MINISTER'S RETURN FROM YAOUNDE--Minister of Economy and Finance Kosnaye Ngangbet returned to Yaounde Tuesday where he participated in the conference of ministers of the franc zone. These ministers reviewed the problems of recession and inflation plaguing the world and high U.S. interest rates that are paralyzing underdeveloped countries. Naturally Chad raised several problems related to the special situation of its economy. Raising the problem of wages on RNT [Chadian National Broadcasting], Mr Ngangbet stressed that despite its unwieldiness, the new system for paying civil servants is necessary in order to reestablish order and avoid many irregularities with notes. TWO DOCUMENTS CONCERNING TRANS-GABONESE RAILROAD SIGNED

Libreville L'UNION in French 14 May 82 pp 1, 4

[Report by Jean Bilinga]

[Excerpts] The Trans-Gabonese has just entered a new stage of its existence with the signing yesterday of two documents in the presidential palace in Libreville.

First the protocol of an accord concerning construction of the second portion, Booue to Franceville, a distance of 320 kilometers, at an estimated cost of 168 billion CFA francs. This considerable investment upon which the Gabonese government has decided is receiving joint financing up to 50 percent by the various partners, whereas the first section was funded entirely by the Gabonese state, as First Vice President Georges Rawiri pointed out.

The partners, represented by Andre Richardet, director general of EUROTRAG [expansion unknown] consortium, will be 19 in number this time, namely, the 17 companies that have already worked on the Libreville-Booue section, plus 2 British companies, George Wimpey and Taylor Woodrow.

Diplomats from the various countries contributing were also present at the official ceremony presided over by the Gabonese head of state, El Hadj Omar Bongo. Distribution of shares in joint funding is 39.5 percent for France, 22.5 percent for Great Britain, 17 percent for the Federal Republic of Germany, 11 percent for Italy, 5 percent for Belgium, and 5 percent for the Netherlands.

In order to enable the British to enter the consortium, the 17 original companies each gave up 22 percent of their share, to maintain the same proportionate strength, specified Xavier Desplats, administrative and financial manager of EUROTRAG. By way of comparison, he also indicated, the first section, 340 kilometers long, cost 220 billion CFA francs.

It should also be stressed that the 168 billion will be devoted to civil engineering: building the embankments, laying track, and wrought iron work.

They evidently do not concern the equipment, locomotives, and railroad cars indispensable to operation of the Trans-Gabonese.

The second document initialed by the first vice prime minister, Georges Rawiri, minister of transport, and Andre Richardet for EUROTRAG, then submitted for signature by the president of the republic was a convention regarding creation of a control commission.

The schedule for this work relates to completion of the second portion by 17 August 1982, at which date the additional track is supposed to be inaugurated with arrival of the first train in the station at Franceville. However, undue optimism should be avoided, since the first section is now running considerably behind its original schedule.

CENSUS OF GABONESE AUTHORITIES NOTES THIRTY THOUSAND REFUGEES

Libreville L'UNICN in French 21 May 82 pp 1, 4

[Article by Jean Bilinga: "Gabon Is Sheltering 30,000 Refugees"]

[Excerpts] The number of refugees counted in an official census by Gabonese authorities is now 30,000 persons, we were told by Mrs Helene Meyia-Eya'a Ossey, assistant delegate general for refugees, during the visit to Libreville by Joseph Batido Felli, head of the research and placement bureau, a body affiliated with the Organization for African Unity.

The figure is considerably lower that it was during the period 1975-1980, after the voluntary mass return of Equatorial-Guinean refugees to their mother country. Indeed, natives of this neighboring country have had the benefit, since 1 March 1980, of a special status as foreigners, indicated by possession of a red indentity card delivered by the Gabonese immigration service.

According to information supplied by Mrs Mireille Ginet, in charge of the HCR [UN High Commissioner for Refugees] program in Gabon, that organization with head offices in Geneva, is still providing "many-faceted" assistance to some. refugees in the form of medication, clothing, eyeglasses, etcetera, amounting in 1981 to 4,000 dollars (1,200,000 CFA francs). To that amount should be added regular operations, on the order of 20,000 dollars a year, or 6 million CFA francs. or 6 million CFA francs.

One problem was mentioned to Mr Joseph Felli by Mrs Helene Eya'a Ossey; the case of former Equatorial-Guinean refugees settled in Cap Esterias. So well settled and integrated, it seems, that they categorically refuse to go home again to their own country, where reception arrangements are reportedly not satisfactory.

Many children have been born since their settlement, and speak Benga or even French (wheras the Equatorial Guinean population speaks Spanish) depending on classes given in the little primary school that was built thanks to an HCR donation. Legally speaking, the offspring of refugees living in Gabon continue to be considered as a refugee population, Mrs Eya'a Ossey specified.

The case is different when a refugee marries a Gabonese national: his children become Gabonese citizens almost automatically at their majority, unless they decline citizenship. As a matter of fact, definition of refugees is not always obvious.

The HCR, for example, makes a distinction among political refugees, displaced persons, economic refugees, and persons who for various reasons have elected to live in exile. The overall figure quoted by the Gabonese authorities probably includes all these categories, but still it has to be handled with care, as population fluctuations are very unstable in Africa for the moment.

A country of refuge, a welcoming country, Gabon has not followed the camp policy adopted by Zaire, Tanzania, and nearer home, Cameroon. On the contrary, the Gabonese government has always advocated and applied the policy of integration of foreigners into the national community, to such an extent that high level civil servants frequently bear names of foreign origin with no problems.

This support exactly fits in with the OAU program of "burden sharing" recalled by Joseph Felli at Libreville. Africa, it must be remembered, has 5 million refugees, of which the majority come from the south of the continent. Unfortunately, the refugee colonies are not distributed equally among the various countries, and their situation grows worse from year to year.

The OAU refugee bureau, Mr Felli indicated, offers legal protection, material resettlement, resumption of schooling or profession, and possible amnesty for refugees. This enormous undertaking, of which the extent was demonstrated by the Arusha conference, is being carried out with the assistance of private charitable organizations; the next meeting in January 1983 at Arusha (Tanzania) is intended to reorganize all these public and private channels as one humanitarian goal.

BELGIAN AID-- A state credit has been granted by the Kingdom of Belgium to the Republic of Gabon for the sum of 50 million Belgian francs (350 million CFA francs), and ratified by signature of the official document on Thursday, 13 May 1982, in Libreville, by the Belgian minister Leo Tindemans and the Gabonese secretary of state, Mamadou Diop. This financial aid, in the form of a loan at 2 percent interest a year, will have a 10-year grace period and will be repaid as 20 payments of 2.5 million Belgian francs (17.5 million CFA francs a year). Of the loan, 90 percent is earmarked for building a railway warehouse (the full cost of which is much higher) in the Booue area, while the remaining 10 percent (or 5 million Belgian francs) will be used for acquisition of educational equipment for Omar Bongo University, according to the wishes of the president of the republic. Expenditures will be made as orders for material and services from Belgium, of course. The Gabonese side, while recognizing the initial contribution agreed to by Belgium to supply this financial aid, seems to be hoping that additional participation will be forthcoming, particularly for the Booue warehouse. 4 JUNE MOVEMENT OPPOSES CRABBE FOR PEOPLE'S COURT

[Text] The June 4 Movement [JFM] has denied that it has nominated Mr Justice V.C.R.A.C. Crabbe, a judge of the Supreme Court, for appointment as president of the People's Court to be established by the Provisional National Defense Council [PNDC]. In a statement issued in Accra, the movement makes it clear that it has no hand in the appointment of persons to positions of responsibility, including the PNDC secretaryship. In this connection, the JFM recalls that it expressed its opposition to the appointment of some secretaries. On Mr Justice Crabbe, the movement said since it is not part of the PNDC cabinet, it does not know of any intention to appoint him as president of the People's Court. The movement says it does not even have the least faith that somebody like Mr Justice Crabbe, who has been a director of the U.S. Peace Corps in Ghana before and whose profession has made him have connections with other foreign agencies whose views are contrary to Ghana's revolution, can be relied upon to punish the exploiters who have plundered the wealth created by the ordinary people of this country.

The movement said our organization has to identify itself with the revolution because it supports any genuine attempt by the PNDC to effect the socioeconomic restructuring of the society to favor the other (?rank) population. That is why we are actively participating in the current process to make sure that it succeeds.

We do not think that the people's government of the PNDC will appoint someone like Mr Justice Crabbe, whose hobby is gentle walking, to be head of the People's Court. It said it is aware of the efforts of the judiciary, of which Mr Justice Crabbe is a leading member, to sabotage the revolution. For example, in a recent letter signed by the chief justice, Mr Justice Apaloo, magistrates and judges have been instructed to eject tenants contrary to the PNDC directives that no tenants should be ejected, at least until the end of this year.

The JFM said it cannot betray the people by nominating Mr Justice Crabbe for such a post. It dissociates itself from any intended plan to appoint people with questionable commitment to positions of trust. The movement said the people's cause should be composed of other rank soldiers and ordinary workers. If legal assistance is needed a young revolutionary lawyer could be added. It concluded with the pledge that the JFM shall consistently move alongside the people until final victory.

JUNE 4 MOVEMENT CRITICIZES PNDC SECRETARY

AB182257 Accra Domestic Service in English 2000 GMT 18 Jun 82

[Text] The June 4 Movement has come out against recent public pronouncements on ideology attributed to the secretary to People's National Defense Council, PNDC, Mr B.B.D. Asamoah. In a statement issued in Accra today, the National Steering Committee of the movement said in the past similar statements were made by politicians to confuse workers, students and farmers of the country. The statement acknowledged the fact that Mr Asamoah is entitled to his own opinion but made it clear that Ghana will not go back to the past era with its attendant confusion. In the opinion of the June 4 Movement, the only option left for the working people of Ghana is a popular, social and political revolution that will pave the way for a more rational political system.

It quoted Mr Asamoah as saying that PNDC won't adopt any foreign political ideology and said the movement believes that the country's political directions will enable the people to decide whether to build Fort Alexander or whether people are getting more drugs for the hospitals. The statement referred to the preambles of the PNDC guidelines and said it considers that as PNDC ideology. The movement wondered if by these utterances Mr Asamoah is inferring that he is against the policy guidelines of the PNDC. If he is, then the movement calls on him to resign his post as a matter of principle. But if he remains in his post, the movement expects him to offer more rational ideas for fans of revolutionary progress.

FOREIGN MINISTER, JAPANESE ENVOY SIGN AGREEMENT

AB232130 Monrovia Domestic Service in English 1900 GMT 23 Jun 82

[Text] Liberia's foreign minister, Dr H. Boimah Fahnbulleh, and the Japanese ambassador to Liberia, Kunihiko Murono, today signed an exchange of notes in Monrovia. Liberia is to receive a grant-in-aid of $3.3 million for the second phase of construction of the new maternity hospital in Monrovia. The construction of phase one of the hospital was the subject of an exchange of notes for a $2.7 million grant from Japan signed in Liberia last July. A Foreign Ministry release says the total grant from the Japanese Government for the construction of the hospital now amounts to $7.8 million.

During the signing ceremony, Mr Fahnbulleh expressed appreciation to the Government of Japan on behalf of the government for the valuable assistance which will enable the PRC Government to respond in a meaningful way to the demanding maternity needs of Monrovia's rapidly expanding population. The Japanese ambassador said the agreement demonstrated a meeting of the minds of the two governments and that this would enable Liberia to provide Monrovia's growing population with adequate maternity service. The ambassador noted that the grant-in-aid was the manifestation of his government's desire to respond to basic human needs. This, he said, has become one of the (?pressing) objectives of Japan's recent economic cooperation strategy.

JUGNAUTH PRAISED AS MAN OF VISION, NEXT PM

Port Louis LE NOUVEAU MILITANT in French 8 May 82 p 1, 4

[Article by Subash Gobin: "A Man, A Vision"]

[Text] He will be the prime minister in the new administration. "Tomorrow" he will be "the model head of a country where life will be pleasant." Under the present political conditions, Aneerood Jugnauth is just the man to accede to this country's highest office. And this will be no fluke. Aneerood Jugnauth fully deserves his rightful place in the modern history of Mauritius. He is among those who influenced the events of the '60's and '70's in a decisive manner and who are preparing the country to take up the challenge of the year 2000.

It was in 1963 that the country as a whole heard of a young lawyer who had made a giant of the Ramgoolam establishment bite the dust. This young man had returned to the country in 1955, after years of hard work in college and at the university. Since his younger days he had been steeped in the Bissoondoyalist message. He had even disobeyed parental authority at the age of 15 in order to be able to attend a Bissoondoyal meeting in Rose Hill. He had to travel between his native Palma and that city by bicycle.

As an official in the appellate court, Aneerood Jugnauth was profoundly influenced by Neerunjun and Osman, and he soon left to become a lawyer in London. On returning to the country, he wasted no time in carving out a solid reputation in the legal profession. "It is said of him that he usually wins the cases he takes," L'EXPRESS commented when he resigned as senior crown counsel in 1971 to join the MMM [Mauritian Militant Movement].

In 1971 Aneerood Jugnauth already had to his credit valuable experience in Mauritian political life. Since 1963 he has let himself be guided by certain basic principles which will enable him to assert himself as a "big man" on the political scene. In 1963--the MMM was not to be created until 1970--Aneerood Jugnauth was already transmitting the concept of Mauritianism. "We must stop thinking about communities; we must stop thinking in terms of Hindus, Muslims or General Population. We must try to think in terms of Mauritians, because everyone born in this country, who is a citizen of this country, has got equal rights, and we have got to see to it that with progress and independence, those rights are respected," he was to affirm during his maiden speech on 19 November 1963, or a week after entering Parliament. A few hours before, the Mauritian Party had launched the slogan of "malbar nou pas oule, enveloppe nou pas oule." If only the Mauritian Party had listened to this young voice.

The Mauritiansim which Aneerood Jugnauth was preaching would suffer other blows from racist elements. As city councilor in Vacoas-Phoenix, a city which had voted for the Mauritian Party during its first municipal elections in 1963, Aneerood Jugnauth witnessed a revolting scene. The new municipal administration decided to rid itself of its secretary, who had been named by the central government, not on the basis of any objective criterion but because "it is impossible to retrain a Malbar as city secretary." Thus Mrs Premchand Dabee was dismissed. The Mauritian Party's racist tom-tom was beating to the fullest, driving the country's Hindus to a reaction of self-defense Aneerood Jugnauth wasted no time in joining Premchand Dabee and Devendranath Varma, who had created the All Mauritius Hindu Congress--a movement whose objective was to mobilize the working masses against racial injustice and in support of the country's independence. Within the limits of fair play, and with an awareness of the preponderance of the ideology of Mauritianism, at no moment did Aneerood Jugnauth adopt a position which would cost him legal action--unlike the other members of the Congress. Aneerood Jugnauth left the Congress when this antiracism defense movement became a political party.

A man of the masses, Aneerood Jugnauth also distinguished himself during the 1960's as a competent minister in the Ramgoolam government.

From November 1965 to 1967, Aneerood Jugnauth occupied the office of minister of development. Despite his competence, which Ramgoolam must have appreciated, Aneerood Jugnauth ran up against his Labor Party colleagues' lack of vision. As minister of development, Aneerood Jugnauth advocated rapid industrialization of the country. But two projects, dealing with the establishment of a refinery for peanut oil produced in the country itself and a rice plant relying in part on local supply, never received the endorsement of his Labor colleagues. A man of vision, Aneerood Jugnauth grasped the full significance of the country's future destiny.

In 1967, several months before the general elections which would bring the country to independence, Aneerood Jugnauth acceded to the office of minister of labor. The country was staggering under the unemployment crisis, and Aneerood Jugnauth's minister had the objective of recruiting 25,000 unemployed workers with a budget of 25 million Rupees. The country was seething with electoral excitement, and the ministries had their respective quotes of relief workers hired. Aneerood Jugnauth immediately decided to put an end to this scandalous practice and established new criteria for hiring the unemployed. Heads of families were recruited first, followed by unemployed workers with a priority position on the waiting list. That was not at all going to make things easier for the labor "magouilles," and Jugnauth saw his colleagues in the cabinet rise up in protest against him. The ministerial recommendations died in Aneerood Jugnauth's in-basket. Ramgoolam ended by accusing his minister of wanting to create problems for the government in a crucial year of general elections.

On 17 April 1967, Aneerood Jugnauth submitted his resignation to the prime minister. "You don't have to leave; you have a brilliant political future ahead of you. You will be my successor some day," the prime minister told him on that occasion. For the British governor, Aneerood Jugnauth's resignation was "a great loss for the country."

Dr Ramgoolam knew what he was talking about. He had recognized the young minister's qualities. But what the prime minister should also have appreciated in this fiery minister was his role at the constitutional conference in London in 1965. At that time, the leaders of the different Mauritian political parties were discussing with the British authorities the future constitutional statute of Mauritius. Sookdeo Bissoondoyal was also present as head of the IFB [Independent Foward Bloc]. Sookdeo Bissoondoyal, who had displayed deep-seated distrust of Dr Ramgoolam throughout his career, expressed fears about the independence which the Labor members were calling for. Defection by Bissoondoyal from the PMSD [Mauritian Social Democrat Party] would no doubt have changed the course of history. But as deputy leader of the IFB, Aneerood Jugnauth succeeded in convincing Sookdeo Bissoondoyal of the necessity for independence. The young minister thus performed an historic mission which Dr Ramgoolam could not help but recognize. As the English would say, Aneerood Jugnauth had, in his own way, been "instrumental" in the country's acquiring independence.

After joining the MMM in 1971, Aneerood Jugnauth found himself again in the company of a team of young people who, since 1968, had been setting about the task of building a new island of Mauritius. Disgusted with the deterioration of the social situation, with the treason on the part of the Labor members, with the communalism which the political parties confronting each other were exacerbating, and with the injustices of our economic system, these young people spontaneously welcomed this new fighter, whose political "credentials" were impeccable. Since the present prime minister has already identified his successor himself, the Mauritian population has only to wait for 12 June to see Dr Ramgoolam's prediction fulfilled.

BERENGER INVITES BOURGEOIS TO RALLY TO PARTY

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 10 May 82 pp 1, 4

[Excerpts] "The past is past," he says.

Allegations of a plot against his life.

The MMM/PSM [Mauritian Militant Movement/Mauritian Socialist Party] alliance charged, over the weekend, that there was a conspiracy against the life of Mr Paul Berenger, MMM secretary general. The news was announced by Mr Berenger himself at a meeting Saturday in Quatre-Bornes. Berenger said that certain political opponents of the MMM, meeting at night at a place "not far from Place de la Gare," discussed ways of eliminating him. "I know," the speaker said in a grave voice, "I know who was present at that meeting, who spoke, and what means they proposed to use."

In the same tone, the speaker said that this plot is a "conspiracy" punishable under the law, and he let it be understood that the affair will be brought up at the proper time and place, after the formation of an MMM/PSM government.

While urging the people to remain calm, he said that one person present at the meeting (the name of a PAN [expansion unknown] candidate has been cited) fell ill from the shock and had to go off to a retreat to recover.

The Labor Party, however, is not giving any credence to Mr Berenger's "allegations." Mr Kher Jagatsingh, the party's secretary general, said it was nothing but "pure political propaganda. It is a lie. It is the kind of strategy and tactics used in totalitarian circles." According to the minister, the unprovoked attack on [Minister of Works] Emmanuel Bussier is something best forgotten by everyone.

The MMM secretary general also told the crowd of 7,000 to 8,000 people that Mr Erick Eckvall, an American who is a campaign adviser to the Labor Party, reportedly advised Labor's leaders to refuse air time to the MMM/PSM alliance during the television broadcast time reserved for the political parties, unless MMM/PSM pays for it.

On the motion of Mr Berenger, the crowd voted by acclamation to pass a resolution vowing a huge, peaceful protest demonstration at the MBC/TV [Mauritius Broadcasting Corporation] studios at Forest-Side if the MMM/PSM's rights are infringed upon. "We will rally 100,000 to 200,000 people in front of MBC/TV," said the orator, to the applause of the crowd.

In addition to these announcements, the MMM secretary general described the two [allied] political organizations, called upon to assume the leadership of the country, as a unifying force in Mauritian society. Thus, Mr Berenger held out his hand to the skilled workers, to the intellectuals, inviting them to "rally to the banner of the Left alongside the small wage-earners, the laborers, the small farmers, and others." "The past is past," said the MMM secretary general in effect. After having emphasized that the MMM has always been on the side of the common man and plans to stay that way, Mr Berenger strongly insisted that it is the duty of all party militants to extend the hand of friendship to skilled workers, intellectuals, professionals, and the middle class.

Berenger also charged his opponents with scheming to make people believe that foreign troops are going to land after the critical vote on 11 June. People will see ships passing off the Mauritian coast, and unidentified airplanes will violate Mauritian airspace in order to scare the people.

Mr Berenger also charged that plans have been made to send cars equipped with loudspeakers through the town at night to poison the air with rhetoric--ostensibly that of the MMM. "The police," Mr Berenger concluded, "must do their duty. We are also asking our militants to remain vigilant," he said.

DUVAL PROMISES TO CREATE JOBS IF ELECTED

Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 7 May 82 p 7

[Article: "Between Capitalism and Marxism: Duval Promises Creation of 40,000 Jobs in Six Months If He Achieves Power After 11 June"]

[Text] The creation of 40,000 jobs in the industrial sector in 6 months, social security allowances including an unemployment benefit of around 300 rupees per momth, a pro-Western foreign policy--these are some of the proposals included in the amnifesto of the Mauritian Social Democratic Party (PMSD).

This manifesto summarizes, in broad terms, the program which would be carried out in the next 5 years in case the PMSD should form the next government.

The program, which is called "realistic" in the preface to the document, aims at economic recovery. In the initial phase, this economic recovery would be achieved by the creation of 40,000 jobs in the duty-free zone over a period of 6 months. The investments would be provided by Taiwanese businessmen who are reportedly ready to build 300 factories. To facilitate rapid industrialization, the PMSD is promoting an international campaign for the duty-free services zone, tax exemptions, and credit facilities for the local manufacturing sector. Waste and unproductive jobs will be limited, and the PMSD will stimulate savings.

A development project in the southern part of the island is also included in the party manifesto, including establishment of a sugar refinery with a capacity of 600,000 tons, the reopening of the port of Mehebourg, and the establishment of a recreation center for French and American soldiers and sailors. These projects, the manifesto makes clear, will be financed by the French and the Americans.

The PMSD intends to emphasize tourism to ensure intensive development of hotels, water sports facilities, and centers for all sports, in order to create jobs. In addition to the creation of jobs, the manifesto advocates development of an infrastructure which will contribute to transforming the northern and northwestern part of the island into the "Riviera of the Indian Ocean."

Diversification of trade toward the Japanese, Swiss, and Middle Eastern markets is envisaged.

In the section on foreign policy, a "courageous and realistic" policy, "alongside the Western powers," is proposed to the electorate. The PMSD considers that "only the West is capable of ensuring economic development through trading relations, investments, tourism, and finally emigration." "Taiwanese aid in the industrial sector is advocated," despite "diplomatic difficulties with China."

Regarding Diego Garcia, a PMSD government proposes to negotiate with the American Government in order to increase the number of jobs allocated to Mauritians and so that supplies for the base will be provided exclusively by Mauritius, both for current consumption as well as for construction materials.

In the agricultural sector, a modification in the sugar export tax is advocated in order to stimulate production. Progressive tax rates, similar to the structure of the income tax, will be put into effect. Irrigation projects will be accelerated, and a future PMSD government will undertaken consultations with sugar factory owners and planters so that the latter may become shareholders in the sugar business.

Among projects under consideration in the framework of the diversification of agriculture are the restructuring of the Tea Development Authority (TDA), the export of our surplus tobacco, and the raising of deer in "feed lots" by cooperatives. Regarding fishing, an expansion of the fishing cooperatives is envisaged to lead, over the long term, to a reduction in imports.

In the social sector, the unemployment benefit is considered a transitional measure until full employment is achieved. According to the PMSD manifesto, this allowance will be rasied to 300 rupees per month. The old age pension and the disability pension will also be raised to 300 rupees per month. CHA [Central Housing Authority] rental charges will be reduced to 150 rupees.

The PMSD envisages the maintenance of the purchasing power of salaried workers and plans to guarantee 1 month's bonus payment per year. Appeals could be made to the "Termination of Contracts of Service Board" to challenge layoffs and to the Public Service Commission for appointments and promotions. "Voluntary participation" in companies with more than 20 employees is suggested in the manifesto in order to improve industrial relations.

In the educational sector, the PMSD intends to establish a "National Education Council" which will be responsible for harmonizing the educational system, by averaging from above, the manifesto states. The rotation system will be abolished, and a means test will be introduced for the granting of subsidies for the purchase of school books and the payment of examination fees.

Regarding Rodrigues Island, the PMSD has committed itself to establish a "Rodriguan Administrative Council" and to abolish the post of resident commissioner. Additional schools and technical high schools will be built, as well as 600 homes. With French, British, and American financial assistance the PMSD proposes to improve the road network and the airport. In the agricultural sector, the PMSD proposes to the planters the possibility of leasing their land for a period of 20 years and of building model farms.

The political philosophy of the PMSD, states the preface of the manifesto, is a synthesis between classical capitalism and Marxism-Leninism.

JOC SURVEY SHOWS DESIRE FOR CHANGE AMONG YOUTH

Port Louis LE MAURICIEN in French 5 May 82 p 4

[Article: "Young Workers and Politics"]

> [Text] The JOC [Christian Working Youth] has just published a survey of young workers on the general theme, "Young Workers and Politics." A careful and scientific survey conducted among a sample of 278 persons, it throws some light on the political scene on the eve of the general elections.

From the survey it was learned that 90 percent of the young workers interviewed desire a change in the next general elections, and that one person out of five surveyed would like a change in order "to improve the level of living." The desire for change is as strong in the cities as in the countryside and among men as well as among women. However, according to those conducting the survey, "this desire for change does not necessarily reflect a desire to see the Opposition come to power," since only 72.5 percent think the general elections will bring a change. It should also be noted that only 6.6 percent of the persons interviewed expressed satisfaction with the government in power. Some 18.2 percent were "somewhat" satisfied, and 72.9 percent were "not satisfied at all."

The dissatisfaction comes in particular from the high cost of living and the impression of waste, corruption, communalism, and the slowness displayed by the government in solving such problems as unemployment and the housing shortage. Dissatisfaction is greater among men than among women.

Elsewhere, with 78.8 percent expressing dissatisfaction, women in the home are the least satisfied. Workers expressed their dissatisfaction by 67.6 percent. Dissatisfaction is greater in the cities than in the countryside. Some 84.6 percent of the men and 79.6 percent of the women in the cities said they were dissatisfied with the present government, whereas in the countryside it was 70 percent of the men and 62.3 percent of the women who expressed dissatisfaction with the government.

What Will Be the Predominant Factor Governing Your Choice in the Elections?

It is interesting to note that the most popular criterion [governing one's choice in the elections] is political party, with 52.3 percent, which is much larger than the other criteria. In second place is personality, which will determine the choice for 27.5 percent of the young persons interviewed. Party as well as the quality of the candidates are the predominant criteria. Only 6.6 percent of those interviewed will base their votes on the communal criterion. This figure, as those conducting the survey put it, seems low, since politicians often appeal to this kind of view.

In analyzing the figures it was also learned that when city men vote, they place greater weight on the "party" (69.2 percent) and on personalities (36.5 percent) than do men in the country (52.9 percent and 24.3 percent, respectively). This tendency is also to be seen among women with regard to support of political parties (49.2 percent of city women and 42.9 percent of country women). However, country women pay more attention to personalities than do city women (28.5 percent as against 22 percent). City men and women are more influenced by communal considerations in terms of their votes than are those in the countryside (15.4 percent of the men and 51.4 percent of the women in the cities, and 4.3 percent of the men and 3.9 percent of the women in the countryside).

Regarding the choice of the party for which they will vote, 48 percent of the young people from 18 to 30 years of age say they have chosen the party they are going to vote for in the coming elections. Among those who have already chosen, the percentage of men is higher than that of women; 55.7 percent of the men have already made their choice, whereas 40.7 percent of the women have chosen their party already. Among those over 18 years of age, unemployed persons and workers are more likely to have made their choice--50 percent and 49.5 percent, respectively--whereas a majority of students have not yet made their choice.

Women Undecided

On the other hand, men are more determined to vote than women (83 percent against 69.2 percent). Many women (29.7 percent) have not yet decided to vote. However, women in the countryside are more determined to vote than are those in the cities (71.7 percent against 65.8 percent). Among young people over 18 years of age, the percentage of men who say they will vote in the coming general elections is practically the same in the cities as in the countryside (82.9 percent and 83 percent).

Is it a good thing for 18-year olds to vote? More than three-quarters of those interviewed (78.2 percent) consider that the right to vote at age 18 is a good thing. Some 12.8 percent think the contrary.

With a percentage of 85.2 percent, the 19- to 24-year-old segment of the sample is the most favorable toward granting the right to vote at age 18, whereas the 15- to 18-year-old segment is least in favor (68.4 percent) regarding voting at age 18. This segment is also the most reserved on the matter (21.5 percent say no, while 10.1 percent have no answer). It is astonishing to note that students, with 66.7 percent in favor and 23.8 percent opposed to voting at age 18, are the most reserved on the question. On the other hand, workers are more in favor of voting at age 18, with 84.3 percent saying yes.

The groups most interested in politics are the unemployed (33.4 percent) and the workers (31.4 percent). Women occupied at home approach students in their lack of interest in politics, because only 23.1 percent of women in the home and 19 percent of the students say they are very interested in politics.

Country men and women say they are more interested in politics than do those in the cities (27.3 percent of country women, against 20.3 percent of city women; 34.3 percent of country men are interested in politics, against 30.8 percent of city men).

The category least "interested in politics" is city women (40.7 percent).

Young People (19 to 24 Years of Age) Are Very Much Interested in Politics

In another area, the age segment most interested in politics is those persons from 19 to 24 years of age.

On the average, the young worker hears politics discussed in at least two different areas: the most popular source is the newspaper (55.1 percent), followed closely by radio and television (53.9 percent).

The age segment most interested in politics through the newspapers is that from 15 to 18 years of age. This age group is least affected by radio and television.

The age group generally most exposed to political information is that from 25 to 29 years of age. The category least informed about politics includes women at home.

The most popular source of political information for men in the city is the political meeting, whereas in the countryside the newspapers are the most popular source. For city women as well as country women, radio and television are the most popular sources of information.

Finally, the JOC survey brings out the fact that workers (76.5 percent) and women in the home (80.7 percent) are the most conscious of the fact of being interested in politics than are students (69 percent) and the unemployed (69.3 percent).

The JOC survey, conducted under the direction of Robert Fleurot, had the benefit of advice from Doris Chan Ki Chune, a sociologist. The survey was conducted among 258 persons, of whom 70 men and 77 women lived in the countryside and 52 men and 59 women lived in the city. The following age groups were interviewed during the survey: a) 15-18 years old; b) 19-24 years old; c) 25-30 years old.

MMM PLAN TO SET UP SCHOLARSHIP COMMISSION REPORTED

Port Louis LE NOUVEAU MILITANT in French 8 May 82 pp 1, 4

[Text] A National Scholarship Commission will be established by a government headed by the MMM/PSM [Mauritian Militant Movement/Mauritian Socialist Party]. This commission, which would be responsible for the granting of all local and foreign scholarships, would work in close collaboration with the Manpower Planning Unit.

This decision was announced last Thursday [6 May] at the time of a meeting between the members of the MMM/PSM alliance and the Union of Directors of Private Secondary Schools. The MMM/PSM alliance was represented at the meeting by Ramduth Jaddoo, D Fokeer, J Pillay, and Koosna. The directors of the secondary schools were represented by S Balgobin; his adviser, F Richard; Samual Wong; and Perault.

During the meeting, the directors of the secondary schools presented their views on secondary education. They emphasized the importance of technical education. Problems relating to the courses of the MIE [Mauritius Institute of Education], scholarships, community schools, the Form III examination, and the Certificate of Primary Education (CPE) were also raised.

According to the directors, existing school facilities are under-utilized, and they also spoke of the negative role of the PSSA [Private Secondary Schools Authority].

The proportion of teachers to students should be 1 to 20, in the view of the directors of the private secondary schools.

The representatives of the MMM/PSM alliance made a long statement on the system of education proposed by the alliance of the Left. They brought out the fact that the diversification of the curricula is already being studied. The MMM/PSM alliance explained the importance which it attaches to the establishment of a Faculty of Fine Arts. Under the heading of the closing of secondary schools, the MMM/PSM alliance guaranteed the survival of those which should continue to exist.

The system of education proposed by the MMM/PSM alliance will involve primary education for 8 years and secondary education for 5 years. A "continuous assessment" system will be in effect for all classes, with a possibility of remedial courses in the third and sixth grades.

The proposals of the MMM/PSM alliance were received with enthusiasm by the Union of Directors of Private Secondary Schools.

MMM PLAN TO ESTABLISH NATIONAL EDUCATION AUTHORITY

Port Louis LE NOUVEAU MILITANT in French 5 May 82 pp 1, 4

[Text] A National Education Authority will be established after a National Education Commission will have submitted its recommendations to a possible government headed by the MMM/PSM alliance [Mauritian Militant Movement/ Mauritian Socialist Party].

This is what came out of a meeting which the MMM/PSM alliance had with the Union of Private Secondary Education Employees (UPSEE). The MMM/PSM alliance gave an assurance to the UPSEE that all teachers affected by the closing of secondary schools would be retrained and employed elsewhere. Another firm guarantee was provided by the MMM/PSM alliance on the question of the equivalency of diplomas. The UPSEE officers emphasized the fact that this is one of the more urgent problems, particularly as it affects the DEUG [expansion unknown] and LCC [London County Council] certificates. The MMM and the PSM promised to look into the whole question immediately after an electoral victory on 11 June.

If the PSSA [Private Secondary Schools Authority] Amendment Bill, which was introduced in Parliament in January 1979, has nothing unconstitutional in it, an acceptable formula will be arranged. In the contrary case, the question will be decided by the cabinet. This amendment concerns the functioning of the Disciplinary and Dismissal Board. If necessary, the present Remuneration Order, published by the NRB [expansion unknown], will be replaced.

During the meeting, the UPSEE insisted on selective nationalization of the secondary schools. However, the MMM/PSM alliance, while making it clear that it was not apposed to this action in principle, considered that it was necessary to take into account certain practical questions.

The MMM/PSM alliance, which has some reservations about the formula of aid to the PSSA, informed the UPSEE that the National Education Commission will also consider this question. The matter of alignment of pensions on the system in effect in the religiously-supported schools was also discussed.

The representatives of the MMM/PSM alliance informed the leaders of the UPSEE that it will only be after their meetings with the various teachers' groups that it will have an overall view of all questions concerning the educational sector. The MMM/PSM will thus meet with the Association of Preschool Teachers, the Union of Primary School Teachers, the Community School Graduates and Diploma Holders Association, teachers of the JSS [expansion unknown], and the Government Teachers' Union (GTU).

BRIEFS

MUNICIPAL AND VILLAGE ELECTIONS--Municipal and village elections will take place as soon as it is practically possible after 11 June, if the MMM/PSM alliance [Mauritian Militant Movement/Mauritian Socialist Party] comes to power. This was the commitment made yesterday [26 April] to press reporters by Aneerood Jugnauth. Paul Berenger stated that these elections will be held before December, if the necessary procedures can be completed in time. Meanwhile, the leaders of the MMM/PSM alliance declared, teams of competent administrators will be called on to administer the cities. These teams will be replaced when new municipal and village councilors are elected. Regarding by-elections, these will be one of our priorities after 11 June, stated Aneerood Jugnauth. "If we have a three-fourths majority to do it, we will do it more quickly. If not, we will have to appeal to the Opposition on the other side of the house and ask them to give us this majority to resume the holding of by-elections in the interest of democracy." USSR GENERAL VISITS TOCOLO MILITARY SCHOOL

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 2 Jun 82 p 1

[Text] "The Soviet Union will step up its military support for Mozambique," said Army Gen Alekseyevich Yepyshev, who is visiting the country, in Nampula.

Army Gen Alekseyevich Yepyshev, chief, Main Political Directorate of the Soviet Army and Navy, arrived yesterday, Sunday, at Nampula, accompanied by Lt Gen Armando Guebuza.

Strong and Revolutionary Army

During a dinner given on that same day in his honor, Army Gen Alekseyevich Yepyshev said that "during the visits we are making to some of the military units of your country and the contacts we have with the sergeants and officers, we feel that they are building an army with a great capacity to defend the revolutionary gains of the Mozambican people."

He emphasized that the Soviet Union will step up cooperation in the military area, as has been done ever since the armed struggle for national liberation.

Nampula Governor Feliciano Gundana spoke before the address by the chief of the Main Political Directorate of the Soviet Army and Navy; the governor welcomed the Soviet military team to this part of Mozambique.

He expressed the appreciation of the provincial officials over the fact that various Soviet internationalists are working in Nampula under the provisions of the Friendship Treaty and the economic agreements signed between the two countries.

Daily Growth

On Sunday, Army Gen Alekseyevich Yepyshev visited the Military School located in the city of Nampula; during the visit he followed with interest the explanations that were given him on the subjects taught in each of the two complexes of that military installation.

The high point of the visit to the school came when the cadets carried out maneuvers involving AA action and action against landings, ATA, national border defense, and firing practice with light and heavy weapons.

Continuing the program, the team visited the school's firing range where offensive maneuvers were displayed with the employment of tanks, armored cars, and other heavy artillery. The combat readiness of the cadets was also displayed there.

During the second day of his visit to Nampula, on Monday, Alekseyevich visited the Tocolo Military Academy, spending the night on the Island of Mozambique.

At the Tocolo Military Academy, he visited some classrooms and barracks, talking to the cadets and instructors about the performance of the teaching body.

At the end of the visit, the chief of the Main Political Directorate of the Soviet Army and Navy urged the cadets to study more and more and continually to cultivate their patriotism.

The Tocolo Military Academy accommodates students who finished the sixth class; here they continue their studies until the 11th class after which they go to the officer training school of the armed forces of Mozambique.

The average age of the students is 13 years and the lectures are given by Mozambican and Cuban instructors.

During his stay on the Island of Mozambique, General Alekseyevich visited the fortress and the museum, returning to Nampula on Tuesday from where he returned to the country's capital.

He was seen off by Governor Feliciano Gundana, Maj Gen Joao da Silva Nihia, military commander of the Province of Nampula, and Col Domingos Goigoi, commandant of the military academy, as well as other leading officials.

On Sunday, Alekseyevich placed a wreath of flowers on the monument of the Mozambican Heroes.

PLANS DRAWN FOR NAMPULA AGRICULTURAL MARKETING CAMPAIGN

Barter Products Ready

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 28 May 82 p 1

[Article by Naftal Donaldo: "Products in Warehouse to Start Agricultural Sales"]

> [Text] Large quantities of products and miscellaneous articles, intended to support the agricultural sales drive now in progress in the country, are already in various warehouses in the city of Nampula. This was established during the visit which Home Trade Minister Aranda da Silva is now making to that province to get a close look at the progress of the farm sales drive.

There are 41,000 inner tubes for bicycles in the warehouses of TRADIMEX in Nampula. In the first warehouse of ENCATEX, there is a large stock of fabrics which were produced by TEXTAFRICA and the Portuguese enterprise of Pinho e Anselmo, Limitada.

There is a large quantity of fabrics worth 27,000 contos in the second ENCATEX warehouse in Nampula. The fabrics were produced at home and abroad.

In the Gordandas and Casa Gani Comercial, Lda. warehouses, the home trade minister and the delegation accompanying him discovered serious shortcomings in the distribution of products in support of the agricultural sales drive now in progress in the country.

The check on the work being done as part of the current sales drive revealed the existence -- in the warehouses of the Joao Ferreira dos Santos enterprise in Nampula -- of 5,000 bicycles in support of the secretariats of state of cashew and of cotton.

Several efforts are being made now, including the establishment of a network of 29 stores, the training of sales personnel and warehouse managers, as well as the development of a more effective link between all of these agencies.

The measures now in progress were disclosed during the activity review meeting on this drive which was held with provincial officials connected to the sales field.

The meeting was directed by Minister Aranda da Silva and was attended also by the provincial directors of CI [Domestic Trade], AGRICOM, PESCOM, ENCATEX, TRADIMEX, and other wholesale enterprises in the province of Nampula.

The effects of the drought, which hit Nampula, were also discussed during the meeting; this drought has seriously hit agricultural production in general.

It was also reported that the cotton sector is experiencing a manpower crisis with a shortage of 50 percent compared to its requirements.

Deficiencies Criticized

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 29 May 82 p 1

> [Excerpts] "Your problem springs from the lack of sensitivity to the problems of the people and it is also due to a narrow departmental approach. Your progress is significant but you have not yet reached a satisfactory level," said Home Trade Minister Aranda da Silva in Nacala-Porto on Thursday. The member of the administration spoke during a meeting attended by national, provincial, and district directors involved in the agricultural sales drive now in progress in the province of Nampula.

The main phase in the agricultural sales effort in this province began on 15 May. An activity review meeting is scheduled for today in the provincial capital. It is hoped that measures will be taken at this meeting which will make it possible to solve some of the problems detected in this process.

According to reports submitted to him during the visits he made to Angoche and Nacala, Aranda da Silva found that there is still too much red tape in the work being done.

During the meeting held in Nacala, he reported that there is an organizational improvement in various agencies involved in agricultural sales. But he emphasized that a narrow, parochial attitude still persists and this is due to a lack of alertness, the narrow departmental approach, and the lack of sensitivity for the population's problems.

The home trade minister and the delegation accompanying him continued on to the district of Ribaue on Friday.

NORWEGIAN BUILDING PURCHASE -- NORAD (Norwegian International Development Agency) offered the Mozambican Government 500,000 crowns, or more than 3,000 contos, to repair an apartment house which will accommodate its cooperants in Mozambique. An agreement was signed yesterday in Maputo for this purpose by the representative of that agency in Mozambique, Arne Dahlen, and Mozambican officials, in particular, National Housing Director Jose Forjaz and Building Maintenance Director Maltez de Almeida. The amount offered is intended for the purchase of material necessary to repair the building, and to cover repair expenses; this operation is being managed by Building Maintenance. After signing the contract, the national housing director said that this is a quite significant move on the part of the Kingdom of Norway because this will make it possible to solve the problem which Mozambique is facing in providing housing for its cooperants, particularly those who come through NORAD. Jose Forjaz disclosed that the contract, which the country signed with that agency, to bring cooperant technicians in, includes housing facilities, a requirement which it has not always been possible to meet due to the difficulties we are experiencing at this time. EXPORTS TO GDR DOUBLED--The country's exports to the GDR in 1981 increased 84% compared to 1980. This year we are planning on a greater increase in trade between both countries, it was disclosed yesterday by sources in the Ministry of Foreign Trade at the end of the talks of the subcommittee of the Mixed Mozambique-GDR Committee. In the meantime, GDR Vice Minister of Foreign Trade Peter Schmidt yesterday returned to his country after holding talks with Mozambican officials within the context of the mixed subcommittee on foreign trade. The talks ended with the signing of a document worked out by Daniel Gabriel, national director of trade policy, Ministry of Foreign Trade and GDR Vice Minister Peter Schmidt. For 3 days, the delegations from Mozambique and from the GDR discussed various issues relating to trade last year; they studied ways of implementing this year's program in the areas of foreign trade, technical-scientific cooperation, and finance. They also took up the principles which will govern the exchange of commodities next year. Starting with this meeting, the representatives of both countries worked out proposals which will be submitted for review by the seventh meeting of the Mixed Mozambique-GDR Committee to be held next September in Maputo. During his stay in Mozambique, the vice minister of foreign trade visited with Minister Julio Carrilho, who is the chairman of the Mixed Committee, with the ministers of foreign trade, of ports and surface transportation, and of industry and energy.

According to the same source in the Ministry of Foreign Trade, a large part of the materials to be supplied by the GDR in the context of existing cooperation will be used for joint projects in the areas of industry, geology, mining and agriculture. SAUDI, OPEC LOAN

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 22 Apr 82 p 4

[Text] A $10 million loan agreement to provide 2.5 billion CFA francs to support the balance of payments was signed on 7 April between the OPEC International Development Fund and the Republic of Senegal.

The loan will be used by the government of Senegal for imports of capital goods, spare parts and production goods needed for agriculture and industry and for food and other consumer goods.

This loan to support the balance of payments is the sixth one granted to Senegal by the Fund; Senegal has already received three loans to support the balance of payments and two laons for two projects. A total of $40.9 million has now been loaned to Senegal interest-free. An administrative charge of 0.5 percent is levied on amounts withdrawn and in suspense. The maturation period is 10 years, with a 3-year grace period.

The agreement was signed at the Fund's headquarters in Vienna by His Excellency Mamoudou Toure, Senegalese Minister of Plan and Cooperation, and by Dr Mahsun Jalal, chairman of the Fund's board.

SAUDI VEGETABLE OIL DONATION

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 27 Apr 82 p 4

[Text] The government of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia has just offered our country 980 tons of vegetable oil valued at 196 million CFA francs. The ceremony was held yesterday morning at the Magasins Terminal Containers Vasquez in the presence of Souleymane Ndiaye, commissioner for food aid, and Saudi Arabian Ambassador Rashad Musallam Nawaylati.

In the speech delivered on that occasion, Mr Ndiaye said the ceremony was significant for more than one reason, because it was taking place the day after the meeting of the Arab-African ministerial commission which laid the foundations for the revitalization of cooperation that was already exemplary, especially in the economic field. He also noted that this cooperation is a concrete expression of the generosity the people of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia continually show to the countries of the Third World, which are faced with the many problems of underdevelopment, among which the question of food takes priority. Mr Ndiaye also said that the proceeds of the sale of this gift will be used for priority grain production projects. He said that this procedure will undoubtedly make it possible to maintain the difficult balance between cash crops, which are a source of income, and food crops, which are increasingly viewed as indispensible weapons, even negotiating instruments.

Mr Rashad Nawaylati expressed his great pleasure in undertaking this project, which, he said, undoubtedly reflects the friendly and brotherly relations which the king, the prince and the government wish to maintain with all Islamic countries.

Mr Nawaylati said that this food oil is the first part of a food gift which includes oil, wheat and millet valued at a total of $15 million.

He said this sum had been set aside for the purchase of emergency food supplies whose value is estimated at about 100 million dollars which the government of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia had decided to grant the Sahel countries, that had gone through many years of drought, for the purpose of constructing water irrigation projects.

RSA AGENT GOES ON TRIAL; ONE PERSON ACQUITTED

AB221524 Paris AFP in English 1458 GMT 22 Jun 82

[Text] Victoria, Seychelles, 22 Jun (AFP)--South African secret agent Martin Dolinchek went on trial for his life here today on treason charges related to last November's bungled mercenary invasion and coup attempt in the Seychelles.

Earlier today Chief Justice Earle Seaton acquitted Robert Sims, one of the five other accused, after he pleaded not guilty to similar charges. However, he still faces a possible 20-years sentence on a charge of illegal arms imports.

The other four have all pleaded guilty to taking part in attacks on the international airport and a nearby barracks during the 25 November fighting. They will be tried later.

Mr Dolinchek, a former member of South Africa's National Intelligence Service (NIS), is defending himself, and the judge has ordered that the jury must remain isolated throughout the trial, which could last several weeks.

The four others on trial are former Congo mercenary Jeremiah Puren, a South African, Zimbabweans Roger England and Aubrey Brooks and South African Bernard Carey.

Jury selection took up a whole day as the judge tries to find people who were not related or connected to witnesses, members of the security forces or prison guards. The population of the Seychelles, an archipelago in the Indian Ocean, is 65,000.

The jury issue seemed to have been settled at the third try, but a few hours later it was discovered that the jury foreman belonged to the militia, who were mobilized during the invasion.

The final jury consists of six men and three women.

The prosecution has accused Dolinchek, alias Anton Lubic, of having "levied war against the Seychelles namely with the object of overthrowing the government." Following the South African's first court statements, which were somewhat confused, the judge ruled that he had pleaded not guilty.

Mr Dolinchek arrived in the Seychelles on 14 November and was at the Pointe Larue International Airport when the main group of mercenaries flew in aboard a chartered airliner disguised as a drinking club called the Foam Blowers. He was arrested in his hotel 3 days later.

AKIBO-BETTS HELD AT BORDER CHECK POINT

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 11 Jun 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] Former Minister of State, Finance, in the last government, Mr Alfred Akibo-Betts who is billed to recontest his incumbency in the Freetown Central One Bye elections became the centre of a new drama this week when he was apprehended near the Liberian border by Police as he tried to leave the country and whisked down to CID headquarters in Freetown.

Also held at the check point with Akito-Betts on Wednesday morning were a member of the Governing Council of the APC, Mr Edward Lamin, who is also a Director of the National Insurance Company and Mrs Shirley Gbujama, a former ambassador to Ethiopia, who is currently Director of Administration at the Bank of Sierra Leone.

All three together with their driver, Thomas Lahai, told the Mano River Bridge check point authorities that they had no travelling documents as they were travelling to Liberia only to purchase amplifiers and speakers for Akibo-Betts elections campaign and also to get a new engine for the contestant's Landrover vehicle.

But what propped up the eyebrows of police officials (apart from the absence of valid travelling documents) was the discovery of a total of Le7,000 and 1,000 U.S. dollars under the back seat of the Peugeot Familia vehicle WU17358 that Akibo-Betts and his companions were using.

The Sierra Leonean Currency was in Le10 denominations notes.

Akibo-Betts claimed Le2,000 of his together with the 1,000 dollars while Mrs Gbujama said she had planned to take the Le5,000 belonging to her sister in Bo for business purposes.

That never happened, however, and all the money was reportedly being trafficked illegally to Liberia.

The police search of Mr Akibo-Betts, his companions and the vehicle also produced a pistol belonging to Mr Lamin which Akibc-Betts told the police he had no knowledge of.

The pistol had a full magazine with eight rounds of live ammunition. Mr Lamin also handed over another eight rounds of bullets.

Although each of the three kept to their story that they were only travelling to Liberia to purchase items and gave the impression that the would be returning to Sierra Leone in time for the Nominations for the Bye-Elections today, police question marks increased when eighteen (18) suits were found in Akibo-Betts' travelling suitcase.

These were in addition to other clothes belonging to him.

Although the three companions reportedly told the Immigration authorities that they had no travelling documents, the subsequent search revealed a diplomatic passport belonging to Akibo-Betts Numbered Doo1097, a Barclays Bank Cheque book and an International Vaccination Certificate also belonging to him.

There was also a British Caledonian air ticket jacket containing two air tickets for Freetown-Banjul-London.

The tickets were issued in Freetown on June 7 this year.

The search further revealed copies of six letters alledged written by Akibo-Betts to the President.

The whole drama began on Tuesday evening at about 7:50 when Akibo-Betts, Mr Lamin and Mrs Gbujama took off in the Peugeot Familia vehicle from Wijkins Road, driven by Thomas Lahai who is an employee in the Anis Transport Divisions of the Bank of Sierra Leone.

The vehicle belonged to the Bank and according to reports with the police, Mrs Gbujama was helping Akibo-Betts with the official vehicle as he had told her earlier that his own vehicles were damaged.

They drove through the night and arrived at the Mano River bridge about 9 o'clock the following day.

Their explanations to Sergeant Abdulai, a plain clothes officer at the checkpoint did not convince the latter and he immediately sent wire messages to the Chief Police in Bo and the commissions of police in Freetown for instructions.

After the revelations of the subsequent search, Akibo-Betts and companions were taken to [word indistinct] Police Station and later driven to Freetown.

They made statements to the CID in Freetown yesterday morning.

OPEC, IDA AID FOR ENERGY PROJECT REPORTED

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 4 Jun 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] An agreement for a loan of five million U.S. dollars has been signed between Sierra Leone and the OPEC Fund for International Development to finance part of the costs of the Power Engineering and Technical Assistance Project co-financed by the International Development Association (IDA).

The overall objective of the Project is to improve the efficiency and output of the power sector through the implementation of a maintenance programme of existing facilities; the preparation of studies for a new project which would increase the country's generating capacity; and the implementation of a programme to improve the management and organisation of the power sector.

To this end, the project would provide spare parts and technical assistance for urgently required maintenance works, finance engineering studies for the Bumbuna Hydro-electric Project, and provide technical assistance for the improved management of the sector.

The Project comprises three complementary components, namely the rehabilitation of Sierra Leone Electricity Corporation's existing generating facilities and the improvement of its management; the establishment of a new and independent authority as part of a reorganisation programme for the whole power sector; and the completion of the Detailed Engineering Studies for the Bumbuna Hydro-electric Project.

The present loan is the fifth to be received by Sierra Leone which has previously benefited from two Balance of payments Support Loans and two project lonas.

This loan brings the total OPEC Fund lending to Sierra Leone to just over sixteen million dollars.

The Loan Agreement was signed at the Fund Headquarters in Vienna by Mr Salia Jusu Sheriff, Minister of Finance and by Dr Ibrahim F. I. Shihata, Director-General of the OPEC Fund.

WORK ON NEW CEMENT FACTORY REPORTED

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 14 Jun 82 p 2

[Article by David Lemon]

[Text] The new Le10m cement factory, Seracem, is now set and ready to start production this month, General Manager of the Company, Mr Francis Mahet, said in an interview yesterday.

Construction work and installation of the machines by French Experts and the Sierra Leone Construction Company have been completed almost ahead of schedule.

And before the end of June, the entire nation will boast of a locally produced cement of high international quality and standard.

Annual production capacity has been put at 120,000 tons surpassing the present average consumption of cement in this country by 50,000 tons.

Already, more than 40 distributors in the entire country have been approved by the Company.

A fully private company, Seracem, is 60 per cent Sierra Leonean Interest private companies and Share Holders and 40 per cent French Interest Ciments D'Origny.

The project which aims at producing a continuous flow of cement to satisfy the Sierra Leonean market and for export to neighbouring states, is financed jointly by a Le 3m contribution from Share Holders and a Le 7m loan from the French Government and the International Finance Corporation (IFC).

The IFC loan to Seracem about Le3m is the first and the highest grant to Sierra Leone.

Seracem is manned by a 50 man strong Sierra Leonean workforce headed by three French experts, General Manager, Mr Mahet, Technical Manager, Mr J. Tisen and Maintenance Manager, Mr J.P. Barret.

The three experts are on a five-year renewable contract with the French firm, Ciments D'Origny, established in France.

Seracem first signed an agreement with the Sierra Leone Government for the venture, in February 1981.

Most of the company's raw materials will be imported and this includes cheap paper bags, while another raw material, laterite, found along the Sierra Leone peninsula would be utilised to save foreign exchange.

Secracem is equipped with a modern laboratory to ensure the high quality of its product throughout its operations.

HOARDING OF RICE DEPLORED

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 14 Jun 82 pp 1, 2

[Editorial: "The Rice Circle"]

[Text] The crux of the rice problem in Sierra Leone is simply greed and more greed; come to think of it that is the crux of most problems in our midst today.

The people pegging up the price of rice each waking day are the same people who clamour about everything else; who hourly demand the best that material wealth can offer; who want the best from every citizen breathing the air; who expect the most from every government--these are the people who would never offer anything in return: You and Me.

It is repeatedly being stated, and categorically for that matter, that rice is not in real terms scarce--at least not in the store houses.

What the exploiters continually do has now become a hellenish gospel:

Elbowing their way by hook or by crook into possessing bags of the grain, they then stock these into their stores and stay put.

Sooner or later the gambit begins to reap dividends as the avilable stock in sight at the market disappears and talk of a shortage gains ground.

That is the time to wade in and some of the hoarded stock is immediately trickled into the market at inflated prices.

If the police or some over-zealous price inspector tries to shoulder in, there is a by-plan: the rice is withdrawn indoors and sold to "reliable" customers (those who wouldn't squeal) at even higher prices.

The new non-squealing buyers would soon be selling at double those prices to their own victims.

That in a nutshell is the vicious circle of the rice situation in contemporary Sierra Leone.

Minister of State Mrs Agnes Labor who is responsible for foodstuffs has a gigantic task in her hands. To give dues where these are deserved we must recognise that she has been working round the clock trying to ease the crush.

Distributing rice to government departments, companies, business houses and the like greatly helps in this regard.

Mrs Labor however needs a good deal of backing from honest people in many influential spots.

There are droves of shylocks who just spend their time working out counter-strategies to beat every tangible plan to contain the rice problem.

The only way to break the vicious circle is to step on really touchy toes.

This however has to be done and if these toes have to be crushed in the process, So Be It.

PRC ENVOY PRESENTS CREDENTIALS, MEETS WITH PRESS

AB240722 Lome Domestic Service in French 1900 GMT 23 Jun 82

[Excerpt] (Hing Yung Cheng), the new ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the PRC, this morning presented to Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema, the founding chairman of the Togolese People's Rally [RPT] and president of the republic, the letters accrediting him to the Togolese Government. Mr Akakpo-Ahianyo, minister of foreign affairs and cooperation, and [name indistinct], the president's permanent under secretary--both members of the RPT Political Bureau--attended the ceremony with the president.

After the audience with President Eyadema, (Hing Yung Cheng) explained to the press the content of his discussions with the Togolese president.

[Begin recording, in Mandarin followed by sentence-by-sentence French translation] I have just had the honor to be received in audience by Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema, the founding chairman of the RPT and the president of the republic. I presented him the credentials by which Ye Jianying, chairman of the Standing Committee of the PRC National People's Congress, has accredited me ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the Togolese Republic. I also had the opportunity to transmit to President Eyadema the greetings and the respect of Ye Jianying and of Premier Zhao Ziyang. I also had very friendly discussions with the president.

Togo is a beautiful country with a hardworking, sympathetic and courageous people. Under the leadership of President Eyadema, the government and people of Togo have achieved remarkable success in their efforts to consolidate their national independence, defend the sovereignty of the state, and develop the national economy. And I sincerely wish them new and greater successes.

The Togolese Government practices the policy of nonalignment and fights against imperialism, hegemony, colonialism and racism, but fights for national liberation. This has won Togo a respected image before the international community. In African affairs, President Eyadema has greatly contributed in a positive manner to the achievement of African unity. He mediated in differences, worked for the settlement of conflicts between African countries, and contributed to the development of cooperation in the African subregion. The Chinese Government expresses its admiration and its high appreciation for the efforts made by His Excellency President Eyadema. It is therefore with great pleasure that I discussed bilateral problems with His Excellency President Eyadema.

Since the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Togo, the friendly ties of cooperation existing between our two countries in the political, economic, cultural and other fields have developed satisfactorily. The two visits paid to China by President Eyadema in 1974 and 1981 made important contributions to the development of relations between our two countries. It is a pleasure for me to come to work in your beautiful and friendly country. During my stay in Togo as China's ambassador, I will do my best to consolidate and further promote the friendly cooperation currently existing between our two countries in order to deepen our mutual understanding.

I wish the Togolese Republic and its people the best of luck. [End recording]

FRG PRAISED FOR IMPORTANT CONTRIBUTIONS

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 8 May 82 p 2

[Report on interview with Dr Alwin Bruck, by VOZ DI POVO; date and place not given]

> [Excerpts] In an interview with the news media after a 4-day visit to our country, Dr Alwin Bruck said that the FRG will attend the round-table discussion among those participating in Cape Verde's development, to be held in Praia in June. However, he did not specify at what level his government will be represented at this international meeting to be attended by delegations from various guest countries, members of the Inter-State Committee to Fight the Drought in the Sahel and members of international organizations.

Speaking briefly of his visit, the West German government official said that "in light of my experience of a few days, I shall do my best to see that Cape Verde has a privileged place among the countries which are to receive foreign aid from the FRG."

During its sojourn in the capital, the West German delegation met with its Cape Verdian counterpart headed by Rural Development Minister Joao Pereira Silva to discuss a program of cooperation for the next 2 years to be carried out just like that of the past 2 years, with particular emphasis on the development plans of Fogo and Brava.

The butane gas project, at an estimated budget of 22 million escudos, is to get underway this year, according to a top-ranking official of the Secretariat of State for Cooperation and Planning who closely followed the visit of the German mission. He also said that the beginning of the construction of a ferry boat, to be supplied by the FRG and serve as transportation among our islands, is scheduled for 1983.

Since Cape Verde's independence, the FRG has maintained close relations of friendship and cooperation with our country.

Total FRG aid to Cape Verde now comes to about 55 million marks, according to sources close to the FRG secretary of state. The FRG has also contributed to various UN projects, particularly UNESCO.

RESULTS OF MISSIONS TO BRUSSELS, GENEVA NOTED

Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 23 Apr 82 pp 2,3

[Text] Minister of Plan and Reconstruction Taher Souleymane met Wednesday with the National Reconstruction Committee at the Chamber of Commerce and Industry. This group mainly examined the results of Taher Souleymane's missions to Bruzzels and Geneva.

In Brussels, where discussions were held with officials of the EDF (European Development Fund), the Chadian delegation discussed again the $7 million program agreed upon at the Paris meeting. European Community authorities told the Chadian delegation about actual arrangements for carrying out this program. Other aspects of cooperation between Chad and the EDF were taken up, especially the programming of the fifth EDF. The Chadian delegation also asked for a supplementary contribution from the EDF through participation in the international conference on the reconstruction of Chad. The European Community's response was encouraging, Taher stated.

In Geneva the Chadian delegation made very advantageous use of its participation in a conference organized by UNDRO (United Nations Disaster Relief Organization) to inform the countries and agencies present about the Nairobi conference on Chad's reconstruction. The delegation reported on our country's socioeconomic situation and the extent of damages, and presented documents on the subject which had been drawn up by experts from the United Nations and Chad. The Chadian delegation also discussed the date of this conference, which initially was to have been held from 15 April but was postponed due to lack of adequate preparation. The Chadian delegation met among others with the UN deputy secretary general responsible for special policy matters with whom they agreed to hold this conference from 1 to 15 June.

The Chadian delegation also received positive responses to the emergency aid program in the areas of food, health and education presented through UNDRO. This aid, $7 million, would make possible the acquisition of new seeds and assure logistic support for the distribution of these gifts.

The reconstruction committee also examined a draft decree which creates an operational unit for the distribution of foodstuffs. This operational unit was proposed by the committee nearly a month ago to end the disorder and waste that has been noted in the distribution of gifts. This draft could not be adopted because of the absence of certain ministers concerned.

MITTERRAND ADVISER VISITS PRESIDENT GOUKOUNI

Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 20 Apr 82 pp 2, 3

[Text] The special adviser to President Francois Mitterrand on African Affairs, Mr Guy Penn, spent 24 hours (Saturday-Sunday) in Ndjamena. He held two interviews with President Oueddei Goukouni, who was surrounded by his political staff. His presence, which coincides with a certain political stalemate, has not been unexpected. It had been planned for some time but was postponed because of scheduling problems.

The French emissary, who before leaving spoke of his interviews with President Goukouni, stated that he had come to gather information about the dissensions within the GUNT [Transitional National Union Government]. President Goukouni, he said, gave him "his point of view which will be relayed to President Mitterrand."

The two men also discussed the military situation in the east and the role of the peacekeeping force in Chad, which has been subject to some refinements. Other subjects which President Goukouni and Guy Penn discussed were cooperation between France and Chad and different commitments made by President Mitterrand, and the relations of the OAU with the GUNT in the light of the last Nairobi summit.

Guy Penn also sought to understand the meaning of the diplomatic offensive directed toward Lagos and Nairobi in recent days by State Minister of Foreign Affairs Ahmat Acyl.

NDJAMENA MERCHANTS SET UP SUPPORT COMMITTEE FOR ARMED FORCES

Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 20 Apr 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] A support committee for the integrated Armed Forces was set up yesterday following a meeting of Ndjamena merchants. The main goal of this committee is to collect contributions from the merchants to support the war efforts of the GUNT (Transitional National Union Government). This committee, made up of nine members, is presided over by Oumar Nasser, seconded by Adoum Koulbou. Two secretaries general, Mahamat Outman and Mahamat Gamar Sileck, and two treasurers, Abakar Moussa and Ahmed Ali, complete this team which will benefit from advice from the mayor of Ndjamena. The creation of this committee is the spontaneous and concrete response of the merchants to the appeal from the state minister for interior and security. Actually, Mahamat Abba Said had brought the Ndjamena merchants together on Sunday to ask them to help the government, which is suffering serious financial difficulties. Going straight to the point, he told them that "money, which is the vital nerve of the war, is becoming scarce." After emphasizing that the time for mobilization is at hand, he specified in unambiguous terms what the government expects of them: financial aid which would consist of 1 billion CFA francs for the first category, 500,000 for the second and 250,000 for the last category.

During the meeting the minister for interior developed some political themes dear to him. Bitterly noting that the GUNT's desire "to implement peace at all costs has not been understood," Mahamat Abba Said stated that Chad has become a target of imperialism through "the shameful Nairobi resolutions." Mahamat Abba Said once again showed himself to be categorical: "We will never, ever accept negotiating with the enemy, for that would be equivalent to betraying the memory of our martyrs."

For the minister of interior, a certain African lobby supported by imperialism is developing a plot behind these negotiations. The news which the GUNT receives "indicates that the FAN (Northern Armed Forces) continues to benefit from all kinds of aid." The GUNT can also count on the support of militant Africa, "but of course you have to count on yourselves." This expose has a logical conclusion: You must then agree to sacrifices. Some merchants, answering the minister of interior, expressed strong wishes that the money they give indeed be used by the Integrated Armed Forces. It appears they fear that this money might go to fill out private coffers.

SONASUT'S ECONOMIC SIGNIFICANCE, PROBLEMS NOTED

Ndjamena UNITE in French No 0016 19-26 Apr 82 pp 1, 2, 4

[Article by Abakar Hassane]

> [Text] The National Sugar Company of Chad (SONASUT), which had suspended operations at its Farcha plants because of the war, officially opened its doors on 18 March 1982. During the reopening ceremony, Ahmet Nagkhoutou Malentin, chairman of the board of directors, gave a rundown of the company's current situation.

The company, which had not suffered physical damage, did nothing more than conduct a general inspection and cleanup of its equipment before the startup of its plants. The Farcha refinery complex is a factory whose sole purpose is the conversion of granulated sugar into loaf sugar and the manufacture of candy and syrup. This plant, which proposes to produce 1,200 to 1,500 tons of loaf sugar between now and October, subject to demand, is now producing 60 tons per day. It already has a stock of 8,000 tons of granulated sugar which was supplied by the Banda (Sarh) Plant. The loaf sugar converted by the Farcha plant is earmarked for consumption in the northern region. The southern region is supplied by the Banda agroindustrial complex, which processes sugarcane into granulated sugar and cube sugar.

In order to cover the entire national territory, SONASUT had sales depots in the localities of Mongo, Am-Timan, Bokoro, Abeche, Oum-Hadjer, Moundou, and Hyabe. In addition to sales to private Chadians, the company also sells its sugar to several processing industries: Lugone Breweries, Chadian Beverage and Ice Cream Company, and Ndjamena Soft Drink Company. The transport of granulated sugar from Banda to Ndjamena is handled regularly by trucks of the Chadian Transporters Cooperative. The Farcha candy plant produces 800 tons of sweets per year. This production is marked solely for domestic consumption. For now, SONASUT, which has a productive capacity ranging from 28,000 to 30,000 tons, does not intend to export its sugar. The purpose of this industry is to provide the sugar consumed in Chad and to make it independent of imports.

The Structures

SONASUT, which is made up of an agroindustrial complex in Banda (Sarh) and a complex and candy plant in Farcha (Ndjamena) is a mixed economy company. It is governed by the laws covering corporations. Its capital is 4.711 billion CFA francs. The state of Chad is the principal stockholder. It holds 84 percent of the stock. The remaining 16 percent is held by private stockholders. The company is managed by a nine-member board of directors, including a chairman and five Chadian representatives, two representatives from the Multinational Company for the Development of the Agrofood Industry (SOMDIAA) and one representative of Chadian merchants. The board of directors, which meets two or three times a year, sets the company's general management policy, which is carried out by the directorate general and the two export offices in Banda and Farcha.

The Funds

The funds which permitted the building of these plants, totaling 17 billion CFA francs, were provided by international organizations. The principal suppliers of funds were the European Investment Bank (EIB), the Central Bank, EDF [European Development Fund], the Bank of Paris and The Netherlands, and the Cotton Bank. The management of these funds is entrusted directly to SONASUT, and repayment of funds to creditors is made by the company. The Chadian state is limited to the role of loan guarantor. SOMDIAA, which was demanded by the creditors, is the technical assistance company. It is tied into SONASUT by a 10-year contract. Its principal task is to supply exports and to ensure the continuity and proper management of the company. SOMDIAA experts visit Banda and Farcha regularly to inspect the technical and agricultural installations and management. Independently of the SOMDIAA experts, an auditor, also demanded by the creditors, pays regular visits to make general reports on funds expended.

The Economic Impact

In order to bring down ever-increasing unemployment, this agrofood industry plays an important role in the economic life of Chad.

SONASUT employs a total of 1,700 permanent workers for its offices, factories, plantations, and housekeeping activities. This personnel staffing is increased from 1,700 to 3,000 employees during the agricultural season. The Banda complex employs 1,200 persons, and Farcha 500. The other 1,700 persons are seasonal employees who work on the sugarcane plantations during the agricultural season. There are 35 expatriate assistants: 32 in Banda and 3 in Farcha. Chadian management personnel number 10: 6 in Banda and 4 in Farcha. The company had already implemented a Chadianization employment policy to alleviate the shortfall of local management personnel. The appointment of Idris Koura to the position of director of operations in Farcha falls within this context. According to the general manager, Fred Bolhuis, this policy opens the door to skill positions: maintenance, agriculture, production, accounting, mechanics, and laboratory research. He said that the company hires Chadian students every year within the framework of their work-study programs. Their on-the-job training, which lasts 2 to 3 months, takes place mainly in the technical and agricultural sectors.

Social Policy

In the social sector, SONASUT has built two housing developments for its employees in Banda. There is one development for management employees which is restricted to expatriates and temporary Chadian management personnel, and a workers' development which is restricted to Chadian employees. The cost of the second development was 20 million CFA francs. The company also takes care of employee transportation between Sarh and Banda. It also sponsors two soccer teams, one in Sarh and another in Ndjamena.

Development Plans

According to the board of directors, the 3 years of war in Chad caused a considerable setback to SONASUT's development plans. That is why it has been unable to meet its initial planning goals. The company suffered a loss of 22,000 tons of sugar, representing 5.5 billion CFA francs' worth of business. This setback also upset the timetable for the repayment of interest and loans on borrowed capital. Within the context of its development plans, the board of directors has established a 6-year moratorium which will permit the company to straighten out its financial situation.

The last board also established a 5-year development plan. With the new sugar season, which begins on 15 October 1982, the company foresees production of 24,000 tons of granulated sugar, 6,000 to 7,000 tons of cube sugar, and 18,000 tons of loaf sugar. At present the company does not have many outlets and intends as soon as possible to reopen all its depots in the northern region in order to prevent speculation by merchants in the rainy season.

Nigerian Handicap

The interruption of SONASUT operations in Ndjamena forced Chadian merchants to turn to other suppliers to alleviate the shortage of sugar thus created. That is the reason why granulated sugar imported from Nigeria flooded Chadian markets during the war. Such imports, which is to say the least are fraudulent, and which are continuing in spite of the circular letter from the Ministry of Economy and Finance that cancels the licenses granted but not completely utilized as of 20 March, are a serious handicap for sales of SONASUT stocks. The general manager, who has complained of the failure to implement that decision, told us that the only thing the company has done since its reopening has been to stock sugar. We are at an impass, he told us, because we are being swamped by Nigerian sugar; there are no sales. It would be desirable for the government to stop these imports. For the manager of operations of the Farcha plant, the reopening of the company in the present circumstances will serve as a test for all foreign companies that want to locate in Chad after the war.

The failure of the national economic sector, systematic fraud, the corruption of state agents, and the absence of strict customs controls are major handicaps that the government must face up to in this period of economic recovery, during which all national and foreign companies will soon follow the example of SONASUT. This Chadian economic situation encourages smuggling, thus creating unfair competition and illegal price increases. And if anyone loses, it is not only the Chadian consumer but also the public treasury, which will lose revenues. Morality, the reward, is always kept waiting.

1982 DRAFT BUDGET--The 1982 draft budget was adopted on Thursday 1 April by the Council of Ministers. This is not an April Fool joke. The decision comes within the context of the restructuring of the administrative apparatus and national reconstruction. According to the council's report, budget estimates for revenues and expenditures total 17,203,000,000 CFA francs. The Chadian share is 7 billion CFA francs, part of which will come from customs revenues. At present, the customs office brings the state about 5 billion CFA francs (in normal times between 9 billion and 7 billion francs). The Council of Ministers freely admits that there is a shortfall of 10 billion francs. This shortfall probably will be made up by aid from friendly countries, particularly France. This budget does not respond to the administration's real needs, inasmuch as the stated needs of the ministries total 30 billion francs. Therefore, the Council of Ministers limited itself to the most urgent needs so as to permit the machinery of state to operate. We hope that with the adoption of the budget, the pay situation for government employees will improve. [Text] [Ndjamena UNITE in French No 0016 19-26 Apr 82] 8143

TEXT OF COMMUNIQUE ISSUED BY THE COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

Conakry HOROYA in French No 2915, 25 Apr-1 May 82 p 34

[Text] The Central Committee and the government held a joint meeting on Thursday, 22 April 1982, at 1200 hours under the chairmanship of Comrade Ahmed Sekou Toure, president of the republic and head of state.

The agenda included a report on the head of state's trip to the DPRK and the Middle East.

The council listened attentively to the report presented by Comrade Senainon Behanzin on the visit made by the Guinean presidential delegation to Korea from 13 through 17 April 1982.

The minister of agro-pastoral farms (FAPA) and agricultural cooperatives gave a vivid description of the warm and honorable welcome accorded President Ahmed Sekou Toure by the great leader, President Kim Il-song, and the Korean people.

During official ceremonies honoring President Kim Il-song on his 70th birthday, the Supreme Head of the Revolution went to the podium to praise the friendship and cooperation that has existed between the DPRK and African countries in general, and especially with the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea, for some decades now.

He congratulated the great leader of the Korean people on the tremendous progress achieved in his country in a short period of time through work, discipline and remarkable organization at all levels of national life. The head of state expressed the hope that the Korean people will continue to enjoy further successes in carrying out their great program of economic and social development under the enlightened leadership of their beloved president, Comrade Kim il-song.

The following day the head of state departed Pyongyang at the head of his delegation for a brief stopover at Karachi, before going on to Jiddah (Saudi Arabia).

The head of state also had to return once more to Iran and Iraq as part of the mission he has been given by the Islamic Peace Committee.

Most useful lessons were drawn from the presidential trip to the Middle and Far East.

Finally, the Supreme Head of the Revolution briefed the council on major developments in African and global politics.

The meeting was adjourned at 1400 hours.

FENU DELEGATION TO DISCUSS EXPANSION OF COOPERATION

Conakry HOROYA in French No 2915 25 Apr-1 May 82 p 34

[Excerpts] A delegation from the UN Infrastructure Fund [FENU] headed by Executive Secretary Galal Magdi arrived in our capital on Saturday, 24 April. The purpose of the visit by this delegation, which includes head of the programs division Mathieu Samake and chief technical consultant Guy le Marchand, is to discuss with the Guinean Government the possibility of expanded cooperation with FENU. The delegation will be in contact with several of our ministerial departments to discuss projects currently underway in our country.

FENU was created by the General Assembly in 1960. Though originally established as an autonomous institution, it is currently administered by the United Nations Development Program (UNPD) in accordance with the General Assembly's subsequent decision to that effect in 1967.

The purpose of FENU is, through grants and loans, to help developing countries in the process of developing their economies.

In 1974, after UNCTAD III, the General Assembly welcomed the decision by UNPD's board of directors to channel FENU's aid primarily toward the least developed countries.

In selecting its projects, FENU is guided by a policy that emphasizes projects which are of high priority to the government and at the same time technically sound and economically justifiable.

Technical assistance, when it proves necessary, may be provided by the specialized agencies of the United Nations and by other international assistance agencies.

At present FENU is very interested in financing projects for which its contribution would be between $1 million and $4 million. FENU's programming procedures, unlike those of UNPD, do not establish fixed financial appropriations in advance for specified countries, or for specified periods.

Most of FENU's activity is in the rural sector, the emphasis being on development of water resources and water supply systems, construction of secondary roads, warehousing of harvests and food distribution infrastructure.

SECOND SEMINAR OF ISLAMIC BANKS, FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Conakry HOROYA in French No 2915, 25 Apr-1 May 82 pp 8, 9

[Excerpts] The second seminar of Islamic banks and financial institutions held its first working session Wednesday, 21 April 1982, at the Palace of the People. The opening session was chaired by Comrade Dr Lansana Beavogui, member of the Political Bureau and prime minister responsible for planning and statistics, who was accompanied by several national leaders. The seminar, which lasts until 3 May, will bring together prominent leaders of Islamic financial and economic institutions, along with a number of financial experts from our own ministerial departments.

In his remarks on the occasion, Comrade Dr Lansana Beavogui welcomed the prominent leaders and others in attendance on behalf of the Supreme Head of the Revolution. He expressed the national leadership's profound appreciation of the honor done Guinea in its selection as host to the second seminar of Islamic banks and financial institutions. The mere fact assumes a unique importance for the Islamic Ummah, which continues its unceasing efforts to create the financial and economic structures capable of providing for the development of our Muslim peoples. The prime minister reaffirmed the strong determination of the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea to work to insure the flourishing of Islamic banking institutions.

Following the prime minister's remarks, Dr Mohammed al-Tayib al-Najjar, rector of the University of Al-Azhar in Cairo and vice president of the International Union of Islamic Banks and Financial Institutions [as published], made a broad presentation of the organization's objectives. He said that its basic objective is to suppress usury [riban] so as to help all Islamic countries improve the living conditions of the people and make them more prosperous.

The international Islamic banking institute is also struggling against man's exploitation of man, and preaches absolute equality between all peoples in socio-economic and banking development. Dr Ahmad al-Najjar [as published] said he was optimistic that the seminar would be brought to a successful conclusion, and he urged the participants to pay close attention to all the subjects raised by the organizers.

For his part, Comrade Marcel Cros, our minister for international cooperation, gave a clear and precise description of the philosophy espoused by our party and state on international cooperation. He expressed most fervently the hope that this international meeting in Conakry might sow fruitful seeds throughout the Islamic world that will lead to its liberation from exploitation, usury and economic pillage. He laid special emphasis on the gradual integration of economic, financial, agro-pastoral and forest resources in the Islamic countries. The People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea, he underlined, is faithful to the fundamental principles of Islam and supports the establishment of an Islamic banking system that would involve participation by all the national economies in the Islamic world. Finally, he urged the organizers and participants to work hard and take a close look at all the problems faced by the Islamic countries in order to find good solutions for the happiness and prosperity of our peoples.

Second Day

This religious observance [the reading of a passage of the Koran] was followed by remarks from Mr Na'im Hassan, deputy under secretary of the Islamic Conference Organization, who paid stirring homage to the Supreme Head of the Revolution, President Ahmed Sekou Toure, for his tireless efforts to achieve peace and good will among men, as most recently shown in his efforts as head of the Islamic Peace Committee to resolve the unfortunate conflict between Iran and Iraq.

Mr Na'im also said that his organization is working to promote the development of Islamic banking techniques and discipline. Success in this would contribute significantly to making it possible to move on to new tasks, but it is almost impossible to do in the framework of the banking institutions inherited from the colonial era. He concluded by calling on all Islamic countries to support the effort to make the banking association increasingly effective in its various activities.

Next, the representative of His Majesty King Khalid of Saudi Arabia, Mr Abd al-Hamid Derhali, permanent under secretary in the Saudi planning ministry, took the floor to convey brotherly greetings from his people to the people of Guinea, while emphasizing the very important role our two countries have to play on the international scene, in terms of the search for a solution that will enable the Islamic nation to achieve greater unity in action, and to protect and increase the progress already made.

The Islamic Bank was created with the aim of liberating the Islamic community from the scourge of usury, and of offering Muslims the opportunity to carry out their financial transactions in accordance with the provisions of Islamic law (al-Shari'a). The bank intends to be responsive to the legitimate aspirations of Muslims around the world. It wants to provide the Islamic community with a structured financial system that is organized and integrated, so the economy of the entire community can be unified by exploiting its diversity of resources and needs. Finally, it also wants to guide and channel investments in accordance with real development needs in accordance with the Shari'a.

Following his remarks, Mr 'Abd al-Hamid emphasized that Islam, a tolerant religion, has the virtue of providing the rules to be followed not only in our social and private life but also in dealing with friends and handling practical financial matters. He praised the support and invaluable contribution made by Guinea to the Islamic banking system, noting that the first public subscription of $2 million, launched in Guinea, has been successfully completed.

After those two speeches, Dr al-Najjar, secretary general of the International Union of Islamic Banks [as published], lectured on the subject: "Development experiences in the Islamic world." In his remarks, he gave the history of the association and then said that its objective is to promote the economies of Muslim countries. To carry out its program and bring it to realization, Dr al-Najjar said, the association must have competent technically trained personnel, which presupposes adequate training. Every Islamic bank that has been established by the Islamic countries should watch over their interests around the world. The association, established by 11 banks, is involved in social affairs, investment and industry.

The afternoon of the second day was notable for a conference at the Gamal Abd al-Nasir Polytechnic Institute on the subject: "Islamic banks as a strategic economic and social development tool."

This subject was further elaborated by Dr Ahmad al-Najjar, who said that if Third World countries today have not made it to the scientific and industrial revolution, it is because of failure to master science and technology.

Third Day

The third day was enhanced by the presence in person of the head of state, whom the seminar attendees had asked to come to shed light on all the problems they were discussing. In his remarks he said that "there is no vacuum in life, because all activity is a response to some necessity of social existence."

PLANNING MINISTER SPEAKS ON SCANDINAVIAN COOPERATION

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 3 Jun 82 p 3

[Interview with Minister of Planning Mario Machungo by Antonio Souto; date and place not specified]

> [Excerpt] Following a visit of nearly 2 weeks to the Scandinavian countries (Denmark, Finland, Norway, and Sweden), Mario Machungo, minister of planning and member of the FRELIMO Party Politburo, has returned to Maputo with the statement that his trip "was not aimed at the signing of agreements or with 'economic amounts'; rather, it was a preparatory step for a qualitative leap in the good cooperation relations that already exist." The minister of planning granted an interview to our reporters in which he not only described what he had discussed in his contacts with the authorities of those countries concerning cooperation but also analyzed what that cooperation means, particularly in the context of political confrontation being experienced in southern Africa.

Looking at Long-Term Prospects

NOTICIAS: What was the purpose of your visit to Denmark, Finland, Norway, and Sweden?

Minister of planning: The purpose of this trip was to analyze implementation of the existing cooperation and also to analyze the future development of bilateral cooperation from a long-term standpoint between the People's Republic of Mozambique [RPM] and the countries I visited.

As regards that last aspect, its basic points are the steadily increasing involvement of Scandinavian firms in the restructuring of activities in a few of our industrial sectors, the granting of the necessary technical support, and the guaranteeing of supplies of the goods and raw materials necessary for the satisfactory functioning of that economic area in our country.

We also analyzed the development of support for agriculture, specifically in the form of action to stimulate agricultural production and insure that the largest quantity of products necessary for consumption by the peasants will be available in rural trade.

Still in the area of agriculture, we also discussed increased support for imports of equipment, consumer goods, and raw materials.

Trade Relations Stimulate Cooperation

NOTICIAS: In the future development of cooperation, what role will be played by trade relations, and how are they to be handled?

Minister of planning: It was considered extremely important that we analyze the mechanisms that will permit the development of trade between our countries. In all the contacts we had, it was felt on both sides that one very important factor for the stimulation of cooperation is the development of trade between our countries.

Agreement was reached on a number of measures that will give impetus to the development of that trade in the near future.

This will contribute to a correct division of labor based on the potentialities of each of our countries.

It was considered useful to design a financial framework that would regulate the trade resulting from that cooperation. That framework was considered to be an important tool for stimulating cooperation.

There must be a specific financial framework that will respect the mutual desire to develop cooperation rather than what has become a stereotyped framework of normal trade relations. What we must have is a framework whose backdrop will be the desire to develop cooperation and trade relations.

That viewpoint was the object of discussions and was generally accepted by all the countries. And so the doors will be opened for the development of that cooperation, which will be covered by the financial framework still to be worked out by the appropriate financial and banking institutions in each country.

Openness to Scandinavian Business Sector

NOTICIAS: How will cooperation with the Scandinavian business sector be tied in with the RPM's development policy, and what will it consist of?

Minister of planning: As far as cooperation with Scandinavian firms is concerned, it was noted in the contacts just concluded that it is necessary to stimulate that cooperation and to open the doors to greater involvement by industrial and service firms in the projects being carried out by the RPM.

This must be done according to patterns and a legal framework that will be determined for each case or, when we consider it necessary, we will design a specific model for a particular type of cooperation.

Greater involvement by Scandinavian firms in development projects designed by the RPM is also part of the cooperation being planned for the long term.

Special Attention to Cadre Training

NOTICIAS: What are the plans for developing the ability of Mozambican manpower to keep pace with the economic growth foreseen as a result of this cooperation?

Minister of planning: It was seen that it is important to make a greater effort to train cadres. The countries in question are prepared to make an increasing contribution, both in the form of equipment and in other ways, to stimulate the projects for training cadres.

It always takes much longer to train cadres than it does to launch new undertakings. Because of that, we must adopt certain necessary measures for the training of cadres beforehand so that growth at that level will keep pace with the requirements of development.

Confidence in RPM Government

NOTICIAS: What motivates the increase in cooperation between Mozambique and the Scandinavian countries?

Minister of planning: There is a mutual interest in developing that cooperation. The Scandinavian countries have great economic potential, and they have democratic traditions enabling them to have contact with revolutionary countries like ours, where they find in fact a greater guarantee of productivity and of reimbursement and remuneration for their interests.

Our Scandinavian friends find in Mozambique a highly responsible government with clearly defined objectives and progressive and stable prospects for development.

SWEDISH ASSISTANCE IN TRANSPORTATION SECTOR NOTED

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 27 Apr 82 p 4

[Text] The Swedish firm VIAK which, since 1980, has been responsible to SIDA [Swedish International Development Agency] in work involving transportation organization, has been lending substantial support to the reorganization of the TPU [Urban Public Transportation] in Beira. According to the TPU director, the support is being channeled particularly to the sector's scientific management. In view of this assistance, considerable success has been achieved, principally in the areas of production costs, the organization of service schedules and the development of better routes and roads.

VIAK has not only been working in Beira but also in Maputo where its status is that of adviser in the country's socioeconomic development. Its activity is basically centered around the gathering of information and the development of ways to exploit urban public transportation, including taxis and rented cars.

For this type of activity the Swedish firm has technicians in the various sectors involved; such as administration and finance and procurement, as well as others who deal with specific aspects of public transportation.

Under their technical guidance, the TPU in Beira has already taken a series of actions, particularly a very recent survey among the people to ascertain what the people are thinking and how they might aid in solving the problems which they face daily in the service provided by the TPU. Through this survey, the TPU director told our reporting staff that the principal question is, in fact, determining who is served by these means of transportation.

According to the same official, a survey made on the production costs of the lines, from January to now, kilometer by kilometer, shows a loss of 9.3 percent per kilometer.

However, there is one important aspect which should be pointed out with regard to TPU activities in Beira during the past year: it achieved the established production goal by more than 26 percent.

But, as the firm's director told us, this fact alone does not mean much when we consider that not even one-fifth of Beira's population could be accommodated in TPU buses. This means that we should not just consider the number of hours and trips made to evaluate the capability of that firm. For the principal question is: It produced more, yes; but for whom and how?

This is the principal reason the Swedish technicians came to our country; and their efforts, combined with those of the Mozambican technicians, will result in correct planning and organization to provide the answer this type of enterprise must provide in view of the country's growing needs within the scope of its struggle against underdevelopment.

CAHORA BASSA DEVELOPMENT PLANS DISCUSSED

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 30 Apr 82 pp 3, 10 (reprinted from Lisbon DIARIO DE LISBOA)

[Text] Cahora Bassa power will supply the needs of a large part of Mozambique's central and northern areas when the project underway is completed in mid-1985.

Starting the exploitation of the central-northern line, which serves to designate the project, will also enable Mozambique to have a direct consumption of about 20 percent of the dam's production, with an annual growth rate of 10 percent.

The construction of the central-northern line, whose first phase will be completed in December 1982 when power will reach Mocuba, Zambezia, is essentially aimed at supplying a series of plans for industrial, agricultural and mining development.

Prominent among those centers are Caia (heavy industry), Luabo and Marromeu (sugar refineries) and Moatize (minerals); but the project also plans to supply power to urban centers such as Nampula, Quelimane and Pemba, now dependent on antiquated diesel power plants.

The second phase of the project, already initiated, will reach Nampula. And the third, whose terminal is Pemba, includes a series of branch lines of the main line to supply less important industrial centers and other residential complexes.

The project, estimated at about $230 million (more than 16 million contos), is being financed by credit lines opened by French and Italian banks and is being carried out by a consortium of companies of the two countries, which deal with the installation of the power lines.

About a month ago, international bidding was opened for the construction of six power substations, amounting to 1 million contos, and bidders have been a Portuguese consortium made up of EFACEC (for the electrical equipment) and Teixeira Duarte (for the civil construction).

At present, only a minimal part of the total production of Cahora Bassa's power is consumed in Mozambique and, even so, some of it has to be converted in South Africa to reenter our territory.

In recent weeks, an official proposal by Zimbabawe has been under study for the purchase of Cahora Bassa power; but, in this case, it is necessary first to construct a second power plant on the dam.

At present, Cahora Bassa power is being almost totally sold to South Africa, but in a very irregular manner due to the acts of sabotage against the power lines perpetrated by armed gangs supported by Pretoria.

POOR SUPPORT PROVIDED FOR COOPERATIVE MOVEMENT

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 2 Jun 82 p 10

[Article by Celio Mouco]

[Excerpts] The great enthusiasm displayed by the inhabitants of Moamba and Magude for the cooperative movement is not encountering an adequate response, and the result is that some cooperative members have abandoned the collective production units.

Those units were established to break with the colonial agrarian policy, create conditions for rural industrialization, and organize the life of the people, but current reality indicates more strongly that the process of forming cooperatives, which was launched immediately after the country became independent, has not been accompanied by other important measures aimed at bringing the members of cooperatives into the "new times."

The ineffectiveness of the Ministry of Agriculture's structures in relation to the agricultural production cooperatives in the Moamba and Magude Districts has had a lot to do with inducing a great many peasants to abandon those cooperatives.

Mario Machava, party secretary for economic policy in the Magude District, told this newspaper's reporters: "People are mobilized, but without the means to produce, they cannot stay in the cooperatives."

The Magude secretary for economic policy discussed what has been done there for the progress of the cooperatives, and he concluded by saying that "beyond distributing a little seed--when even that happens--little or nothing has been done to develop the cooperatives."

That fact was confirmed by our reporters when they visited the cooperatives themselves. All the collective agricultural production units are faced with severe problems due to the lack of cadres who are thoroughly familiar with basic cultivation methods and can teach those methods to the peasants in the cooperatives so as to improve their real production capacity.

According to the administrator of the Moamba District, the cooperatives sometimes come to a standstill for long periods because of what he termed "minor things."

That official also said that the district he heads has not yet received vegetable seed for the cooperatives, even though this is the season when the vegetables should be ready for harvesting. He said that the reason why a few cooperatives were able to plant vegetables was that they had held back seed from the last harvest.

MINISTER URGES ARMED RESISTANCE--A meeting of the Sofala provincial government, presided over by Lt Gen Armando Guebuza, resident minister, ended late yesterday afternoon. Speaking at the end of the meeting, Armando Guebuza said that the meeting was one of practical discussion which made it possible to evaluate specific aspects of the province's living conditions without, however, going into great detail. In this context, he pointed out the need to hold another type of meeting to make a more thorough analysis of the political and socio-economic situation in Sofala Province. The official also spoke of the importance and principal tasks assigned to the recently appointed military commander saying that, in addition to his military duties, the commander will exercise functions at the party level, assisting the first provincial secretary in these activities. Invited to speak, Maj Gen Joaquim Munhepe, military commander of Sofala Province, said that at this time and within the scope of the decision of the Political Bureau of the FRELIMO Party and of Mozambique's top military command, it is the duty of every provincial leader in particular and, of all citizens in general to support the task of the defense and security forces, since this is of the utmost importance. He said that to carry out the economic and social plans, to fulfull the PPI [Prospective Indicative Plan], it is urgent to crush armed gangs, to restore the security and tranquillity needed to enable every citizen to accomplish his daily task. GDR EMBASSY OFFICIAL'S VISIT--With the aim of closely observing the preparatory work of the restoration project of the Dondo-Dirundi railway line in which GDR technicians are involved, a delegation headed by Hans Hofman, counselor of the GDR Embassy in Mozambique, arrived in Beira day before yesterday. Hofman is also head of the political and transportation department of the same diplomatic representation. Hofman visited the sites of this project in Dondo where he met with the German technicians who are working in the area and, yesterday morning, he talked with Domingos Fernando, provincial director of transportation and communications in Sofala, about the work to be carried out during the sojourn of the technicians. Speaking to our reporting staff yesterday, Domingos Fernando said that the meeting was very worthwhile in that it dealt with certain important problems, such as the housing of GDR internationalist workers involved in the project. ADDITIONAL SHIP PURCHASES--The Mozambican Government is going to acquire two more cargo ships from Spain this year, according to a statement to our reporters by Adamo Valy, national director of maritime and river transportation, who recently returned from that European country. The same source said that an agreement for that purpose has already been signed in Madrid and that Spanish authorities were quite receptive. Contact between the banking institutions of the two countries is the only step remaining before the contract can be executed. The two ships now under negotiation will also be used to strengthen the Mozambican merchant fleet. Each will be able to transport 2,500 tons of cargo. Meanwhile, the first two ships, which were also bought from Spain, are to reach the port of Maputo during the second week of July. Those two cargo ships have been christened the "Nguri" and the "Ligonha." Each of the two vessels has a cargo capacity of 1,200 tons. The "Nguri" has already been turned over to its Mozambican crew. The symbolic ceremony was attended by the national director of the merchant marine. The "Ligonha" will be handed over tomorrow to Mozambicans who are also already in Spain. From Spain, the two ships will proceed next week to the port of Lisbon, where they will load fertilizer--their chief cargo--after which they will head for Mozambique. They will arrive in Mozambique on separate dates, with the "Nguri" being scheduled to leave first. The cargo is now being collected in Spain and in the port of Lisbon. ATROCITIES BY SOUTH AFRICAN SOLDIERS--There have been renewed claims of atrocities being committed by South African soldiers in Namibia. The claims, circulated by head of the South African Catholic Bishops Conference Archbishop Dennis Hurley, come shortly after the announcement by the Defense Force of a new liaison committee which will look into such issues. Carmen Rickard reports: [Rickard] The claims were made by Bishop Cleopas Tineni of the Evangelical Lutheran Ovambo-Kavango Church, who said that on May 16 the service he was conducting was broken up by soldiers in two army trucks. The soldiers ordered the worshippers from the church, claims Bishop Tineni, and then assaulted members of the congregation for about an hour. Here's Archbishop Hurley: [begin recording] I think it does indicate that the South African security forces, or certain members of them, do get out of hand at times, and that the new committee of inquiry--the new liaison committee--will have to be very strict and very severe. WEST GERMAN COOPERATION PROJECTS DETAILED [Text] The Charge d'Affairs of the Federal German Republic Embassy in Freetown Mr. G. T. Huebner has informed the Minister of Information and Broadcasting Dr. Moiwo Korji that the Sierra Leone Broadcasting Rehabilitation Project which his government is undertaking will soon get off the ground.

The Charge d'Affaires who paid a courtesy call on Dr. Korji at his Wallace-Johnson Street Office on Tuesday explained that the project's mechanism was being worked out by three German experts.

Mr. Huebner told the Minister that he would be informed accordingly when the plan of action was completed.

He congratulated the Minister on his appointment and looked forward to closer co-operation between both countries.

Dr. Korji replying thanked the Charge d'Affaires for the visit and expressed appreciation for the developmental assistance particularly in the fields of Education and training in Journalism rendered to his country by the Federal Republic of Germany.

The Minister cited the Pilot Fishing Programme at Tombo, the Marine Biology Programme at Fourah Bay College and the training facilities offered to Sierra Leonean journalists, as examples of the German Government's aid which he said the Sierra Leone Government appreciated.

Dr. Korji also pointed out that as a developing country Sierra Leone would do its utmost to maintain and further strengthen the good relationship that exists between both countries.

The Minister was particularly grateful to Radio Deutche Welle for its training programmes extended to our radio and television journalists.

With the Minister during the discussions were his Permanent Secretary, Mr. V. E. Macauley and the Director of Information Mr. Herbert Williams.

COMMENTARY ON SOMALI-U.S. RELATIONS

EA041954 Mogadishu Domestic Service in Somali 1115 GMT 4 Jun 82

[Commentary by 'Abd ar-Rahman (Fidow) 'Abd]

[Excerpts] The Somali Democratic Republic is a nonaligned country following an independent policy in the interests of its people. The Somali Democratic Republic welcomes cooperation and mutual relations with any country provided there is no interference with or obstruction of the interests and aspirations of the Somali people. With this in mind, the Somali Democratic Republic established and strengthened political and other cooperation with the rest of the world immediately after the revolution.

Friendly relations were promoted with our Arab brothers, with the exception of those who call themselves Arabs but serve only the interests of the Soviets. There was a marked growth in relations between Somalia and Africa, Asia and Europe, particularly West Europe.

It is also timely to mention the friendly relations which exist between the Somali Democratic Republic and the United States and which have gone from strength to strength. Mogadishu and Washington see this consolidation of relations, cooperation and other ties as being a move which serves the interests of both countries.

Friendly relations between Somalia and the United States are based on cooperation, mutual assistance and respect, creating a situation in which each country upholds the other's sovereignty while at the same time safeguarding the self-respect and dignity of its own people.

The main aim of U.S.-Somali collaboration is to promote the interests of both peoples.

As part of the implementation of proposals made during the bilateral discussions in Washington the Somali Democratic Republic and the U.S. Government signed an agreement on 27 May on several U.S.-financed projects in Somalia. New funds of $14.4 million were allocated to the projects, which include agricultural, water supply and range management programs in central Somalia.

Somalia and the United States signed another agreement on 20 May under which the U.S. Government will extend a long-term soft loan of $15 million to the Somali Government to be used on financing agricultural and agro-industrial programs.

We therefore hope that bilateral efforts to promote good relations between the two countries and cooperation between the two peoples will bear fruit and be crowned with success for the future benefit of both peoples.

COMMENTS ON AND REACTIONS TO PRESIDENTIAL COUNCIL'S REFORM PROPOSALS

Proposals for Legislative Reform

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 May 82 p 1

[Article: "Presidential Council To Express Itself on Legislative Branch Within One Year"]

[Text] Final recommendations concerning the reform of the legislative branch in South Africa will probably be made within a year by the Presidential Council Constitutional Committee.

The first committee report on the central government included elaborate proposals relative to the executive branch. As far as the legislative branch is concerned, it provided only broad guidelines because the committee did not have enough time to make elaborate proposals concerning representation for coloreds and Indians.

Dr Denis Worrall, chairman of the committee, has stated that he cannot commit himself as to a definite date for completion of the committee's full recommendations concerning the legislative branch. However, it is possible that the task will be completed within the next year.

In its first report, the committee took the view that coloreds and Indians should also have a voice in the legislative area. For this reason, it has recommended as an interim measure that any draft legislation which concerns those groups, be referred to the Presidential Council for comments. The committee said that it feels that representation in the legislative body should be on a group basis.

As the constitutional framework, the committee proposed a consociational democracy among whites, coloreds and Indians. One of its characteristics is government through majority agreement (concurrent majority).

Proposals Generate Positive Reactions

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 May 82 p 1

[Article by Retief Pienaar: "The Right Strikes Back -- Widespread Satisfaction About Presidential Council Plans"]

> [Text] Generally speaking, yesterday's comments inside and outside South Africa on the constitutional proposals made by the Presidential Council committees were positive. However, in rightwing circles in the country the proposals are labeled as dangerous to whites.

The reactions from political parties differ. The Progressive Federal Party [PFP] is willing to take a constructively critical look at it, while the Conservative Party [KP] is troubled by what it refers to as a moving away from representative government. It is said that directives issued by the New Republic Party [NRP] correspond very much to those from the Presidential Council committees. The Refounded National Party [HNP] said that the proposals will lead to greater racial integration and will ultimately mean the destruction of white South Africa.

Intellectuals and colored political and community leaders have generally reacted favorably.

In Washington, the proposals were called a significant development in South African politics.

Within the Presidential Council itself, the reaction yesterday was overwhelmingly positive, even though some members expressed misgivings about certain aspects.

Mr Japie Basson, member of the Constitutional Committee, said that only "supremacists and jingoes" would reject the plans. Mr Fanie Herman, who in the past had taken the side of the KP of Dr Andries Treurnicht, said that he cannot accept the division of power in the proposals.

Boycott

During yesterday's discussion in the council, the question of the possible elimination of the provincial councils and the question of blacks received a great deal of attention.

Mr Basson, a former Progressive Party member of parliament, expressed a strong judgement on the PFP, because that party boycotted the Presidential Council. He also categorically denied that the proposals are calculated to put the whites, the coloreds and the Indians in a camp opposite the blacks.

The proposals concerning local and regional administration -- which, among other things, make provision for direct representation under certain circumstances for coloreds and Indians in local administrations, and for their participation on a regional or provincial level -- will be further discussed in the council today. On Monday, the council will begin to discuss the Constitutional Committee report on the reform of the central government.

Broad Powers

The broad powers which the president will receive if the proposals are adopted, arouse strong reactions from some people. They express the fear that he will have dictatorial powers.

Others point out that a strong executive branch is fully reconcilable with a purposeful decentralization. They say that a president who rises above group interests will be in the best position to play the unifying role which is necessary in South Africa.

Effects on City Councils

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 May 82 pp 1,2

[Article: "Presidential Council Plan Will Produce Little Change in Cape Council"]

[Text] The mayor of Capetown, Mr Kosie van Zyl, said yesterday that there will not be much difference in the current framework of the Capetown City Council if the chairmen of administrative committees in the municipal area become part of it.

If the recommendations of the Presidential Council in this respect are adopted, then the chairmen (or their nominees) of Capetown's four administrative committees -- Athlone and Distrik, Wittebome-Wynberg, Kensington, and Rylands (the latter for Indians) -- will join the council.

The Presidential Council has recommended that, as an interim measure, existing administrative committees and neighborhood affairs committees for coloreds and Indians should be given representation with full rights in white local administrations or in administrative committees of white municipalities. This arrangement should be maintained until the colored areas become autonomous or until the area representatives become members of the white municipality or divisional council on a ward basis. In the meantime, the administrative committees must continue to exist.

More Wards

Mr Van Zyl said that this kind of proposal is a question of policy. The council still has to think the proposals over.

"It was still the point of view of the City Council that everybody who makes a contribution to the city funds should be represented."

Mr Van Zyl noted that Mitchell's Plain is a large area which does not want an administrative committee. As a result of the Presidential Council proposals, it would certainly be advantageous for taxpayers there to establish an administrative committee as an interim measure.

At the present time, the Capetown City Council includes 17 wards, each of which is represented by 2 council members. "It is clear that if the coloreds are to join on the basis of wards, more wards will have to be added," he said.

In pursuance of the recommendations, voters in these areas will remain on a separate electoral list.

Dr S. Evans, Capetown city clerk, said that a problem of numerical relationships will be created in the city council if the chairmen of the administrative committees for colored areas or their nominees become members of the administrative committee of the council. If later on, the chairmen of new administrative committees yet to be established, such as the Schotsche Kloof and Retreat, would also be added, there would be more representatives of colored administrative committees in the city council's administrative committee than the existing number of members.

The 1965 Ordinance on the Administration of the Municipality of Capetown will have to be amended in order to change the composition of the city council and of its administrative committee.

Dr Evans noted that the Capetown city council has always asked for a return to the 1972 situation, with a common electoral list.

Before the coloreds were removed from the common municipal electoral list in the Cape, Capetown had six colored city council members and the Cape divisional council had one.

Proposals Considered Promising

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 May 82 p 3

[Article: "Yankees Feel Presidential Council Plan Shows Promise"]

[Text] Washington -- The proposals for a new South African constitution have attracted widespread attention in America. It is seen as an important development which could drastically change South African politics by giving the coloreds a role in the government process.

It is also expected that it will bring about a sharper polarization in white politics, with the possibility that the National Party [NP] will lose more members to the right.

The reaction in Washington is very muted because the proposals themselves are worded vaguely and because there has been little time yet to study them.

Will Wait

In official circles, the proposals are being welcomed as a positive development. But, they add, they would rather not talk about details. That is a matter which the South Africans must settle.

A political observer here said that he finds the proposals very interesting, but that he will wait to give a reaction until the South African government has officially taken a position on the matter.

Sober

He noted that if the government significantly weakens the plans, this would result in an unfortunate reaction within the administration and in congress.

The widespread interest is evidenced, among other things, by the comprehensive and soberly worded reports about the proposals which have appeared in various important newspapers.

The consensus in the reports is that the president will have extraordinarily broad powers. Some said that he could actually be a dictator. Others added that limits on his powers could possibly be included in later proposals.

No Misleading

All of them mentioned the fact that the proposals make no provision for a black role in the central government. Several reports expressed the expectation that the government will probably accept the general orientation of the recommendations.

The WALL STREET JOURNAL quoted unnamed experts who said that the vague wording of the proposals is not meant to mislead the coloreds about their political prospects, but to make it easier for the government to obtain the support of conservative whites.

Building for the Future

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 May 82 p 3

[Article: "South Africa Must Help Presidential Council To Build for the Future"]

[Text] At this historic moment in the history of South Africa, people will have to resist the temptation to gain a political advantage over each other, said Dr Ernst Marais, chairman of the Science Committee, yesterday before the Presidential Council.

Dr Marais, who participated in the discussions of the council report on second and third level government, called on "all those who love our country," against the normal political tradition, to search together with the members of the Presidential Council for a common ground and to help build on it for the future of the country.

He noted that the report was not the result of a caucus, but of a serious attempt made by people of diverse backgrounds who feel intensely involved and who are really looking for solutions.

Lack of Democracy Deplored

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 May 82 p 3

[Article: "Dictatorial Powers Disturbing, Said Slabbert"]

[Text] It is hard to imagine that any person with common sense would want to exchange the current inadequate constitutional system for a system in which an individual would be able to exercise virtually dictatorial powers, said opposition leader Dr Van Zyl Slabbert.

He commented on the reports from the Presidential Council concerning a new political system and referred, among other things, to the recommendation that an executive state president be appointed. However, it is not clear what measures would regulate the exercise of his powers.

Hence, one will have to wait for more information from the Presidential Council Constitutional Committee before making a final judgement on the merits of an executive state president in the new system.

The report's underlying philosophy apparently assumes that no democracy will be possible in the foreseeable future if blacks are included. This is an assumption which he and the PSP find repugnant and inaccurate.

Final

However, the Presidential Council did suggest that the government issue a declaration of intent about its reform plans and its view of the future for all community groups, including blacks. The manner in which the government does this could exorcise its worst fears about blacks in the new system and could widen the constitutional debate, said Dr Slabbert.

The Presidential Council proposals will still have to go through several stages of negotiation and decision making before a final decision can be made. The PFP plans to participate in this in a constructively critical manner.

Conditions

However, at the same time Dr Slabbert emphasyzed that the PFP will not be part of a process which would worsen the polarization between whites and blacks or which would lead South Africa on the path to dictatorial power.

With regard to the proposals for local and regional administration, Dr Slabbert said that it looks as if they meet the minimum conditions to give coloreds and Asians a voice in local government. The effectiveness of their participation will depend on such factors as the implementation of the Group Areas Act and the relative economic position of the various communities.

Reactions from Business Community

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 May 82 p 3

[Article: "Businessmen Will First Study Plan"]

[Text] Trade organizations, business leaders and academics yesterday refused to comment on the economic implications of the proposals made by the Presidential Council Committee on Economic Affairs and the Constitutional Committee.

It appears that they are heeding the request made the day before yesterday by Prime Minister P.W. Botha that leaders not make rash and ill-considered comments.

The Afrikaans Institute of Trade [AHI] believes that it is a very important and comprehensive announcement and it first wants to study the report thoroughly before making any comment, said Mr F.F. de W. Stockenstrom, executive director of the AHI, yesterday.

One of the exceptions was Dr O.D.J. Stuart, cnief economist for the Bureau for Economic Research at the University of Stellenbosch. He noted that he was commenting on what he had read in the newspapers. He has the idea that, in the short term, the proposals could have an inflationary effect on the economy.

Tourist taxes and entertainment taxes could have a muting impact on the business cycle and especially places such as Durban could be unfavorably affected. The employment tax could result in a swing toward capital intensive enterprises, in other words it could create unemployment, said Dr Stuart.

Dr Stuart noted that, economically speaking, the involvement of coloreds in local administrations is a very good thing.

Proposals To Build Bridges

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 May 82 p 3

[Article: "Gene Louw: Proposals Could Help Build Bridges"]

[Text] Yesterday, Administrator Gene Louw called the Presidential Council recommendations a praiseworthy attempt at making broader and more active provisions for representation of the various national groups, primarily at the third level of government. He told DIE BURGER that this would help build bridges based on fairness and reasonableness.

In terms of the recommendations relative to the composition and future of provincial administrations, Mr Louw noted that they include a large variety of possibilities.

"I definitely do not want to comment on this right now, because I consider this to be the exclusive prerogative of the central government, of which I am the representative on the Provincial Council."

Study

"At this early stage, it is also somewhat unclear to me as to how the proposals will be implemented. However, I am impressed by the fact that in my mind there is a real attempt to entrust local administrations with greater responsibility than ever before. In my opinion, this could be interpreted as a motion of confidence in the potential of our third level of government."

"I am also impressed by the fact that the Presidential Council stressed in no uncertain terms, the important need and necessity for additional sources of income for local administrations. I believe that this is of utmost importance for the successful survival of any third level government system, whatever form it may take."

However, Mr Louw added that the Presidential Council proposals require an intensive study before an opinion in clearer terms can be given.

Yesterday afternoon, just prior to the no-confidence debate, Mr P.J. Loubser, member of the Executive Committee in charge of hospital services, announced that on 25 May he will introduce a proposal to the effect that members refrain from making premature and ill-considered pronouncements on the recommendations.

As a result, Mr Herbert Hirsch, PSP Seepunt and leader of the opposition in the council, shortened his address by eight pages. The president of the council, Dr Jip de Jager, also repeatedly asked other members who were aiming in the direction of the proposals to refrain from doing so.

The no-confidence debate will be continued this morning at 10:30 AM.

Proposals Blow to Supremacy

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 May 82 p 8

[Article: "Presidential Council Wants to Administer Death Blow to Supremacy"]

[Text] The constitutional recommendations made by the Presidential Council are an honest attempt to administer a final death blow to white supremacy and to prevent the possibility of group domination, said Professor Willie Esterhuyse, professor of philosophy at the University of Stellenbosch.

In reaction to recommendations made by the Committee for Economic Affairs and the Constitutional Committee, Professor Esterhuyse said that they offer points of growth for constitutional development which holds promise for the future.

To give politically backward groups significant and authoritative participation in decision making processes is undoubtedly easier said than done. The committee reports are a good illustration of this. If this awareness penetrates to the public at large, then the attempt made by the Presidential Council will clearly have been worth the effort. A reform of the size and nature needed by South Africa, definitely does not require only shrewd ingenuity but also the necessary patience.

The reports contain a great deal which will make significant discussions possible. The idea that authoritative participation in decision making processes should be sought along the path of decentralization, should be welcomed.

The fact that this train of thought is coupled with a more flexible interpretation of the question of ethnicity, is particularly significant. While ethnicity is not neglected in the reports, it is not exalted into a holy cow either. Of the latter, South Africa has in any case had enough already.

Professor Esterhuyse noted that a further significant element of the reports lies in the fact that the idea of decentralization is coupled with the proposal to separate the legislative and the executive branches. Decentralization implies an executive branch which can serve as a unifying and connecting authority. This will also necessarily entail -- and rightly so in his opinion -- that the status of the current parliament will change.

He said that if the proposals are adopted, this will necessarily result in the fact that the lawful claim of the Indians and the coloreds to be represented in the current parliament will also be given a different focus.

Proposals Seen As Dictatorial

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 May 82 p 8

[Article: "Presidential Council Plan Leaning Toward Dictatorship: Dr Treurnicht"]

[Text] The Presidential Council recommendation that a state president with executive power be appointed for a period of 7 years, "leans toward a dictatorship," said Dr Andries Treurnicht, leader of the Conservative Party, yesterday in Capetown.

Dr Treurnicht reacted to the particulars of the proposals for constitutional reform at the level of the central government, included in the first report issued by the Constitutional Committee of the Presidential Council.

"The proposed powers of the state president and the executive branch, and the separation between the executive branch and parliament constitute a disturbing movement away from a responsible and representative democracy, and lean in the direction of dictatorship," Dr Treurnicht said yesterday evening in a statement distributed shortly after his arrival at the D.F. Malan airport.

Breaking Away

For those who support the principles of separate development and division of power, "these recommendations have come as a shock."

"This is a radical breaking away from the National Party manifesto for the 1981 election," said Dr Treurnicht.

"This is comparable to opinions expressed by government officials with regard to a mixed executive branch."

"Distribution of power and mixed government, or integration at all levels, as is being proposed in the recommendations, is completely unacceptable to us," said Dr Treurnicht.

He noted that "the qualified right to vote with regard to the second and third levels of government leaves the way open for a power struggle among the national groups."

Qualified Support From NRP

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 May 82 p 8

[Article: "This Is How the NRP Supports the Proposals"]

[Text] Yesterday, the Natal leader of the New Republic Party, Mr Ron Miller of North Durban, explained his party's position relative to the Presidential Council recommendations on provincial and regional government.

He summed it up as follows in a statement distributed in Capetown:

. Other population groups must be included in the decision making process;
. Provincial and regional bodies must consist of representatives elected by the people;
. The extension of political rights to other groups must be an extension of a democratic process, with built in protection for the interests of minority groups;
. There should be minimum interference by the central government in the functions of the provincial and regional bodies; and
. A maximum transfer of power from the government to the provincial and regional authorities.

Colored Leaders React Positively

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 May 82 p 9

[Article: "Colored Leaders Predominantly Satisfied With Proposals -- A Few React Negatively"]

[Text] For the most part, colored community and church leaders reacted positively yesterday to the recommendations of the Presidential Council Committee on Economic Affairs and the Constitutional Committee, but some of them rejected the proposals summarily.

The leaders of the Workers' Party and the Freedom Party could not be reached.

It is presumed that they first want to study the proposals thoroughly before making an official statement.

Professor Richard van der Ross, Rector of the University of the Western Cape, said that the proposals for a ministry of education for all groups is the only guarantee for acceptance.

He welcomed the possibility of a colored or Indian individual being appointed deputy minister in that department. "But the fact that it is already being proposed that someone from a certain ethnic group be appointed to that position, is extreme. After all, that decision rests with the prime minister or the minister involved."

He supports the idea of an education council in which every group is represented. With regard to the recommendation for the greatest possible autonomy of schools in the various communities, Professor Van der Ross commented: "One must take care that everything that is being done point to an improvement of standards. The goal must be ultimate equalization, which does not necessarily mean that everything must be identical. The proposals are not a question of integration, but it is important that the door be left open for mixed schools, in case parents and teachers are in favor of it."

Professor Van der Ross said that he is a strong advocate of direct representation, even if it involves electoral lists by groups. "The weaker communities also contribute through their labor, if not through their property tax."

For the Good

"At this stage, the coloreds cannot yet contribute as much to the income of local administrations as the whites, because they are still mostly doing the lowest paid work. But the relatively cheap labor used by the whites is a kind of hidden tax."

The provision included in the proposals for participation by blacks "can only be for the good," said Professor Van der Ross.

Dr Alan Boesak, chaplain at the University of the Western Cape, said that the fact that the constitutional proposals are based on the position that the blacks must exercise their political rights in their homelands, makes them impossible for him to accept.

It makes a peaceful solution at a political-constitutional level impossible and is morally unacceptable. "The framework of the proposals is the same as the government policy. The dividing lines of apartheid, against which people have fought for a long time, are not being lifted by the proposals, but only shifted. In the past it was whites against the rest, and now it is only whites, coloreds and Indians against the rest. The impression being created is that now those three groups will challenge the rest of the community (the blacks)."

"One should just think about the frustrations of the blacks who are being totally thrown away in the homelands by the 'new distribution.' If I were black, I would think that people haven't heard what I have been trying to say for the last 100 years."

"The proposal for an executive president with so much power in one person smells of a recipe for a dictatorship, and this goes against my democratic grain. As a Calvinist, I am sceptical about human nature. Man has a sinful nature and the temptations in such a position will be too great."

Dr Boesak said that the gradual transition proposed in the constitutional reports will not prevent violence. "I think that the Presidential Council should go back and that the whole constitutional problem should be solved by a National Convention."

Mr Franklin Sonn, Rector of the Skiereiland Technikon and chairman of the Union of South African Teachers Organizations and of the Cape Professional Teachers Union, said: "Experience has taught us that government decisions are important and not committee proposals."

"We are sincerely committed to change in South Africa and would like to see this occur without bloodshed and chaos. The prime minister has shown that he is capable of energetic action and does not allow himself to become paralyzed by shortsighted and selfish racism. We want to strongly encourage him and his government to persevere in order to meet the lawful political aspirations of all people in South Africa."

"This would be statesmanship of the highest order on his part. The establishment of a South African nation with loyalty toward the fatherland is the highest ideal of most people in South Africa. The leader who uses his position of power to make this ideal a reality will have done the greatest possible service to his country."

Mr Lofty Adams, leader of the People's Congress and member of the Presidential Council, said that the proposals are "excellent." "We have now reached a point of departure which would even satisfy the grumblers in politics."

"The recommendations even meet the requirements of the Workers Party and they should be man enough to recognize this," he said.

Mr Solly Essop, president of the Farm Workers Union and of the administrative committee of the Karoo region, commented that the fact that the blacks are not included to the same extent in the constitutional proposals as are the coloreds and the Indians, is not reason enough to reject them.

Strong Opposition from HNP

[Article: "HNP Will Fight Presidential Council Plans"]

[Text] Johannesburg -- The Presidential Council proposals represent a dangerous departure in the direction of ever greater racial mixing and the ultimate destruction of white South Africa. The HNP will fight those proposals as being contrary to the whole constitutional history of South Africa and the white consensus over many years.

This is what Mr Jaap Marais, leader of the HNP, had to say yesterday in a special press statement issued in Pretoria, about the Presidential Council proposals which were published this week.

The statement noted that the HNP rejects the proposals because they are based on the principle of a multi-racial government, which leaves the door open to endless conditions for greater power by non-white groups. According to Mr Marais this will not solve any problems, will lead to ever greater constitutional confusion and instability and will ultimately fail, as numerous similar attempts have failed in Africa and have landed the whites of those areas under black governments.

Retain

This is a political recipe which has yet to succeed in the world, because a parliamentary democracy has a limited tolerance for differences of race and religion, and carries a built-in factor of discord and strife which is not bridged by a sufficiently strong factor of collectivity, added the statement.

"The current constitution is the constitution of white South Africa, just as the national anthem and the flag also belong to white South Africa. This constitutional system must be retained, because the whole order and peace of South Africa depend on the feeling of security which the white people have on the basis of its current constitution. The non-white populations can develop their constitution without affecting the principles of white South Africa."

Finally, Mr Marais noted that the proposals are based on the 1977 proposals of the NP, which the HNP has fought during the last two elections. The HNP stands on the principles of the NP, up to and including the assassination of Dr H.F. Verwoerd, and will fight the Presidential Council proposals.

PFP Past Policy Chided

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 May 82 p 9

[Article: "PFP and Its Leaders Have Stemmed Progress"]

[Text] It is possible that we could have progressed much further on the road to constitutionalism in South Africa if the Progressive Federal Party as well as black and colored leaders had not shot down the black council in 1980, said Professor Sampie Terreblanche, professor of economics at the University of Stellenbosch, yesterday.

In reaction to the proposals made by two Presidential Council committees on local and regional government and on the central government, Professor Terreblanche commented: "Let us assume that the constitutional committees of the Presidential Council and of the black council, which was supposed to have been set up parallel with the Presidential Council, had also been able to introduce a common report on certain issues yesterday -- how significant this would have been!"

However, this is water under the bridge, he said. "Because the alternative to constitutionalism is too grim to contemplate, I hope that the colored and Indian politicians will make full use of the opportunities offered by the proposals, even though all their conditions are not being met."

Framework

Professor Terreblanche said that the proposals are imaginative and contain many far-reaching implications. It is a courageous attempt to find a way out for some of South Africa's extremely difficult political and relations problems via the path of constitutionalism.

In his capacity as an economist, he is interested in the manner in which elected bodies receive public funds at all levels, divide them among themselves and appropriate them for various purposes. Unfortunately, the Presidential Council has failed to specify how the elected bodies will gather, divide and distribute the benefits. However, if one realizes that the proposals are not intended to be a blueprint, but only to indicate the framework of a future constitutional development, then it is perhaps a merit rather than a weakness that certain matters were left "vague" and "open."

If the proposed constitutional framework is adopted, as he hopes it will be, then the talks will henceforth be able to focus constructively on those aspects which have apparently purposely been left "vague" and "open," said Professor Terreblanche.

First Steps Toward Reform

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 May 82 p 14

[Editorial: "The Highest Level"]

[Text] It is a pity, to some people probably even a disappointment, that the Presidential Council did not make any recommendations on the legislative branch in the context of a new constitutional distribution for South Africa, even though a few broad directives were laid down. In any political system it is a key question who makes the laws.

Yet, later on this could turn out to have been a wise decision on the part of the Presidential Council. As a matter of fact, such a heap of other highly interesting proposals have been put on the table, that they not only present a clear picture of the sincere intentions of the Presidential Council, but also provide enough material to keep the constitutional debate going soundly and fruitfully.

Hence, it could be argued that the Presidential Council had good reasons to give itself more time to formulate the delicate proposals relative to the legislative branch. Meanwhile, numerous processes could be started, which could provide useful experience as well as preparation for what has to occur at a higher level.

Furthermore, it is always good to start the development of a new system at the bottom, with the basics. But it is also true that there is impatience about getting a total picture of the plans for the future. Fortunately, it was possible to make rather complete proposals relative to the executive branch, considering the fact that this part of the central government is being disconnected from the legislative branch, however the latter may be composed.

Indeed, it is anticipated that it should be possible meanwhile to begin with the implementation of the existing proposals.

Because the state president is to be appointed by representatives of the legislative branch, there will be a problem with his first election. It has been recommended that this election should just be carried out by the House of Assembly in its current composition -- and the thought is added that the government should perhaps consider introducing a temporary regulation which would also involve coloreds and Indians in this first election.

We do indeed hope that it will be possible to develop such a plan. As a matter of fact, the principle of whites, coloreds and Indians together forming an electoral college to elect a state president was already adopted in the 1977 proposals. And, please, let there not again be groups who want to deny this because they had understood it "differently."

The powers of the new state president could be debatable, but, from the very beginning, it has been considered one of the basic principles that with his executive power and authority to appoint colored ministers, he must be a symbol of representation of all three groups at the highest level.

Moreover, the constitutional plan would gain a great deal in credibility if this principle is implemented from the very beginning.

Proposals Result of Consensus

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 14 May 82 p 14

[Editorial: "Victory for Consensus Policy"]

[Text] Since its introduction a little over 30 years ago, the Group Areas Act has continuously been a focal point for emotional positions among the whites as well as the coloreds. Feelings are easily stirred up about it.

And yet, the Presidential Council -- whose members actually represent all the conflicting positions from the white, the colored and the Asian communities -- has succeeded admirably in reaching a consensus concerning its recommendations on the controversial law.

As a matter of fact, it is an example of the extent to which the Presidential Council managed to overcome the largest stumbling blocks and controversies in the South African political arena in order to issue reports which were all but completely unanimous. As for the few points on which differences of opinion are reflected, there is virtually no indication that they have anything to do with ethnicity.

In addition to the fact that this is a testimonial to the devotion with which the members performed their task, it is a clear victory for the idea of a consensus policy, which apparently contains so much that is good for South Africa.

What is of capital importance is the fact that a consensus was also reached about questions which lie so close to the nerves of the race problem in this country as the Group Areas Act and what this means for the various national groups.

The recommendation is that it would be inopportune to eliminate this legislation, even though the Group Areas Council should be given additional authority and should be representative of all national groups.

The motivating idea is: "The problem which nobody in the country can escape is the recognition of the practical realities of the great diversity of the South African situation and, after an honest analysis, to try to reconcile the preferences, prejudices and differences with each other for the sake of a peaceful reform."

These are indeed winged words which should become chapter and verse for the political debate in the difficult times ahead.

MINISTER'S NIECE CHARGED WITH COLLABORATION WITH ANC

Johannesburg RAPPORT in Afrikaans 25 Apr 82 p 15

[Article by Deon Delport: "Koornhofs Stand by Daughter"]

[Text] Johannesburg--"We are proud of our daughter. She cares for her fellow men." This is what Mrs Joan Koornhof said about her daughter Hanchen Fitzgerald, 27. This Friday Hanchen was sentenced to a month in jail for having taken part in ANC activities.

"Hanchen is a very mild person and does not believe in violence, but unfortunately she was led astray. I am sure that a lot of pressure was exercised upon her. I hope that other people will learn a lesson from her experience;" so stated Mrs Koornhof.

The young English teacher, who is a niece of Minister Piet Koornhof, was fined 500 rand and given a 21-month jail sentence this Friday at the district court of Johannesburg, but 20 months of her jail sentence were suspended. She appeared in court on a charge stemming from the Act on Terrorism. Three forbidden publications were also found in her possession.

The state charged that last April she learned an ANC code in Botswana. She was to teach the code to Cedric de Beer, who is under arrest, so as to enable him to send encoded messages to Marius Schoon and also to her estranged husband, Patrick Fitzgerald who are in Botswana.

Her mother said that the family believes she is being treated fairly.

"We received telephone calls from people who were involved with terrorists. They condemned my daughter and they hate her." So stated Mrs Koornholf. Hanchen is a mild person and she loathes violence. Now she is afraid of being rejected.

Mrs Koornhof said: "She is willing to pay for her mistake and I hope she gets the chance to prove her goodness."

In a sworn statement before the court the principal of Willowmore High School in Benoni said that Mrs Fitzgerald is a dedicated teacher and he is willing to take her back in his staff.

Before she appeared in court Mrs Fitzgerald had been under arrest for 6 months.

SELF-DETERMINATION A KEY TO CO-DETERMINATION BY THREE GROUPS

Johannesburg RAPPORT in Afrikaans 25 Apr 82 pp 22

[Article by Willem de Klerk: "On Self-Determination and Co-Determination"]

[Text] Did the prime minister declare whites, coloreds and Indians as one nation last week in Parliament?

Has the Nationalist Party abandoned self-determination as the cornerstone of its policy?

If the answer to these two questions is yes then the Nationalist Party is off its course.

For me it is clear that this is once more a case of malicious misconception being fed to the world with respect to the prime minister's reply in Parliament to the effect that self-determination is a relative concept and that whites, coloreds and Indians form one nation.

The reply to those two questions will continue to be: no.

My arguments with regard to both concepts (nation and self-determination) run as follows:

Whites, coloreds and Asians are individual groups and there are even different peoples within each group. Each group and peoples within these groups have their own interests, roots and ideals. To speak of these groups as one people is an untruth and an obliteration of delineations.

The concept of nation is something different than the concept of people. Nation implies people living in certain political region and united in citizenship of the state in question.

Most of our peoples, however, have not been introduced to the professional terminology of political science. Moreover, English speakers can also confuse nation with people. I therefore propose that politicians (and newspapers) cease talking about one nation, because this arouses unnecessary confusion. They should rather talk about three separate groups which together form a political unit.

In political matters there is therefore a political self-determination between the three groups. In many other matters there is no joint self-determination, but rather separate self-determination of each group over its own matters.

Although common matters are more numerous than private matters within the three groups of the republic, there are still basic matters in the realm of private affairs. In the confederation private affairs will again exceed by far those things of common interest.

We must also have a clear sense of definition with respect to self-determination (which must remain a cornerstone of South Africa's policy).

Self-determination is not absolute. Nationalist Party spokesmen have quoted many examples to the effect that the United States, Russia and Europe cannot determine their fate as they wish, but they are dependent on joint decision-making on certain matters. The principle is: Self-determination cannot be exercised in isolation of other self-determining groups.

Especially in our country self-determination cannot stand on its own leg. Politicians (including those of the Nationalist Party) must not deceive people on this point. Co-determination puts a limit on self-determination and the same applies vice versa.

In the South African situation it is unavoidable for the two (self-determination and co-determination) to meet and therefore both will have to sacrifice something.

Therefore it is actually wrong to talk only about self-determination as a Nationalist Party policy. This is a mirage, an enormous piece of unreality.

I propose that in writing and speaking the Nationalist Party should always mention self-determination/co-determination in one breath and employ this as one concept in which both words are joined together irrevocably.

Of course, at different levels, self-determination/co-determination differ in nature, extent and application.

Local administration is mainly self-determination for each group with common arrangements over common matters. In district administration common arrangements probably take precedence and in country administration self-determination has more weight in certain matters and co-determination in other matters.

In the confederation between the republic and the black states self-determination of each state stands out as the Alpha and the Omega, while co-determination is limited and strongly qualified.

The drafters of our constitution must be careful to develop a system which will carry the final word on self-determination so that co-determination will be usurped; for example there should be a requirement of consensus from each self-determining group with respect to joint decisions. There are many of these proven, balanced and controlling systems.

Self-determination must remain the key to co-determination. I have no doubts about this. In South Africa we are working with nationalisms and each nationalism is striving for self-determination. Differentiation is our tradition. The right to exclusivity is being recognized and supported by all our communities. As a group of minorities the ratio of our numbers renders self-determination indispensable.

Of couse, trying to cover the burden of conflict, with its polarizing forces which exist in our country and trying to do so under the flag of self-determination/co-determination, is a complicated matter.

But our reality is complicated. South Africa would be unmanageable with just the full weight of self-determination--and with the full weight of co-determination alone there would be little self-determination left. Hence the reason for self-determination/co-determination as the formula for the future.

G-5 CANNON DEVELOPED, MANUFACTURED ENTIRELY IN SOUTH AFRICA

Johannesburg BEELD in Afrikaans 24 Apr 82 p 5

[Text] Recent press rumors that South Africa is not manufacturing the advanced and feared G-5 cannon on its own were properly put to rest this week when a group of newspapermen were taken on a guided tour of the plant where parts of the weapon are being manufactured.

The cannon is being assembled by a branch of KRYGKOR [South African Armaments Corporation] and the private companies share in its production runs to about 94 percent, according to a spokesman of KRYGKOR.

The cannon's barrel (one of the most complicated and difficult part to manufacture) was also developed in South African plants and is being manufactured here. "As far as I know there are only three or four companies in the world which are capable to make such barrels." That is what the spokesman said.

A spokesman of one of the plants, which is helping to produce the G-5 cannon's barrel (155 mm) and other artillery weapons, explained to the group of newspapermen how this is being done.

The approximately 6.8 tons of steel is subjected to a number of processes before the product (a cannon barrel that weighs 1.7 tons) is ultimately sent to the KRYGKOR branch after about 2 months' processing.

This company then puts the final finishing touches, and this also takes about 3 months, before a very high quality barrel is sent to KRYGKOR's assembly plant.

The two plants where the barrel is manufactured have facilities for manufacturing barrels of 10 meters in length and to be self-supporting in all respects. One of the plants (where the original steel barrel is bored) manufacturers barrels for cannons only, while the KRYGKOR plant completely manufactuers and finishes barrels of 5.56 mm caliber (for the R4 machine gun) to the 155mm barrel for the G-5 cannon.

This plant manufactures the R-4, which replaces the R-1 as a standard weapon for the armed forces' soldiers and does so entirely by itself using local steel. Barrels for the rapid fire cannons (20 mm and 30 mm and the 35 mm caliber) are being manufactured to fill the demands for rapid fire which differ to some degree from those of the cannons.

It takes a slow and accurate process in manufacturing each of the weapons from the 5.56 mm R-4 to the 155 mm G-5 in order to make sure that each product delivered to the armed forces is of the highest quality and can justly be regarded as the best in the world.

CIRCULATION PROBLEM--Dar-es-Salaam, May 27--Tanzania's inflation, reportedly running at about 30 per cent, has partly been boosted by a phenomenal rise in money circulating in the economy. By the end of last year the money supply was estimated at 20,500 million Tanzanian shillings (2,000 million dollars), Central Bank Governor Charles Niryabu told a conference of Tanzanian financial banking institutions in Arusha, Northern Tanzania, yesterday. This compared with 17,200 million shillings (1,720 million dollars) at the end of 1980. PRISON HORROR SCENES DESCRIBED

Paris Le MONDE in French 5 May 82 p 5

[Article: "Eyewitness Account: Scenes of Horror at Makindye Prison"]

[Text] Around 10 am on 28 February 1982, I was arrested by soldiers who had found my Democratic Party[1] membership card on me. They labeled me a "guerrilla." Around noon on 2 March, I was transferred to Makindye barracks, in the suburbs of Kampala. I was to stay there for over 2 weeks. During my imprisonment, I stayed successively in three cells, nicknamed by their occupants "Quarter Guard," "Bone," and "Go Down." Each was designed to accommodate 20 prisoners. During my stay, more than 600 prisoners in all were crowded in there.

"Quarter Guard" is a cell where certain categories of prisoners from other prisons or barracks are "received." When I arrived, two prisoners were lying in a pool of blood. They had just been beaten to death. According to my cellmates, we all risked coming to the same end. Around 7 pm the same day, 2 March, Aviation Capt James Kasinye was dragged out of the cell, beaten with iron bars right in front of the door, then killed with four pistol bullets by a lieutenant.

Six prisoners were appointed to carry his corpse and the other two cadavers to the "warehouse" where the bodies of prisoners murdered in prison are deposited.

When they returned, our companions told us they had seen about 25 corpuses there, including one of a child about 5 years old. In our cell, there was a small room as well, where two young women and a teen-age girl were imprisoned. At night we heard their screams and moans for several hours. The next day, one of them told us that 10 or so soldiers had raped them.

On 3 March, there were massive arrests in Kampala. Trucks and military vehicles arrived at Makindye. They were filled with civilians. Most were between 15 and 35 years old. They had been brutally beaten.

On 4 March, they had all the prisoners go outside. They grouped us in three categories in order to assign us to three cells. In my new cell, there were approximately 200 starving prisoners. The same day, new prisoners were brought in. Most had been beaten and tortured; some had even had limbs amputated. For example, a gardner arrested during work had a hand cut off. He died the next day. Four businessmen had been arrested at the shopping center of Nakulabya, taken to Nile Mansion,[2] then to Makindye. They had been tortured. Two of them died 24 hours after their arrival.

"How Many Deaths?"

Mr Mambule, the manager of an international shipping company, had been arrested with 2 million shillings[3] on him because he had just sold a truck. He had been tortured before arriving in our cell. He bore deep cuts on his head and body. Around 7 am on 5 March a soldier came to ask the prisoner in charge of our cell one single question: "Ngapi Kwisha Kufa?" ("How many deaths?") The prisoner told him: "Five." Three had died as a result of being tortured and two more had probably died of hunger. During my 2 weeks of imprisonment, it was the only question I heard, around 7 o'clock every morning. Apparently the only goal sought after in "Bone" and "Go Down" cells was to let prisoners die.

Around 10 am on 5 March, an officer turned up in front of our cell, shouted my name, and ordered me to follow him. As we walked, he told me that he had been contacted by my family and was going to help me get out of Makindye. He took me to the "information office," which was next door to the torture chamber. He told me to wait for him while he discussed my release with his fellow officers. There I saw several civilians taken into the torture chamber. For example, Dr Kato, who lives in the village of Kansanga, near Tank Hill.[4] He was taken into the room with 12 other prisoners.

The soldiers accompanying him accused him of being a guerrilla. They said they had arrested him in the forest with "his men" and a rocket launcher. They ordered the intelligence officer to get complete confessions from the doctor and his companions. The officers began interrogating the suspects in the torture chamber, two by two. I heard them being struck with objects. When they came out, they had cuts on their arms and heads. Their bodies were bloody. They were taken back into the office and asked to confess. They remained silent. They were tortured again. When they came out again finally, some of them had had arms and legs amputated. Most could not walk. It was decided to take them to "Go Down" cell. Half of them died there in the next 2 days.

When I, in turn, was transferred to this same cell the evening of 5 March, Dr Kato told me his story. Around 5 am that same day, three military trucks and a Land Rover had appeared at his home. The doctor, his wife, and three servants were taken in the Land Rover and driven to Nile Mansion. Two children, including a baby less than a year old, were left alone in the house. The soldiers filled the trucks with the doctor's furniture and family possessions (worth 6 million shillings, according to his estimates). At Nile Mansion, they were put with 10 prisoners who were already there. They were all taken to Makindye and described as guerrillas.

On 5 March, the officer who had ordered me out of my cell did not obtain my release and had me taken back there around 4 pm. Hence, an hour later, I was transferred to "Go Down" with other prisoners. I found some 200 prisoners there. Most were wounded and their clothes blood-stained. They had been so atrociously tortured that they were doomed to probable death. "Go Down" is Makindye's worst cell. Between six and nine prisoners died each day while I was there. Almost everybody was wounded, but nobody was sent to the infirmary, although it was very close.

Days Without Food or Water

One day a kind soldier was guarding the cell. He decided to take several of the wounded to the infirmary. Their wounds were treated with purple-colored medicine. Discovering this later, another soldier became so enraged that he treatened to send the prisoners back to the torture chamber where they would be inflicted with new wounds that he would be sure were not treated. He ordered the prisoners to receive no medical treatment under any circumstances. In "Go Down," they only brought us food and water every 3 to 5 days. But there was so little that it was scarcely enough for 20 prisoners. Actually, the food was intended for only one category of prisoners: the soldiers.

The dead bodies stayed in the cells for 24 to 48 hours--during the weekends--before being removed. The soldier in charge of the cell appointed prisoners to carry the corpuses to the "warehouse." The bodies of prisoners who starved to death were separated from those of prisoners who were shot or tortured to death. Around noon every day, a few prisoners went outside to put corpses of the first category into a truck. We were told that these bodies were transported to the Mulago hospital's morgue or turned over to the municipality of Kampala. The other corpses were loaded onto military trucks around midnight. Nobody knows for just what destination. Yet, one weekend, a righ-ranking officer from Nile Mansion came to talk to us at Makindye. He put us on guard asserting that, if we did not disclose our guerrilla activities, we would be killed. He pointed out: "Lake Victoria's waters can swallow a lot of corpses before it will overflow." "Anyway," he added, "the Nile is a good overspill for the lake."

Prisoners were screened at least 3 times a week. They were taken near the intelligence service's offices, where they had to sit in line. Then some prisoners who were erroneously introduced to their fellow prisoners as former guerrillas who had switched to confessions appeared. Actually, they had been persuaded by all sorts of promises, e.g., lured with the bright prospects of an influential position in the army, to collaborate with the officials. These individuals pointed at random at some innocent prisoners and said that they had been their guerrilla companions. Those who were chosen did not have an opportunity to protest their innocence or defend themselves. They were taken away and never heard of again.

Ninety-nine percent of Makindye's prisoners are of Bantou descent. Sixty percent are Basoga Baganda,[5] 39 percent, Bayankole from the West, and 1 percent come from the north. The latter are primarily soldiers. According to the 1980 census, 68 percent of Uganda's population is of Bantou descent. The imprisonment and murders at Makindye are ethnic in nature.

I was released after a large sum of money was given to the soldiers by relatives and friends. Three enlisted men in Makindye are specifically responsible for taking care of this financial aspect of things. One of them delayed my release by 10 days. Almost all the prisoners who succeed in leaving Makindye are able to do so because they pay. To borrow their expression, they are "billed," according to their financial resources. Those who are known to be well off see themselves charged between 500,000 and 1 million shillings. The possessions and personal effects that are taken away from them when they enter Makindye are never returned to the prisoners: money, watch, shoes, identification papers, etc. They are only given a letter indicating that they were interrogated in prison and declared innocent.

FOREIGN MINISTER TO PARIS, WASHINGTON--Foreign Affairs and Cooperation Minister Felix Tientaraboum left Ouagadougou yesterday for Paris. The minister will hold talks in Paris with Jean-Pierre Cot, French minister of cooperation and development, and Guy Penne, special adviser to President Mitterrand on African affairs. The minister will then go to Washington for a 2-day working visit. His talks there will center on the revival of bilateral cooperation between the two countries. To this end the minister will meet high-ranking officials of the State Department and AID. Colonel Tientaraboum will attend the second extraordinary session of the United Nations on disarmament in New York. He will give a speech whose theme will mainly be disarmament and development. In fact, to the head of the Upper Voltan Foreign Ministry, disarmament should concern itself mainly with the release of large (?sums of money) in order to give substantial resources for the development of Third World countries in an atmosphere of peace and security. CONSULTATIONS WITH NETHERLANDS--Netherlands-Upper Volta consultations began yesterday at ONERA [expansion unknown] in Ouagadougou. The consultations, which will last 3 days, are aimed at harmonizing views of Upper Voltans and Netherlanders on the projects to be financed by the 43.5 million guilders--an equivalent of 4.5 billion CFA francs--which the Netherlands is prepared to grant. As for Upper Volta, priorities have already been determined as Minister of Economy and Planning Quatermaster Mamadou Sanfo recalled. They are: self-sufficiency in food production and environmental protection, improvement of the standard of living for the people, development of the industrial and mining sector, afforestation and international transport. For their part, the Netherlanders promised to study the proposals to be made by the Upper Voltans within the framework of these consultations with an open mind and in the spirit of cooperation. Priority will be given to the rural sector and a proposal has been made to improve the quality of the Netherlands' assistance by harmonizing views and supervising future projects. PREPARATIONS FOR 1982 ELECTION SAID TO BE SET

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 13 Apr 82 pp 1, 7

[Article by N'Zinga Nsingi]

[Text] The deputy prime minister and state commissioner for territorial administration, Prof Vunduawe Te Pemako, was a guest on the television program "L'Evenement," moderated by our colleague Kundura Kasongo with the cooperation of other members of the press. The discussion centered on electoral law and territorial decentralization.

"Everything is finally ready for the 1982 elections," replied Prof Vunduawe to the first question posed to him. Physically, everything is ready: the ballots, the polls, etc. And it has therefore been established that the elections will take place normally as scheduled, except for one part of Kivu, where certain problems regarding nationality must first be settled, [but] this will be done relatively quickly.

Prof Vunduawe replied in the negative to the question of whether the political criteria for eligibility were a distortion of Article 12 of the Constitution. This article of the Constitution declares that all Zairians are equal before the law. The political criteria for eligibility are in complete conformance with this law, as they are only subjective criteria for evaluation. No discrimination based on religious beliefs, regional affiliation, etc., is possible.

Within the context of decentralization, the powers of the administrator will not be hindered at all by the fact that the party takes precedence over the administration. Just as the colonial administrator had his vade mecum, which was a complete code of conduct, a good administrator under the current decentralization must act in conformance with party discipline and according to party directives; his work will only be better directed and better performed.

Despite the fact that many of our rural regions are deprived of good information media, and communications are made especially difficult due to the rains, the date set for the end of voter registration will allow all areas to be ready for the election. Practical arrangements have been made since then to avoid problems in this regard.

Every Zairian is required to vote; it is a civic duty no one must shirk. Although abstentions are spoken of in certain countries, this is not so in all the others for all elections. Our method is perfectly democratic and has its basis in our Constitution.

Compensation for those who will supervise voting operations has been provided for; some will be paid directly by the Department of Territorial Administration, and others by the governors of the regions. There is no need to worry about this: strict penalties will be set for those who try to avoid paying each person his salary. It must also be known that the administrators supervising the voting will be assessed. Here, Prof Vunduawe issued a strict warning against taking money from citizens who are registering to vote. Registration is free; anyone who charges for it must be denounced, and he will be penalized severely.

Experience from the 1977 elections has shown that many candidates exploited the naivete of the voters, promising them what they could not deliver. Thus, the current electoral campaign must be based on the MPR's [Popular Movement of the Revolution] program for economic and social development. The candidate must meet with his electorate so that they will know him, but he must not allow himself to make false promises to them. Besides, the electoral law provides for strict penalties for such acts.

Many questions regardint the electoral law and territorial decentralization were posed by journalists in the studio and by television viewers. The deputy prime minister and state commissioner for territorial administration, Prof Vunduawe, who has an excellent command of the subject, responded with a clarity and conviction which satisfied everyone. The Zairian people must expect a lot of the 1982 elections, which are launching a new era of democracy, for a more certain economic and social well-being.

ELECTED OFFICIALS OF 1977 FAILED TO KEEP PROMISES

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 13 Apr 82 p 2

[Text] As of Sunday 5 April, the mandate entrusted to the regional commissioners in 1977 expired. In Kinshasa, a decree issued by Governor Sakombi Ekope on the same day asked certain MPR [Popular Movement of the Revolution] officials to expedite current business in the political/administrative departments of the capital while awaiting the organization of elections.

When the occasion presented itself, we interviewed Citizen Lukau Massaka, former councilor for Kinshasa District, who, as we will see, has prepared a complete assessment of the mandate which the population in this district gave him and his colleagues 5 years ago.

A negative assessment? Our interviewee did not beat around the bush in confirming this in an edifying self-appraisal: "Nothing has been done in our district which, they make us believe, does not have the logistical or financial means to execute its projects. Personally, I promised the earth to my voters and to the people of Kinshasa District. But, unfortunately, I was neither district commissioner nor assistant."

To have a better district administration, Citizen Lukau feels, the district administrator must live with the people he administers in order to be aware of their problems, so as to be able to solve them one way or another. He thinks that the old electoral law was poorly written, because in the struggle to reach the post of regional commissioner, it very often worked against the candidate who received the most votes in the first round, to the benefit of the most intrigue-ridden and corrupt in the second.

"The opportunist who is propelled to the head of the region, and who knows that he just got through by the skin of his teeth, works with the well-defined intention of serving himself instead of serving those he administers," he noted.

This is the reason," continued the former Kinshasa district councilor, "that I praise the trusteeship's decision to appoint future regional commissioners from among elected university councilors. This is a beneficial measure, as these elected and appointed officials will have on their consciences the obligation to answer to the people who chose them and the administration which appointed them," he concluded.

EDITORIAL CALLS FOR STRENGTHENING OF MILITARY DISCIPLINE

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 14 Apr 82 pp 1, 8

[Editorial: "Strengthening Military Discipline"]

[Text] The first act of the trial of the Public Ministry vs Sergeant Major Tshomba, accused of the murder of a student at the Fine Arts Academy, ended Sunday evening. The verdict is now known: the death penalty.

While awaiting a possible second act which could come up in the case of an appeal to another court by one of the two parties, many facts are emerging which public opinion has been surprised to learn.

First of all, the accused is a member of the military police of the Zairian Armed Forces. In this capacity, he should not have anything to do with civilians. In the second place, he used a firearm against a citizen who was not carrying a dangerous weapon.

Beyond this trial, therefore, there is a whole group of rules and principles which must be placed in the context of time and space.

As we wrote in yesterday's edition, the agent of the law seems to have lost this protective power which he had within society; just the sight of a military uniform used to bring a feeling of security to honest men and of distress to criminals.

However, in recent times many things have changed. Parachutists, members of the road crew and the military police, and commandos are turning into policemen to check the identification cards of passers-by and to inflict penalties on those who don't have the required papers.

Confusion therefore seems to reign in the assignments of the various branches of the Zairian Armed Forces.

Furthermore, some agents of the law do not hesitate to mention their ranking leaders to cover their crimes, sometimes committed during nocturnal patrols without orders!

Efforts should be pursued by higher military authorities to chase from the Zairian Armed Forces all those who entered with the sole aim of having an official cover to extort the population, in the manner of the police who were caught by an officer in civilian clothes around 10 pm last Friday on the Kasa-Vubu bridge in the process of running checks without any ad hoc documentation.

Thus, military discipline should be reinforced so that the courageous Zairian Armed Forces are no longer tainted by the misdeeds of a few irresponsible persons.

CHANGE OF KINSHASA CITY'S MILITARY COMMANDER

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 19 Apr 82 pp 1, 10

[Article by Elonga Adjadje]

[Text] A parade was organized at Camp Lufungula on Saturday 17 April on the occasion of the ceremony marking the change in command on the military district of the city of Kinshasa. Col Bazenge Nzando was appointed to the post of commander of the 2nd Military District by departmental decree No 082/009 of 29 March 1982, replacing Col Longelo, who will occupy a position in the Zairian Embassy in Belgium.

Col Bazenge Nzando enlisted in the Zairian Armed Forces on 9 February 1962. He took training courses at the Infantry School in Arlon and at the Royal School of the Gendarmerie in Brussels. He is also a B parachutist. The new commander of the 2nd Military District has occupied several command posts in all regions of the country (except Kivu)--the 8th and 6th military districts (Shaba and Kasai-Oriental), among others. Must we add that he holds a Command School and Staff College certificate from the Advanced Military Training Center, third year? It is therefore in view of his experience that he has been appointed to Kinshasa.

In addition to senior officers, officers, noncommissioned officers, corporals, and soldiers of the Zairian Armed Forces, the ceremony on Saturday was enhanced by the presence of the governor of the city of Kinshasa, Citizen Sakombi Ekope, and of the chief of staff of the National Gendarmerie, Division General Mulamba Pene Lowa. General Lowa, who in fact presided over the ceremony, asked the officers, noncommissioned officers, corporals, and soldiers of the Zairian Armed Forces to recognize Colonel Bazenge as commander of the 2nd Military District and to obey him for the good of the service and in the execution of military regulations. In turning over the standard of Kinshasa District to the new commander of the city of Kinshasa, General Mulamba told him: "I am turning over to you the standard of the military district of Kinshasa. You will keep it and defend it with your life."

The major attraction of the ceremony was the parade of troops before the grandstand, where the interim regional commissioners of the city of Kinshasa also sat.

KENGE QUADRIPARTITE MEETING

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 22 Apr 82 p 8

[Text] Following is the continuation of resolutions on the quadripartite meeting which brought together recently in Kenge the governors of the regions of Bandundu, Kinshasa, Bas-Zaire and Equateur. The first part appeared in yesterday's [Wednesday's] edition.

Since the city of Kinshasa is the tributary from the interior for the basic agricultural products to be consumed by its citizens, regional governors and experts have recognized that food production from the surrounding rural regions (Bandundu, Bas-Zaire and Equateur) provides a surplus of certain basic staple products. They have established that the capital is currently undergoing a disturbing food shortage. This shortage is due to insufficient production, among other things. Basically, this insufficiency results from the following causes: disorganization in the interregional marketing circuit for agricultural products, degeneration of seeds, disregard for the agricultural calendar which brings about a lower yield, difficulty of access to certain producing localities due to poor condition of roads, bridges and ferries; poor training of the peasants due to lack of skilled staff and logistical means, lack of financial assistance and logistic support for the economic operators of the regions who provide for the movement of agricultural products out of the countryside.

Regarding the above, the quadripartite meeting is proposing to the executive board the following: provide regional agricultural input services and rehabilitate the seed centers in the three rural regions, grant credits to the dynamic economic operators who work in the regions, free for the rural regions the credits for rehabilitating agricultural roads.

The meeting also proposes setting up the agricultural development bank, and is directing the regional governors to enforce a strict application of Law 76-011 of 21 May 1976 concerning the special development effort, to facilitate the yearly supply to the city of Kinshasa by the rural regions of Bandundu, Bas-Zaire and Equateur, their food production surpluses; to establish and make known the lists of economic operators who in a regular, permanent way carry out the transportation of food products from their respective regions, to stimulate peasants to regroup into cooperatives, and to increase vigilance and border control in order to contain the fradulent outflow of agricultural and manufactured products.

Supplying the Three Rural Regions with Products Manufactured by the City of Kinshasa

As the Kenge conference partipants recognize that the city of Kinshasa is the main provider of manufactured products for the regions of Bandundu, Bas-Zaire and Equateur, they have emphasized the difficulties encountered by the economic operators of the three rural regions in getting supplies from the industrial producers and wholesalers of Kinshasa. This is the case especially for economic operators who benefit from the quotas of factories set up in the capital and in Bas-Zaire for sugar, wheat flour and cement.

The discriminatory policy practiced by the Kinshasa factory operators and wholesalers in the area of product distribution, and the obvious rerouting of the quotas allocated to the three rural regions by certain economic operators who prefer to sell them in Kinshasa, place the three rural regions in a situation of permanent shortage of manufactured products.

To these handicaps are added disregard for legal texts which govern the marketing of basic staple products, and the lack of business centers for manufactured goods for everyday consumption in the rural areas.

The quadripartite meeting proposes to the executive board the following: intervene in the reorganization of the existing distribution system for manufactured products in order to obtain a fair and reasonable distribution favoring the three rural regions, and to give full support to the economic operators of the regions who would proceed to supply the rural areas with basic manufactured products.

With the preceding in mind, the conference is directing each regional governor to put a stop to the lists giving the complex identities of the economic operators benefiting from the quotas in manufactured products, and to communicate them to the other regions.

The governors must also make the wholesalers and factory operators free all the quotas intended for the other regions.

The regional MPR presidents and regional governors are directed to strike from the lists of registered distributors those economic operators who have rerouted the quotas or who do not have activities in the region, to turn over to the merchandise receiving committee (created by the executive board) the control role for quota collection reserved for the different regions, based upon Decree AE/42/067 of 12 October 1970 concerning control measures to insure the supplying and distribution of goods.

The conference gives to the governors of the city of Kinshasa and the region of Bas-Zaire the responsibility for following and distributing the manufactured goods intended for the other regions of the economic pool (Kinshasa-Bas-Zaire, Equateur and Bandundu).

To make these resolutions operational, the regional governors make the firm commitment to give all their support to the economic operators of the other regions which supply the rural areas with basic manufactured goods, to provide for regular upkeep of roads important to the region, and those served by them, and of the bridges and ferries by the roads bureau and heads of communities, to provide their competent services in skilled and sufficient personnel, and finally to organize regularly at least three times a year (one time of which at the summit level) a quadripartite round table for the purpose of consolidating interregional trade relations.

In addition, the governor of Bandundu requested his colleague from Equateur to implement a quota system for beer and palm oil favoring the economic operators from Bandundu, especially those from the Kiri zone.

Security of Travelers and Merchants between Kinshasa and the Three Regions

The conference participants noted with indignation that the illegal existence of barriers is conducive to ransoming and harassment, of which travelers and merchants are often victims on access roads to the city of Kinshasa.

They denounced the existence of a great number of taxes and fines as well as the anarchy in the way they are collected.

The participants believed that not only do all these factors create insecurity on the part of travelers and merchants, but contribute as well to the raising of prices on the products market.

On this subject, the conference is giving to the regional governors the responsibility for strict compliance with the measure for the elimination of barriers on the roads and is directing them to clarify and coordinate the taxation systems in their respective jurisdictions so as to avoid multiple taxation for the same product. The conference is also inviting official carriers to effect control efforts which have been undertaken in order to contain thefts and harassment in the purchase of tickets at the time of travel and to speed up, under good conditions, the dispatching of products to their destinations.

PEASANTS LEARN RICE-GROWING METHODS WITH CHINESE HELP

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 14 Apr 82 p 14

[Text] We took advantage of the official visit of the head of the national rice program, Aile Bandundu, to the major city in the region to learn more about this program. For, as some people know, this program's center in the city of Kikwit, basically in the Lukolela region, is responsible for propagating and distributing selected seed varieties to the peasants, and thus indirectly involving them in the continuous practice of rice growing. So let us listen to Citizen Malengo Likimba Mbida, agricultural engineer.

"The National Rice Program center is operating thanks to the assistance of 11 Chinese cooperating officials, 100 state representatives, and some temporary help. In pursuit of the goal assigned to it by the Executive Council, the Kikwit center is involved in testing a total of nine foreign seed varieties provided by the FAO. This experiment will enable us to pinpoint those which will respond to the type of soil here, and then propagate them in order to serve our trainees (the peasants benefiting from our technical-cultural supervision).

"As for the varieties being distributed, there are IR 8 and KO 17 for irrigated rice growing, and R 66 for mountain rice. The distribution campaign is handled by our agricultural monitors stationed in collectives within our field of action, which includes the city of Kikwit and the subregion of Kwilu. At the beginning, the peasant involved receives a small tool (machete, axe, etc.) from the center. For each lesson, as well as at the end of the harvest, he pays a few cents to compensate in one way or another for the cost of the equipment received.

"With regard to the tracts developed, 87 hectares have been used for irrigated rice growing, with 797 peasants working them; while 5,161 peasants are growing rain (or mountain) rice on 3,910 hectares. To pay for the marketing of the fruits of the harvest, which sometimes rot in storehouses due to the lack of purchasers, the center has always participated in the rice harvest, which occurs each year at the beginning of April. At the end of the last harvest, 1,200 tons of paddy were purchased by our authorized department, thanks to resources allocated to the center. In the context of helping the peasant sell his product in order to raise his income, there is an interesting fact to note, which is that during the aforementioned harvest, a family managed to "make 9,000 Z in income in a single attempt for 15 tons of paddy, or 300 50-kilo sacks. This is adequate proof that the rice in the southern part of the region was done well. Its yield per hectare even exceeds that estimated by the soil scientist. This is interesting to us as supervisors.

"This is the reason why, to provide further encouragement, the price of a kilo of paddy for the harvest in progress has increased from 70 to 140 k. or has doubled. In any case, it must be noted that the tonnage collected by the center is husked on the spot before being placed on the market for immediate consumption or for industrial processing (in breweries, for example).

"According to reports furnished by our monitors, the total tonnage recorded for the last fiscal year was around 3,000 tons of paddy. It is also significant to note that in addition to selecting rice varieties, pig (130 head) and cattle (100 head) raising is also practiced on our Lukolela land.

"In conclusion, it is a matter of urging our trainees to double their zeal in their work, while observing the instructions given to them by our intermediaries (agricultural monitors) for uninterrupted continuity."

BELGIUM-ZAIRE TRANSPORT, COMMUNICATIONS NEGOTIATIONS

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 14 Apr 82 p 7

[Text] Mr Herman de Croo, Belgian minister of communications, posts, telephones and telegraph, arrived in Kinshasa on Sunday evening heading a large delegation to participate, beginning yesterday, in negotiations between Belgium and the Republic of Zaire in the areas of transportation and PTT. As he alighted from the plane, Mr De Croo was welcomed by the state commissioner for transportation and communications, citizen Mananga Dintoka Pholo; the Belgian ambassador to Kinshasa, Mr Van Bellhighen; the Zairian ambassador to Belgium, Citizen Kengo wa Dondo; and the heads of the various enterprises under the Department of Transportation and Communications.

Addressing the press, Mr de Croo stated that he was pleased to be in Zaire, a country for which he has a great deal of feeling, to discuss with Zairian authorities matters involving cooperation between the Kingdom of Belgium and the Republic of Zaire in transportation and communications. "The makeup of the Belgian delegation," he stressed, "reflects our concerns, which are directed toward the problems of transportation (upgrading the national network) and urban transportation in Kinshasa." Regarding the latter, representatives of three large Belgian firms are members of the delegation.

Discussions with the heads of the air route administration will deal with a number of problems regarding Zairian airports and the weather forecasting service. Air Zaire-Sabena relations will be studied, especially in regard to the transfer of funds belonging to the Belgian company which are still frozen in Zaire. Possibilities for cooperation in PTT services (telephones) and in the organization of postal services will also be examined. With this in mind, a Belgian expert in postal affairs is accompanying the minister. In short, for Mr de Croo it will involve resumption of an objective and constructive dialog in which the emphasis will be placed on communications, which are "the nervous system of a country." "I am coming to listen closely and to see what can be done in the area of cooperation, to become aware of the needs here, before engaging in the specifics of a joint agreement with the Zairian authorities. It is our concern to see all of Zaire benefit from this cooperation," he concluded.

During his stay in Zaire, the Belgian minister will meet with the state commissioners for foreign affairs, for PTT, and for finance, with the general commissioner for planning, and with the governor of the Bank of Zaire. He will go to Lubumbashi and Matadi, where he will visit the SNCZ [Zairian National Railroad Company] and Port of Matadi facilities.

At the opening of the sessions yesterday, the state commissioner for transport and communications defined the scope of the themes which reflect Zaire's priorities in the area of river, railroad, air, sea, and urban transportation, ZOFI (Inga Free Zone), and GEEP [expansion unknown].

JMPR INVITATION TO USSR REPORTED

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 21 Apr 82 p 8

/Text/ Last Monday, the secretary general of the Youth of the Popular Movement of the Revolution, citizen Nzanda-Buana Kalemba, received his excellency Mr Ivan Marchuk, Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary Ambassador of the USSR in Zaire, in an audience.

Following the audience, the Soviet diplomat indicated that his interview with the secretary general of the JMPR had dealt with the relationships of collaboration between the youth movement of his country and that of Zaire.

The first contacts between our two youth groups, he added, have been very fruitful so far, and the time has come to think about developing them with an eye to more active collaboration.

The two authorities also spoke of the next trip to be made to the USSR by a JMPR delegation upon that country's invitation.

Mr Ivan Marchuk stressed, moreover, that as youth is the most active fringe of a country's population, contacts between the youth of the USSR and that of Zaire will help contribute to the development of good relations between our two countries and our two peoples.

For him this visit was also an opportunity to become familiar with the activities conducted by the JMPR in the country's life in general.

Citizen Kaniki Mpiana, the national leader responsible for the JMPR abroad and for foreign relations, also participated in this interview.

ROMANIAN COMMUNIST YOUTH INVITED TO ZAIRE

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 29 Apr 82 p 2

/Article by Kongo /

/Text/ Last Monday, citizen Nvanda-Buanda Kalemba, secretary general of the JMPR, received Mr Octavian Lutas, Rumanian charge d'affaires in Zaire, in an audience.

Following the audience, the Rumanian diplomat informed the press of the visit to be made to Zaire in the near future by a delegation of the Communist Youth Union of Rumania. This is in response to an invitation extended by the JMPR since 1980. The date will be set through diplomatic channels.

Mr Octavian Lutas also mentioned the departure in the near future of three JMPR delegates to Rumania, where they will take part in an executive training seminar on youth organization activities.

The two leaders took advantage of this opportunity to discuss collaboration between the two youth groups.

CAPE VERDIAN OFFICIALS TO VISIT GUINEA-BISSAU

AB301252 Paris AFP in French 0857 GMT 30 Jun 82

[Text] Praia, 30 Jun (AFP)--A delegation of high-ranking Cape Verdian officials will visit Bissau at the end of July in order to arrange the modalities for reconciliation between Cape Verde and Guinea-Bissau.

During their meeting in Maputo (Mozambique) 2 days ago, the heads of state of the two countries--President Aristides Pereira and Gen Joao Bernardo Vierira--agreed to resume their relations which were suspended following the November 1980 coup d'etat in Bissau.

But it is good to advance with prudence and to take into account the new form that the relations will take in the future, President Pereira and Minister of Foreign Affairs Silvino da Luz stressed during an interview with an AFP correspondent.

As they explained, henceforth relations between Cape Verde and Guinea-Bissau will be based on ordinary relations between two states, whereas until November 1980, the relations between the two states reflected a particularly close nature; the African Independence Party of Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde [PAIGC] was the ruling party in Praia as well as in Bissau. The PAIGC undertook the struggle for the liberation of Guinea-Bissau and led it to independence in 1974. It did the same in Cape Verde, which won independence in 1975.

Subsequently, Cape Verdian President Pereira became the secretary general of the PAIGC and President Luis Cabral of Guinea-Bissau its deputy secretary general. The latter's overthrow and arrest on 14 November 1980 caused a break with Praia, where a new party was immediately formed--the African Independence Party of Cape Verde [PAICV].

According to President Pereira, former President Cabral, who has been in exile in Cuba since January 1982, could in near future settle in Praia with the consent of Bissau.

Despite the explosion within the party, Bissau has maintained the "historical and mystic" initials of the PAIGC, of which the last letter "C" representing Cape Verde constitutes one of the most delicate points of the dispute to be settled. For Praia, the maintenance of this "C" is an unacceptable interference into the internal affairs of Cape Verde.

Nevertheless, pragmatic, the Cape Verdians prefer to clear the ground before tackling this thorny issue. Preliminary meeting between delegations of the two countries will be held to solve the outstanding issues, essentially the problem concerning the ownership of the maritime company, NAUICAM, which in the past was owned by both countries as well as the problem of mutual debts and loans not yet settled.

These delegations will also arrange for the necessary mechanisms for the revival of their cooperation in the diplomatic, cultural, technical and economic sectors.

Cape Verdian authorities have insistently reaffirmed the everlasting nature of their bonds which were established during the struggle for independence and always insist on the oneness of political and cultural ideals between the two peoples, who are among the poorest in the third world.

Undoubtedly, there are many glaring difficulties between these two countries. First of all, geographically, Guinea-Bissau is on the continent while the 10 islands forming the Cape Verdian archipelago are more than 800 km away from it. Guinea-Bissau has a subtropical climate--very humid--while Cape Verde suffers from chronic drought.

These differences produce some effects on the economies of the two countries. The economy of Guinea-Bissau is principally based on agriculture, whereas in Cape Verde, in addition to enormous agricultural development efforts, interesting commercial and industrial expansion activities are underway.

In fact, even though the Cape Verdians assert that they belong to Africa and join all the continental and regional organizations, their geographical position, their ethnic composition, the influence of 4 centuries of Portuguese occupation and their temperament all push them in the direction of the Americas or Europe, where some 500,000 emigrants live, compared to a population of the Cape Verdian archipelago which does not exceed 300,000 people.

MINISTER ATTENDS BEAC BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING

Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 1 Apr 82 p 1

[Article: "Central Bank Debts on Chadian Treasury Examined by BEAC Board of Directors"]

[Text] Minister of Economy and Finance Gangbet Kosnaye returned Monday from Libreville, where he particiapted in the board meeting of the Bank of Central African States (BEAC). As usual, the ministers of finance of the five Central African countries united within the BEAC (Congo, Central African, Cameroon, Gabon and Chad) examined the financial situation of the region and of the Central Bank.

The BEAC board of directors also adopted some practical measures, such as the nomination of a national director for the Ndjamena office. The new director of the Ndjamena office is Idriss Ousmane, a Chadian executive previously employed at BEAC headquarters in Yaounde. Also with respect to Chad, the board further examined the problem of BEAC debts to the Chadian Treasury. The Chadian delegation asked whether these debts were considered "irrecoverable." It was not possible to settle the problem, and the board of directors suggested to the Chadian delegation that they submit the dossier to the bank authorities who will lay the matter before the heads of state of the monetary area.

In the Gabonese capital the minister of economy and finance also took part in a meeting relating to the establishment of a Central African Economic Community. This meeting, which brought together 11 countries, is the continuation of the last UDEAC [Democratic Union of African States] summit (December in Libreville) which approved the creation of an extensive economic system in order to strengthen cooperation between the countries of the subregion. This summit, in which President Goukouni Weddeye took part, confirmed Chad's intention to reinstate the UDEAC (Customs and Economic Union of Central Africa).

REGULATIONS GOVERNING ISSUANCE OF DIPLOMATIC PASSPORTS

Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 1 Apr 82 pp 3, 4

[Article: "Diplomatic and Departmental Passports Will Be Issued Only to State Agents on Official Missions"]

[Text] Abusive and anarchistic demands for the issuance of diplomatic and departmental passports prompted the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to react. In this connection, it recalls in a memorandum that these documents are governed by a presidential decree of 7 February 1975. This decree emphasizes that diplomatic and departmental passports are issued only to agents of the state on official missions. This memorandum sets the different conditions for possessing these travel documents.

A. Permanent Diplomatic Passports
--Members of the National Transition Union (ministers and acting ministers).
--Officials of the central administration for foreign affairs on official missions.

B. Permanent Departmental Passports
--Departmental directors named by presidential decree and on official missions.
--Officials and agents of the state other than career agents attached to a diplomatic mission or a consular post and under exceptional conditions, to their wives, minor sons (above the age of 15) and unmarried daughters.

C. Temporary Diplomatic Passports
--Permanent and deputy under-secretaries of the ministries.
--General managers of semipublic companies (on official missions).

It should be noted here that for reasons of convenience a permanent departmental passport is issued to these persons.

D. Temporary Departmental Passports
These are issued to deputy secretaries and departmental heads on official missions.

Temporary diplomatic and departmental passports confer a right to a single mission only and lose their validity once the bearer returns to the country.

Moreover, the wives of members of the National Transition Union government can claim by right only an ordinary passport issued by the national security directorate. The granting of the abovementioned protocol documents, however, is not a right but an exception on which the President of the National Transition Union government could give instructions to the state minister for foreign affairs and cooperation when wives accompany their husbands on an official mission.

These protocol documents must be returned to the state protocol department the minute the bearers lose the title which justified the granting of such a document. If they refuse, they will be compelled by all legal means.

Consequently, the persons concerned are urged to conform with the texts in force by submitting their requests to the state minister for foreign affairs and cooperation one (1) week in advance. The state minister for foreign affairs and cooperation would also appreciate widespread dissemination of this request.

PRESIDENT INTERVIEWED ABOUT 21 MAY ELECTIONS

President on Elections

Djibouti LA NATION DJIBOUTI in French15 Apr 82 pp 1, 14

[Interview with President Gouled Aptidon Hassan; date and place not specified]

[Text] In an interview granted to our brothers in the RTD [Radio Television Djibouti], a little more than a month before the general elections which will renew the legislative assembly, the president of the republic wished to recall the objective and spirit of the new method of nominating candidates for this election, as well as the role and responsibility of the People's Rally for Progress [RPP] in nominating candidates:

[Question] Mr President, recently the Council of Ministers adopted the electoral operations calendar for the legislative elections of 21 May next year. What are the differences that you have found with respect to the methods which you approved in 1977 (single constituency) and the old systems based on tribalism?

[Answer] The government effectively adopted the electoral operations calendar for the legislative elections of next 21 May because, as you know, the mandate of the present parliament comes to an end next year on 8 May.

The government will pay particular attention to applying the law so as to comply with this schedule.

A parliament of people's representatives chosen by the nation and animated by a common sentiment of national duty, and the defense of national sovereignty, cannot be compared to the so-called representatives of tribes or clans, who work for their own interests.

The results achieved thanks to the cohesiveness and national unity created in 1977 are considerable for our country, and this is true in all fields.
--education
--health
--the fight against thirst or the battle for water

--agriculture and fishing
--Africanization of the country's cadres, etc.

[Question] According to the law on general mobilization the RPP conducts national policy.

What will be its role in organizing and nominating the party's candidates?

[Answer] The law on national mobilization entrusts the People's Rally for Progress with responsibility for forming the country's general policy. Moreover, you followed its meetings last month in Tadjourah and Arta.

Within this framework, it is the job of its leading authorities (the political bureau) to nominate candidates to the next legislative elections.

These are servants of the nation who will present themselves to the people and, I hope, will win their approval.

[Question] Do you have a message to transmit to the people of the Republic of Djibouti?

[Answer] I have found, for some time now, that certain persons have been indulging in activities contrary to national unity by organizing tribally-based meetings.

Again I repeat that if we have reached the present stage of development, if we have succeeded in rejoining the other nations of the world, it is precisely because we have turned our backs on tribalism and clan spirit.

As long as I am your president, I will never permit the disintegration of the country.

I hope that those who think they will be able to have a seat in the future assembly because they come from or are supported by their tribes or groups will be enlightened to that effect.

The RPP is solid enough to give them a categorical denial.

Election Results

Djibouti LA NATION DJIBOUTI in French 15 Apr 82 p 14

[Text] Representation Proportional to the Number of Registered Voters

At the last Council of Ministers, the date of the elections for renewing the members of the National Assembly whose mandate ends next 8 May was set for 21 May 1982.

Organic law No 2/AN/81 of 24 October 1981 stipulates, in effect, that the elections must take place within 60 days of the expiration of the assembly members' mandate.

In order to permit all citizens of voting age to register in each district, a 5-month period from 1 October 1981 to 28 February 1982 was granted.

An order was given to all representatives of the republic and district heads to set up a mechanism to enable all voters to register. Exceptional material resources were given. All leading citiznes were mobilized, and communiques were run on radio and television in order to urge the entire population to register during the time limits.

Despite the 5-month period granted, the president of the republic wanted everyone without exception to be able to accomplish his duty as a citizen.

By an order of 11 March 1982, he also authorized an additional 15-day period from 13 March to 27 March inclusive.

The organic law of 24 October 1981 also provided in article 9 that each district be represented in proportion to the number of voters registered, as established by the last known revision or reorganization.

Following the 5-month, 15-day registration period, the results are as follows:

	Number of voters	Number of deputies
Djibouti	48,142	37
Tadjourah	7,425	6
Obock	5,099	4
Ali-Sabieh	7,992	6
Dikhil	15,939	12

In laying down the steps in the decree calling together the voters for 21 May 1982 and giving each district's representation, the president of the republic expressed his desire to be informed of the situation with the voters and in particular with the nomads, who would not have been able to register within the prescribed time.

LABOR LAUDS PRESIDENTIAL VISIT TO SENEGAL

Banjul THE WORKER in English 15 Jun 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Another Historic Visit"]

[Text] The President of the Republic, Alhaji Sir Dawda K. Jawara, has completed a week-long official friendly visit to the sister Republic of Senegal. The visit is historic in one sense and symbolic in another. For the former reason, it depicts the sovereignty and complete independence of both states which underscores the declarations of our President to the fact that the Senegambia Confederation doesn't affect our national identity as a sovereign and independent State.

Secondly, it symbolises the amity, biological and geographical relationships between the two peoples. It is in this light that we view the visit as historic. For, not only verbal, but practical moves have to be made to neutralize the adverse criticisms of the idea of the Senegambia Confederation.

Protocol-wise, it is expected that the President of the Republic of Senegal, Monsieur Abdou Diouf will reciprocate such visit to the Republic of the Gambia.

ACCRA COMMENTS ON CORRUPTION INVESTIGATIONS

AB301640 Accra Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 30 Jun 82

[Station commentary]

[Text] Over the past few months, Ghanaians have been literally flooded daily with reports on corruption in national life from workers and people's defense committees, the citizens vetting committee and the national investigations committee. Workers defense committees for example, have been exposing the embezzlement of public funds, waste and mismanagement in the system, while the proceedings of the citizens vetting committee show the extent to which various persons and business firms have been evading taxes. But it is not mere speculation to claim that there is widespread corruption in Ghana. In our recent historical experience, most Ghanaians formally remember the 4 June era as having erupted on to the scene to clean the country of corruption. But the Armed Forces Revolutionary Council [AFRC] Government at the time had very little time to deal fully with the problem, which is really of enormous dimensions. The 4 June era, however, taught ordinary Ghanaians that no one in the society can escape the demand for justice when the call comes, and that all must, at one time or another, account for whatever they do. Thirty-one December has brought back such possibilities of probity and accountability after the corrupt People's National Party [PNP] interlude. If 4 June, with all its limitations, is formally remembered as a period of accountability, then 31 December, which aims to go far beyond what 4 June did, must deal with all corrupt persons and groups in the country thoroughly and decisively.

It is no secret that corrupt activities of all kinds are carried out in various ways at all levels of the society. But these go on mostly among the topmost people in the country, and since no one is sancrosanct before the law, we expect all the corrupt ones to be brought to book. So far, the two major investigating bodies, the citizens vetting committee and the national investigations committee, have concentrated on those who can be regarded as the small fish in the whole corrupt setup. They have also focused only on Ghanaian nationals. There is need to move into the ranks of the big fish immediately. We are yet to hear the names of most of the topmost politicians and businessmen, the Syrians and Lebanese and big local companies, as well as the giant foreign companies. At the very least, the accounts and tax obligations of persons and companies must be totally scrutinized so that all Ghanaians will know the innocent ones, whom we shall commend, and the guilty ones who must be penalized.

In our bid to clean up our country of corruption, the impression must not be given that only small, weak and defenseless people are being investigated and punished, while the big shots in the country are free to carry on as usual. Can anyone guarantee before careful investigation that these top people and big companies are living up to their tax obligations and they are not involved in transfer pricing, the usual cheating device most foreign companies use? Ghanaians are waiting to see who appears before the citizens vetting committee and national investigations committee in the coming weeks. We hope the big fish are on the agenda and are coming up soon.

PNDC, OIL COMPANY OFFICIALS MEET

AN301940 Accra Domestic Service in English 1800 GMT 30 Jun 82

[Text] AGRIPECTO of Ghana, the oil-drilling company at Saltpond, is to sink two more wells within the next 18 months. During the period, the existing wells will also be redrilled for more oil. The cost of the project is expected to be about $60 million. This was disclosed by the general manager of AGRIPECTO of Ghana, Mr George (Roy), at a meeting between the Chief of Defense Staff, Brigadier Nunco-Mensah, and the President of AGRIPECTO International, Mr (Happerhigh), at Burma Camp today.

Mr (Roy) said by January 1984, the company will get between 6-8,000 barrels of oil a day as compared to the present 1,260 barrels. This, he said, will be about 35 percent of the country's daily oil consumption. The general manager said since 1980, all the crude oil from the Saltpond field has been shipped to the Tema Refinery for sale to the Ghana Government and about 1/10 of the cost paid for in local currency.

In his speech, the president of AGRIPECTO International, who is in the country following reports that the staff of the company in Ghana are being molested, expressed concern about their security. He said the success of the company in Ghana depends largely on the support it enjoys from the government and the people. Mr (Happerhigh) commended the company's employees, both foreign and local, for their countribution so far.

Replying, Brigadier Nunoo-Mensah, who is also a member of the Provisional National Defense Council [PNDC], noted that Ghana has a lot of natural resources yet to be tapped. It will need foreign investors to get these resources exploited for the benefit of the people. He emphasized, however, that while Ghana welcomes genuine foreign investment, it will insist on getting a fair deal when contracting agreements with foreign companies. The interest of the country, he said, should be protected.

On the safety of the staff of AGRIPECTO in Ghana, Brigadier Nunoo-Mensah gave the assurance that everybody in the country, including foreigners, will be protected. He asked the management of AGRIPECTO to report any harrassment or molestation of its staff to the authorities for appropriate action to be taken.

VALCO PLAN TO CUT PRODUCTION OPPOSED

AB191155 Accra Domestic Service in English 0700 GMT 19 Jun 82

[Press review]

[Text] The daily GRAPHIC examines the decision by VALCO [Volta Aluminum Company] to cut production by 20 percent, an action which would lead to redundancy of some employees, affect the consumption of power from Akosombo and reduce the country's revenue in that area.

The paper refers to the government's proposal for negotiations with VALCO that would lead to the restoration of the 20 percent cut envisaged. It also refers to the government's suggestion that such shutdowns occur in high cost and not in low cost facilities such as Kaiser and Reynolds in Ghana. The GRAPHIC then poses the question: Why should VALCO, fully aware of the enormous economic problems facing the country at the moment and efforts being made to streamline the economy, cut down production by 20 percent? The GRAPHIC wonders whether the action is in retaliation for recent press criticism against the activities of multinationals, in the country, in which case VALCO is trying to show that Ghanaians were paralyzed. If this is the intention, says the paper, then the massive demonstration yesterday by workers of TEMA in support of their colleagues of VALCO is a clear demonstration of their determination to ensure that they are still (?in position) to give way to a more rational approach to whatever problems that exist at the VALCO plant. The paper says the demonstration by the workers underscores the basic fact that attempts, whether overt or covert, to remove bread from the mouth of a hungry man is an act that must be deplored by all.

According to the paper, at the time of the demonstration, the resident manager of VALCO was presenting video equipment worth $8,000 to the University of Science and Technology with the remark that his company makes significant impact on Ghana's economy. The paper does not dispute this. It points out that the crux of the matter is not so much what VALCO has done for Ghana as what it could have done better for the country and cutting down production by 20 percent at this time cannot be described as a help.

The GRAPHIC hopes when negotiations between government and VALCO officials on the issue start next week, the same good will between Mr Kaiser and the late President N'Krumah at the ground-breaking ceremony for VALCO in 1964 will prevail so that a more agreeable solution can be found to the problem.

DEFINITION OF 'UNITY' IN OAU DISCUSSED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 25 May 82 p 1

[Editorial: "What African Unity?"]

[Text] The 19th anniversary of the founding of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) is being commemorated today. In fact, it was in 1963 that the heads of state and government and representatives of other African countries, already independent at the time, met to start a collective project which would express the aspiration of our peoples for independence and freedom.

Motivated by that ideal, they determined to act by combating colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism and all forms of exploitation of the wealth and natural resources of our countries.

Now that 19 years have passed, we may ask if history, made by men like us, has made a reality of that visionary dream which led to the creation of the OAU. The answer is: the balance sheet is frankly positive.

The OAU now has 51 member states.

The OAU is now an important international forum of unequaled influence in the discussion and solution of great problems of humanity.

However, not everything is rosy in that 19-year-old balance sheet; there is still much for which to struggle.

In fact, on our continent there are areas which are still experiencing the painful colonial night. In some instances, political independence has been no more than the hoisting of a new flag but with the flag of economic and political submission to imperialism continuing to wave. In other instances, as shown by the Sahara example, African countries showed a desire to replace the former colonizers and are now the ones who are colonizing their brothers.

Moreover, racism and apartheid are still a reality which is expressed by a regime which is discriminating, torturing and murdering southern African people; colonizing Namibia; creating, organizing and financing armed gangs to attack and destabilize neighboring countries and invade and attack border countries.

The economic and social panorama on our continent also presents many shadows. The foreign debt of African countries as a whole, which in 1970 came to $6 billion (210 million contos), exceeded $60 billion (2.1 billion contos) in 1981. One out of every four Africans is suffering from malnutrition. Illiteracy, poverty and disease are a scourge throughout the continent, serving as evidence of the influence of a heritage of more than 500 years of colonialism.

In view of all this and at a time when imperialism is launching the specter of an "OAU crisis," maneuvering those who are rotating in its orbit, inducing them to block any action toward organization; in view of all this, as we have said, we may ask the question: What African unity?

African unity means uniting against Africa's true enemies; colonialism, whether it presents itself with a non-African cloak or an African cloak. African unity has content and substance only in the struggle against the racist enemy, the apartheid regime; in the struggle against underdevelopment.

There is an example on the subregional scale: the SADCC [Southern African Development Coordination Conference]. In fact, this project is an indication that countries with diverse and in some instances quite different ideological positions, having made a correct identification of the enemy, have united in a program of concrete action aimed at economic and, therefore, political freedom.

African unity also implies that we convert mental decolonization into a battle, for true independence is also a denial of the concept and idea of the "metropole."

DUTCH DELEGATION LEADER STRESSES COOPERATION

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 10 May 82 p 1

[Article by Mariamo Adamo]

> [Excerpt] "The Kingdom of the Netherlands is prepared to undertake several specific activities to effectively reduce the SADCC [Southern African Development Coordination Council] member countries' dependence on South Africa," reaffirmed Jan Nico Scholten, chief of a Dutch parliamentary delegation, in his meeting yesterday with Armando Guebuza, resident minister in Sofala.

Jan Nico Scholten, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Dutch Parliament, arrived early yesterday morning for an official visit to the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique].

Within the SADCC projects, the Kingdom of the Netherlands will participate in the rehabilitation of the port of Beira. Because of its location, the port plays an extremely important role in the economic development of the countries in the region.

The Netherlands has already made 61 million guilders available to our government for this purpose. The sum will be used for technical assistance and acquisition of equipment to revise the technology of the cargo handling system, making it more flexible and more responsive to the traffic demands at the port of Beira.

Among other activities, Dutch support will include rehabilitation and improvement of the port's specialized terminals and installation of an efficient communications system in the country's second largest port.

With this visit to the port of Beira, the Dutch parliamentary delegation had an opportunity to observe and become familiar with the strategic nature of this Mozambican port at both national and regional levels.

In the delegation's meeting with the resident minister of Sofala Province, that high Mozambican party and government official emphasized the role of the Netherlands in support of the economic liberation of this zone of the continent.

DWINDLING FISH SUPPLIES IN MARKET NOTED

Reduced Quotas

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 15 May 82 p 2

[Excerpts] Supplies of frozen fish sent to shops, stations and PESCOM markets located in several Maputo city areas have dwindled. The manager of the enterprise marketing this product told our reporters that the depletion of stocks in the PRESCOM warehouse caused the decrease.

To help the situation resulting from the stock depletion in the PESCOM warehouses, that enterprise has recently been delivering "Magumba" frozen fish to its small shops in several areas of the city.

Under normal conditions, they distributed 2,000-2,200 kg. daily to the stores, while the stations received between 1,000 and 1,300 kg.

According to information given by the PESCOM manager, the average daily quantity the company is now distributing to the small shops is around 800 kg.

According to the same source, no one knows when the situation will return to normal, because it is not known just when the ship with that consignment will arrive.

Reserves Exhausted

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 22 May 82 p 2

[Text] A shipment of 1,248 kg of frozen fish will be sold today in Maputo's consumer cooperatives. This amount is much less than what PESCOM normally supplies, as a reliable source from the fishing products state enterprise reported This reduction is due to the depletion of reserves in that company.

TROUBLING DROP IN RICE PRODUCTION IN NAMPULA NOTED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 25 May 82 p 3

[Article by Edmundo Matos]

[Text] Rice production in Nampula has dropped in recent years. Serious problems in the supply of this product to the province's people are an immediate consequence of this production drop. The information we are publishing below--sent by an RM [Radio Mozambique] journalist in Nampula--gives some enlightening figures and, at the same time, suggests the need to study possible means of action to solve the problem.

In our country, rice, in addition to other products, is considered a strategic source of nourishment for the people.

There is a tremendous shortage throughout Nampula Province, not only because the country's total production is not taking care of the present needs but also because its production in this area in recent years has been astonishingly insignificant. We have only to consider that in the last harvest only 645 of the 4,353 tons forecast were marketed. Only AGRICOM marketed 97 tons and the agricultural cooperatives none.

Certain information indicates that in past years Nampula Province as a whole managed to market more than 10,000 tons; if that quantity were obtained now, it could mean an appreciable improvement in the supply of rice to the people.

What Is Happening After All?

Without attempting to give a convincing or definite answer on the problem of rice in Nampula, we shall now give some enlightening figures on this serious problem.

Mogovolas, Mecuburi, Murrupula, Ribaue, Angoche and Moma are some of the principal rice producing districts in the province. In some of them, certain relatively improved production methods are even used and, in a few instances, there is limited irrigation. In Nampula Province there are also those who, while still included in the so-called family category, are considered small-time producers, planting areas of 5 to 10 hectares.

The production of both categories has dropped to the point where a farmer now gets only 250 to 300 kg of rice per hectare.

A shortage of good seeds and 3 successive years of drought are part of the cause for the present poor performance. The shortage of rice could also be due to a lack of machinery and inadequate maintenance of that which is presently available; finally, it is caused by high production costs and low market prices and other production factors.

In Nampula, rice is sown between November and January and harvested in April, May and June.

Inasmuch as the prices obtained through state marketing are low for the rural producers, the producers market the product through itinerant brokers from the province's coastal areas--namely, Nacala, Mozambique Island and Memba, areas considered short of rice.

These itinerant brokers either trade for the rice with products such as fish, oil, soap or others in short supply to the farmers or purchase a 60-80-kg bag of rice for a price of 1,500 to 2,500 meticals. For example, we know that last year such brokers marketed little more than 1,000 tons.

As can be deduced, Nampula can become self-sufficient in rice if measures are studied and taken for that purpose, some of which relate to the availability of production tooling, better seeds and the establishment of a specific program for marketing the rice.

MACHEL IN GRENADA: WE CAN HAVE AFRICAN SOCIALISM

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 25 May 82 p 1

[Article by Mia Couto and Gulano Khan]

> [Text] "The banner of cooperation is hoisted and will wave forever in Grenada and Mozambique," President Samora Machel said Sunday in a press conference held with the Grenada news media at the conclusion of his 2-day visit to this Caribbean country.

"We came to Grenada and Nicaragua to express our thanks and greetings for the contribution both revolutions have made to revolutionary theory and practice throughout the world," the Mozambican head of state said.

"In Grenada as in Nicaragua, the revolutionary vanguards have learned to identify their enemies correctly, to unite and organize the people and build new societies," he said.

Answering a question on South Africa's role in destabilizing the Mozambican revolutionary process, Samora Machel replied that the apartheid regime has always opposed the struggle for independence and "was an unconditional ally of Portuguese colonialism." He related how the two governments participated in oppression and aggression against the Mozambican people.

"After the overthrow of colonialism, South Africa acted through Ian Smith's Rhodesia. With the advent of independent Zimbabwe, South Africa had to make a direct appearance," he said, "and, therefore, South Africa is recruiting, training, financing and equipping groups of bandits who are sabotaging our economy.

"There is no opposition in Mozambique. There is banditry organized by South Africa which is using former agents of colonialism to spread terror and instability.

"We do not have what is called resistance. Rather, there is part of the southern African army which is attacking our country," Samora Machel said.

A journalist asked what FRELIMO's attitude is regarding the myth which contends that socialism is a theory and a system foreign to the African continent.

The head of state was to answer with the following question: "And is capitalism possible in Africa?

"I am a communist. I am carrying on the revolution. I believe in the people's capability, genius, strength and intelligence. History is made by people and has its own laws. I am a materialist. I am not an idealist."

He then added: "That myth is identical to the myth of racial superiority. It is an offshoot of racism. It was said that blacks could not fight and conquer. We fought and conquered. Now they are saying that blacks cannot decide their own fate. That they do not think for themselves and have to have someone put ideas into their heads."

Maurice Bishop, who was accompanying President Samora Machel at the press conference held late Sunday evening, then proceeded to answer certain questions posed by the Mozambican press.

"There are objective conditions which are making the popular and anti-imperialist struggle stronger in the Caribbean and Central American area," Grenada's prime minister said.

"Ronald Reagan's desperation is causing him to give military support to extremely unpopular regimes, as is happening in El Salvador," he said. Bishop called imperialist intervention a frustrating effort, since more Grenadas, more Nicaraguas and more Cubas will emerge."

Speaking about the results of the present visit of a Mozambican delegation, Bishop said: "We have strengthened the relations we had recently established and, from now on, we shall increasingly find new forms of cooperation.

"We have a common history; we have the same enemies and the same friends; and we have the same destiny. These bonds are unbreakable. They will never divide us," he asserted.

Expressing himself with visible emotion, Maurice Bishop acclaimed President Samora Machel and the profound understanding which "led him to bring solidarity to an area where imperialism wants to destroy emerging revolutions."

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 May 82 p 8

[Text] The National Air Transport and Utility Company (TTA) will acquire a new fleet composed of nine planes this year. As the company's administration revealed, the airplanes are intended to reinforce the communication ability of Mozambican light aviation in the various fields of its activity.

The first of the nine planes, a jet with eight seats, will arrive in Mozambique in mid-July. For this purpose, two chief pilots and the same number of TTA mechanics will leave the day after tomorrow for Great Britain, the country making the aircraft.

The four TTA specialists will leave for that country to test this plane, after which they will ship it to Mozambique.

Sending the plane's crew also serves to provide greater technical skill in handling that type of aircraft, which is the first of its kind in the People's Republic of Mozambique.

Bought in England, the aircraft is basically intended for specialized charter passenger transportation service.

As TTA manager Commandant Fernando Natividade also disclosed, the SADCC [Southern African Development Coordination Council] member countries may also use this plane for transportation, without, however, excluding other countries on our continent.

The plane, basically considered as a service medium, whether in the area of SADCC relations or for transferring high authorities from our government, is equipped with a telephone communication system which makes possible an immediate connection with any place in the world.

The connection can be made both in full flight and on land by merely dialing the desired number.

The other eight planes will be bought in Great Britain and Sweden (four in each of these countries), in accordance with the agreements signed between TTA and those European countries.

It is a matter of Turbo-Islander aircraft, turboprop planes, four of which are intended to strengthen the passenger fleet and the others for aerial agricultural work. The passenger planes can seat nine.

The eight Turbo-Islander planes are equipped with a navigation system which enables them to utilize petroleum for fuel, rather than only special gasoline generally used in aircraft and very rarely found on the market.

That the nine planes use petroleum, according to the TTA manager, is a major factor which will result in markedly reducing the operating costs.

The passenger planes will increase the frequencies of TTA flights and make possible the opening of new routes in other places in the country.

Jointly with the agricultural planes they will acquire a set of equipment with a view to converting the other three agricultural planes into using petroleum rather than special gasoline as fuel.

With the acquisition of nine more planes, the TTA operational fleet will increase from 45 to 54 units. The agricultural planes, about to be acquired, will double the operational capacity of the present airplanes in service.

Cooperation With Sweden

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 21 May 82 p 8

[Excerpt] In the very near future, a joint Mozambican-Swedish company will be established in the light aviation sector. In fact, a study is now underway to verify its economic feasibility, and as our reporters at the TTA headquarters learned, the decision is to be reached by September.

Should its establishment be feasible, the company's function, among other activities connected with subsoil economic resources, will be to engage in aerial photography, geophysical prospecting and to further oil prospecting in the sea. The above-mentioned enterprise, which is contingent on the economic feasibility study now underway, could render an important service in patrolling the fishing grounds in the waters under RPM jurisdiction.

As TAA manager Fernando Natividade already mentioned, the proposed joint company could perform an important role in the exchange of crews with ocean liners which daily pass through the Mozambique Channel.

This activity would constitute a considerable source for acquiring foreign credit for the country. Should the establishment of the company become feasible, the Mozambican Government will recover a large part of the invested capital.

An important benefit of this project is that the reimbursement of capital which Sweden invested will be made in national currency rather than in foreign currency.

This contract will enable Sweden to undertake the work outside Mozambique, so as to assure the necessary reimbursement, in this case, in national currency.

All work done in the RPM will be paid in national currency, except for some contracts for services rendered in Mozambique by foreign countries, whose payment, as an exception, is to be made in foreign currency.

Secondly, the feasibility study now under consideration, represented by a group of companies, will guarantee the technical-professional training of Mozambicans.

This, said the TAA manager, will enable Mozambican light aviation to gradually reduce its dependence on foreign countries for personnel in this special sector.

ELECTRICITY TO BE SUPPLIED TO CATEMBE AREA

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 7 May 82 p 3

[Text] The Umbeluzi-Catembe power line to supply electricity to the Catembe locale is in an advanced stage of construction, according to a note that reached our desk from Mozambique Electric. The line will also benefit the communal village now under construction in the same locale.

The town of Catembe is currently served by a small and old diesel-fueled power plant that belongs to the Marine Services and is installed near the dredging operations maintenance shops.

The town is supplied with water by means of small electric and diesel pumps.

According to the note, three electric pumps will be installed at the site of the diesel pump, substantially improving the distribution of water to that urban center.

It is also planned to supply electric power to the military installations at Ponta Maone, near Catembe.

The power line originates in Umbeluzi, where there are plans to construct a 60/33 kw substation. The path of the line crosses the Umbeluzi and Tembe rivers.

According to the same source, at high tide the Tembe River overflows its banks for almost 2 kilometers, hampering progress on the construction.

The behavior of the tides does not permit use of wooden posts in this area, since they would deteriorate rapidly. The note adds that only reinforced concrete can be used for the posts.

Because the terrain does not offer favorable conditions, the sand, rock and cement to build the foundations for the posts must be brought in by hand over distances often exceeding 2 kilometers.

All these factors, combined with the shortage of manpower, the inexperience of the workers involved in the project and the lack of equipment, primarily of rubber boots, have greatly hampered the progress of the operation.

DROPOUTS, DISPARATE NATIONALITIES AFFECT NIGHT COURSES

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 6 May 82 p 4

[Article by Fausto Henrique]

> [Excerpts] "The solution to the problem of dropouts among night school students in the middle of the school year, which is now occurring at the Industrial Institute of Maputo, is not only greater engagement by the students themselves but also a real assumption of the commitment made by the companies and services in which they are employed." So said Maomed Naguib Omar, director of that training institute, in an interview with our newspaper.

The director said that in recent years there has been a large number of dropouts from the evening courses at the institute. As an example, he noted that last year, the first year of the institute, over 130 students matriculated, and in this school year, the second year, only about 88 students were graduated.

"I think this situation should be examined by the companies, because our government has made an investment in these students, and if the results are unsatisfactory, it is precisely because of the dropouts," Omar declared.

He later said there were cases, even this year, in which certain companies abandoned the commitment they had assumed with the industrial institute, that the students would subsequently be sent abroad for courses.

"These companies should consider this aspect in their plans for their labor force before they send their workers to the institute," said director Omar.

Referring to the current teaching situation at the industrial institute, Omar said the programs are generally being carried out.

The director added that, not counting dropouts, the average attendance in the establishment has normally been 90 percent.

Regarding the teaching methods used here, he noted that they have created some problems in grading students because of their diversity.

He said that because the institute's instructors have come from several countries, their teaching methods vary according to their nationalities.

"It is a problem which we are attempting to overcome with the faculty groups" he added.

TRADE UNION OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON GDR, CZECH VISITS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 10 May 82 p 3

[Report on press conference with Rafael Manhalombe, secretary of the CNICP, on 8 May, location not indicated]

> [Excerpts] "Unions and union leaders throughout the world are concerned about and condemn the armament policy pursued by the imperialists," declared Rafael Manhalombe, member of the Executive Secretariat of the CNICP [National Commission for Implementation of the Production Councils], speaking at a press conference last Saturday after participating in the proceedings of the labor congresses of Czechoslovakia and the GDR in April.

The secretary of the CNICP National Committee for Control and Discipline said the key topic of the proceedings of the Czech and GDR congresses, both meeting for the 10th time, was the arms race and maintenance of world peace.

Attendance Worth While

Describing the benefits of Mozambique's participation in these meetings, Manhalombe said that his delegation met with union leaders of several countries, who expressed an interest in cooperation with the production councils in our country.

Notable among these contacts were those with the UTA [Union of Angolan Workers], INTERSINDICAL of Portugal, the SACTU [South African Congress of Trade Unions] and a Namibian delegation, in addition to the formal discussions with many other delegations from African and European countries.

Regarding the UTA contacts, the CNICP secretary said that "from what we could conclude, both parties are interested in establishing solid cooperation."

Regarding INTERSINDICAL of Portugal, Manhalombe said the leaders expressed an interest in learning about our country and "could outline specific cooperation programs with us. We will take up this matter in the future," he said.

In conclusion, the CNICP official stated that, in addition to a valuable exchange of experiences, "we were able to analyze the work undertaken in the area of professional training in the GDR and Czechoslovakia." He noted that from January to April, 10 Mozambican workers attended a training course at the Central School of the FDGB [Free German Trade Union Federation] in the GDR. In addition, other Mozambican agricultural workers should go to Czechoslovakia for training this year.

BRIEFS

RWANDAN OFFICIAL FOR COOPERATION--"My visit to Mozambique is within the framework of Rwanda's foreign policy of friendship and cooperation among member countries of the OAU, and we are sure that broadening the political cooperation between our two countries is the correct path way to solid cooperation between the two nations," Francois Ngarukiyintwali, foreign affairs minister of Rwanda, said yesterday in Maputo. The rwandan chief of diplomacy has been in Mozambique since Saturday on a working visit, accompanied by a high-level delegation. Yesterday the minister met with Joaquim Chissano, our foreign affairs minister. Speaking at a press conference, Ngarukiyintwali stressed that "political cooperation between Rwanda and Mozambique, based on an exchange of experiences between our two countries, will enable us to establish solid economic cooperation. Only by knowing the potential of our partner will we be in a position to see the areas in which we can establish mutually advantageous cooperation," he noted. The Rwandan foreign affairs minister said that in the conversations with his Mozambican counterpart, they discussed the possibilities for bilateral cooperation. "I listened with great interest to what Minister Chissano had to say on this subject, because Rwanda is seeking to establish inter-African cooperation. USSR, BULGARIA PHOTO EXHIBITION--A photography exhibition illustrating the capital cities of the USSR and the People's Republic of Bulgaria was inaugurated yesterday afternoon in the capital by Maj Gen Antonio Itama Thai, president of the Executive Council of the City of Maputo. Attending the inauguration were the charges d'affaires of the embassies of the People's Republic of Bulgaria and the USSR in Mozambique, along with diplomatic representatives of other countries to the People's Republic of Mozambique. The exhibit contains photographs of Moscow and Sofia and other pictures showing President Samora Machel's party and state visits to the two brother countries. "This exhibition is within the framework of cooperation between the FRELIMO Party and the parties of the two brother countries. It will enable us to become familiar with life in these cities and with their social and economic development, so that, in the future, we can use their experience as an inspiration in the development of our cities," noted the president of the Executive Council of the City of Maputo, speaking informally during the inauguration of the exhibit. EXPLOSION NOT RESULT OF SABOTAGE--One child was killed and five were wounded, three of them critically, as a result of an exploding grenade. The incident occurred day before yesterday in the middle of the practice range at the Mapulango Club, in the Marracuene district of Maputo, it was reported by district administrator Aurelio Sumbane. There is a firing range in the Mapulango Club, where the People's Forces conduct their training, which includes the use of grenades and explosives. "Day before yesterday some units of the People's Forces were training there. Some grenades failed to detonate and were not recovered at the end of the training. Children in the Mapulango neighborhood were at the field playing with the grenades and one of them exploded. One of the children was killed instantly and the other five were injured," Sumbane reported. "This was not a matter of enemy action, as many people in the Marracuene district thought, but was an accident," said the administrator. Of the five children injured in the incident, three were admitted to the Marracuene Health Center and the others were treated and sent home. An investigation is now underway to determine responsibility for the incident. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 8 May 82 p 3] 6362

CUBAN DECORATION TO MACHEL--Yesterday the Jose Marti National Order, the highest decoration in the Republic of Cuba, was awarded to Marshal Samora Machel, chairman of the FRELIMO party and president of the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique], who is on an official and friendly visit to that socialist country of Latin America. The Jose Marti Order recognizes the superior merits of the Mozambican leader on behalf of his country, the struggle for peace, democracy and progress. The ceremony was presided over by Fidel Castro, top leader of the Cuban revolution, and the event was held late yesterday afternoon in Havana. On the previous presidential visit to Cuba in October 1977, President Samora Machel was decorated with the Playa Giron National Order in recognition of his contribution to the struggle for his country's independence, for freedom struggles throughout the world and for strengthening relations between the Mozambican and Cuban peoples. On his present visit to Cuba, the Mozambican head of state will visit various places of historic, economic and political interest in Havana, including the Isle of Youth special municipality where a number of Mozambican students are sojourning in that Latin American country. Coming from Grenada, President Samora Machel arrived in Havana early Monday morning for a 4-day visit at the invitation of Fidel Castro, president of the Councils of State and Ministers of Cuba. IMPROVED BATTERY PRODUCTION--"About 1.5 million medium-size household batteries, produced by Tudor which resumed operations at the beginning of this month, have already been placed on the market. As for automotive and industrial-type batteries, the branch which produces this product expects to resume production by July; at present, that production line is completely shut down due to a shortage of raw material," Arlindo Pimentel, the firm's general manager, told our newspaper. According to the same official, about 800,000 family-type batteries will be placed on the market by next week, and it is hoped that this quantity will minimize the effects of the shortage of this article. TUDOR's general manager also said that the production of automobile batteries is not being resumed until July because raw material for that sector has not yet arrived. That material is scheduled to arrive some time in June. To alleviate the shortage of batteries on the national market, steps were taken to import batteries in the finished state, according to Arlindo Pimentel. In his opinion, the lack of battery production, shut down since October 1981, has seriously affected various priority sectors, the most important of which are agriculture and defense. TUDOR's general manager also said that the raw material presently on hand at that production branch will only provide for 2 month's work inasmuch as the quantity is very small. As a result of the above factors, TUDOR will not complete its export plans for this year. The firm was supposed to export about 12,500 batteries to the Republic of Tanzania. TUDOR is the only firm of its kind in the country and is capable of producing more than 25 million household batteries of various sizes and about 60,000 industrial batteries per year. GDR YOUTH HARVEST PARTICIPATION--A brigade of GDR's FDJ (Free German Youth) is leaving today for Chokwe. It arrived in our country last Sunday to take part in the rice harvest of the Limpopo Agroindustrial Complex [CAIL], according to information from the National Secretariat of the Mozambican Youth Organization [OJM]. According to the secretariat, the arrival of the FDJ brigade is in keeping with the existing agreement between the FDJ and the OJM, which calls for an exchange of brigades and joint collaboration in voluntary work. The brigade is called the "Karl Marx," and it is composed of 20 members who are to work at two branches of CAIL for about 3 months. According to Rolf Muller, FDJ adviser to the OJM, and Rolf Raeert [as published], head of the brigade, this is the third time that a voluntary FDJ work brigade has participated in the rice harvest of the complex. They also advised that, in addition to the technical work, they will be cooperating with the OJM in putting on movie sessions and promoting other social activities. OPPOSITION'S OPPORTUNISM MAY PLAY INTO SWAPO HANDS

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 4 May 82 p 6

[Editorial: "Quo Vadis With the Status Quo?"]

[Text] The Nationalist Party of the South-West, which in the early 1970's was announcing with a great deal of enthusiasm that it was going to change the status quo in the South-West, has since then gradually become the apostle of maintaining this so-called status quo.

In contrast with the DTA [Democratic Turnhalle Alliance] which with careful judgment has had to change the social, political and national order of things in the South-West and also has had to reconcile all the other truths (from the far Right to the far Left) with each other, and as long as there was merit for this, the Nationalist Party of the South-West has had its eyes fixed mainly on the ballot box by exploiting apartheid sentiments existing among its followers.

When they finally saw that they could not halt the dynamic course of change and the re-creation of the South-West's framework they took refuge in the slogan of "Maintain the status quo!"

The irony of this slogan is that they are not propagating the status quo as a policy, but as an interim measure to last until the day of independence. If we were to lend an ear to this sort of thing it would mean that the entire development process in the South-West would be delayed and crippled by a little group of people lacking an imaginative policy and this in an Africa where fine thinking and dynamic management are necessary against the onslaught of the Communist bloc.

Maintaining the status quo would become an excellent weapon in the hands of SWAPO and of other groups intent on changing the order of things in a revolutionary or semi-revolutionary manner. The South-West's Nationalist Party, with its inborn shortsightedness, is thus willing to endanger the whole preservation of democracy for the sake of a very temporary conservation of the present system.

A political party could certainly not be any more reckless than this and there is certainly not a surer method of seeing to it that the advocators of an evolutionary developmental process will come out second best in a political trial of strength against revolutionary forces.

The white Executive Committee, which now advocates maintaining the status quo regarding third level authorities (and thus these authorities must remain under the authority of white administration and not be transferred to the central government's control) is now conducting nothing more than a campaign of confusion at the expense of logical change.

In the first place if the central government is the responsible authority from which third level authorities must receive what is promised to them, this does not represent a threat to anything or anybody. Goodness knows the reason why government money ought to be channeled from the central government to third level authorities via white administrations instead of doing so directly.

In the second place it is foolish to mix policy and purely administrative arrangements. The white Executive Committee is implying on the one hand that the status quo must be maintained because a change would lead to unrest; on the other hand it is being said that the status quo must be maintained because it is impractical to put into practice the transfer of authority at a time other than the closing date of the fiscal year. These are different matters having different merits, or lack of merits, which are being thrown together. Finally one wonders whether the white Executive Committee really fails to realize that it is casting a reflection of arrogance upon itself in wanting to advocate the maintenance of the state of affairs in which it (the white administration) must wield authority over other institutions, which in their turn have authority over members of the public, an authority which belongs to all the population groups of the country.

SKEPTICISM VOICED ON 'PROGRESS' IN RESOLVING PEACE PROBLEM

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 18 May 82 p 6

/Editorial: "More Consideration Is Necessary"/

/Text/ We find it encouraging that the U.S. deputy secretary of state for African Affairs, Dr Chester Crocker, once again sees hope for a solution of the South-West Africa problem.

Dr Crocker stated that the West's peace plan for the South-West, which according to presentations made for it last week appeared as though was running into difficulties, could still be applied in time this year thanks to the considerate attitude which has been shown by all parties concerned.

What Dr Crocker really wanted to convey here is that SWAPO, which has always been a party to this, after all its obstructive actions has finally started to assume a somewhat positive attitude.

But we cannot allow ourselves to be altogether bluffed by this. SWAPO has made fake concessions at least 10 times before whenever things have appeared to be on the verge of collapse.

Evidently this is a finely honed Russian tactic for the South-West problem and to be sure for the southern Africa situation.

However, it would be foolish of the South-West and of the Southwesterners to believe that the entire foreign involvement in the South-West problem would not be able to force SWAPO into a corner and have it take part in a free election. No matter how clear it may be that Resolution 435 has failed, the near impossibility itself is not altogether impossible. It is possible that the impasse on Resolution 435 can still be broken at the 11th hour. But then we will have to be ready for the consequences.

However, we would like Dr Crocker and all the others involved to realize here and now that the Southwesterners will not simply start applauding any indications of progress which may be dangled before their eyes in the process of independence.

All of them must give serious consideration to the following things:

1. The Southwesterners (by far the majority of them) have struggled for more than 5 years to obtain independence for the country in a peaceful way. To say the least, in the process of doing so these people have been ravaged and ruined by delays and they have been the ones who have been accommodating and have made concessions all along.

A setup in which they would simply be put through an election mill in a helter-skelter manner just cannot be accepted. After all their collaboration in past years it is necessary that their demands, which they have made right from the beginning, should at least be listened to.

2. One of their strongest requirement, on which they can and may insist with all the right in the world, is that the elections must be just. This is the crux of the matter.

It is absolutely senseless to believe that the people of the South-West will agree to the holding of an election in which they would have to fight both against Russian-backed opponents as well as the UN and the Frontline States.

3. It is nice to hear that Dr Crocker and his Western colleagues have encountered goodwill everywhere; however, the silence regarding the goodwill of the UN is worrying us the most! There is no sign of consideration at all for the people of the South-West from the UN.

4. It is strange that now there is such a sudden flickering up of the entire settlement plan after it appeared that the entire offensive has ended up in quicksand.

It was only a week ago that the leaders of the South-West put it very much to the point that they are now sick and tired of feet dragging with the resolution of the problem. Now suddenly there are favorable considerations and good reactions.

Perhaps we should have reached the end of our patience a long time ago! If now one could only assume that we are not going to be satisfied with a hastily conceived consolation prize.

The internal population has never been unreasonable and in the midst of this goodwill it will not be unreasonable either. However, the inescapable aspect of reasonableness and justness towards this population is not going to be neglected under any circumstance.

FIRST CONFEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO BE FORMED FOLLOWING GAMBIAN ELECTIONS

Paris LE MONDE in French 8 May 82 p 7

[Article by Pierre Biarnes]

> [Text] The president of the Supreme Court of Gambia announced on Thursday 6 May that Sir Dawda Jawara had been reelected president of the republic with 72.4 percent of the votes case in Tuesday's and Wednesday's ballots. The president's People's Progressive Party obtained a majority in parliament, winning 27 of the 35 seats up for reelection in the 49-member House.

Banjul--Eight months after the Senegalese armed forces reinstated him as Gambia's chief of state, President Jawara was hospitalized in Dakar due to a helicopter accident (LE MONDE 24 April); he returned to Banjul last week-end.

His only opponent in the presidential election was Sherif Dibba. Mr Dibba was implicated in July's abortive coup d'etat, but as he was not sentenced, he was able to run for election. Mr Dibba--the leader of the main opposition party, the National Convention Party (NCP)--is still in jail.

The population is still traumatized by this unprecedented explosion of violence in this peaceful former crown colony, known for its liberal customs. Mr Dibba--whose complicity with Kukoi Samba Saniang and the other rebels of 30 July 1981 is far from proven, but who would have been the main beneficiary of a successful coup--was unable to campaign. The 27.6 percent of the vote which he received under the circumstances bears witness to his genunine popularity.

The PPP's success was also tempered in the legislative elections, which were held 2 days before the presidential elections. The NCP managed to retain three of the five seats it had in the outgoing assembly, and five independent candidates--persons who were members of the PPP until recently, but ran independently when they were not endorsed by it--were also elected.

In Dakar there is already interest in the changes expected to be made soon in the government, as well as in the setting up of the first Senegambian institutions. To consolidate his regime independently of Senegalese political and military support, President Jawara must begin a fight against corruption. To do this he must make considerable changes in the leadership. Persons in privileged positions who see their privileges threatened are doing all they can to postpone the day of reckoning.

A constitutional amendment could permit the establishment of the post of prime minister. Names have already been suggested for this post including Minister of Justice Lamine Saho; Governor of the Central Bank Sherif Cessay; and the young minister of information, Bakary Demba Darbo. These three are usually considered close to the Senegalese.

The Senegalese Embassy in Banjul, presided over by Mbaye Mbengue--a veteran diplomat and former trade union leader--has been acting as proconsul since last summer's events, although those involved deny it. The embassy refuses to take the place of the Gambian authorities, but it admits that it gives "advice," sometimes pressing advice. It preaches national unity, in other words indulgence for Sherif Dibba and his associates accused of the coup. Dakar certainly does not mind the fact that the PPP did not win by a landslide, nore does it object to the presence of a dozen members of the opposition in the new assembly. In fact, the NCP is far from hostile to Senegambia; the same cannot be said of all President Jawara's supporters.

The agreement which created the Confederation of Senegambia was signed on 17 December and has been in force theoretically since 1 February. But in fact, none of the essential protocols--mostly prepared by the Senegalese--have been definitively accepted yet by the Gambians. Nevertheless, a first confederate government is likely to be formed quickly.

JOINT ITALIAN-SENEGALESE COMMISSION SESSION

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 9 Jun 82 p 2

[Article by Mamadou Oumar Ndiaye: "Joint Italian-Senegalese Commission. Senegal Is Fourth Recipient of Italian Aid"]

[Excerpts] The third session of the joint Italian-Senegalese commission opened in Dakar. The opening meeting was chaired by Messrs Mamoudou Toure, our minister of Plan and Cooperation, and Roberto Palleschi, the Italian under-secretary of state to Foreign Affairs, who had arrived in the capital late on Sunday.

When opening the joint commission session, the minister of Plan and Cooperation stated that it had a "special character" this year since Italy had decided to provide a new basis for its cooperation with Third-World countries. Our country has a privileged position among these since it is the fourth recipient of Italian aid, coming after Egypt, Malta and Somalia. This is why the present session "is starting under favorable auspices," to quote Mr Mamoudou Toure.

According to the minister of Plan and Cooperation, this official visit of the Italian under-secretary of state to Foreign Affairs to our country, to be followed in a few months by that of Mr Emilio Colombo, the Italian minister of Foreign Affairs, marks "undoubtedly the beginning of a new era in our cooperation."

Therefore, during the present session, large Senegalese projects will be presented for financing by the Italian party. These projects involve sectors that are vital to our development, such as hydraulic engineering, health, water and forests, fisheries, human promotion, agriculture, agricultural industries, research, etc.

After mentioning the challenges presented to our country by continued unfavorable international economic conditions, Mr Mamadou Toure reaffirmed his faith in the cooperation with industrial countries, "among which Italy holds a privileged position, both with respect to bilateral cooperation and within international institutions."

North-South

For his part, the Italian under-secretary of state to Foreign Affairs declared himself "especially pleased" to chair the present session of the joint Italian-

Senegalese commission. According to Mr Roberto Palleschi, the Senegalese-Italian cooperation is only "a minute part of the mosaic formed by the North-South dialogue"; therefore, he said, it is necessary to promote cooperation on the basis of equality between industrialized and underdeveloped countries. "Industrialized societies cannot manage without the Third World, no more than the Third World can manage without us," Mr Palleschi was to declare; he also stressed the necessity to bring cooperation between our two countries to "a very high level." According to the head of the Italian delegation, we must not lose sight of the utilitarian character of development projects, and the projects that require financing must be integrated into a global development program. According to Mr Palleschi, Italy attaches much importance to its cooperation with Senegal, "a country of freedom and democracy." "Senegal has an important part to play in Africa, so Africa's rights will be respected," Mr Palleschi believes, and he did not fail to restate his country's commitment to be at our side in fighting underdevelopment.

Mr Palleschi will leave our country this evening for Paris, after the signature, this afternoon at 17:00, of the joint communique marking the end of the third joint commission session.

BUDGET OF MINISTRY OF ARMED FORCES ADOPTED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 10 Jun 82 p 5

[Article by Sidy Gaye: "Armed Forces: 11 Percent of the National Budget"]

[Excerpt] The budget of the Ministry of Armed Forces, adopted yesterday by a majority of deputies, amounts to nearly 18 billion francs. This large budget reflects an increase of about 15 percent over the present budget. It also represents 11 percent of the general budget of the nation.

According to Minister Daouda Sow, who proposed that budget, the government's objective is to make sure that, by the end of the Sixth Plan, the national Armed Forces will receive at least 15 percent of the national budget. To convince the deputies to accept this large budget, he pointed to the multifunctional character of the services provided by the Senegalese Armed Forces.

In addition to services performed by the Engineers, the Ministry of Armed Forces has also placed 25 physicians, surgeons and dentists at the disposal of the Department of Public Health. The Naval Forces also contribute to guard our coasts and do a remarkable job in protecting our fisheries. Finally, the Air Force provides transportation for patients from isolated inland areas to Dakar or any other urban center better endowed with medical facilities.

Answering deputies from the opposition who condemned the increased number of interventions of the Senegalese Armed Forces and asked for more information on the actual cost of each such operation, the minister emphasized that, contrary to what one might assume, the missions into Lebanon, Chad or Shaba represent an enormous contribution to the practical training of our army and, at the same time, are motivated by a desire to safeguard peace throughout the world.

Concerning Gambia, Mr Sow refused to agree with the opposition who calls the presence of Senegalese troops in Gambia a disguised occupation. Their presence in Gambia, the minister explained, stems from a commitment. Under the Senegambian Confederation agreements, it is the duty of the Confederation's president to provide for Senegambia's security. Since that president happens to be Mr Abdou Diouf, this duty becomes his.

This being said, the Senegalese presence in Gambia is better understood if one knows that, strictly speaking, Gambia does not have an army.

As for the cost of interventions abroad, Mr Sow stressed that, in the case of FINUL [International Force of the United Nations in Lebanon], which he mentioned as an example, the United Nations pay indemnities to the members of each contingent at the end of their mission and also compensates them every six months during their stay on the field.

Still answering attacks from the opposition who accused the government of taking side with Great-Britain by granting the latter military privileges during the Falkland crisis, the minister of Armed Forces indicated that these privileges involved only the right to fly over our territory. Besides, he was to add, these privileges were granted both to Great-Britain and to Argentina, which, he emphasized, reflects Senegal's perfect neutrality in this conflict.

RESULTS OF DEMOGRAPHIC CENSUS NOTED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 10 Jun 82 P 6

[Article by Edmond Rodriguez: "Seminary on Census: 4,997,885 Inhabitants Unevenly Distributed"]

[Text] The result of the demographic census taken in April 1976 on the whole Senegalese territory has somehow confirmed most working assumptions on which national planning was based.

After analysis, the statistical data collected show Senegal as a sparsely populated country--hardly 25 people per square kilometer. The population, 4,997,885 souls, is unevenly distributed. It is concentrated along the rivers, in the central peanut-growing basin and in the west, mostly along a Dakar-Thies line, whereas the east of the country is underpopulated.

There are two extremes: Cap-Vert, with only 0.3 percent of the country's area, is inhabited by 19 percent of its population, whereas Senegal-Oriental, covering 30.3 percent of the country, holds only 5.7 percent of its population.

If we accept the definition of a multilingual dictionary according to which an "ethnic group" is "a natural grouping of human beings who have certain somatic, linguistic and cultural affinities with one another," then we can safely state that there are six ethnic groups in Senegal, viz., in order of decreasing demographic importance:

- the Wolof who represent 41 percent of the population and live mainly in the center and north of the peanut-growing basin (regions of Diourbel, Louga and Sine-Saloum). The Lebus, related to the Wolofs, live in Cap-Vert and, to a lesser extent, in the region of Thies;

- the Serere who represent nearly 15 percent of the population and live in Sine-Saloum and Petite Cote;

- the Toucouleur represent 11 percent of the population and are concentrated along the Senegal River; they are also fairly well represented in Cap-Vert;

- the Foulah represent 12 percent of the population and are distributed throughout the territory, mostly in Casamance (26 percent);

- the Diola and the Manding represent respectively 5.4 and 3.7 percent of the population; most of them live in that same region.

However, the mixing of the population has markedly attenuated these traditional distinctions.

Shifts in Population

A study of migration/length of life is especially interesting for the identification of the main migratory currents; however, it does not reveal recent trends, nor does it indicate at what age individuals have migrated.

Nevertheless, we can see that most migrants went to Cap-Vert, this region--and especially its capital, Dakar--acting as an economic, political and cultural pole of attraction.

The regions of Thies and Fleuve are those which have provided the largest number of migrants to Cap-Vert, followed by Sine-Saloum and Casamance.

Two regions appear to be host areas and have a positive migratory balance. These are Cap-Vert, with a large positive balance of 262,000 immigrants, and Senegal-Oriental with a slight positive balance of 3,000. In Senegal-Oriental, this balance reflects spontaneous migrations due to the expansion of peanut plantations.

Demographic Specificity

Over an extended period, the other regions appear to be emigration areas. These are the Fleuve region, with a negative balance of 83,000 emigrants, closely followed by Louga with 81,000 emigrants. Then come Diourbel (42,000) and Casamance (37,000).

As far as alien residents are concerned, 41 percent of them reside in the Cap-Vert region, 26 percent in Casamance, 14 percent in Sine-Saloum an 10 percent in Senegal-Oriental.

The relative concentration of aliens in Cap-Vert is also accounted for by the economic, political and cultural role played by Dakar.

The presence of aliens in rather large numbers in the other regions could be due to the proximity of neighboring countries which represent areas of strong emigration.

The population of Senegal is young, a structure characteristic of populations with a high birth-rate. In 1976, 53.3 percent of the population was under 20. The adults (20 to 59) represented 40.40 percent, and the elderly (60 and over) only 6.1 percent.

However, there is a high proportion of 20-59 year olds among the non-Senegalese population, compared with 40 percent among the native population.

In addition, the distribution by sex appears relatively balanced as a whole, with a slightly larger number of women. The masculinity ratio is 98/100. This ratio, however, varies from one age group and one type of population to the other.

The majority of males, i.e. 53 percent, and about 3/4 of the total female population, i.e. 74 percent, are married.

In spite of a large young element, Senegal's population is characterized by a strong marriage rate. The unmarried represent 42 percent of the men and only 15 percent of the women (the "ranks" are not as close among women as is generally assumed). Indeed, the distribution of the population by age and by matrimonial state shows that, at 25, most girls are already married. Besides, permanent celibacy, among women as well as among men, is almost non-existent, probably because religion and custom favor marriage, especially in rural areas.

The population of Senegal is highly literate. Forty-nine percent of those over 6 have receive neither the traditional or arabic education, nor an education of the modern French type.

If one excludes coranic or arabic education, which does not guarantee the ability to read and write, the actual rate of illiteracy is close to 80 percent.

However, the distribution by age shows that literacy is higher among the young Senegalese than among the old. This difference between generations is accounted for by the progress of schooling in the past few years.

The census confirms the predominance of the primary sector (agriculture, animal farming and fishing) in the country's economy. In fact, 71 percent of the population are employed in this sector.

We should also note the relative predominance of commercial and sales personnel among the alien population, due to the presence of traders from Mauritania and from Conakry (Guinea) (21.6 percent compared with 4.8 percent for the Senegalese population).

RESULTS OF CROP COLLECTION, MARKETING CAMPAIGN NOTED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 29-31 May 82 p 5

[Article by Sidy Gaye: "The End of the Marketing Campaign. The Cotton Crop Has Exceeded All Expectations"; information provided by Mr Medoune Diene of the Ministry of Rural Development]

[Text] This year, the marketing campaign for the major agricultural products for which there is an organized market has led to the collection of 687,000 tons of peanuts, 13,900 tons of millet and 40,900 tons of cotton.

The collection campaign was started prematurely to prevent the flight of production to the unofficial market, and was closed in the second half of May; nevertheless, there were losses on peanuts and millet. Of all the major products for which a collection campaign is organized, cotton is the only one for which production has reached and even exceeded the forecasts made last september-october by the Regional Rural Development Companies (SRDR's) and the General Directorate of Agricultural Production (DGPA).

For peanuts, for instance, the tonnage thus collected (national average, all grades together) represents 78 percent of the production estimates which, initially, amounted to some 880,000 tons. This percentage, which shows a loss of almost one fourth of the expected crop, is still an improvement over last year's campaign, when illegal competition from the large producers had caused half the production to be sold on the unofficial market. This year's loss, one fourth of the potential crop, once again calls for an urgent solution to the problem of enforcing the monopoly on peanut collection granted to the oil-mills and to SONAR [National Oil-Mill Supply Company].

Although it is difficult, right now, to determine precisely where that portion of the potential crop which evaded official collection has gone, there is no doubt that the large producers are largely responsible for this evasion.

As in the past, the heavier losses have occurred in the north, more particularly in the Louga and Fleuve regions. These two regions have brought only slightly over half of their production (52 percent) to the official market. The balance of their crops will be found, at best, along the Thies-Saint-Louis road where, all the year round, here and there, small bags of shelled peanuts are offered to the traveller.

Legality

Together with the Diourbel region which, like them, marketed only 72 percent of its crop, these regions--the least inclined to sell on the official market--are those which are demanding the largest amounts of seeds now that the time has come to set up production factors.

Considering concrete cases, the most law-abiding regions are those of Thies and Sine-Saloum which sold to SONAR and to the oil-mills respectively 95 and 88 percent of their crops. Although located near the border, Casamance and Senegal Oriental come third and fourth with 78 and 76 percent of their production sold on the official market.

The same percentage of losses, corresponding to a national average, is also found in the specific cases of seed and edible peanuts. In fact, as far as seeds are concerned, SONAR will have managed to recover only about 65,500 tons, i.e. a little over three fifths of the expected 100,000 ton crop expected from the seed-raising fields.

In this particular case, however, we should acknowledge that the losses are much more the result of inadequacies in the financing system than of illegal competition from the large producers. The prices paid for seeds were high enough to encourage all producers to sell their crops to SONAR if financing had been made available in due time. This was not the case, and the resulting delay encouraged contracting farmers to mix selected seeds to their regular crop which they later on sold to the oil-mills.

In addition to this first explanation for the loss of two fifths of the seed peanut crops from seed-raising areas, there is another explanation, related to the financing system which today rather [favors] the 55.437 variety--a short growth cycle variety better adapted to the new profile of the rainy season--and in the long run will eliminate, for instance, the 28.206 variety which requires four rainy months and which SONAR has not bought in full this year. The farmers who had planted this variety, therefore, had to sell it to the oil-mills along with their regular production.

At any rate, since it has already been decided to maintain the seed capital at its previous level of 120,000 tons, the shortage will have to be made up for by taking from the regular crop if the farmers' requirements are to be met to the largest possible extent. The shortage, which amounts to 54,500 tons, will be taken from the regular crop collection, estimated at 687,400 tons. In other words, there would remain only 632,900 tons for the quotas to be allocated to grinding units.

Since the grinding capacity of the oil-mills is 850,000 tons, they would receive, this year, only 74 percent of what they need to operate at full profitability. This is of course inadequate, but it is still a considerable improvement over the past two years when they had to make do with only 25, then 12 percent of their grinding capacity.

As for edible peanuts, for which an industrial processing unit is now under consideration, this year's collection shows that the growth level that would justify such an investment has not yet been reached. Indeed, a prerequisite for the construction of such an industrial processing unit is the collection of 5,000 tons of seeds. Only with a seed capital of this order would it be possible to plant some 20,000 hectares and to expect a production of 20-25,000 tons.

Optimum Conditions

This condition was not met at the end of this year's collection campaign since only 4,700 tons were collected, whereas a crop of about 5,400 tons had been expected. From this inadequate tonnage, only 3,000 tons will be used for next season's seeds, for the planting of only 15-18,000 hectares. Therefore, it will take at best two or three more years to fulfill the optimum production conditions which would guarantee the viability of such an industrial project.

Moreover, the millet purchasing program initially prepared by the Food Security Commission (CSA), with an objective of 30,000 tons guaranteed by national financial resources, has in actual fact resulted in the purchase of only 13,900 tons. This amount, less than half the initial objective, is undoubtedly the most disappointing result of the official collection campaign. All the more so as this year's millet crop is the third largest since independence. Therefore, there was no lack of production but, among other causes, financing was inadequate. The sole possible comfort is the fact that slightly more has been collected this year than last year, when CSA had purchased only 8,000 tons of millet.

For cotton, finally, the amounts collected rather exceed expectations. Late last september, the expected production was estimated at 35,500 tons but, among other factors, a marked improvement due to October rains has brought us over 40,900 tons. The whole crop has been purchased by SODEFITEX [Textile Fibers Development Company] since, in this particular case, there is no unofficial market worth mentioning, and consumption by the farmers is insignificant.

PROGRESS OF CONSTRUCTION OF SECOND UNIVERSITY

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 1 Jun 82 p 10

[Article by Mohamed Ndao: "Gaston-Berger University: The Third Stage of Construction Has Begun"]

[Excerpt] As part of the preparation for International Environment Day which, in the Fleuve region, will be continued by a Town-Planning Week, a visit at the Gaston-Berger University site, 10 km from Saint-Louis, has given us an opportunity to check on-site the progress of the construction of this university, the second in the country, the opening of which is eagerly awaited as it will relieve the pressure on Dakar University.

The second stage of construction, including 7 villages to house approximately 1,700 students, is now fully completed; work on the third stage has begun last February and is now in full progress.

Three contractors are working on the third stage, and over aborers are working every day at the various construction sites.

The task of the first contractor is to build 11 housing units for unmarried people, and 3 for married couples, 1 restaurant including 3 dining halls, plus 1 hall for patients on a special diet and 1 cafeteria.

The second contractor is to build housing units for the faculty. As for the third contractor, it must build on schedule--just like the other two--the University administrative buildings, a faculty comprising 4 buildings, a 10-floor tower which will house the library, 2 lecture halls and 1 laboratory.

Finally, a group of contractors is now building the water-processing plant. All the operations corresponding to the third construction stage, upon the completion of which the Saint-Louis University will be partially operational, required a total financing of approximately 5 billion CFA francs.

It is important to note that, since work started last February, no delay that could interfere with the progress of the operations already started has been noted, as we were told by the head of the Regional Housing Department who is in charge of following-up and supervising construction.

Therefore, we can expect that the construction schedule, which extends over 9 months, will be adhered to.

BRIEFS

JAPANESE MEDICAL EQUIPMENT GRANT--(APS) Yesterday afternoon, Mr Ousmane Seck, minister of Economy and Finance, and His Excellency Mr Chiyuki Hiroaka, Japanese Ambassador to Senegal, signed a 430 million CFA franc subsidy agreement providing for the purchase of medical equipment necessary to cover the country's health system requirements. This equipment is intended for the Kaolack, Thiaroye and Fann hospitals (radiological, surgical and laboratory equipment, etc.). According to Mr Ousmane Seck, "the balance of the Japanese-Senegalese cooperation is positive since, from 1977 to 1982, it amounted to 8 billion [CFA francs] including 5 billion as gifts and 3 billion as loans." For his part, His Excellency Mr Chiyuki Hiraoka stated that "this grant will reinforce the means provided for health requirement coverage, a domain especially stressed by the Senegalese government under its Sixth Economic and Social Development Plan. Thus, Japan is contributing to all fields: fisheries, agriculture, road-building and health. [Text] [Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 29-31 May 82 p 8] 9294

PARTY CENTRAL COMMITTEE ENDORSES ECONOMIC PROGRAM

LD281244 Dar es Salaam Domestic Service in English 0400 GMT 28 Jun 82

[Text] Dar es Salaam: The Party Central Committee, after in-depth deliberations, has endorsed the government's 3-year structural adjustment program [SPA], which is an elaboration of earlier formulations aimed at national economic rehabilitation.

The party, which ended its 3-day sitting under the chairmanship of Mwalimu, said the SAP forms the basis for negotiations with donor countries and international financial [words indistinct] to their aid in the rehabilitation efforts without endangering the party's socialist policy.

According to a press statement issues yesterday in Dar es Salaam by the Party Chief Executive Secretary Ndugu Mwak-Awago, the committee believes that the program is a comprehensive elaboration of the objectives set out in the National Economic Survival Program The 3-year adjustment program was presented in parliament during the on-going budget session and is aimed at bolstering industrial and agricultural production in consolidating the service, communications and energy sectors.

According to the SAP, the country requires 10,026 billion shillings in foreign aid as import support for essential goods, raw materials and spare parts. The program also seeks to raise the country's foreign exchange reserve position through agricultural and industrial exports, enabling the country to meet the cost of essential imports by 1985-86.

MOI'S TOLERANCE VIS-A-VIS ODINGA LAUDED

Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 21 May 82 p 4

[Editorial: "Odinga's Exit From KANU"]

[Text] THERE is a peculiar similarity between football clubs and political parties, although, generally, the former do not advance political causes and the latter do not encourage soccer.

The similarity is that football clubs and political parties are essentially voluntary associations, and members remain together for as long as they accept the aims and rules of their association.

Take then, for instance, the rather successful football club known as Gor Mahia, of which Mr. Odinga is a founding member.

If Mr. Odinga were to go round the country saying that Gor Mahia is a terrible club, and that, in general, the public should in all ways support the A.F.C. Leopards S.C., another rather successful football club, then he would have broken the aims and objectives of Gor Mahia and forfeited his claim to its membership.

The same with political parties. Members of political parties are bound by the voluntary nature of their association, as well as common adherence to their declared aims and objectives.

The moment they break the rules of the game and show disloyalty and contempt for the aims and objectives of the political party, then they forfeit their right to remain members thereof.

We say "forfeit their right", advisedly, because people remain members of voluntary associations for as long as they keep within the rules and aims of their association.

Printed elsewhere in this page is a full report of our correspondent who listened to Mr. Odinga's speech and comments during the question-and-answer session in the British House of Commons.

The report quotes Mr. Odinga as canvassing for support for the Kenya Socialist Party from the left-wing of Labour Party and the Socialist International.

And it cannot be seriously argued that Mr. Odinga declared his intention to start a Socialist Party without being satisfied in the first place that he no longer wished to remain a member of KANU.

Moreover, Mr. Odinga's other contention is that there is no political party in this country.

Mr. Odinga cannot have his cake and eat it. If there is no political party, then he cannot be the life member of a non-existent political party, unless he exists in one long fantasy like that of Alice in Wonderland or Shangrila.

On the other hand, if there is a political party, as indeed there is, and he does not recognise it, he has automatically taken himself out of it.

The view that there is no political party in Kenya, and that even if there is one he does not recognise it, is consistent with Mr. Odinga's declared position that he wants to form his own party.

Mr. Odinga protests that he did not say these things, and yet most of them, and worse, are implied in the statements he issued to the Press this week. One must, therefore, take his retraction of the previous statement about another party as the utterance of a coward who has no courage of his convictions.

Setting aside the question of Mr. Odinga's intention to form another party, there is also a question of loyalty. What loyal party member can travel to Europe to tell foreigners that his party (and also the country) is run by a nocturnal cabal of mad people?

And that another country — in this case Tanzania — is better run than his own country, Kenya, despite official Tanzanian statements to the effect that Ujamaa socialism has failed?

Needless to say, the Government of Kenya has been extremely patient and restrained in the face of insults and provocation from Mr. Odinga. Mr. Odinga was not harassed on his arrival at the airport. He was not even searched. His freedom of movement and his civil liberties, were not interfered with.

And this is a great tribute to the tolerance of our Head of State.

ARAB PERCEPTION OF AFRICA LABELLED BLURRED, DISTORTED

Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 21 May 82 p

[Editorial: "Arabs and Hallstein Doctrine"]

[Text] IT APPEARS from the activities of the Arab League that there has been a palpable shift in their attitude towards the foreign policies of African countries, particularly with regard to the Middle East and Israel.

Since 1973, when most African countries broke relations with Israel, the position of the Arab League has been that Israel has occupied the territory of an African-Arab nation — Egypt — and that therefore African nations should show solidarity with the Arabs and boycott Israel.

The return of the Sinai to the Egypt on April 26 naturally removed the grounds for boycotting Israel and so some African countries, the foremost being Zaire, decided to resume diplomatic relations with Israel. Zaire, of course, follows Egypt's example. Both Egypt and Israel have ambassadors in each other's capital.

After Zaire's announcement that it was resuming diplomatic relations with Israel, there was a flurry of Arab activities in political as well as diplomatic circles culminating in the announcement from Saudi Arabia that the Kingdom was severing all relations with Zaire, and that the Saudis would likewise sever diplomatic relations with all those countries who may subsequently recognise Israel.

Since the original ground for breaking relations with Israel, namely, that it had occupied an African-Arab territory, had ceased to exist, it seems reasonable to examine the reasons underlying Saudi's new position.

The first is that the Arabs are telling the Africans that "a friend of our enemy is our enemy".

Yet the policy of most African nations is that of positive non-alignment, "friends to all and enemies to none". It seems, therefore, that the Arabs assume African solidarity in fatalism and determinism, an assumption which rules out African free will in the conduct of their foreign relations. Solidarity with other people's aspirations, however, does not mean that we let them choose our friends and enemies for us.

The Arab perception of the realities of the foreign policy of Africa is as blurred as it is distorted, and this is perhaps understandable. They managed to get unprecedented support in 1973 which, in retrospect, was not even justified.

Another aspect of the shift in the Arab's policy towards Africa is that they are trying — with regard to the African continent — to impose Professor Walter Hallstein's official policy of West Germany with regard to the countries that established diplomatic relations with East Germany.

Germany — the doctrine went — was indivisible, countries which recognised Communist East Germany automatically forfeited their relations with the Federal Republic of Germany.

This doctrine led to the severing of relations between Bonn and Belgrade in 1957 and between Bonn and Havana in 1963. It foundered later when Zanzibar, which had relations with East Germany, united with Tanganyika, which had relations with Bonn. The new republic of Tanzania became the first country outside the main World War II contestants to have representatives in Bonn and East Germany.

How relevant is the Hallstein doctrine to the Middle East? It is not relevant because the Arabs lack the industrial and technological independence to enforce it. If it were applied universally, the Arabs would have to break relations, not only with African countries, but also with the entire Western World. They cannot afford to do that.

Second, two leading Arab nations already recognise the right of Israel to exist. Egypt has diplomatic relations with Israel and the Saudi Fahad plan for a comprehensive peace in the Middle East postulates the recognition of Israel.

In the circumstances, trying to enforce the Hallstein doctrine in the Middle East is rather like telling the whole world: "Do as we say, but not as we do".

Finally, from the argument about the occupation of the Sinai, the Arabs have made a great illegitimate leap to the argument that the Arab Weltanschauung is identical to the African Weltanschauung.

However, the difference between Pax Africana and Pax Arabica is, in reality, as great as the difference between the "is" and "ought" arguments.

SHS. 40M SOUGHT BY OPPOSITION, SAYS NGEI

Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 31 May 82 p 2

[Text]

SOME disgruntled elements from Kenya recently went abroad to solicit for funds amounting to Shs. 40 million to form opposition parties, the Minister for Livestock Development, Mr. Paul Ngei, disclosed yesterday.

Mr. Ngei made this disclosure at Kikima Market in Mbooni yesterday when he addressed a mammoth Kanu rally, after opening the new Mbooni Kanu sub-branch offices.

The Minister did not disclose the individual or time they solicited for the funds, but said the government was fully informed of the attempts.

He castigated those who went around making tarnishing utterances against the Government.

Mr. Ngei challenged such people to stop their cowardly behaviour and come out openly and express their views.

He termed them as malicious elements whose intentions were to discredit the good work the government was doing.

He vowed that the ruling Kanu party would not tolerate such people and would not hesitate to expel any divisive elements from the party.

"Kanu is the government and the government is Kanu", Mr. Ngei said amid cheers, adding that the party's governing council's decision to uphold Kanu as the only party was made with a view to making it more effective.

The Minister also made a scathing attack on Nairobi University Students Organisation (SONU) for its recent Press statement criticising the government and Kanu.

Saying that the students were there to read and not engage in misguided politics Mr. Ngei appealed to parents whose children were at the University to advise them not to be involved in political activities.

He challenged those who wanted to be involved in politics to come out and contest fearlessly, instead of making baseless accusations against the very Government that was caring for them through the wananchi's taxes.

STUDENTS TO BE SCREENED

Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 3 Jun 82 pp 1-24

[Text]

PRESIDENT Daniel arap Moi yesterday said the Government would soon start screening university students to determine their loyalty to the Government and the State.

Addressing a mammoth rally at Kitui Secondary School, President Moi said rhetoric by some students showed they were paying allegiance to unknown masters outside Kenya.

He challenged such elements to hold a meeting to announce their external allegiance. "The public pays huge taxes to educate and maintain those students at the university yet they go about causing chaos", the President said.

The President challenged University of Nairobi students who are true Nyayo followers to come out and assist the Government in identifying trouble makers at the campus.

He said students who are ready to co-operate with the Government would be protected from being molested by trouble makers.

President Moi called on true Nyayo followers at the campus to show it by organising a separate "Kamukunji" with a view to counteract that of revolutionaries who are out to cause chaos.

Most students at the university were Nyayo followers, he said. He particularly praised university students who come from Machakos and Kitui districts for setting a good example to their counterparts by involving themselves in soil conservation efforts in their respective districts.

He reiterated his Madaraka Day message that his Government would no longer persuade people to be loyal and protect independence.

"There will be no more persuading. People should know that they have a government," he said, adding that wananchi needed peace, love and unity in order to participate effectively in national development and live in a relaxed manner unmolested.

President Moi urged M.P.'s to realise that they were elected to serve their constituents and the nation and not to be involved in 'mere talk'.

He noted that during the struggle for this country's independence loud talkers were needed more than experts.

"Words were needed to destroy the colonial Government. It never needed learned people or experts to talk against the colonial Government," he told the gathering which included the Vice-President, Mr. Mwai Kibaki; the Nairobi Mayor, Coun. Nathan Kahara; 11 Cabinet Ministers, Assistant Ministers and other leaders.

He hit out at some people who kept on talking about imperialism and colonialism and said such people were dreaming.

He announced that the Government would negotiate with the American Embassy in Nairobi with a view to re-opening or taking over the Mwingi Mission Hospital which was closed in 1976.

He also said the Government had agreed to establish a teachers' training college in Kitui Town next year depending on the availability of land.

In response to a memorandum presented by the Kitui people, President Moi said he would ask the Minister concerned to elevate Kitui into a town council.

KENEXTEL BECOMES PART OF KENYA POSTS, TELECOMMUNICATIONS

Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 4 Jun 82 p 3

[Text] THE management board of the Kenya External Telecommunications Company, (Kenextel), has been disbanded and its functions taken over by the Kenya Posts and Telecommunications Corporation.

Announcing this yesterday, the Ministry for Transport and Communications, Mr. Henry Kosgey, directed the share holders of Kenextel and the boards of the two bodies to take the necessary action to effect the changes as soon as possible and in an orderly manner.

The Minister, however, assured Kenextel staff that they would not suffer any undue hardships as a result of the changes.

Mr. Kosgey said Kenextel would now become part of the Kenya Posts and Telecommunications Corporation set up.

To achieve these changes, the Minister said, the Treasury and the Ministry of Transport and Communications were making arrangements to surrender immediately to the corporation direct financial interests in the company which accrued to them on behalf of the Government.

Mr. Kosgey said the changes had been brought about by a number of operational problems which Kenextel, as an independent entity, had undergone during the past five years.

"It has therefore been decided to re-examine the present set up for provision of telecommunications services with a view to rationalising them", the Minister said.

He said that for some time, the Government had been working out plans of harmonising the services of the two bodies in terms of revenue, since they were doing almost the same job.

Present during the announcement were the Managing Director of the Corporation, Mr. Kipng'eno arap Ngeny; the Chairman, Mr. Dawson Mlamba; the Deputy Managing Director, Mr. P.O. Okundi; Chairman of the disbanded company, Mr. E. Habwe and its Managing Director, Mr. Ben Okudo.

Kenextel was formerly a subsidiary of the defunct East African Community.

It was formed into an independent parastatal by the Kenya Government to handle external telecommunications when the community broke-up.

BRIEFS

2400 LINES BY 1986--The Kenya Posts and Telecommunications Corporation trunk network will increase to more than 2,400 lines by 1986 from the present 1,000 lines, the head of telecommunication services, Mr. M. T. Kilili, said yesterday. Mr. Kilili was briefing two ASsistant Ministers for Transport and Communications, Mr. M. O. S. Soba and Mr. M. ole Nampaso, before they made a familiarisation tour of the posts and telecommunications premises in Nairobi. The K.P. and T. Managing Director, Mr. Kipng'eno arap Ng'eny, was also present. Meanwhile, two newly-appointed board members of the corporation, Mr. Wacira Waweru, who is a former M.P. for Parklands, and Mr. Joseph arap Letting, who is the P.S. for Higher Education, yesterday left Nairobi for Eastern and Central Provinces for a five-day familiarisation tour. BIG SHOT HARASSMENT--More than 1,000 residents of Mwakini along the Machakos/Kitui boundary have appealed to the Government to save them from continued harassment and eviction threats by some wealthy people. Claiming to have lived in the area for more than 20 years, the residents said they could not understand why they should be told by the "big shots" to vacate the area as they did not have any alternative homes. Several people representing the affected families called at the Machakos District Information Office on Monday afternoon and said they were speaking on behalf of nearly 3,000 people who were now worried because of the harassment they were reportedly going through "with nobody coming to our rescue or protection". They said the affected families settled in the area more than 20 years ago when the area was uninhabited. They further claimed that for the last two weekends, a large number of houses and property were destroyed by some known people who allegedly wanted them to leave the area. A group of people are alleged to have burned down several houses in the area on May 8 and May 15, 1982. "We are now worried about our safety and future. We would like the Government interference and protect us from the harassment", the representatives said. They said their efforts to get help from the M.P.s for the area and administrative officials were fruitless. [Text] [Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 20 May 82 p 5]

STUDENT DEAD IN MOSCOW--A Kenyan studying agricultural engineering in the Soviet Union was found dead with head wounds earlier this week in the Soviet city of Krasnodar. The Kenya News Agency said yesterday Kenyan authorities were awaiting details on the death of Simeon Lihalakha, a student at Krasnodar University in southern Russia. But it added that reports received from Moscow by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs said Lihalakha was found dead at a bus stop near the university late at night and that he had suffered head wounds. Lihalakha, survived by a widow and three children, was an agricultural engineer with Kenya's Livestock Ministry and was studying for a doctorate in the USSR with the sponsorship of the Kenyan Government. K.N.A. said his body was being flown home tomorrow for burial in his home village in Western Kenya. The late Mr. Lihalakha was born in Idakho Location, Kakamega District in 1942 and studied at Mwihila Secondary School before going to the USSR. [Text] [Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 20 May 82 p 2]

HUNGARIAN TIES HAILED--An Assistant Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Ezekiel Mweu, yesterday hailed the good relations existing between Kenya and Hungary, when he recieved in his office the Huganrian Charge d'Affaires, Mr. Gyula Parkanyi. Mr. Mweu said Hungarian aid would be welcome, especially to Kenya's rural helath programme and small-scale industries which would generate employment in the rural areas. Concerning a recent tour of Hungary by some members of the Kenya Chamber of Commerce and Industry, Mr. Mweu hoped the Hungarian counterparts of the Chamber would pay a similar visit to Kenya. Responding, Mr. Parkanyi said his country was ready to co-operate with the Kenya in economic and cultural matters. [Text] [Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 29 May 82 p 3]

NGOROKO MENACE--The Government will leave no stone unturned to ensure the Ngoroko menace is eliminated, the Rift Valley P.C. Mr. H. N. Oyugi, has said. Mr. Oyugi who was addressing a meeting at Makutano, West Pokot District, said the Government was strong and should not be mistaken for its sympathetic attitude. The P.C. who was accompanied by an Assistant Minister for Lands Settlement and Physical Planning, Mr. F. Lotodo, M.P. for Pokot East Mr. James Korellach and the area D.C. Mr. Samuel Kigen, told the people in the District not to panic but to continue with their day to day activities because plans to fight lawlessness had been completed. He commended the local people for revealing the movements of cattle raiders to authorities and urged them to report anybody sheltering aliens. He praised the security forces in the area for their good performance and urged them to keep it up. Noting that Kenya was lucky to have a God-fearing leader who worked day and night to bring peace and unity to all, the P.C. called upon all Kenyans to rally behind the President by following the nyayo philosophy. NEW MINISTRY HQ--The Minister for Information and Broadcasting, Mr. Eliud Mwamunga, has said the Ministry will build its headquarters near Jamhuri Park in Nairobi. The Minister said this when he toured the site. He was accompanied by the Minister for Environment and Natural Resources, Mr. Peter Oloo-Aringo, and the Permanent Secretary for Information, Jr. J. Kiti. The Permanent Secretary noted that once all plans were finalised, the project would begin within the next six months. Mr. Aringo said his Ministry would co-operate with other Ministries concerned to ensure the project was a success. [Text] [Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 3 Jun 82 p 3]

CONVOYS FOR MIRAA HAULIERS--Vehicles transporting miraa to and within Wajir District, which in the past have been travelling without armed escorts, have now been ordered to accompany the normal convoys. The move is in line with the general fighting up of security following the shooting incidents involving armed bandits. The order was issued by North Eastern P.C., Mr. Benson Kaaria, when he addressed heads of departments and local leaders who included Kanu officials, councillors and the M.P. for Wajir West Mr. Mohamed Khalif. The P.C. said although the order would affect the miraa business, the Government would not compromise on security. Normal convoys to and from Wajir takes about two to three days to Meru where the miraa is obtained. Mr. Kaaria advised the businessmen to transport the commodity by air as it was being done in Mandera District. Assuring civil servants of full Government protection, the P.C. said armed forces now combing the district would continue until the exercise yields results. He referred to the Saturday shooting, where a D.O., a former D.O. and an Administration policeman were killed, as an isolated case, but which the Government was determined to ensure did not occur again. He recalled the shifta bandit who had killed civil servants in November, 1980, as having been gunned down by security forces, and gave assurances that the bandits who were now creating terror and insecurity in the area, would be wiped out by the security forces in operation. SLIGHT RISE IN RESERVES--Kenya's foreign exchange reserves stood at Shs. 2,335 million at the end of April, according to the latest figures published in the Kenya Gazette. The reserves are made up of Shs. 1,050 million as balance with banks and Shs. 618 million in cash with the Treasury, Shs. 550 million in other investments and Shs. 132 million in Special Drawing Rights. As compared with the figure of Shs. 2,355 million at the end of April, the foreign exchange reserves were at Shs. 2,138 million in February and Shs. 2,551 million at the end of January. Thus there has been an improvement in these reserves since the end of February when these dipped to a lower level. On the deposits side, the Central Bank of Kenya shows Shs. 762 million from the commercial banks in Kenya, Shs. 36 million in foreign exchange from the commercial banks and Shs. 2,871 from IMF along with sundry deposits of Shs. 357 million. At the end of January, Kenya had Shs. 3,816 million of currency in circulation. This declined marginally to Shs. 3,759 million at the end of February. According to the latest figures, the currency in circulation at the end of April was Shs. 3,617 million. [Text] [Nairobi THE STANDARD in English 4 Jun 82 p 8]

BLAMO SAYS UNTRAINED PUBLIC SERVICE MANAGERS HINDER DEVELOPMENT

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 9 Jun 82 p 4

[Excerpt]

The managing-director of the National Port Authority (NPA), Dr. J. Bernard Blamo has said that the lack of competent and trained middle managers for the public service has retarded Liberia's development for several decades.

He said the Liberian public service cannot handle the complex challenges of socio-economic development with untrained administrators.

Dr. Blamo was speaking yesterday at the Liberia Institute of Public Administration, when he delivered the key-note address at the opening of the 25th general management seminar at IPA head office here.

He told the 37 participants in the three-week management seminar that some of the wastage of financial and material resources in the Liberian public service can be attributed to the low level administrative and managerial skills of some technicians, managers, administrators, coordinators and directors who he said are unable to implement policies and programs.

The National Port Authority boss said Liberia has paid an enormous price in millions of dollars due to the poor selection and appointment of managers who are incapable of providing the requisite leadership, administrative and managerial guidance for development programs.

This problem, he noted, has been aggravated as a consequence of recent rapid social changes in the Liberian society.

Dr. Blamo appealed to participants to be willing to acquire new skills and ideals in management and administration, because Liberia has suffered untold losses in man-hours in the public service, he added.

ROK DELEGATION CHIEF PROPOSES PRIVATE LIBERIAN-ROK COOPERATION

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 9 Jun 82 p 3

[Excerpt] The leader of the 17-man Korean trade delegation currently in the country on a fact-finding mission, has proposed the establishment of a Liberian-Korean private business cooperation to promote economic ties between the two countries and their peoples.

Mr. Young Gak Shin, who arrived in Liberia last Thursday at the head of the delegation, advanced this proposal on Friday at a reception hosted in their honor by the Liberia Chamber of Commerce at the Ducor Intercontinental Hotel in Monrovia.

He asserted that once the joint economic communique has been signed by the Liberian and Korean leaders, it was left with businessmen of the two countries to implement the agreement already signed by the two leaders, through cooperation, thereby promoting their economic development through the private and public sectors, as well as promoting bilateral friendship between both countries.

Mr. Shin disclosed that the prime purpose of their visit was to gather important information on the business climate in the country and to examine business potentials of Liberians.

He said from information obtained so far, Liberia's major problem is the lack of capital and advanced technology which could be provided by the Republic of Korea through economic cooperation.

Mr. Shin thanked the Liberia Chamber of Commerce for the hospitality accorded them and disclosed that another team of Korean trade delegation composed of private and government officials will visit Liberia later this year.

In brief remarks, the first vice president of the Liberia Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Shaffic S. Obeid, welcomed the group to Liberia on behalf of the Chamber and assured them of the Chamber's fullest support and cooperation in promoting business opportunities in the country.

Meanwhile, the Korean delegation, which is expected to leave Liberia this Thursday, yesterday began a three-day special exhibition at the Ducor Hotel of several Korean goods.

LOFA COUNTY CITIZENS PRESENT DOE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 7 Jun 82 pp 1, 10

[Text]

The citizens of Lofa County, reputed to be among the nation's most development-conscious people, have presented to Head of State Samuel K. Doe an impressive five-point development programme which they say they would like to undertake for the improvement of their area.

The presentation was made at a mass meeting in Voinjama Saturday, June 5, when the Head of State paid a special visit to the Lofa capital to discuss development matters with the county's chiefs, elders, administrative leaders and the public in general.

Observers describe the visit as highly significant and historic, because it was specifically undertaken by the Head of State, not to judge palava or to tell them what to do, but to ask them what they thought was best for their own future.

Our correspondent reports that the Lofa citizens rose to the occasion by presenting to the Liberian leader a no-nonsense package that included sober and concrete proposals that struck at the very heart of their development needs.

In words and in deeds, according to our correspondent, they confirmed their reputation for being a hard working and self reliant people when, after presenting their package, they pledged to help finance it with contributions from all Lofa citizens — those employed in the public and private sectors, those who are self-employed as well as the "floating population".

Health

The five-point development programme was read by Lofa's foremost development figure, Mr. Jeremiah Tulay, manager of the Lofa County Agriculture Development Project (LCADP), and presented to the Head of State by Internal Affairs Minister Edward K. Sackor. The package covered health, education, electrification, road construction, and the paving of the streets of Voinjama, which they said they considered the county's first priority.

According to LINA Correspondent Urias Harrington, who travelled with the Head of State, the citizens thanked the Government for services being rendered by the Tellewoyan Memorial Hospital in Voinjama and requested Government to convert the Kolahun Health Centre to a 50-bed hospital to provide similar services to the people of that area.

They also appealed to Government to renovate the Curran Memorial Hospital in Zorzor to meet the needs of that part of the county. Curran Memorial was built more than 30 years ago by the Lutheran Church in Liberia and is currently being run by the church, with assistance from Government.

Education

Education has always been close to the hearts of Lofa people. Many of their sons and daughters in the early days and up to the fifties, walked from Kolahun, Voinjama and Zorzor and Belle Yella to Cuttington College in Suacoco, (then Central Province, now Bong County) and the University of Liberia in Monrovia, to seek higher education.

It was therefore not surprising that their development package placed particular emphasis on education. The citizens appealed to Government to construct a college in Lofa "to alleviate the embarrassing and frustrating social and economic life of our high school graduates."

They said the student population in the county had tripled in the last five years, resulting in the increase of high school graduates. They complained that out of the large number of graduates each year, 85 per cent did not get admission to the nation's institutions of higher learning.

Decentralization

The citizens therefore appealed to Government for the construction of a college in Lofa County to help decentralize educational facilities in the country and prevent their children from leaving Zorzor, Foya and Belle Yella and other parts of the country in search of higher education.

They also asked for more high schools in Kolahun, Zorzor, Foya and Belle Yella in order to accommodate the graduates of the 28 junior high schools in the county.

A request was also put to Government to consider constructing roads to connect the districts of Kolahun, Belle Yella and Bopolu with Monrovia, and to install electricity in Zorzor and Foya.

On behalf of the business community in the county, the citizens recommended that Government take a retrospective view at the transhipment program because it was causing the business community in the county "some embarrassments."

They said the business community complained that many of the transhipped goods were bought back on the local Lofa markets and sold at half the price of the same goods, that were bought in Monrovia.

Agriculture

In an effort to show how serious they were about their development programme, the citizens informed the Head of State of their decision to make voluntary contributions of one month's salary of every Lofa citizen, whether employed by Government or the private sector, to support the proposed programme.

Those that were self-employed, they said, would pay three hundred dollars, while a collection of ten dollars per head would be made from the "floating population".

During the mass meeting the amount of $47,290 in pledges and cash donations was raised toward the development programme.

The Head of State pledged a personal donation of $5,000 on behalf of himself and his family

The citizens also told Head of State Doe that there were now over 700 communal rice farms in Lofa County as the result of his call for self-sufficiency in food production.

Agriculture was not mentioned in the package. Observers say this is most probably because Government has already made a major contribution to agricultural development in the county through the World Bank — funded LCADP, which has spearheaded tremendous agricultural development activities throughout Lofa

Both Government and World Bank official have rated the LCADP among the most successful of agricultural projects in the country for many years.

Response

The Commander-in-Chief, Dr. Doe, responding, told the citizens that the development of Liberia lies in the hands of Liberians. He said no nation could be run without the full participation of its citizens.

He then urged the citizens of Lofa County to cooperate with their leaders to achieve their development goals.

TAYE ASKS MINISTRIES TO SUBMIT NAMES OF ALIEN EMPLOYEES

Commissioner's Appeal

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 11 Jun 82 p 12

[Article by Westmore Dahn]

[Text]

The Commissioner of Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, Edwin Taye, has appealed to government ministries and agencies to cooperate with his bureau by submitting names of aliens employed by them to ensure the legality of their stay in Liberia.

Mr. Taye said to make sure that the Liberianization policy is fully implemented in the country, his bureau recently launched a program and wrote these agencies and ministries to identify aliens within their employ. But, he revealed, some of these establishments have flatly refused to comply with the Immigration Bureau.

Speaking during a press briefing at his office yesterday, Commissioner Taye asserted that the program was geared towards replacing illegal aliens with qualified Liberians in various positions as directors, revenue collectors, drivers and others.

He pointed out that where there were no qualified Liberians to occupy certain positions, provisions are made by government to have aliens employed, but "not when Liberians are available and searching for similar jobs".

Commissioner Taye disclosed that since the institution of the exercise recently, 120 aliens have been affected while 43 are still being investigated. He added that most of these foreigners had falsified Liberian citizenship to facilitate their employment.

The commissioner explained that those from neighbouring countries who were affected by the exercise would be repatriated and if they decide to return, they must process their documents through the proper channel.

He then commended the Ministries of Postal Affairs and Labour among other ministries for positively complying with his Bureau to submit names of aliens as well as terminating their services upon request.

Mr. Taye frowned on the "non-challant" attitude of Ministries of Finance and Agriculture and the National Iron Ore Company, which he said have refused to cooperate.

He noted that the NIOC, when approached, asked the Immigration for a nine-month grace period before complying with the directive, while the Finance Ministry "has not even replied" to his letter.

On the ECOWAS protocol which call for the free movement of citizens of member states, Mr. Taye said his Bureau was subject to order and as such, would always be willing to carry out directives from the Ministry of Justice under which it operates.

Personally, Commissioner Taye maintained that the Ministry of Foreign Affairs should carefully study the protocol before applying it to Liberia.

He emphasized that if individuals were allowed to enter the country without travel and resident documents such as passport, visa, resident and work permits, Liberians would find it very difficult to get employment.

He added that crime rate would be higher in the country if aliens were permitted to enter the country without documents, while the Bureau of Immigration would definitely be serving as a "figure-head" agency.

On major problems affecting his Bureau, the commissioner said transportion and communication facilities have been hindering the smooth operation of his Bureau.

He said only few personnel assigned at outstations have transportion.

To this end, Commissioner Taye appealed to government to provide these essential facilities so as to make his Bureau more functional.

He praised members of the Immigration Bureau for the efforts they are making to combat crime and other illegal activities of aliens in the country.

Immigration Fines Alien Government Employees

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 11 Jun 82 p 3

[Article by J. N. Elliott]

[Text] One hundred and sixty-three non-Liberians employed in various Government Ministries and Agencies have been fined by the Immigration Bureau.

They were fined following screening exercise instituted by the Bureau to get rid of aliens who have either fraudulently obtained naturalization certificates, falsified Liberian Citizenship or those who are not gainfully employed.

However, the total fines collected were not disclosed by Immigration authorities.

According to Deputy Immigration Commissioner David M. Barshell, the "screening exercise" was not fully implemented because of the "deliberate refusal" of several government institutions to dismiss illegal aliens based upon the Bureau's recommendations.

Speaking in an interview Monday with the NEW LIBERIAN,

Mr. Barshell disclosed that only the managements of Hotel Africa, National Iron Ore Company, National Police, and the Ministries of Postal Affairs and Planning, have so far complied despite several warnings.

He said government is not against aliens working or residing here, but under the Immigration laws, they are required to regularize their status or work permit.

Commissioner Barshell said those arrested for violating immigration requirements are either fined $500 or $1,000 based on their charges. But notwithstanding, the Bureau has to use its discretion, in the case of fishermen, who most often than not, failed to adjust their status.

He meanwhile, warned those aliens in the employed of government to stop masquerading as Liberian citizens and do away with fake Liberian citizenship.

He said if they are caught, they will face immediate deportation.

Commissioner Barshell also used the occasion to call on Liberians to stop shielding aliens. Citing as an example, he said a police Captain was recently arrested for falsifying Liberian citizenship.

MINISTER DISSATISFIED WITH DELIBERATIONS OF RUBBER STUDY GROUP

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 11 Jun 82 p 3

[Article by Lue Hinneh]

[Text] The Deputy Minister of Agriculture for Administration, Col. James Coleman, has expressed dissatisfaction over deliberations at the 27th Assembly of the International Rubber Study Group during its sitting in Mexico City recently.

Disclosing this to the NEW LIBERIAN Wednesday upon his return to the country, Col. Coleman said he was optimistic that the week-long meeting would had discussed price stabilization of natural rubber, but instead, he said, discussions there centered around the quantity of natural rubber bought each year from the producers by consumers.

Minister Coleman said the price stabilization of rubber had been discussed at the meeting, it would had determined whether small farmers would continue producing rubber or go into an alternative business in order to make a living.

LESS COSTLY

However, he said, papers presented at the assembly revealed that the cost of producing natural rubber was less than that of synthetic rubber which contains high elasticity. In this light, Col. Coleman said Liberia will be benefited from the conference, because it has been assured that Liberia's natural rubber will always be on the market, adding that Liberia as a producer of natural rubber has the confidence that she will always be in business.

According to Deputy Minister Coleman, he wrote a letter to the Secretary General of (IRSG), Mr. L. Bateman, expressing his dissatisfaction and recommended that there be some dialogue between rubber producing countries and buyers regarding the stabilization of the price of the commodity.

The Deputy Minister also frowned on the low price of rubber which he said did not hamper the buyers, but rather the small farmers who total income per capital lies in rubber farming.

INCREASE

Commenting on the recent increase made in the price of rubber, Minister Coleman noted that it is not guarentee as there is no fixed time as to how long the increase would last.

CID LAUNCHES CAMPAIGN TO COMBAT INCREASE IN CRIME AFTER CURFEW LIFTING

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 11 Jun 82 p 8

[Excerpt] The Director of Criminal Investigation Division, (CID), Bangalee M. Saysay, has said a campaign to combat the increasing number of crimes in the streets of Monrovia has been launched by the CID.

Areas to be covered by agents of the CID, especially during the late hours, include West Point, Rock Crusher at Mamba Point, and the Terminal Islands.

The CID Chief said his division was taking this step because he had observed that crime rate has increased since the curfew was recently lifted by the PRC. He said many rogues who were kept off the streets during curfew hours have once more resumed their criminal activities.

The CID boss, in an interview with LINA Thursday, said his men were doing everything in their power to minimize the crime rate, but added that the lack of logistical support was hampering the smooth operation of the division.

He therefore appealed to proper authorities to properly equip the CID to ensure its effectiveness in protecting lives and properties.

RUBBER FARMERS STUDYING FIRESTONE'S PRICE OFFER

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 7 Jun 82 pp 3, 16

[Article by Madison Meahyen]

[Text] Liberian rubber planters have been closely studying Firestone Plantation Company's eight cents increase in, the buying price of rubber.

The Daily Observer reported on Tuesday that in a move to revive Liberian rubber farms, Firestone would as of June 1 pay 22 cents per pound for rubber.

Until last Tuesday, Liberian rubber producers were selling their non spec coagulum and cup lump to the company at 14 cents per pound.

The rubber farmers said at a meeting on Tuesday afternoon that they intend to revitalize their farms for increased productivity since many farms around the country either remained inactive or were closed down, following the drastic drop in rubber price locally and internationally over the past few years.

At a meeting of members of the Liberian Rubber Planters Association in Kakata, Gibi Territory, attended also by representatives of the Firestone Company, the farmers listened to a number of proposals by Firestone to improve local production.

Firestone is undertaking a $2 million dollar incentive subsidy to farmers which provides for the recent 8-cent increase in rubber price locally. And the objective is to augment local rubber production for the $4 million new rubber processing plant being constructed by Firestone in Harbel.

Tuesday's meeting in Kakata also considered such matters as the reopening of the farm supplies store in Firestone to readily make available farm tools for rubber planters. Firestone is expected to issue a price list soon, specifying costs for farm items.

Other issues discussed included the provision of training facilities, to be undertaken by the farm advisory board under Firestone, training for foremen and overseers on how to manage and supervise tappers for better productivity. It was decided that specific guidelines are to be made available later regarding details of the training program.

Some farmers requested Firestone for credit facilities to enable those who closed down their farms following the price decline to reactivate them. This matter Firestone will refer to management for further consideration. There was no definite promise.

But it was agreed that Firestone might consider providing short-term credit facilities to farmers to purchase farm tools and materials from the supplies store.

On the question of transportation, it was also decided that Firestone might consider despatching its latex trucks to individual farms to collect rubber products. Many of the farmers had complained that the high cost of energy and transportation was depreciating their earnings.

One other incentive matter discussed was the provision of stumps or bud-grafted rubber plants to farmers at reduced price. The bud-grafted rubber is high-yielding, and, according to reliable sources, Firestone's initial response to the suggestion was positive.

Members of the Rubber Planters Association of Liberia (RPAL) some of whom were represented at the meeting, included Salala Rubber Corporation, African Fruits Company, B.F. Goodrich (Liberia Inc.), the Liberia Company (Cocopa), Firestone Plantations Company itself, and several individual farmers.

RPAL was established in the 1960s to coordinate and promote the activities of rubber planters in the country for better production, marketing and bargaining power with major consumers.

One individual rubber farmer Mr. Richard Holder, whose farm the Daily Observer visited indicated that he was on the verge of closing down his farm, because the rubber industry was not proving to be profitable any longer.

He said this was necessary because the running of the farm was more expensive as compared to the profit generated; he has to buy farm items such as acid, rubber cups, knives, buckets and cutlasses, not to mention transportation cost, and at the same time, pay tappers for their labour ($2.00 per day each). Yet, after all these expenses, he said the price was a problem.

Nonetheless, Mr. Holder said he would study the terms offered by Firestone carefully to find out if the program is actually vital.

He has already closed down his farm in Bong Mines, but the one in Kakata is still in operation.

Mr. Holder also suggested that there was a need to tighten up security around farm storeroom or factory as certain people, unidentified, were in the habit of stealing latex and other rubber products from other farmers to boost their own incomes. This matter, he observed, had been discovered two years back, but nothing constructive was done about it.

He suggested that some action be taken by RPAL as a group. But he would not relent to provide his own security at the same time.

LPMC DIRECTOR SAYS U.S. RICE CONSIGNMENT HAS ARRIVED

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 10 Jun 82 p 12

[Article by Mlanju Reeves]

[Text]

A consignment of 5,500 metric tons (about 1,230 bags) of U.S. parboiled rice has arrived in the country as a result of an agreement signed on April 6 this year between the U.S. and Liberian Governments.

According to the Managing Director of the Liberia Produce Marketing Corporation, LPMC, Mr. Joseph Boakai, the consignment is the first in a shipment of 43,000 tons (about 960,000 bags).

In an interview Monday, Mr. Boakai disclosed that the first consignment will be distributed to various markets by the end of this week.

He said it will be sold at the regular price of $24 per bag.

Mr. Boakai added that the second shipment is due to arrive in the country by June 25.

He said the overall consignment is grade No. 5, with 20 per cent brokens and that the total consignment of nine shipments will arrive in the country on a bi-monthly basis, until the end of September.

Addressing himself to the hoarding of rice by some business houses, Mr. Boakai said the rice market is open to all, thus there should be no reason for hoarding.

He added that since the price adjustment on rice subsidy was made by the PRC Government, importers have been able to import the commodity freely.

CHIEF OF STAFF SETS DEADLINE FOR MILITARY TO VACATE PRIVATE HOMES

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 10 Jun 82 p 3

[Article by Madison Meahyen]

[Text] The Army Chief of Staff, together with the Ministry of National Defense, has given a strong warning that all personnel of the Armed Forces of Liberia abide by their military code of conduct and exercise proper discipline by refraining from acts like illegal occupation of private properties, or face immediate dismissal.

The warning, the Chief of Staff indicated, is not for soldiers only, but also for police, immigration and other para-military personnel in the habit of harrassing the civilian population in any manner.

Head of State CIC Samuel K. Doe is very much concerned, Lt. General Henry S. Dubar said, about any misbehaviour by soldiers or members of the para-military as such attitude is having profound effect on the national economy and hampering Government's efforts to improve the living conditions of Liberians, and protect residents in our borders.

Some of the reported misbehaviour has been in the form of extortion of money from civilians, unauthorized occupation of private homes (for which they either refuse or are unable to pay rents or utility bills), or seizure of other kinds of private property from the public.

General Dubar warned that this practice must stop immediately.

The Army Chief of Staff further explained that because soldiers occupy homes for which they cannot fulfil financial responsibilities, payment of rents and utility bills, the owners of said properties are correspondingly refusing or are unable to settle their obligation to government (taxes and so forth).

Also, because utility bills (electricity, water and telephone) incurred by the occupied homes are not being paid regularly, he noted, public corporations responsible for providing these services are themselves unable to continue in viable business as they cannot generate funds.

The Army Chief of Staff, who along with Defense Minister Major General Albert S. Karpeh and other ranking officers of the Defence Ministry was meeting with soldiers at the Barclay Training Center in Monrovia Tuesday evening, set June 30, 1982 as the deadline for soldiers and para-military personnel to vacate private homes, or be dismissed.

He observed that it had become necessary to re-define the role and responsibility of military personnel in the army as the misbehaviour of certain members was causing serious embarrassment to the PRC Government.

Maintaining that since the PRC government came to power it has done its utmost to provide good housing facilities for the men and women in arms, General Dubar said there was no point in soldiers occupying private homes forcibly. He said government will continue to provide adequate services to the army as long as the army remains disciplined and loyal in the interest of national development.

Already, government is providing rent allowance or rented houses for all officers of the Liberian army, he said.

Deputy Defense Minister for Operation, Cpt. Charles Harris, who also attended the occasion, advised soldiers to avoid considering everything as "G1".

Nothing is G1, nothing is free, so don't think it is G1 to occupy people houses," Captain Harris emphasized.

He explained that government has to pay for or incur all expenses for services that are misused by soldiers. It is to avoid this, he said, that government is constructing new military barracks around the country.

Defense Minister Albert Karpeh, for his part, reiterated that the tendency of certain soldiers and other para-military personnel to forcibly occupy private houses was unfair, disloyal and in disregard to established policy.

He said there have been repeated warnings to soldiers to refrain from such habits.

General Karpeh recalled that although the general attitude of soldiers as regards physical harrassment and molestation of civilians has improved considerably, it was still embarrassing and unlawful for them to seize properties from individuals. This, he observed, was making the general public afraid or apprehensive of the soldiers and "must stop right now."

As the meeting ended Tuesday evening, many soldiers who attended were told to pass on the message to their colleagues. Many of them agreed that the warning was proper and timely and that they were encouraged to advise their friends accordingly.

But some of them indicated that the problem of housing was still facing several personnel of the Armed Forces and that there was need for understanding and consideration from the civilian population.

They assured the public, though, that they would cooperate with higher authorities to remedy the situation.

Meanwhile, Defense Minister Karpeh and other high ranking officers of the Armed Forces have visited Camp Schefflin and Camp Todee on a similar mission. They were due to also visit Bomi Territory to advise soldiers here, accordingly.

NHA DIRECTOR SAYS TENANTS RENTING LOW-COST UNITS WILL NOT OWN THEM

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 10 Jan 82 pp 1, 10

[Article by Westmore Dahn]

[Excerpt]

The Managing Director of the National Housing Authority (NHA), Oscar Quiah, yesterday clarified widespread rumours that tenants occupying the varigus low-cost housing units would own the houses after certain period of time.

Since the last administration, when housing units were constructed in Barnersville, Gardnersville, Old Road, New Georgia and Matadi, it has been speculated throughout the country that individuals now occupying the units would own them after 10 years.

In an interview yesterday, the N.H.A. Managing Director said as far as he was concerned, there was no document to verify these rumours.

Repairs

He emphasized that persons presently living in low-cost housing units are only renting and that they were not mortgaging them, therefore, it was not possible for them to possess them after 10 years as has been speculated.

Mr. Quiah pointed out that to ensure that tenants were only renting the units, his agency "takes care of all repairs" on the buildings including leakage.

On the irregular collection of garbage from the various housing estates, Quiah attributed this to the failure of most tenants to settle their rents so as to enable the N.H.A. to meet its obligations to garbage collectors and to repair garbage trucks.

He disclosed that at the moment, tenants were owing the N.H.A. about $1 million which, he noted, when collected would assist the agency in meeting all of its obligations to occupants of the various housing units.

Asked how much government was realizing from these low-cost houses, Mr. Quiah explained that the houses were built on welfare basis and not for profit. He added that money realized fromthe houses is used to settle loans received from lending institutions for the construction of the houses. It was therefore possible to realize, what government was gaining in terms of profits, he added.

ELIMINATION OF 'DAY OF THE COVENANT' CRITICIZED

Windhoek DIE SUIDWESTER in Afrikaans 28 May 82 p 4

[Text] The Covenant

Here we stand before the Holy God of heaven and earth to make a vow to him that, if he will protect us and deliver our enemy to us, we will spend this day and date every year as a day of thanksgiving, as a Sabbath, and we will build a house in His honor where it pleases Him, and that we will also tell our children that they must share that with us as a remembrance also for future generations, for the honor of His name will be glorified by giving Him the praise and honor of the victory.

Before the Council of Ministers announced that it was eliminating the Day of the Covenant as a public holiday, it must have known -- especially in the light of the memorandum of the Executive Committee of Whites -- that it would seriously offend a large part of the inhabitants of the Southwest.

The fact that they nevertheless went ahead and eliminated one of the holiest days of Afrikanerdom once again emphasises the fact that those people have barely any respect or understanding for the deepest feelings of the Afrikaner.

To the contrary, it becomes clearer by the day that those in power in the DTA [Democratic Turnhalle Alliance) are consciously trying to trample on the desires, feelings and rights of this population group. We must accept that this is part of a strategy to try and drive out of the country any Afrikaner who is not willing to give up his national and cultural identity and religious heritage.

That contemptuous action was not entirely unexpected. For already in 1978 did the DTA mouthpiece speculate that the observance of the Covenant would be celebrated as a public holiday in the country for the last time that year. It took the enemies of that day longer to achieve their goal, but ultimately they succeeded -- unless the Administrator General makes a different ruling.

What is especially distressing is the fact that it was entirely unnecessary to give the Afrikaner this slap in the face. The proposal of the White Executive Committee would have been an ideal solution: allow every population group to choose two days of its own for its popular festivals, aside from the accepted national holidays.

Precisely the fact that that proposal was summarily rejected, without first allowing the opportunity for proper discussion on it, proves that this step is part of a calculated attack on Afrikaner traditions, religion and culture.

But on close examination this affects more than the Afrikaner alone. The deeper meaning of the Day of the Covenant cannot be found in the salvation of a small group of whites from a black supremacy, but in the salvation of followers of Christendom from being devoured by heathendom.

Today Christianity is once again facing a threat. And in a country where by far the majority of inhabitants profess the Christian belief it would not be out of place to enter a covenant of renewal.

We are convinced that this day can be honored -- should be honored -- by everyone for whom it has meaning. And the effect of it can be expanded much more widely by seeing it in the deeper religious sense.

LETTER TO AG ON RETENTION OF 'DAY OF THE COVENANT'

Windhoek DIE SUIDWESTER in Afrikaans 28 May 82 p 3

[Text] The Day of the Covenant must be retained as a public holiday for all population groups. This insistence on the retention of the victory of Christianity celebration is contained in a letter which the Executive Committee of the Whites sent this week to the Administrator General.

The letter, which was signed by the chairman of the Executive Committee, Mr J.W.F. Pretorius, states that the decision of the Council of Ministers to eliminate 16 December as a holiday "is, to put it mildly, a shock especially to the whites in the country."

Mr Pretorius said that the Executive Committee, in its memorandum to the Commission of Inquiry into Public Holidays in the Southwest, pointed out that:

--in the transitional stage in which the Southwest finds itself in the political and social areas there is a considerable degree of insecurity in a large part of the population, strengthened by events elsewhere in Africa;

--at this stage it is not desirable to make inquiries into the matter -- as the commission was asked to do;

--the status quo in force with respect to public holidays in the Southwest must be maintained until the territory becomes independent;

--if, for reasons not known to the Executive Committee, such a proposal is indeed deemed necessary, the authorities of the 11 population groups should have been approached directly for commentary, and not the general public.

Mr Pretorius said that so far no reason has been detected why such an inquiry can't wait until after independence.

"The decision of the Council of Ministers is a shock, to put it mildly, especially to the whites in this country. The only deduction which can be made from that is that there is no recognition for the cultural and religious values of certain population groups -- and by that I'm not referring only to the whites."

Each population group in the Southwest has certain events or occasions which are typically its own and worthy of commemoration within a cultural context.

The position of the Executive Committee is that, within the framework of the concept that each population group should have the greatest possible power of decision in matters pertaining to itself, also in the cultural context, the opportunity to experience such commemorations should be granted to each of the population groups.

The Executive Committee recommended to the Commission that the right must be granted to the authorities of each population group to set two public holidays for the members of their population group, which will then be binding.

In this manner proper recognition could be given to, for example, the holidays of the Jewish community, the Day of the Covenant of the Basters, Hereros and Mbanderudeaes, and the Day of the Covenant (16 December).

Mr Pretorius says that a request in his letter that oral testimony could be given to clarify the entire aspect in detail has not met with any reaction from the Commission to date.

"As was stated to the Commission, the Executive Committee will now have to strongly insist that the Day of the Covenant be retained as a public holiday for all the population groups, and to such an extent that no racist intentions are attached to it, but as a commemoration of the true meaning of the event, namely the victory obtained that day by Christianity.

"In this manner all Christians, and not only the whites, will be involved according to individual needs. Disregard of this principle is disregard of the Supreme Being.

Mr Pretorius writes the Administrator General that acceptance of the decisions of the Council of Ministers can only result in a weakening of faith in the central government authority.

ROY ALLEN DESCRIBED AS SMOOTH TALKER WITH FERTILE IMAGINATION

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 27 May 82 p 1

[Report: "Roy Allen Wanted to Sell Oil to South Africa."]

[Text] Mr Roy Allen, the man who is telling abroad that he was recently deported from South-West Africa/Namibia and that he will now make things tough for South Africa through means of the UN, apparently is not only a smooth talker, but he also has a rather fertile imagination.

In an interview with the personnel manager of a large engineering company in Windhoek he told a story which would make anyone take notice. However, from the remarks the personnel manager wrote on Allen's application form, one may deduce that he does not believe in fairy tales.

Amongst other things, Allen claimed that:

--he was engaged in solving South Africa's oil problem singlehandedly, with the aid of a Saudi ally;

--he was negotiating directly with the Administrator General on the establishment of an oil refinery in the Southwest;

--his Arabian friend wanted to sell oil directly to South-West Africa/Namibia;

--his mysterious Arabian ally planned to build a food processing plant in Owambo.

"Etc., etc." the personnel manager wrote at the bottom -- clearly not very impressed.

According to his own description Mr Allen was also a man of many talents.

Amongst other occupations, he worked as an apprentice engineer, clerk, mechanical designer, public relations officer, photographer and technical journalist. He can speak Afrikaans, English, German and French.

All this skill and talent -- not even his highly respected Arabian friend -- was not enough for him to get the job he applied for.

Mr Allen has lived in Windhoek for almost 4 years and was involved in the publishing of the magazine SPECTRUM, but it was never really clear how he made his living. He is married to a colored woman and has two children. Allen is 50 years old and is a British subject. In 1979 he arrived here in Windhoek with only a 12-year old Volkswagen.

Abroad he is saying that he has been given only 24 hours notice to leave the country. Before he left the country, he nevertheless had time to sell his house in Windhoek.

A spokesman for the department of internal affairs said there was no truth to Allen's being deported.

Allen said he would apply for a job at the United Nations -- it is not clear what he wants to do there. "Then the South African Government will be very sorry" he is reported to have said.

CAPRIVIANS RESURRECT INDEPENDENCE PARTY

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 17 Jun 82 p 5

[Text]

THE Caprivi African National Union (CANU) has been revived in the region, and claims widespread support for its goal of an independent state of 'Itenge' in the Caprivi.

Canu held its second congress since 1964 at the Ngweze Central Sportfield in Katima Mulilo recently. The congress took place on May 28 and 29, and was attended by about 200 supporters, according to a report on the Congress compiled by the Canu Department of Information and Publicity.

Canu merged with Swapo in 1964, but some Canu members have now left Swapo to revive Canu. The group's leader Mr Mishake Muyongo, is at the moment outside the country. Mr Muyongo was elected Vice and Acting President of Canu at the Congress.

Mr Brendan K Simbwae was elected President, although he is at present in an unknown jail. According to Mr Ernest Likando, Director General of Information and Publicity, Canu is very concerned about Mr Simbwae, and is trying to establish his whereabouts from the SA Government.

Canu is virulently anti-Swapo, and the report accused the old leadership of "abandoning the struggle" when they amalgamated the party with Swapo.

They thought "those Canu members who remained in Swapo were going to forge the struggle to its logical conclusion but alas, we had just remained to witness agonies and blood of our fellow brothers who died in the hands of the numerous primitive Owambos instead of Boers."

On the 1964 merger between Canu and Swapo, the report says both organisations were supposed to dissolve in order to form a new organisation. The agreement was not kept to since Swapo members were in the majority.

"In a democracy, five people with good ideas against twenty fools or idiots can be vetoed and obviously the vote goes to idiots who will mess up things."

In none of the documents drawn up at the time was Caprivi mentioned as being a part of Namibia, the report continues.

"As people waging a common struggle, there could be some sort of political ties and mutual relations," however.

On the question of why Caprivi was referred to as part of SWA in official Swapo documents after the merger, the report argued "there was nothing wrong with Caprivi/Itenge belonging to the South West African community or sub-continent of Africa" just as other regional grouping existed.

The report details a number of difficulties experienced by the party in organising in Caprivi, such as harassment by the authorities, the lack of news media in the region, a lack of funds and the exitence of tribal disputes.

"Chief Mamili and his Fwe tribe wants to secede part of Caprivi and have his Kingdom", and was being "supported by the colonial administration to confuse the people."

"No enemy can allow his opponent to organise him or herself in order to challenge him," the report says. "Thus there will be no time when SA will be ready to allow Canu to operate in Caprivi because it has been proved that Canu enjoys the support of the people and by allowing this, it will be the destruction and the end of the DTA and then colonialism."

According to the report, the congress decided to amend the 1964 constitution and establish an organisational structure including 12 departments, a central committee, a national executive committee and a legal and constitutional sub-committee to draw up and amended constitution. Party members were elected to fill all 33 posts.

Decisions were also taken on regional structures, and the Caprivi devided into three regions. The congress was chaired by Mr Jackson Lagazi Lukonga.

SNIC SPECIAL DIVISION ESTABLISHED

Victoria NATION in English 11 Jun 82 p 10

[Text] A SPECIAL division has been set up by the National Investment Corporation (SNIC) to look into and recommend on the effectiveness of parastatals and government ministries in carrying out the country's political, social and economic objectives.

Another important goal of the Professional Accountancy and Management Services Division is take part fully in the country's development by actively supporting the policy of using the country's human resources to the utmost, and to the maximum benefit of the country.

The Division, says a press communiqué from SNIC, will be an ideal training ground for young people who wish to make a career in accounting, auditing and management.

The Division's staff will be continuously trained and developed and the valuable experience they will gain from working and training with professionals will eventually allow them to take on serious responsibilities in parastatals and other organisations.

Based in rooms 301 to 305 of the Pirates Arms Building in Victoria, the Division is being professionally set up and structured to cater for the auditing, accounting and management consulting requirements of all parastatals, government ministries and departments and any other people who or bodies that need specialist advice or help.

"The new set up", says the SNIC communiqué, "represents yet another step further in the development of the country and particularly its people".

DETAILS ON NEW EDUCATION BILL GIVEN

Victoria NATION in English 9 Jun 82 pp 1, 2

[Text]

A LONG overdue revision of the law regulating the organisation, promotion and development of education to bring these in line with Seychelles' socialist principles will be put before the People's Assembly at its next sitting.

The Education Bill 1982, which will replace the 1944 Education Act and its amendments if it becomes law, sets out, among other things, the Government's education policy, clarifies the responsibilities and powers of the Minister for Education, enables the inspection of schools and provides penalties for offenders.

The Bill explains the Government's education policy as being:

"to ensure that all Seychellois are offered equal educational opportunities in accordance with their abilities, aptitudes and needs;

to ensure that no Seychellois is prejudiced in his or her education by reason of his or her sex, colour or creed; and to encourage in Seychellois an awareness of national identity and respect for the individual".

Other objectives are the progressive development of institutions devoted to education, the achievement and maintenance of the highest educational standards, and the provision of a varied and comprehensive education service.

"In implement of the Government policy there shall be compulsory primary education for every Seychellois child for nine school years from the entry age until the completion of P9". the Bill says.

Among his responsibilities and powers, the Education Minister will be able to pay a scholarship, bursary or allowance, or provide other assistance to any pupil.

In spite of anything the Civil Code may say to the contrary, the Minister will also be able to order the compulsory attendance at school of children, with the exception of expatriates, up to 16-years-old.

If such an order is made and a child fails or neglects to regularly attend school without a good reason. each of his parents will be guilty and liable to a R.1,000 fine and three months' imprisonment or more if this is provided for in the order.

Anyone conducting a school without ministerial authority could be fined up to R5,000 and imprisoned for a year.

PROFOUND REFORM

A statement from the Ministry of Education and Information, looking at the reasons for overhauling the education law, points out that after the victorious Liberation of 5 June, 1977, a profound educational reform programme was launched. It's main aim was to eliminate the previous capitalist system in favour of a system in line with the socialist principles of the Seychellois Revolution.

The Government therefore decided to take over the responsibility of pre-school education. provide equal opportunities in education to all children, amalgamate the primary school (P1 — P6) with the first cycle of secondary education (F1 — F3) to form a new primary sector (P1 — P9), provide nine years of free universal education, and establish a Polytechnic in 1983.

The latter would improve vocational and technical education and integrate all types of training, including general academic education, after the National Youth Service.

The restructuring of the education system is being accompanied by various pedagogical reforms improving the quality of education and its relevance to the needs of the people by laying emphasis on the study and use of the physical, social, political, cultural and economic aspects of the country.

Such a comprehensive reform programme has made it necessary to review the existing Education Bill so as to draw up an appropriate legal framework controlling the effective operation of the system and reflecting the philosophy underlying the revolution in education.

The Education Bill 1982 therefore proposes to provide the necessary mechanism which will allow an efficient administration of Education in conformity with Government policies and in line with the country's socialist principles.

INDEPENDENCE DAY PARADE 'MIRRORS SUCCESS OF REVOLUTION'

Victoria NATION in English 7 Jun 82 pp 1, 9

[Text] THE roll of drums and the steady tramp of nearly 2,000 pairs of marching feet bounced off the reflective glass of the Maison du Peuple and stifled themselves among the thick and delighted crowds.

The muffled rumble of military vehicles, the clatter of helicopters and the roar of aeroplanes followed, echoing along Trois Freres' perenially green uniform and dwindling into nothing across the ruffled waters of Port Victoria.

Seychelles was celebrating the fifth anniversary of the launching of its socialist revolution in traditionally spectacular style.

Saturday morning's fifth Liberation anniversary parade was full of firsts.

It was the first time the President took the salute before the dignified Seychelles People's Progressive Front headquarters, its roof overhang brightly dressed in patriotic red, white and green.

It was the first time the parade had two bands with the Pioneer Band, as well as the National Maritime School and the Cap Ternay National Youth Service Village students making their first appearance in this prestigious event.

It was the first time some new equipment of the Seychelles People's Defence Forces, including one of its two helicopters, was ceremonially exhibited in public.

Finally, and to the delight of the thousands of children in the crowds, it was the first time the People's Air Force staged a flypast.

Marching from the 5th June Avenue opposite Freedom Square to the Maison du Peuple on Latanier Road, the first of the parade's 40 squads came into sight at 9.15 a.m.

Earlier President Albert René had arrived to the stirring strains of the National Anthem, the salute of a People's Liberation Army Guard of Honour, and the boom of a 21-gun salute of the Indian Navy tanker 'Deepak' tied alongside Mahé Quay.

As photographers clicked away and camera motors whirred, the President joined other members of the SPPF Central Executive Committee, senior Government officials, diplomats and guests seated under a red, white and green pavillion erected on the Maison du Peuple lawn.

Raising clenched fists in salute, waving red banners bearing revolutionary slogans and singing lustily 'Debout Zom Lib', 350 men and women from the country's 23 SPPF Branches started off the parade in colourful and exhilirating style.

The Seychelles Police Band, in ceremonial red, white and blue, were followed by Parade Commander Major Macdonald Marengo of the People's Defence Forces.

Behind him came the four-strong flag guard who dipped the state and party flags in salute as they goose-stepped past the President and Commander-in-Chief, who took the salute from a slightly raised podium.

Five People's Liberation Army squads of ever 200 troops passed stiffly in review, eyes right, palms slapped across their automatic assault rifles. The first two squads, one each from the Union Vale and Pointe Larue Camps, were in olive-green ceremonial dress while the rest were in camouflage fatigues and steel helmets.

A few of the troops carried light machineguns or rocket-propelled grenade launchers. The last SPLA squads, from the SPDF HQ at Bel Eau, included women soldiers marching with, and as well as the men.

Kakhi-clad and blue-beretted sailors of the People's Navy, uniformed cadets of the maritime school, dark blue and red uniformed mobile unit policemen, civilian and airport firemen, and two squads of militiamen and women from all over Mahé made up the rest of the military part of the parade.

As the Police Band, which had marched onto the reclaimed land opposite the Maison du Peuple, stopped playing, the Pioneer Band took over with a crash of drums.

Especially warm applause greeted the boys and girls of the band, clad in a special uniform that included a red sash around the waist, red epaulets and a yellow stripe down the trousers.

There followed 10 squads of over 300 Pioneers and Young Pioneers from all over the island with their distinctive marching style--goose-stepping all the way, arms the island with their distinctive marching style — goose-stepping all the way, arms swining wide behind before being brought up high across the chest — and equally unique salute, turning to salute their national leader.

The striking beige and dark brown ranks of the National Youth Service came next, boys and girls' squads alternating. The 650 students were divided into 12 squads from the second-year Port Latnay Village and four from Cap Ternay.

With a quiet rumble of engines. a long line of the SPLA's heavier equipment then rolled past with their commanders and gun crews saluting their C-in-C.

There were three armoured reconnaissance vehicles armed with light and heavy machine-guns; light and heavy troop transports mounted with recoiless anti-tank guns, light mortars and light and heavy machine-guns and/or towing a field gun, anti-aircraft cannon, four-barrelled heavy machine-guns and other weapons.

Two bright red fire tenders with blue emergency lights flashing and firemen hanging on to the back rounded off the parade.

Once all the marchers were standing at ease on the reclaimed land opposite him, President René read his traditional Liberation anniversary speech this year calling on the people to examine their conscience as to past efforts and appealing to parents and others to help instill in the Republic's children the right attitudes needed in future socialists, especially discipline.

Soon after Mr. René finished, a light single engined Rallye and a twin-engined Swearingen Merlin flew past signaling the start of the fly-past.

People's Air Force and Indian Navy Chetak helicopters then swooped past with their respective state flags suspended below them.

As the crowd gasped and children squeeled with delight, the Indian helicopter then dropped a man into the Yatch Club basin, later returning to hover and winch him back aboard.

Meanwhile, the Rallye made another run past the reviewing stand releasing red, white and green balloons.

After a final National Anthem, President René left and a highly satisfied crowd, includnig hundreds of schoolchildren in uniform, broke up. Some headed for home but others, still excited with the after effects of seeing the nation's youth and others so proudly marching by, headed for the photograph and arts and crafts exhibitions in central Victoria.

An hour after the branch militants joyously marched into the sight of their, and the nation's leader, another rousing Liberation anniversary parade honouring that momentous early morning uprising five years ago. was over.

Everyone left looking forward to many more parades that are sure to come with the increasing triumphs of the Revolution.

REORGANIZATION OF WOMEN'S ASSOCIATION REPORTED

Victoria NATION in English 11 Jun 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] WITH the appointment, by the President, of a new Seychelles Women's Association National Committee recently, the SWA is hoping to launch a revised action plan of objectives and activities later this year.

The chairman of the national committee is Mrs Rita Sinon, member of the Central Executive Committee of the Seychelles People's Progressive Front into which the SWA has now been integrated, rather than affiliated.

As soon as district committees — formerly known as sub-committees — have been re-elected, Mrs Sinon told Seychelles Agence Presse, serious talks on the best ways to realise the aims, objectives and action plan of the Association will be held with members.

Apart from changing the names of the central and sub-committees, another change in the SWA constitution is the withdrawal of the R5 subscription fee.

Membership is open to all women over 16 years old. They will have to apply for free membership to the national or the district committee secretary.

The objectives of the SWA are:

to promote the status of women and to raise their political, educational, social and economic standard; to acquaint them with their social rights and duties for the integration of women in national development at all levels; to preserve the rights and liberties of women and to combat discrimination against women;

to act as a control body for co-ordinated representations to the Central Executive Committee of SPPF and Government on matters concerning women; and to examine and evaluate the contribution of women in the economic, social and cultural fields.

Any member of the SWA may be suspended or expelled by the National Committee for misconduct, breaking Association rules or acting against the best interests of the SWA.

There will be a right of appeal to a Special or Annual General Assembly or the SPPF Congress.

The General Assembly will be held every year with the National Committee and three members of each district committee attending.

The Assembly will review past performance and decide on future plans and programmes of the Association. It will also approve the budget.

The district committees will bring to the notice of the National Committee matters needing reform and for carrying out policies of the Seychelles Women's Association in their area.

The district and the National Committees will carry out programmes to make women aware of their rights and responsibilities through meetings, seminars and other education programmes approved by the Central Executive Committee of SPPF.

No member will be eligible for any SWA elections if she is not a member of the SPPF.

The members of the new SWA National Committee are Mrs Rita Sinon, Chairman: Mrs Jessy Fréminot, Secretary: Mrs Bertha Marengo, Treasurer: and Mrs Sylvette Frichot, Mrs Marlene Lionnet, Mrs Elva Pool, Mrs Andrine Gertrude, Miss Simone Arnephy, and Miss Barbara Quan Yat Coune, members.

PRESIDENT OPENS NATIONS'S FIRST CANNING FACTORY

Victoria NATION in English 7 Jun 82 pp 2, 9

[Text] IN this 1982 Year of Agriculture, there is no doubt that the people have taken this call with great enthusiasm and in all sectors everyone is making significant efforts to produce more in order to reduce considerably the amount of foodstuffs which are imported.

President France Albert Rene confirmed this on the 5th anniversary of the June 5th Revolution when he officially opened the first canning factory ever built in Seychelles, at Pointe Larue, for fruit and vegetable processing.

The President said his government was committed to the production of as much food as possible for the population and for the visitors who come to our country.

But the Seychellois leader also pointed out that our efforts in producing more would be unsuccessful if we failed to organise properly our system of distribution and marketing on the one hand and our capacity to process the surpluses on the other.

That is why on the processing side, the National Agro Industries Limited (NAIL), a subsidiary of SEYCOM, came about with its fruit and vegetable processing unit.

President Rene who had personnally watched over this project told guests at the opening ceremony that this fruit and vegetable processing unit was conceived, planned and implemented within a space of 15 months despite a major setback suffered by way of a total loss of the equipment on account of fire on board vessel carrying the equipment from India.

"Today the fruit and vegetable processing unit becomes operational. In this way we will be able to deal efficiently with the large surpluses of fruits and vegetables which are inevitably produced during periods of glut as a result of the farmers' increased awareness and interest to produce more", the President told the SPPF officials, government ministers, diplomats, the factory's employees and other guests at the opening ceremony of the plant. The factory has a capacity of handling two tonnes of fruits and vegetables per shift and has the flexibility to handle a variety of raw materials. The capacity can be stretched beyond two tonnes by working more than one shift.

President Rene has given the assurance that the unit will process fruits and vegetables currently in abundance without disturbing the equilibrium of fresh market demands.

Guests at the opening ceremony were able to taste come of the products that will come out of the factory. There were passion fruit nectar, guava juice, pure orange juice with no additives, orange squash, pineapple squash and there will be in future whole canned fruits in syrup, jam and other tropical flavoured products.

Under the brand name of 'SEYCOM' these first canned products of Seychelles as the Principal Secretary for Finance and Industries Mr Guy Morel said, are expected to become popular in the country, fast. Before he was led on a tour of the factory by General Manager Mr. V. Krishna and watched the performance of the different pieces of equipment, the President spoke of two other projects of NAIL which are now operational. These are the poultry parent stock unit which will provide day-old chicks to the farmers and the poultry abattoir. President Rene said this would enable us to become self-sufficient in poultry meat. On quality control of its products, Mr Rene who is also the Minister for Finance and Industries said great emphasis was being laid by NAIL on total quality control-from raw material to finished products-right from selection-handling-processing and so forth.

"NAIL will soon complete the necessary infrastructure for top quality control and testing of processed foods products and these facilities will be opened to all those involved in food processing and to the Government and SEYCOM", he added.

The Quality Control Division will also have a product development laboratory with added facilities to act as a training centre for the food industry.

"For NAIL there is still more in the pipeline for the future", the President said. There is the planned animal feed unit, a milk processing unit and a meat processing unit during the 1982-83 to complete the first projected phase. In the second phase, the projects under contemplation include a copra manufacturing and oil refinery unit, a flour mill and an export-oriented integrated papaine and pawpaw processing complex.

The President also extended his gratitude to all those who have in one way or another helped in these projects, in particular the Indian government and Mr Bhatt, the Director of Telco and his team. The General Manager of the Pointe Larue canning factory is Mr Krishna from India.

BRIEFS

VISITING DELEGATIONS--Some members of foreign delegations who were in Seychelles for the 5th anniversary celebrations of the June 5 Liberation are still engaged in various visits in the country. The Communist Party of Cuba delegation, led by Mr. Omar Iser Mojena, yesterday morning called on the Secretary General of the SPPF, Mr. Guy Sinon, and in the afternoon met Mr. James Michel, SPPF Publicity Secretary and Minister for Education and Information. The Cuban friends will this morning visit the Sadeco Farm at Anse aux Pins, before leaving on Friday. The leader of the Frelimo delegation of Mozambique, Mr. Daniel Mbanze, yesterday morning visited the NYS villages. In the afternoon, he called on Mr. Ogilvy Berlouis, SPPF Organising Secretary and Minister for Youth and Defence, before seeing National Workers Union officials. The leader of the Frelimo delegation will this morning view the Liberation exhibition at the Carnegie Building. In the afternoon he will visit the poultry farm at Pointe au Sel. The Mozambican delegation leaves on Thursday. [Text] [Victoria NATION in English 9 Jun 82 p 1]

PRASLIN ROAD PROJECT--Another Praslin road project that is expected to start soon is the surfacing of the road from the Chateau de Feuilles Hotel, overlooking Baie Ste Anne, to Anse Consolation. This R.798,500 project which will give the road an all-weather surface, will also include the laying of proper drainage. The Community Development Division in the Ministry for Planning and Development is expected to start work any time this month and to finish in October. The existing red earth road is 1,500 metres long and seven metres wide. Proper drains will be built on one side of the road while the opposite side will be raised forcing water to flow into the drain. An area of 10,500 square metres will be stabilized and surfaced with bitumen. The road will be stabilized by regrading red earth and cement together with the proper amount of water and then rolling the surface flat. After the stabilization, a thin bitumen surface will be sprayed on. [Text] [Victoria NATION in English 9 Jun 82 p 10]

FOREIGN GUESTS--Guests representing 14 government and four political parties attended the June 5 celebrations over the weekend. Apart from the diplomatic corps based in Seychelles, Algeria, Australia, Belgium, China, Cyprus, India, the DPRK, Nigeria, Switzerland, the United States, West Germany and Zaire were represented by ambassadors or high commissioners. Austria and Vietnam sent other diplomats. Of special significance to the Seychelles People's Progressive Front were friends from the Communist Party of Cuba (CPC), the Workers

Party of Korea, Frelimo of Mozambique and Chama Cha Mapinduzi (CCM) of Tanzania. The Korean Workers' Party delegation was led by Central Committee member, Mr. Kim Gi Nam, who is also a government minister. Mr. Omar Iser Mojeria (CPC), Mr. Daniel Mbanze (Frelimo), and Mr. Machano Haji (CCM), were all leaders of their respective Central of National Executive Committee delegations. FOURAH BAY COLLEGE STUDENTS PROTEST ARREST OF AKIBO-BETTS

London WEST AFRICA in English 14 Jun 82 pp 1578-79

[Text] THE MAN who uncovered "Voucher-gate" and "Squandergate" (fraudulent conversion of government funds by top civil servants, and involving several businessmen) former Minister of State, Finance, Mr. Alfred Akibo-Betts, is now out in the cold.

Following cancellation of the May 1 election after polling in his constituency, Freetown Central I for reasons which were not very clear to the people of the constituency, Mr. Akibo-Betts is reported to have been advised by a senior party official to "withdraw" from the elections since the APC no longer wanted him in Parliament. This order was followed a week later by a search of his official residence at Kingtom by police and detention of Mr. Akibo-Betts at Pademba Road prison.

As news of this detention spread throughout the city, students of Fourah Bay College which is part of Mr. Akibo-Betts's constituency protested on campus and went into a sit-down and hunger strike in support of his release. The road to the campus was blocked with stones and scrapped vehicles and the students issued a release, copies of which were sent to the Medical and Dental Association, the Bar Association, teachers of schools and colleges, students of schools and colleges, religious organisations, and the general public.

The release begins: "Fellow citizens and the world community at large, following the 1982 General Elections in Sierra Leone, the dubious and controversial ways in which they were conducted, culminating in the arrest of Mr. Alfred Akibo-Betts, we are appealing to you to join us in condemning the existing state of affairs in the country as barbaric, shameful and disgraceful.

"That Sierra Leone has been raped, reduced and debased to a state of animal level devoid of morals, values and conscience of universal appreciation has been glaringly and exquisitely substantiated by the manoeuvres of the present regime of President Siaka Stevens.

"Akibo, the man who has championed the cause of democracy and nationalism had been arrested. We consider his arrest as a calculated machination to drive the final nail in the coffin of democracy, the liquidation of which we in Sierra Leone so gleefully and disgracefully preside over. Democracy has lost its noble purports in this country to the point that it could so rightly be called "democrazy".

"Yes, indeed it appears we are all crazy, for what is more lunatic than to believe that to champion the cause of democracy, honesty, sincerity and progress, to checkmate corruption and embezzlement constitute a capital punishment. Akibo's crime has been precisely these ones. He has been fighting a just cause by revealing serious cases of financial malpractices. We say bravo to him, for we have at least been able to see some of these culprits. He did not however, finish his task; the exposures were only a tip of the iceberg.

"To accomplish that task is a crime for which he now stands persecuted. Those who have vested and entrenched interests in the perpetuation of corruption are fighting 'tooth, nail and cash' to prevent him from getting back to Parliament.

"Akibo's case is analogous to a police constable who caught a thief, brought him to the station, and instead of the thief being in custody, and sub-inspector ordered that the constable be jailed and the thief be set free with honour! Now Akibo's thieves are riding high with honour, while he is languishing behind bars. This is just an eloquent illusion of how democracy has been made to acquire a democratic flavour. They are mad indeed.

"We here in Fourah Bay College are resolved that we cannot sit idly by and preside over the prostitution and liquidation of democracy. We feel that we all have a moral obligation to this country. We owe a lot to posterity and it would be an unpardonable crime upon our heads and for which we will never be able to expiate ourselves if we don't do anything now to see that Akibo is released from custody.

"He is now a martyr for the cause of justice and progress, and if, in Sierra Leone, this virtuous attitude is a crime then we are demanding that if Akibo's blood is to expiate for his crime, let this blood be spilled in the public that the whole world would see in so much that he died an honourable man. . . ."

The statement ended with a call to action.

A further students' release stated:

"Fellow Citizens, last Thursday May 20, the Acting President S. I. Koroma 'advised' Mr. Alfred Akibo-Betts to withdraw his candidature for the forthcoming Bye-Elections — on the grounds that: the Lebanese and the Indians do not want him, the Government does not want him and top civil servants also oppose his presence in Parliament . . .

"Rumour has it that the votes cast in the May 1 Election were later counted and unofficial reports give the results as follows: Alfred Akibo-Betts 13,999, Willsworth Morgan 299. The projected landslide victory for Akibo is a concrete demonstration of support and mandate given to him.

"The elections turned out to be a fiasco, and now that the Bye-elections are coming the people's determination and morale remain undiminished. Popular support is still with Akibo.

"That certain reactionary forces in high places are determined to prevent Akibo from entering into Parliament. It was normal for the incumbent of any constituency to ge given the party symbol.

"Rumour has it that Akibo will not get the symbol. We want to assure the authorities that we will not tolerate this: and we are appealing to all supporters in Central I to join hands with us. People of Sierra Leone, do not sit idly by and preside over the dastardly liquidation of democracy."

[The students' statement then accused certain individuals of improper activities and intimidation in connection with the bye-election].

Mr. Akibo-Betts was subsequently released. A State House announcement read over Sierra Leone radio twenty four hours later said that the police had been able to "retrieve 450 government files and an assortment of vouchers, local purchase orders, customs invoices and other documents from the Kingtom residence of Mr. Alfred Akibo-Betts. . . ."

Sources close to the Akibo-Betts family confirm that Mr. Akibo-Betts has since moved from the government quarters at Kingtom to the family house in the east end of the city, and will not contest the by-election.

It is said that many of the files found in the possession of Mr. Akibo-Betts were those connected with "Vouchergate" and "Squandergate" which he had removed from the Ministry of Finance and kept in large trunks at his residence to ensure their safety.

REPEAL OF KANGWANE CONSTITUTION GAZETTED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 19 Jun 82 p 4

[Text]

THE KaNgwane Constitution Proclamation was yesterday repealed and the KaNgwane Legislative Assembly abolished in terms of a proclamation published in teh Government Gazette.

This follows the announcement by the Government that KaNgwane will be incorporated into Swaziland.

The gazette notice said KaNgwane would in the meantime be administered by the Department of Co-operation and Development.

The proclamation said: "...The administrative control of, and all rights, powers, authorities, duties, obligations and functions in connection with any matter, which by virtue of any law were vested, immediately prior to the coming into operation of this proclamation in the area, in the Executive Council of KaNgwane or a person or body designated by the Government of KaNgwane shall, from the date of this proclamation vest in the Minister of Co-operation and Development or a person designated by him..."

It said all assets and liabilities of the KaNgwane Government would also vest in the Minister, Dr Piet Koornhof.

All existing laws in the area would remain in force until repealed or amended.

●From Durban the SABC has reported that an aerial survey is being carried out to identify suitable stretches of State land for nature reserves in the Drakensberg and Swartberg areas.

The aim is to identify land which might be transferred to the control of the Natal Provincial Administration in compensation for the possible loss to KwaZulu of the Umfolosi, Hluhluwe an Mkuze game reserves and the Sordwana resort.

The Minister of Environmental Affairs, Dr Nak van der Merwe, officials of his department and the director of the Natal Parks Board, Mr John Geddes Page, left Vryheid by helicopter yesterday to carry out the survey.

The Minister and his party carried out an aerial survey of the coastal zone between Lake St Lucia and Sordwana Bay on Thursday.

WORKERS ASSURED: NO PENSION FREEZE PLAN

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 9 Jun 82 p 5

[Text]

THE Government is not planning to "freeze" workers' pension money.

This assurance was given yesterday by the Registrar of Financial Institutions, Mr Naas van Staden.

"No legislation is contemplated which will interfere with the right of any worker who is a member of a pension fund to withdraw their money when they leave their jobs", Mr Van Staden said.

"I cannot make it more categorical than that."

Last year, a pension Bill which proposed the "freezing" of employees' pension contributions was dropped after nation-wide strikes by black workers.

Mr Van Staden was reacting to reports of a sharp increase in labour unrest and threatened strike action by Natal black workers on the pension issue.

The workers have been reacting to a speech made by the Minister of Finance, Mr Owen Horwood, in Durban.

Mr Horwood said then that he had given instructions for fresh pension legislation, incorporating some of the provisions of the Pensions Bill which was dropped last year, to be drawn up.

But he implied the Government was not planning to reintroduce the "freezing" clause.

However, the speech led to a strike at a Durban plant and threatened unrest in the Natal paper and textile industries, when workers demanded the refund of their pension money, fearing that the "freezing" clause was to be reintroduced.

According to unionists, workers were also upset at a reference by Mr Horwood to the fact that 53% of pension money must be invested in Government securities.

However, Mr Van Staden said yesterday the Minister had been referring only to a plan to allow workers to open "frozen" savings accounts at banks, building societies and post offices, which would be subject to the same tax concessions as pension contributions.

"We are offering workers an opportunity — on a purely voluntary basis — to accumulate money which they can use in their old age. Absolutely no one will be forced to make use of these accounts," he said.

CONCOR'S R100-M OF NEW BUSINESS

Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES in English 6 Jun 82 p 3

[Article by Vera Veljakova]

[Text]

A RECORD R100-million worth of new construction contracts have been won in the past few months by Concor, one of Africa's leading civil engineering and construction groups, whose assets are more than R40-million.

The largest order comes from Escom, which has awarded Concor a R55-million contract for the construction of the new Matimba power station, turbine hall and auxiliary bay.

This new generation power station for Ellisras (Transvaal) which will be fed by Iscor's Grootegeluk coal mine, represents one of the largest single construction contracts won by Concor in South Africa during its 33 years of operations.

Although Concor has been, and still is, working on substantially larger civil engineering projects in South Africa and overseas, these have been in consortium with other leading international engineering contractors.

Currently, for example, the group is busy on South American projects whose combined value totals R700-million.

Another contract in the pipeline is for SABC-TV Auckland Park which is spending R5-million on constructing additional facilities such as workshops and areas for storage and pre-assembly of props and scenery.

Then Gold Fields commissioned Concor's mining wing to slide two R3.5-million concrete headgears for erection at West Driefontein No 7 shaft and East Driefontein No 4 shaft.

"There appears to be a general swing towards concrete headgear and away from steel alternatives," says a Concor spokesman. "We have built 23 concrete headgears so far."

A further R2.5-million contract is for the first phase of design and construction for Bayer's new agro-chemical factory at Nigel, which is to produce agricultural fertilisers. Proposals for Phase 2 of the development have already been submitted to Bayer.

The balance of contracts, valued at R34-million, includes two slides for Anglo American Property Services, which requires them for its city centre developments.

Cape contracts are looking up. Three new bridges are being built. There is also a great deal of activity in the mining field, both for underground and surface work.

Black housing complexes for mines are under way, and now Transkei has commissioned a further 11km of new roads.

UNION WARNS OF CONFLICT IN SOUTH AFRICA'S HARBOURS

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 2 Jun 82 p 2

[Article by Steven Friedman]

[Text] THE simmering union recognition dispute between the SA Transport Services and the unregistered General Workers Union (GWU) at two East Cape harbours "threatens the short-term economic and political stablity" of the area, the union says.

In an open letter to SATS general manager Dr Kobus Loubser, the GWU also warns that the dispute could involve action by overseas transport workers and repeats its appeals to Dr Loubser to meet workers to discuss the dispute.

The union claims majority support among SATS workers at East London and Port Elizabeth harbours and has asked SATS on several occasions to negotiate with worker representatives on the issue.

But both Dr Loubser and the Minister of Transport Mr Hendrik Schoeman have said publicly that the SATS will not negotiate with the union.

In its letter the union says that workers who joined the GWU met with "an extraordinarily brutal response" from the SATS and Railways Police.

Its says a union leader was fired and members held for questioning by the Railways Police. It alleges they had been offered money to leave the union.

"Despite this, workers have "in the face of extraordinary provocation, exhibited an exemplary commitment to conciliation and negotiation".

Open conflict in the harbours would have "extraordinarily severe consequences", the union says. There was "good reason to believe there will be heavy police intervention" and in an area as "volatile" as Port Elizabeth this would generate "an angry response from other workers in the city".

"We are genuinely worried at the possibility of bloodshed," it adds.

The union appeals to Dr Loubser to meet it and adds: "We must now insist that the only chance of resolving this conflict amicably lies in your hands."

A SATS spokesman said yesterday Dr Loubser had received the letter and that he would reply to the GWU personally, but would not comment publicly.

"But our attitude is that this union represents less than 1 000 of the 8 000 SATS workers in the docks and is unrepresentative."

UNION HAILS NEW PAY DEAL

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 2 Jun 82 p 2

[Text]

A METAL firm in Cape Town, Consani Engineering, yesterday became the second in a week to negotiate a wage agreement with a trade union outside the official industrial council system.

And its workers have won pay increases bigger than those agreed by the industrial council last month.

Last week the marine engineering firm Trident Marine Services became the first metal company to sign a formal wage agreement outside the council system when it concluded pay talks with a committee elected under the auspices of the General Workers Union.

Yesterday Consani Engineering, a subsidiary of the Abercom group, and a GWU worker committee signed an agreement which will boost minimum pay by about a third to R1,60 an hour.

The minimum rate agreed at the industrial council was R1,43 an hour.

The union committee and Trident Marine had negotiated a minimum of R1,78 an hour.

But the company operates in the marine engineering industry, where workers do not work a full week if business does not warrant this.

Company spokesmen could not be reached for comment yesterday but a GWU representative said the union was satisfied with the agreement, which will run from July 1 to June 30 next year, when a new agreement will be negotiated.

The union spokesman said the agreement had shown that direct bargaining was far preferable to the industrial council negotiations.

"Unlike council bargaining, our negotiations with these two companies have allowed direct worker participation in bargaining."

The union representative said that because, in his opinion, pay rates negotiated at the industrial council were unrealistic, some employers awarded merit increases to workers to "ensure wage rates remain rational".

"But at Consani, workers asked management to scrap merit increases and pay rates negotiated with the union only.

"They have agreed and we see this as an important breakthorugh.

"We also believe these negotiations help management because they provide for stable labour relations and a contented workforce."

BIG AECI EXPANSION PROGRAM PLANNED

Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES in English 6 Jun 82 p 5

[Article by Andrew McNulty]

[Text]

HIGHER export earnings and new downstream chemical plants are among benefits that will flow from a new R31-million carbide furnace now being commissioned by the chemical giant, AECI.

The furnace has been erected in the quick time of 13 months at Ballengeich, Natal, by the AECI subsidiary, Holland Electro Chemical Industries (HECI).

It will have a capacity of 50 000 tons a year, representing a 50% increase of HECI's present total annual carbide output of 100 000 tons.

Other than Coalplex production, all used in-house, AECI is the country's sole producer.

Already it has led to a decision to erect a R5-million plant to produce acetylene black — used in dry-cell batteries — to be on stream in the second half of 1983, Dr Herbie Keppler, managing director of HECI, tells Business Times.

Increased output of carbide resulting from the new Ballangeich furnace will create excess capacity in the short term, to be absorbed by exports, which last year earned about R5-million in foreign exchange and could rise by as much as 50%.

Dr Keppler says the carbide plant's production is to be lifted to full capacity as soon as possible.

Exports of carbide climbed from 9 000 tons in 1979 to 14 000 tons in 1981, and could be as high as 20 000 tons this year.

By 1983, exports could total 22 000 to 23 000 tons, keeping South Africa in a challenging fourth position among world exporters of carbide, behind Rumania, Poland and China.

About 45%, or 68 000 tons, of HECI's carbide production is absorbed by local consumers, 20 000 tons going to AECI plants at Umbogintwini, 18 000 tons to Cyanamid for use in mining applications, 20 000 to acetylene bottlers and 10 000 tons to Iscor.

The rest is exported or used by HECI in production of carbide-based chemicals.

Expanded production of some chemicals will be considered in the next three to four years.

The result could be erection of other new plants, costing R10-million to R20-million.

Knowhow agreements for acetylene black production are currently being signed up and erection will start in the near future, Dr Keppler says.

"We are actively looking at other downstream operations based on acetylene."

The next expansion of carbide production will probably be necessary in 1986.

SATS, GWU RECOGNITION DISPUTE REPORTED

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 4 Jun 82 p 9

[Article by Steven Friedman]

[Text] A dispute in two East Cape harbours between the SA Transport Services and the General Workers Union could spark a chain of events with considerable economic and political consequences.

A LABOUR relations time-bomb is ticking in the country's ports.

If it explodes, the economic and political consequences could be awesome — a fact that has not been lost on key private sector employers, unionists, even, it is claimed, the Department of Manpower.

Indeed, the unregistered General Workers Union charges that the only body which is not concerned is the one which created the problem in the first place — the SA Transport Services

At issue is a recognition dispute between the GWU and SATS at East London and Port Elizabeth harbours.

The GWU says it represents most SATS workers at the ports — about 1 100 — but SATS has refused to negotiate. Instead it has "harassed" workers and appears to back an "in-company" union, the Black Staff Association (BSA).

This week the union released an open letter to SATS general manager Dr Kobus Loubser charging that workers who joined the GWU had been subjected to a "reign of terror" by management and Railways Police.

It repeated requests for a meeting to negotiate on the dispute and warned of "extraordinarily serious consequences" if confrontation developed.

Dr Loubser has not replied publicly — he says he will reply to the union. But it is known that private employers are worried about the implications.

The dispute has its roots in the fact that the GWU has been organising stevedores in the country's four major ports.

It has won recognition from employers in three ports and is likely to win it in the fourth, Durban, soon.

Stevedoring firms and the GWU say their relations in the ports are excellent.

Working alongside the stevedores are harbour workers employed by SATS.

GWU general secretary, Mr David Lewis, says SATS workers do "the same sort of work as stevedores — the one group loads goods off ships and the other then loads them onto trains." It was thus "natural" that stevedores would recruit the SATS men into the GWU.

The union also has members in Durban and Cape Town docks, he says, but is asking for recognition only at the two ports where Secondly, the union is affiliated to the International Transport Workers Federation, a powerful international alliance of transport workers.

It warns in the letter that there is a "long history of solidarity" among dockworkers and foreign dockers could, intervene.

There was "good reason" to expect "heavy police intervention" in such a conflict and the union was "genuinely worried" about possible bloodshed.

"In an area as volatile as PE unchecked police intervention will generate an angry response from other workers in the city."

"In short, this dispute threatens the short term economic stability of two highly volatile areas of the Eastern Cape; it threatens a stable and mutually productive relationship between the stevedoring employers and the union, and indeed, threatens the very existence of the union."

It is understood that shipping employers and other industrialists believe the union is not exaggerating the possible consequences.

The ITF, they say, has already indicated in its magazine that it may support SATS dockers with sympathy action if open conflict develops. Stevedores in the two ports are almost certain to take sympathy action as well.

So the dispute could affect any company which exports or imports by sea.

It also has implications for the Government's labour reform policy.

"The spectre of a State-owned institution ignoring the reformist direction of stated it has a majority.

SATS has offered little comment on the dispute, but both Dr Loubser and Transport Minister Mr Hendrik Schoeman have made clear where they stand.

In a speech to railway unions, Dr Loubser reacted to charges that the BSA was a "sweetheart union". Manpower Minister Mr Fanie Botha has attacked "sweetheart unions", but Dr Loubser disagreed.

"What is wrong with a sweetheart union?", he demanded to know.

In a subsequent speech to an established rail union, Mr Schoeman went further. He said SATS would never recognise an "outside union" and he later told SATV that the union would not be recognised as long as he was Minister.

In the face of these statements, the GWU says it has gone all out to avoid confrontation, but that workers are now "at the end of their tether".

But why should a dispute involving only about 1 000 workers be serious enough to cause shipping employers to hold worried meetings and other major companies to watch the dispute with trepidation?

Some possible implications are spelled out in the GWU's letter.

Firstly, stevedores are the best organised members of the union and it was their idea to organise the SATS workers in the first place.

The union says stevedores are "outraged at the treatment of their fellow dockers" and would lend their support in the case of a serious conflict.

Government industrial relations' policy will undermine the credibility of the new labour dispensation," says the union.

In the letter, the union also spells out its view of the dispute.

It details charges of "extraordinarily brutal" action against the union by Railways Police.

The chairman of the GWU worker committee in PE, it notes, has been fired from SATS after 13 years service — he was given only 24 hours notice.

"Scores" of workers in both ports have been held for questioning by Railways Police and "threatened with dismissal or imprisonment"; and some have been offered "substantial sums of money" to leave the union, it charges.

Anonymous "scurrilous" pamphlets attacking the union have appeared in the harbour area, it also charges. It says it has informed Dr Loubser of this.

Despite this, workers remain committed to negotiation, the union says.

The union details its efforts to settle the dispute including approaches to industrialists and the Director-General of Manpower, Dr Piet van der Merwe.

These gentlemen have all indicated concern but their efforts at mediating this dispute have proved fruitless.

(One source says a stevedoring company invited SATS to a negotiation between it and the GWU to "see for themselves" how the arrangement worked, but that SATS did not take up the offer).

The union quotes a recent address by Dr Loubser in which he said management must "actively aim at promoting effective communication . . . and work towards creating and maintaining a situation in which employees feel that management acknowledge their right to freedom of association".

It comments: "We hope there is still time to generalise your attitude throughout the SATS management."

Although many workers belonged to the 50 000-member BSA, this was "at best, an in-company union, not independent of the employer's control". Black workers demanded independent unions and would not be satisfied by the BSA.

The union also suggests workers may not have joined BSA voluntarily. It says PE dockers have resigned from the BSA but are still having dues deducted from their pay. Their resignation letters had "been handed to the police".

The union says it is prepared to be "sensitive" to the present labour relations structure in SATS — it will not necessarily demand the same arrangement as it has with the stevedoring firms.

"But the workers are at the end of their tether — they believe all avenues of conciliation have been closed and they find the daily abuse to which they are subjected increasingly humiliating and intolerable."

SATS's version of events is more difficult to ascertain. It has refused to comment on claims of Railway Police "harassment" of union men.

And Dr Loubser has refused to comment publicly on the open letter.

But a spokesman did say that SATS would not recognise the union because it was not representative of dock workers as a whole. It only had around 1 000 members and there were 8 000 SATS dockworkers in the country, he added.

The spokesman also went on to suggest that SATS refusal to recognise the union was partly prompted by the attitudes of established rail unions.

"The unions operating in SATS, including the BSA, do not want us to recognise unions who have only scattered support in a few areas. We have 270 000 workers and both we and they feel we should not recognise any union which represents only a few of them," he says.

Meanwhile, the time-bomb keeps ticking away . . .

ALTECH ARMOURED'S EARNINGS--Allied Technologies, enjoying a record year-end order book of R221-million, expects to raise earnings by 27% this year. The chairman, Bill Venter, says Altech should remain largely untouched by the weakening economy as "any downturn is not expected to affect professional electronics and telecommunications materially". TOP SA FIRM GOES DUTCH--Yet again a fledgling South African company has acquired the assets of a foreign firm. This time it is Johnson Crane Hire--owner of South Africa's largest fleet of cranes--which has brought the assets of the crane division of the Netherland-based Sindorf Trading for R4,6-million. Sindorf, it appears, had been contemplating setting up shop in South Africa, but after negotiations with Johnson in the Netherlands it decided to sell the crane operation instead. In terms of the deal, Johnson acquires 26 cranes varying in size from 20 tons to 45 tons, thus bringing its fleet to more than 200 cranes--by far the biggest in the country. LABOR DISPUTE CONTINUES--The strike by 500 paint shop workers at Volkswagen's Uitenhage plant which brought the assembly line to a standstill for four days ended yesterday. But negotiations between Fosatu's National Automobile and Allied Workers Union and top Volkswagen management had not resolved the issues last night. The strike was sparked by the dismissal of a NAAWU shop steward. After a strike on the issue last month the company agreed to re-employ the worker on condition he no longer served as a union shop steward. NAAWU members rejected this and downed tools again. Yesterday management and NAAWU representatives met to negotiate on the issue. A company spokesman said yesterday the talks had not resolved the dispute and that a further meeting was planned soon. A NAAWU spokesman Mr. Less Kettledas said talks were "extremely delicate at this stage". [Text] [Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 9 Jun 82 p 5]

TRUCK DRIVERS STRIKE--About 400 black truck drivers at SA Transport Services's City Deep container depot went on strike yesterday, disrupting deliveries of containerised goods to central Johannesburg. Workers sources said about 670 drivers had joined the stoppage, but a spokesman for SATS (formerly SA railway) put the figure at around 400. The spokesman said the stoppage was caused by an incident when an official at the depot disciplined one of the drivers. The workers objected to this and downed tools. He said container deliveries to the city would "inevitably be delayed" but added that SATS had assigned other workers to temporarily load trains. "Fortunately, the trains are still moving," he said. Late yesterday afternoon, SATS management and workers were locked in negotiations which had begun in the morning. The workers do not belong to a trade union and it is not yet clear which worker representatives are taking part in the talks. Workers at the depot said the strike had been prompted because workers were dissatisfied with one of their supervisors. Attempts to speak to SATS management at the depot were unsuccesful. "There is nothing happening here", an official said. He later referred the Rand Daily Mail to another official, who was not available. The SATS spokesman said management had reacted by deciding to hold an inquiry into the incident. "We obviously want to establish whether the supervisor was right to take the action he did," the spokesman added. He said this approach had "the full support of worker representatives at the depot". The spokesman said talks were continuing with worker representatives. "It is nothing serious. It simply revolves around this one issue and workers have not made any other demands," he added. MORE BANNINGS--Four people have been banned under the Internal Security Act from attending public gatherings for the next two years, in terms of a notice in yesterday's Government Gazette. They are: Pravin Jamnada Gordhan, of Flat 2, 116 Prince Edward Street, Durban; Mooroogiah Jayarajapathy Naidoo, of 38 Daintree Avenue, Asherville, Durban; Immanuel Gotlieb Nathaniel, of 125 12th Avenue, Kuisebmond, Walvis Bay; and Aletta Mamphela, of House 572, Lenyeenyee, Township. Banning notices were served on them last month. Restrictions on the following 10 people have been lifted: Kader Hassim, of 7 Belmont Crescent, Newholmes, Pietermaritzburg; Lybon Mabasa of 4223 Chiawello, Soweto; Baptiste Marie, of 7 Atomic Centre, 275 Sparks Road, Clare Estate, Durban; Nikiwe Deborah Felicity Matshoba, of 2500 Kagiso, Krugersdorp; Donald Francisco Mattera, of 48 Sneeuberg Street East, Eldorado-park, Johannesburg; Andrew Mzwandile Mbilini, of 1 Guzana Flats, Zwelitsha; Horatius Mdleleni, of 458 Mofolo South, Soweto; Diliza Mji, of 1069 13th Avenue, Clermont' Monde Colling Mkunqwana, of NU7-E3169, Mdantsane; and Charles Nqakula, of Mount Coke Mission, Zwelitsha. HYDROELECTRIC PROJECTS AT BATOKA, MUPATA GORGES STUDIED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 19 Jun 82 p 9

[Text]

HARARE. — Preliminary investigations into the possibility of hydro-electric schemes at Batoka and Mupata gorges on the Zambezi River will be completed next month, according to Mr G F Allison, chief civil engineer for the Central African Power Corporation.

Site investigation work, which included drilling deep boreholes, had cost about R1,35-million, he said.

Mr Allison said a decision on when to proceed with the building of the next hydro-electric scheme depended on many factors, including the demand for electrical power in Zimbabwe and Zambia and the development of other generating sources in the two countries.

"Geological information to be derived from investigations being carried out at the two sites will influence the decision on where the next hydro-electric scheme should be built."

Work at Mupata gorge, including drilling, started in April last year. A British geophysical survey company is carrying out a supplementary survey on the quality of the rock.

Work at Mupata was delayed at first because of difficulties in obtaining access to the site.

After it was discovered it would be expensive to build a road, access was gained by transporting equipment and men by boats and barges up the river from Kanyemba.

Work at Batoka gorge involved drilling 10 boreholes, 2 500m deep, and building a 17km-long access road to the site.

MINISTER NOTES SOURCES OF FINANCING OF 1982-1986 PLAN

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 635, 13 Mar 82 pp 4, 5

[Article: "The Five-Year Plan: The State's Dominant Role in Investments"]

> [Excerpts] On 8 March the minister of finance, Comrade Lekoundzou Ithi-Ossetoumba, the Political Bureau member entrusted with the Plan and the Economy, presented the sources of financing of the 5-year plan and the different technical aspects connected with its development and implementation.
> The total of investments planned in the 1982-1986 plan has increased to 1,800,890,000,000 after the latest adjustments and is divided into financing by the state (781,749,000,000) and financing by state and semipublic enterprises (327,149,000,000).
> These two groups of financing will be provided by the investors' own funds or by loan and also through financial capital from foreign partners, especially with respect to loans by semipublic enterprises, the minister of finance said.

The Ministry of Finance's share in this total is close to 3.55 billion, which will go for the construction of general headquarters; taxes, 600 billion; customs, 500 million; the Congolese Sinking Fund, 600 million; the construction of the Ministry of Finance, close to 1.5 billion; equipment for the public treasury, close to 50 million; as well as the Pointe-Noire customs services (close to 100 million), and the Brazzaville Beach construction (close to 200 million).

There is also a series of investments which are not planned but which are envisaged apart from the plan and which concern:

--The petroleum sector; the cost of these investments is estimated at between 500 and 600 billion, and more if the Emerald Steam Project is carried out;

--The industrial and commercial sector could reach close to 70 billion;

--The industrial and commercial sector could reach close to 70 billion;

--The construction and public works sectors--between 80 and 100 billion;

--Housing investments of between 50 and 70 million for promotion of construction of family housing. Or a total varying between 1.8 and 1.9 trillion.

These enormous investments have been creating two orders of basic preoccupations, the minister indicates:

--The possibilities of financing and realizing for the state the investments payable by it;

--The effects of this program of massive investments on the national economy.

The state's participation in the basic plan is 70.51 percent.

The state's investment capacity during the 1982-1986 plan also constitutes the central element of this development strategy. "Thus, a minimum of 782 billion will have to be raised for the coming 5 years in a different national and international context marked by inflation," the minister further revealed.

In national terms, during the past 5 years the economic and financial crisis has exacerbated social phenomena such as the rural exodus, unemployment, low purchasing power and the rapid rise in the cost of living. This situation will necessarily increase the state's operating costs.

The economic structures and the infrastructures, which are still too weak, have made public finances increasingly dependent on petroleum revenues, which are still uncertain despite all measures taken to make them more stable and more reliable.

Thus, taking this situation into consideration, the financing capacity was evaluated with urgency and under the absolute necessity of creating the foundations for an expanded production apparatus, in order to ensure self-motivating and self-adjusting development.

This financing capacity of the state is essentially equal to the balance between state revenues and state operating expenses.

In fact, each year the still unstabilized evolution of state operating expenses on the one hand and, on the other hand, the still low volume of budgetary revenues compared to the financing budget make it necessary to adhere to a good old economic mathematical formula which says that gain minus expenditure equals (=) savings. Thus, each year the state must realize a mandatory economy--in other words, budgetary savings--which is adequate to finance, among other things, the investments to be paid by the state, and which represents 70 percent of the total plan.

Evolution of State Revenues

State resources are divided into two categories:

1. So-called ordinary revenues;
2. Petroleum revenues.

Ordinary Revenues

--Duties and domestic taxes;
--Customs duties and taxes;
--Revenues from property and services.

From 1974 to 1979, ordinary revenues were higher each year than petroleum revenues, representing close to 50 percent of budgetary receipts realized.

In 1982, nonpetroleum revenues represent 30 percent of budgetary estimates. This means that petroleum revenues represent 70 percent of budgetary estimates.

Subject to imports and domestic production, these ordinary revenues could reach approximately CFA 358 billion in the next 5 years.

Petroleum Receipts

They have undergone a capricious evolution from 1974 to 1978.

In fact there was a peak of 19.4 billion in 1974, a drop to 11.6 in 1975, a recovery to 14 billion in 1976, and a relapse to 11.8 billion in 1977, and finally a rise to 30 billion in 1978.

Starting in 1980, upward evolution has been recorded which seems to be consolidating and which brings petroleum revenues to more than 50 percent of budgetary revenues realized.

In 1982 estimates of petroleum revenues represent 72 percent of the operating budget. Evaluation of petroleum revenues for the next 5 years presents enormous difficulties because of inaccuracies or uncertainty concerning the elements that go into calculating these revenues, including:

--The volume of petroleum production of each year to come;
--The evolution of the price per barrel of petroleum;
--The cost of the dollar compared to the CFA franc, since Congolese oil is paid for in dollars;
--The Congolese inflation rate, which thus will reduce financing capacity.

Based on the hypotheses used in estimating these elements, many charts of petroleum revenues have been developed; the results vary from close to 700 billion to more than 1 trillion in current francs.

State Expenditures

State operating expenses are subdivided into personnel expenses (civil servants, employees on contract), servicing of the domestic and foreign debt, equipment expenses, public expenses (the different expenses connected with operation of public office and the state), transfers which are also a part of our foreign commitments and the takeover of a certain number of domestic organizations and the contribution to investment.

The greatest surge in expenses was recorded for the first time in 1974 and 1975, but there was a drop in 1976 and then a recovery in 1977 and semistagnation in 1979.

The minister then indicated the state's preoccupations with respect to expenses:

--The necessity of reorganizing public finances;

--The necessity of ensuring massive investments in order to promote an operational economic base, so as to assure self-motivating and self-adjusting development;

--The necessity of reducing a certain number of pressures from various social phenomena (the drop in purchasing power, unemployment, the rural exodus, etc.);

--Ensuring the rational functioning of the state apparatus in order for it to improve in a decisive manner the capacity for implementing programs and development plans;

--The necessity of strengthening the defense and security of the revolution and of the people;

--Finally, the necessity of correctly containing current stage operating expenses in order to always preserve adequate balances for investment.

Thus, the evolvement of expenses for 1982-1986 took into account the indicated preoccupations, and several hypotheses of estimation were developed.

The principal elements determining the evolvement of the operating budget are:

--The policy of serious recruitment to public office;
--The measures taken with respect to increasing the standard of living for officials in public office;
--The policy followed with respect to the markets;
--Measures connected with decentralization, and support for this decentralization policy;
--The policy followed with respect to indebtedness.

What the evolution of state operating expenses might be during the 5-year period 1982-1986 is determined on the basis of these preoccupations.

Estimating state receipts and expenses during this same period leads to defining the balance intended for investment--what may be called budgetary savings.

The estimation of this expected balance establishes several scenarios, hence several hypotheses, among which the so-called objective scenario is conceived on the following principle:

--Average petroleum production must again be taken into consideration;

--A certain, relatively positive evolution of the price per barrel of oil compared with world inflation must be decided on;

--An attempt must be made to control inflationary effects by injecting money from petroleum resources; this requires the establishment of a stringent economic policy consisting of cyclical follow-up of the economy, price controls, and the elimination of a certain number of bottlenecks in our economy. It must also be seen to that average local inflation is not so much lower than world inflation. [as published]

Next, [there must be] stringent control of state markets and contracts between public enterprises and foreign firms in order to restrict the tolerable level of inflation on investment. [There also must be] a stringent fiscal policy which limits possible exonerations and exemptions to that which is strictly necessary, with effective fiscal control of all economic agents. Public expenditures must also be made to increase at a rate of domestic inflation lower than the rate of external inflation.

This increase includes the effects of administrative decentralization and the additional resources to be put at the administration's disposal in order to realize the objectives of the plan.

All these parameters thus combined make the balance on investment vary between Fr 250 and 600 billion during the 5-year period. This represents the state's self-financing capacity. The state's share should be Fr 1.8 trillion of investment, but estimates show that between 1982 and 1986 the actual self-financing capacity is limited to between 250 and 600 billion; thus there is a financing deficit that will have to be made up with loans.

Foreign Loans

Foreign loans, foreign aid and, in the case of the semipublic enterprises, capital from foreign partners, negotiation of the public debt which was almost completed in 1980, on the one hand, and the improvement of the public treasury, on the other hand, made it possible starting in the second half of 1980, to honor the due dates of the public debt. This condition of solvency, as well as the predictable increase in oil production and hence in petroleum revenues, very quickly restored our state's credibility with financial institutions. today the Congo benefits from formidable ease of access to domestic and foreign credits. While that makes it possible to have immediate resources at our disposal, initially enlarging the sum for investment, it then weighs very heavily on the operating budget by reducing the sum for investment in subsequent years.

Given that the investments made have not yet generated resources for meeting the loans which financed these investments, the result will be a certain amount of difficulty in servicing the debt each year. The burden of debt repayment will thus increase between 1986 and 1991, owing to loans contracted between 1981 and 1986; moreover, it will be advisable to slow the growth rate of public expenditures between 1986 and 1991 in order to preserve the state's budgetary savings and investment capacity.

Since balance is difficult to maintain, a rational loan policy must be observed.

Moreover, with the economic integration of the private and semipublic sector, this sector's level of operation could vary directly as a function of the decisions and investment of foreign agents over whom the government must alert pressure and influence.

1982 Installment: 173,486,000,000

For the 1982 installment, the investment budget is Fr 173,486,000,000, of which 116,432,000,000 is to be financed by the state.

This financial commitment of the state will be implemented in the following manner:

--54.1 billion of its own funds, hence drawn on budgetary savings, and the difference--i.e., 65.32 billion--borrowed at home and abroad.

Of these 65 billion in loans, part can be considered as already obtained.

In total, in order to finance the Fr 116 billion, close to 65.4 has been obtained today. The difference, or 51 billion, has also been partially obtained with purchaser credits concluded with several financial institutions. A small portion, estimated at between 30 and 40 billion in financial credits (i.e., new money which cannot be covered by purchaser credits, or in other words by the pure and simple acquisition of equipment), will remain to be settled.

CUBAN AMBASSADOR VISITS SITE OF DAIRY FARM

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 636, 20 Mar 82 pp 4, 5

[Article by Bertin Ossenza: "Free and Dynamic Cooperation"]

> [Excerpts] Last week, Comrade Dario Urra Torriente, Cuban ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the Congo, visited the site reserved for the project to expand the PK [expansion unknown] 45 Dairy Farm in Odziba (approximately 100 kilometers from Brazzaville).
> The comrade ambassador was accompanied by Comrades Adriano O. Quevedo, Francisco Rossel, and Rene Ndouane, who are, respectively, the economic adviser, the first secretary, and the director of the dairy farm.

The long-term objective of this project is the rational and progressive occupation of the zone located between the 45 kilometer "Red PK" and the village of Odziba. This zone presents interesting phytosanitary features for stock farming. The Cuban party introduced a total of 288 head of cattle for stockbreeding, divided among 6 large breeds: Santa Gertrudis, Charolay, Brown Swiss, Cebri, Holstein, and Aihisre. The experiment consists of crossbreeding with a national breed "ndamas" for better milk production and improvement of meat raising.

Concretely, Cuban experts who specialize in drilling operations are on site in the field. A well 75 meters deep has been dug approximately 8 kilometers from Odizba for a 21-meter head of water. The water is propelled from the well at a speed of 8 liters per second, thanks to a motor of Cuban design. Actually, this is a zone which lacks rivers but which has enormous geographic advantages for stock farming.

As far as health is concerned, there are some 20 Cuban doctors and technicians in surgery, gynecology, pediatrics, etc., working in Nkayi and Gamboma today.

In connection with construction, 1979 saw a Sandino-type prefabricated-unit plant built in Mpila. To this should be added the opening in 1980 of three model buildings in Moukondo--the fruit of Congolese-Cuban cooperation.

With respect to education, five Cuban experts are working in organizations such as the elimination of illiteracy, INRAP [expansion unknown] and IDR [expansion unknown]. The Cuban party intends to develop this cultural cooperation by granting intermediate and advanced scholarships to young Congolese in the most varied fields.

BRIEFS

OAU ON SOWETO ANNIVERSARY--The armed struggle waged by the patriotic freedom fighters in South Africa is intensifying and will continue to intensify until the evil policy of apartheid is completely eradicated. This was stated in a press release by the OAU Secretariat here in Addis Ababa to mark the sixth anniversary of the heroic Soweto uprising. The release further noted that the recent bombings of fuel depots, railway lines and electric pylons and other infrastructural facilities inside South Africa is a clear indication that the patriotic war is very much alive and that the fanatic professors of racial supremacy are losing ground. Concerning the issue of cosmetic changes that are currently being proposed by the terrorist regime of Pretoria, the statement observed that this constitutes an insult to the South African patriots who are determined to achieve freedom, justice and true democracy. The OAU Secretariat further reaffirmed (?her full) and unwavering support for the struggling people of our country led by the ANC. In conclusion the secretariat called on all the international community to apply comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against the Botha-Malan terrorist regime, which is continuing to defy the principles (?of the) UN and the OAU. REPORTAGE ON ARRIVAL OF NEW CHINESE MEDICAL TEAM

Fourth Team Arrives

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 23 Apr 82 pp 1, 2

[Text] Over the years since 1975 "Chinese" doctors have enjoyed continuous success in Madagascar. In many cases this state of affairs can be explained by the inadequacy of our medical and paramedical personnel and Chinese experience in medicine. It is therefore easy to understand the pleasure of the leaders, and no doubt also the regular visitors of the hospital centers of Mahitsy, of Vatomandry, and of Ambovombe, over the recent arrival at Antananarivo of a new "team" of Chinese doctors. This is the fourth of its kind, and about 30 persons strong (34 to be exact!). They are to relieve their colleagues about to leave Madagascar permanently at the end of "good and loyal services" in the country. This comes after a well-merited few days' trip to Nosy Be, no doubt a way for the Malagasy to express thanks to these "barefoot" doctors, as they are traditionally called in China.

Manangareza

Yesterday morning in his office at Ambohidahy Minister Jean Jacques Seraphin (Public Health) received the delegation led by His Excellency Mr Gan Yetao, ambassador of the Peoples Republic of China in Madagascar. There were generalists, gynecologists, surgeons, pharmacists, acupuncture practitioners, anesthetists, laboratory technicians, specialists in diseases of the mouth, pediatricians, interpreters, etc.... The minister recognized two or three persons. He exclaimed, "No doubt they have drunk the waters of Manangareza...!"

Minister Jean Jacques Seraphin gave the new arrivals a very warm welcome. He declined to strike a balance sheet, in the usual meaning of that term, on the medical cooperation between Madagascar and China. He did not do it, according to him, since "it is a matter of public knowledge that the work of Chinese doctors in Madagascar is appreciated."

He confined himself to citing three essential points to demonstrate this success.

1) The enthusiasm of the patients who come in great numbers to the hospital consultations at Mahitsy, Ambovombe, and Vatomandry.

2) The successes in the field of surgical operations.

3) The relief experienced by patients treated by "acupuncture," a traditional medical specialty in China and up-dated to respond to current styles.

In general, Dr Jean Jacques Seraphin did not discuss the general lines of everyday pathology in Madagascar. He could easily have done so since he is a doctor. Next 27 April this new team will go to their respective posts of assignment. The newly arrived persons will meet for 1 week with their predecessors remaining on the spot. They will thus easily have every opportunity to become familiar with the Malagasy situation. On the one hand, with their compatriots; and on the other, with the Malgache medical personnel. And later through contact with the patients themselves.

Heart

Yesterday Minister Jean Jacques Seraphin told them that: "Your predecessors have left fine memories in the hearts of the Malagasy. I am sure you will do the same...." One member of the delegation told us of having learned in Peking of the presence in China "for reasons of health" of the CSR [Supreme Revolutionary Council] dean, Monja Jaona, leader of the Monima party. Unfortunately the delegation member had no news about him. It is true that China is heavily populated (more than 1 billion inhabitants at present!!!). At all events, as the saying goes, "No news is good news."

Carrying out Sino-Malagasy medical cooperation of this kind demonstrates the vitality of the relations between Peking and Antanarivo. Ambassador Gan Yetao, who is about to depart, had already taken leave of Minister Jean Jacques Seraphin. The Chinese diplomat had not anticipated that he thus once again would have the honor of presiding over such a demonstration of the relations between the two countries. Yesterday he once again repeated his farewells to the minister. It is true that "Mamerina indroa manana ny antitra!" (Better twice than once.)

Medical Team Installed

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 28 Apr 82 pp 1, 2

[Excerpts] Yesterday the fourth Chinese medical team was installed at the Mahitsy Hospital. They were accompanied by the chief of mission in Madagascar, Mr Zhan Jun Ming, and the Mahitsy team chief, Jiang Shing Zhou. Fifteen members strong,this new team of "barefoot doctors" was greeted with spontaneous enthusiasm by the hospital personnel, their Malagasy counterparts, and the local inhabitants. The new team, which will remain for 2 years, is composed of a generalist who is the Mahitsy team chief, a gynecologist, a psychiatrist, an anesthetist, a surgeon for diseases of the mouth, a laboratory technician, a pharmacist, a cook, and a chauffeur.

Yesterday one part of the fourth Chinese medical team, assigned to Vatomandry, officially took over their responsibilities. This group, made up of two surgeons, one generalist, one gynecologist, one pediatrician, a practitioner of acupuncture, an interpreter, and a cook, were in fact presented to the Vatamandry population by Mr Paul Randimbivahiny, director of health and medical services of the Ministry of Health, and by an official representative of the Embassy of the Peoples Republic of China in Madagascar. The welcoming committee was composed of Charles Raihilahy, president of Fivondronana; Philippe Vaninondahy, president of Firaisana; Rakotondratsimbazafy, medical inspector; Willy Noelson, physician-in-chief; and Maurice Ranaivoson, physician in residence.

Medical Team Welcomed

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 3 Apr 82 p 2

[Excerpts] Doctor Edmond Ribaira, director of public and social hygiene at the Ministry of Health, accompanied by a counselor of the Embassy of the Peoples Republic of China in Madagascar, by Dr Tchang, chief of the fourth Chinese medical team, and his deputy, Doctor Zhang, officially installed the members of this mission at Ambovombe and they are henceforth to work in this city.

The welcoming committee was composed of Ernest Rehevera, chairman of the executive committee of Fivondronana d'Ambovombe; of Thomas Manajary, deputy from Madagascar, chairman of the people's council of Firaisana; by Dr Charles Randrianalijaona, chief of the provincial health services of Toliara; members of the medical corps of Toliara, of Fort Dauphin and of d'Ambovombe; as well as a few members of independent groups from the surrounding area.

Unlike the installation of the two other groups at Mahitsy and Vatomandry, there was no official reception at Ambovombe, but there was a lunch at the Presicomex residence in honor of the new doctors. We stress the fact that this third group is made up of Yang, a surgeon; Hian, a pharmacist; Madame Siao, a pediatrician; Madame Ma, a gynecologist; Ming, a surgeon; Wan, an acupuncture practitioner; Qieng, a dentist; Madame Yiao, an anesthetist; He, the interpreter; and Tu, the chauffeur.

Mr Ernest Rehevera, the Madagascar deputy, noted the desire of the Chinese doctors to treat their Malagasy brothers: "You have left your families far away in order to fulfill your duty of international solidarity. May your action further improve Sino-Malagasy friendship and the cooperation between the Peoples Republic of China and the Democratic Republic of Madagascar." He then thanked the members of the third medical team and wished them a happy return to their country. "May you be the messengers of the Malagasy people and express their gratitude to the Chinese people."

Protocol Signed

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 5 May p 1, 2

[Text] Yesterday Minister of Health Jean Jacques Seraphin and Ambassador of the Peoples Republic of China, His Excellency Gan Yetao, signed a protocol agreement between the two governments concerning China's sending a medical mission to Madagascar. We point out that this protocol agreement concerns the fourth Chinese medical mission, which is already here since 20 April, date of entry into effect of the documents.

In his speech Minister Jean Jacques Seraphin said Sino-Malagasy cooperation was dynamic and vigorous. "This is the third time," he explained, "that I have participated in the renewal of such an accord." The minister went on to say, "The new aspect of this protocol agreement is that while at first everything was the responsibility of the Chinese, now these reponsibilities are divided between the two governments. The Malagasy government is responsible for the living expenses and the return trip of the Chinese doctors, as well as the [word indistinct] of medicine. The two sides have given real meaning to the term cooperation. Otherwise, there would only have been assistance. Before ending his speech he expressed thanks to the Chinese Government on behalf of the Revolutionary Authority, the Malagasy People, and the Ministry of Health.

His Excellency Gan Yetao, in turn, stressed the fact that, since 1975, 128 members of the different Chinese medical missions have fulfilled their international obligation by serving the Malagasy people. "I hope," he stated, "that such exchanges help the strengthening of ties between the two peoples and the cooperation between the two countries."

We stress that article 2 of this agreement protocol specifies that: "The task of the Chinese medical missions is to carry out therapeutic activities (with the exception of medico-legal activities) in close collaboration with Malagasy medical personnel, to exchange experiences with the latter, and mutually benefit from the experience." South-south cooperation is no longer an empty expression.

LABOR PARTY MINISTER BOOED AT MEETING IN PAMPLEMOUSSES

Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 26 Apr 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] Sir Rabindrah Ghurburren, minister of planning was booed by part of the audience yesterday at a ceremony to award prizes to the winners of various athletic competitions sponsored by the Pamplemousses village council.

The ceremony was presided over by Prime Minister Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, who will once again stand for election in Pamplemousses/Triolet on 11 June, along with Sir Rabindrah Ghurburrun and M V Boodram.

The minister of planning was making some brief remarks about steps the government has taken, when part of the audience started to jeer him. The minister continued to speak but began to talk faster. His speech ended in a complete uproar.

By contrast, Sir Seewoosagur's remarks were greeted calmly. Once again he emphasized the achievements brought about by the Labor Party [LP] and the government in the social field since national independence. At the same time, he acknowledged that the country is currently facing several problems, the most keenly felt of which is unemployment. In that connection, he reminded the audience of the promise he made on Friday that the government would provide unemployment benefits to those without jobs. The hardest-hit families will be given top priority for these benefits, he said.

The ceremony was also notable for a statement by the president of the district council of Pamplemousses/Riviere du Rempart, Mr Satiadev Moutia. He said he was planning to resign from his position to run as an independent candidate on 11 June. He said he would stand for election in the Pamplemousses/Triolet District. Mr Moutia was at one time slated to be the LP candidate in the District of Grand Baie/Poudre d'Or.

The president of the council of northern districts took the opportunity to announce that a Labor candidate was demanding the resignation of the head of that administrative unit.

PROCEDURES FOR PROXY VOTES EXPLAINED

Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 15 Apr 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] About 11,000 people will vote by proxy in the 11 June elections. These will include civil service employees, members of the police, and diplomatic service officials abroad.

It is estimated that some 6,000 civil service employees will be working in voting stations in Mauritius and Rodriguez, and about 4,000 police will be on duty on election day. Only about 1,000 diplomatic service officials will be abroad at the time with their families.

We should point out that the 1958 law, "The Representation of the People Ordinance," does not mention proxy voting. In 1968, the parliament amended this ordinance to permit policemen on duty on election day as well as election candidates to vote by proxy.

However, in December 1976, a further amendment eliminated the right of candidates to vote by proxy. At the same time, this benefit was granted to representatives of the diplomatic corps and embassy employees and their families.

This same amendment also authorized proxy voting for Rodriguez voters working for the civil service in Mauritius, and for Mauritian voters registered in any Mauritius district but working for the civil service in Rodriguez.

Electoral commission sources said it is clear that Mauritians working abroad on contract or traveling and who do not qualify under any of the cited categories cannot vote in the general election. This is regarded by some as a deficiency, especially at a time when a large number of Mauritians are employed abroad. The idea of using Mauritian embassies as voting stations in some countries where there is a significant number of Mauritian citizens does not seem to have enough support within the government. Also, those involved believe that giving the proxy vote to the thousands of Mauritians abroad would cause some problems.

A person voting by proxy must fill out a firm authorizing an individual to vote in his place. The latter must be more than 21 years old and be a citizen of a Commonwealth country. Also, two persons voting by proxy cannot designate the same and one person to represent them in the voting. The person designated under the proxy must have agreed to do so in advance.

In the past, persons voting by proxy have mentioned having difficulty in filling out the prescribed form.

Changes are being made in the form to make this easier. Mr D. Ramsewak is in charge of this task. The new version of the form will, however, have to be approved by the cabinet before it is finally accepted.

A "proxy unit" will be established in the next few days. It will probably be located on the ground floor of the social security building in Port-Louis. Persons voting by proxy will be required to fill out the appropriate forms at least 7 days before the election in order to designate their proxy voter for the 11 June election.

UDM PROTEST--Guy Ollivry, head of the Mauritian Democratic Union (UDM), is appealing the decision of the Electoral Supervisory Commission (ESC) rejecting his party's registration. A petition was lodged in the Supreme Court Friday afternoon. Mr Ollivry maintains that the electoral commission's decision was unconstitutional. In a sworn statement, Mr Ollivry alleged that on 19 April he had submitted an application to register his party, the UDM. On 20 April the ESC rejected the application as defective. The commission maintained that the application bore the signature of neither the party president nor the party secretary. Mr Ollivry contends, among other things, that there is no law that requires a political party to have a president or a secretary. [Text] [Port Louis L'EXPRESS in French 25 Apr 82 p 6] 9516

LILIENTHAL CALLS FOR ECONOMIC COOPERATION

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 28 May 82 pp 1-2

[Text] During yesterday's meeting of the IG [German Interest Group], Windhoek, board member Konrad Lilienthal appealed to the authorities: "Let us all work together with mutual respect and the willingness to understand each other." In previous remarks he indicated that concerns of the "average person" are often considered to be malicious criticism, personal attacks or tied to party politics, and are as such disqualified from serious consideration because people in authority then believe that, because of their public responsibility, they "must suddenly appear to be infallible and all-knowing."

Because the government has no effective controls in matters concerning money or society (30 million of allocated monies are allegedly diverted into other chanels), and because there are certain conditions that are unbearable for a legal and orderly society, Lilienthal proposed the establishment of a politically independent constitutional court and of a superior financial council ("accounting court").

In the beginning of his speech Lilienthal reminded his listeners of Eric Lang's statement that the firm of Roessing, e.g., pays no taxes but, on the other hand, pays 100 million rand in dividends abroad; that the mining industry (except CDM [Consolidated Diamond Mine]) has paid only 3.2 percent in income taxes over 6 years; that special financial favors are extended to the RSA. When authorities are reminded of these facts, they say nothing, but citizens and tax payers have the right to know how the national resources of the country are utilized. Because of the war and political instability the population is making great sacrifices in the struggle against the spiritual domination, nationalization, expropriation and planned economy of communism, but the question arises whether the mining companies are making the same sacrifices.

The government gives the impression of intending to promote unemployment (unemployment rate of 20 percent); construction projects were suddenly halted without the simultaneous start of emergency programs to take care of an additional 8,000 to 10,000 unemployed. Five hundred thousand guest workers, a number of them from countries that oppose our way of life, are employed in the mines of South Africa. "Why don't we get help for our 60,000 unemployed, i.e. 12 percent of the number of quest workers?"

The government is dragging its feet in establishing apprenticeship positions, instructional programs and a unified examination system. The only officially approved school diploma, "standard 10," increases the frustrations of students with average or no special talent. The minimum requirements of "standard 10" are bordering on hypocrisy, Lilienthal said. 21 percent of all employees (60,000 people) are employed in public service (the largest employer). Lilienthal compared this number with the corresponding 8.7 percent in the FRG where people are already talking of a "hydrocephalic" condition [of the government].

Population increase is an important factor in economy, social structure (and unemployment). Africa's average population increase of 2.9 percent means that there are annually an additional 30,000 people in SWA/Namibia--" in addition to a 50-percent increase in unemployment." Birth control should be made available not only in population centers but mobile units should bring birth control consultation and materials "free from house to house." Through the practice of ambulant treatment and preventive medicine, the work of hospitals could be relieved, the loss of work hours and the amount of transportation costs could be reduced.

Lilienthal reminded his listeners that the struggle for maintaining Western democracy and free market economy is of benefit also to the mining companies. He had discussed the future of the mines with Sam Nujoma (in Geneva 1981). Nujoma had emphasized at that time that all national resources belong to the Namibian people and that he could not tolerate transferring income of any kind abroad. Expropriation, nationalization and planned economy are SWAPO's political aims. Financial assistance and foundations are not sufficient when the question of sacrifices on the part of the mining companies is raised. In spite of zero earnings and even losses, a number of private companies is still supporting the existing infrastructure, and is trying to create new jobs.

COMMENTARY ON NEW '12TH' ETHNIC GROUP

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 28 May 82 p 2

[Editorial by Hans Feddersen: "The Infant Group"]

[Text] In the National Assembly yesterday the key word was once again "the 12th ethnic group." This 12th ethnic group which has been discussed only reluctantly so far is not supposed to form its own "ethnic government" but its rights will instead be guaranteed by the central government directly.

It is important to note that for this 12th group the interim constitution AG-8 does not need to be abolished, it merely needs to be changed. The reason is that the 12th group will not get a "second level government."

Who is actually included in this 12th group? First, all those who do not want to be tied to any particular ethnic group, and who are not registered with an ethnic group. These are the "volunteers," immigrants who do not yet have an identity card, as well as primarily the many children of mixed marriages. So far, these children do not have identity cards. They come from mixed marriages of Herero and Damara or white and colored or black and colored (and many others), and they can so far not be assigned to any ethnic group.

Why are identity cards so important? Because before the elections in 1978 every citizen was assigned to a particular ethnic group, and because the interim constitution does not permit new registrations! The 12th ethnic group can thus for the time being be composed only of children and of the very few "lucky ones" who were not classified, or did not want to be classified, in 1978.

It is interesting to note that in the past Werner Neef wanted to speak out for the 12th ethnic group on various occasions, that his efforts however were in vain.

FUEL SHORTAGE DESCRIBED IN NORTHERN NIGERIA

AB181350 Lagos NAN in English 1310 GMT 18 Jun 82

[Report by Tunde Adesida]

[Text] [no dateline as received]--The persistent, acute shortage of petrol in the northern part of Nigeria is a matter for serious concern. Various groups such as transport companies, petrol dealers, consumers and government officials have failed to achieve a lasting solution to the problem. Nigerians are still awaiting the day when fuel will be available in abundance in filling stations in the area.

Current fuel shortages are the worse in recent times. In Plateau State, several commercial vehicles had to be abandoned by their drivers. As a result, the transportation of agricultural produce from rural to urban areas has become extremely difficult. And in Kano State taxi fares increased from 30 kobo to 50 kobo per drop while about 100 tankers were reported parked outside the Nigerian National Petroleum Company (NNPC) premises awaiting the arrival of petrol.

The Price Intelligence Agency in Maiduguri, Borno State, arrested eight petrol dealers for selling fuel at 6.5 naira per kerosene tin instead of N3.60. Notwithstanding this, roadside dealers in other parts of the state sell a kerosene tin of fuel for between N8 and N15.

Kaduna, which has a refinery, was one of the worst hit by the shortage, as hundreds of vehicles caused long queues at the few petrol stations, awaiting fuel supplies.

Some motorists have even complained that some dealers have been known to mix petrol with diesel oil or kerosene and that this has affected the performance of their vehicles.

The fuel shortage has been traced to inadequate supply from the NNPC refinery in Kaduna, coupled with irregularities in fuel loading at the various NNPC depots. The situation has further been aggravated by officials who allegedly demand gratification from tanker drivers before loading. It has also been discovered that some tanker drivers never deliver fuel to legitimate dealers, but instead make brisk business on the road by selling to roadside dealers.

These allegations are often denied by the parties concerned, but the shortage continued to bite daily. A driver, Mallam Abdulai Abu, said he was looking forward to the day when the scarcity would be over. He said that he now made a profit of N5 daily against N50 before the scarcity, and that he often had to sleep at the filling station.

A meeting of representatives of the NNPC, oil marketing companies, petrol dealers and officials of the Plateau State Ministry of Trade and Cooperative was summoned by the former commissioner of police in Plateau, Olatunji Gbadebo. The aim of the meeting was to find a lasting solution to the incessant shortage.

The meeting resolved among other things that the NNPC should liaise with oil marketing companies to ensure the smooth lifting of petroleum products from the fuel depots of other states. It also decided that illegal roadside petrol sellers should be prevented from obtaining supplies, and that the police should assist NNPC officials by preventing these sellers from doing business in the state.

The Plateau commissioner for trade and cooperatives, Abubakar Isaudu, blames the shortage on lack of foresight and poor planning by the NNPC. He said that the authorities should have given due consideration to the increased domestic demand for petroleum products, instead of placing too much emphasis on exports.

Governor Tatari Ali of Bauchi also called on law enforcement agents to deal ruthlessly with hoarders of petroleum products, whom he claimed were responsible for the fuel shortage in his state. He also said that the NNPC depot in Gombe should be completed as quickly as possible.

In Gongola State, the NNPC has issued licenses to 279 dealers. This measure is expected to facilitate law enforcement agents in arresting illegal petrol dealers.

The Kano NNPC depot has already adopted the method of liaising with other depots in Warri and Makurdi.

It is hoped that these methods will work toward mitigating fuel problems in the northern states, if not to solve them completely. For it is indeed ironical that fuel shortages arise in a country that is internationally acclaimed as a major exporter of petroleum and the wealthiest black nation south of the Sahara.

REPORT ON OJUKWU'S RETURN

Ojukwu Refuses Interview

AB181730 Lagos NAN in English 1725 GMT 18 Jun 82

[Text] Abidjan, 18 Jun (NAN)--The former Biafran leader today in Abidjan politely declined interviews by a correspondent of the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) and a DAILY TIMES reporter, the two journalists, who were in the special charter flight that went to bring Mr Ojukwu home.

Mid-air aboard the Boeing 727 WT 700 flight back to Nigeria, Mr Ojukwu told the two journalists, Mr Willie Bozimo of NAN and Mr Odafe Othintiwa of DAILY TIMES, that "I know you are pressmen and you want some interviews. Please, I want to keep things as they are for now. When the time comes, I shall invite you to the interview."

Although the former Biafran leader declined to talk to the press, his close associates on the plane, however, expressed their views about Mr Odumegwu Ojukwu.

Mr Frederick Forsyth, who had known Ojukwu for the past 13 years, said as a man, he is obviously extremely happy to return home. Secondly, he believes that he can make a contribution to the process of national reconciliation and national building.

He said that Mr Ojukwu had told him several times in the past: There is no bitterness, no rancour in regards to his being in self-exile.

Commenting on what manner of man he thinks Mr Ojukwu is, Mr Forsyth said I like him for his moral and physical courage, secondly his high intelligence and thirdly a great [words indistinct].

When he was asked to comment on whether he thinks Mr Ojukwu would plunge himself into partisan politics on his return, Mr Forsyth remarked: "I do not think he is going into partisan politics, at least, not in the foreseeable future. Twelve years is a long time. For the foreseeable future, he will greet old friends, his family, travel, look and learn. He is not a fool to think that after 12 years, he knows everything that he would like to know. He will look and learn.

Mr Frederick Forsyth, 43, as an author and journalist, arrived in Biafra then as a war correspondent in 1967.

He said that he met Mr Ojukwu during the war and they became friends when the war ended.

"I visited Ojukwu many times in Ivory Coast when he went into exile. For the past 12 years we have become good and close friends," Mr Forsyth told NAN.

Mr Forsyth, who lives in England, said that three of Mr Ojukwu's children schooling in England were under his care. They are Emeka, 17, a boy; Megha, 15, a girl, and Okigbo, 11, another boy.

Also speaking, the personal secretary of Mr Ojukwu for the past eight years, Mr Emmanuel Ackah, an Ivorian said first of all, Mr Ojukwu is somebody you can trust. He was a very strong personality which inspires respect. I want to add that for the past years that I had worked with him, we only communicate in French. I can tell you that his French is as impeccable as his English.

'NAN' Report

AN181553 Lagos NAN in English 1550 GMT 18 Jun 82

[Text] Ikeja, 18 Jun (NAN)--The fanfare and jubilation marking the arrival of the former Biafran leader did not only disrupt work at the Murtala Muhammed Airport today, but also caused a bumper-to-bumper traffic jam and security men had to use batons to control the surging crowd.

The crowd which included the political adviser to the president, Dr Chuba Okadigbo, Mrs Stella A. Ojukwu and other top government officials and representatives of the five political parties, had defied the rain to accord Mr Ojukwu a befitting welcome.

The former Biafran leader, who flew into Lagos in a Boeing 727 at exactly 11.55 a.m. was almost suffocated as the excited crowd surged forward to have a glimpse of him or touch him.

The excitement of Mr Ojukwu's return to Nigeria after 13 years in self-exile was so pronounced that the political adviser to President Shehu Shagari served as a security man, helping to check the crowd.

Some of the journalists from all over the world who were in Lagos to cover the arrival of Mr Ojukwu including the airport correspondent of the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) sustained injuries as security men were forced to charge at the crowd.

Throughout his stay at the airport, Mr Ojukwu refused to speak to newsmen despite all provocations.

Papers Comment on Return

[Press review]

[Text] The NATIONAL CONCORD and the SATELLITE comment on the return to Nigeria of Odumegwu Ojukwu after about 13 years in self-exile. The SATELLITE welcomes the statement by Mr Ojukwu on his return yesterday that he would not go into active politics at least for now. He said to have done otherwise would have amounted to playing on the intelligence of Nigerians. The SATELLITE, therefore, calls on those politicians who are trying to lead the ex-secession leader into (?this course to allow him to rest).

The CONCORD welcomes Mr Ojukwu and says his prompt acceptance of President Shehu Shagari's pardon is an indication of his unequivocal allegiance to a united Nigeria. While rejoicing with other Nigerians on Ojukwu's eventual return, the paper expresses the need for a total forgiveness on both sides to finally close the saddest chapter of the nation's history. The CONCORD also notes that some people have made political overtures toward Mr Ojukwu, but according to the paper, whenever he decides to join the political trade, he should be left to his free will.

Crowd Welcomes Ojukwu

AB210756 Lagos NAN in English 0735 GMT 21 Jun 82

[Text] Enugu, 20 Jun (NAN)--Police this morning fought and lost a grim battle to control a tumultuous crowd which beseiged the Enugu Airport to catch a glimpse of Emeka Ojukwu when he flew into the state capital.

The former Biafran leader was forced to remain in his plane for 30 minutes before alighting as police struggled to clear the ramp of crowds which refused to budge. Powerful jets of water pumped from fire hoses by fire servicemen as well as a detachment of mounted police were all of no avail in clearing the crowds.

Crowds also broke through the airport fence from the nearby bush and surged all over the airport tarmac, as the police commissioner, Bishop Eyitene, himself was forced to join the efforts at crowd control. The police commissioner did all in his power but soon his efforts failed to prevent the people from surging into the airport tarmac.

Eventually, Mr Ojukwu emerged from the Boeing 727 that brought him and the crowd cheered wildly.

Observers compared the size of the welcoming crowd to the large numbers that turned out to receive Pope John Paul II at the same airport in February.

As early as 7 a.m. people had begun to arrive at the airport, about 12 kilometers from the center of the town, to await the arrival of the former Biafran leader, who eventually landed at 11.20 a.m. to a 21-gun salute. [passage indistinct]

Representatives and leaders of the Nnewi community, from which Mr Ojukwu hails, were all at the airport in full force. There were also huge crowds waiting to catch a glimpse of Ojukwu at the Government House, Enugu, where Governor Nwobodo was said to be waiting to receive him. However, probably to avoid further confusion, Ojukwu drove straight to Nnewi in an open-topped Mercedes car, waving to the jubilant crowds which were chanting "enymoa enyi" [meaning unknown].

Similar chaos is expected all along his route as many persons are expected to struggle to see Ojukwu.

CNTS SEEN AS PLAYING VANGUARD ROLE IN DEVELOPMENT

Dakar L'UNITE AFRICAINE in French No 102, Apr 82 pp 1, 3

[Article by Joseph Mathiam: "Long Live the Revival of Trade Unionism"]

[Text] On 8 April, just as International Labor Day on 1 May, the CNTS [National Confederation of Senegalese Workers] Congress demonstrated an obvious reality: the vigor of the Senegalese worker movement, unquestionably--one might almost say exclusively--represented, inspired, and led by our confederation.

The CNTS, indeed, is asserting itself as the spearhead of a mature working class dedicated, as is its historic mission, to lead the entire nation along the path of progress and well-being through responsible demands and participation.

The revival which it now advocates is actually the fruit of long and patient sacrifices by its leaders and both new and old activists to make it rise above its contradictions and internal conflicts which more than once have threatened that unity which today constitutes its strength and its credibility: it must forge ahead while renewing its leadership and its methods.

Thus experienced and toughened by sometimes victorious, and sometimes disappointing struggles, ever adapting itself along lines that are more democratic, more popular each day, and in the endless struggles for human dignity and development, our trade union is able to modernize in keeping with the greatest periods of North and Sub-Saharan trade unionism. By it, and thanks to it, the Socialist Party remains the party of the working masses and will better learn of their problems and will more clearly express their aspirations.

In this way the CNTS is indispensable to the Socialist Party, since there is no socialism without an organized and aware working class! Among ourselves we must accept the tough and plain language of laboring men, always the language of facts and actual experiences.

We, above all we militants of the Socialist Party, ought to understand and support the just demands of our trade union comrades who rightly aspire to be more closely and effectively involved in the exercise of power in firms and in the government. Not that the trade union should act as a political party, and even less so as a government. Not that companies and firms should be managed from the Labor Exchange; that would be ruinous for everyone. But a worker presence ought to bring to business management a profitable element, based on realism and concreteness. Aside from the fact that the trade union is the most precious conquest of the working class, that is why the trade union is essential to modern and democratic companies.

But responsible participation, which sums up the doctrine and charter linking the world of labor with the political and economic leadership of the country, is not without its traps when, as it can happen if one is not careful, trade union leaders become more skilled in flattery and drum beating than in defending without demogoguery and excess the interests of their constituents. Poorly understood and poorly undertaken, it could disarm and lead to compromises. But carried out by responsible men worthy of workers' confidence it is fruitful and has good prospects for the future. Better yet, responsible participation is a completely modern and revolutionary doctrine which we should study deeply and perfect. It is so much easier and more comfortable to be opposed to everything and advocate pointless adventures.

The future will no doubt confirm that the policy of revival to which the CNTS now commits itself is not a simple partisan propaganda slogan, but the renewed expression of a steadfast determination to carry out fully the role of vanguard in the struggle for development and the rehabilitation of our society, a struggle in which the secretary general of our party has committed the country.

EUROPEAN DEVELOPMENT FUND GRANT TO GUM TREE PLANTATIONS

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 3 May 82 p 3

[Text] By a decision dated 28 April 1982 the Commission of the European Communities decided to grant CFA 735 million for the planting of 2,500 hectares of gum trees in Podor Department. The operation consists of promoting family plantations around camping sites and villages, in blocks of 50 to 100 hectares. According to the technique already perfected in Mbidi and in the Windou-Tiengoly area through Canadian financing and bilateral German aid, the farmers or stock breeders affected by the planting of gum trees are invited to merge in minimum blocs of 100 hectares. Each family receives a 2-5 hectare parcel where cereal crops are grown during the first 3 years in association with the planting of gum trees. Alternating period of fallows and crops are planned until the gum trees are fully developed.

When dealing with stock breeders instead of farmers, the planting of gum trees on smaller areas is combined not only with cereals but also with the making of pastures into plantations where access to grazing animals is forbidden.

Production of gum arabic is planning to begin during the 4th year after planting with a yield of 100 grams per tree or 20 kilograms per hectare, which will improve steadily until the 4th year when it should reach 400 grams per tree. When the project is in full swing total production of 250 tons of gum arabic is expected at the rate of 100 kilograms per hectare, representing an annual value of CFA 115 million. Thanks to the association of food crops with the planting of gum trees, an increase in the cereal harvest of approximately CFA 25 million is expected.

This project financed by the European Development Fund of the European Economic Community is one of the components of the reafforestation and restoration plan of the Senegal Government, developed by the secretary of state for forestry.

BELGIAN WHEAT DONATION; COOPERATION CEREMONY HELD

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 3 May 82 p 2

[Text] The government of the Kingdom of Belgium has just made a gift to our country of 1,500 tons of wheat. The ceremony took place last Friday in the SOCOPAO warehouses, in the presence of Souleymane Ndiaye and the Belgian ambassador to Senegal, Alain Rens.

In the speech he made on this occasion, Ndiaye indicated that this aid in the form of food has just been added to the constantly renewed show of cooperation between our two countries. He also emphasized that on the occasion of the meeting of the sixth Belgo-Senegalese joint commission recently held in our country, Belgium had decided to continue the action undertaken, especially in the fields of control of water, deep-sea fishing, research and education. Assistance in the form of food products, Ndiaye noted, has its detractors and it defenders. For the former, these important products contribute to changing our eating habits and to making our country people inveterate recipients of assistance. For the latter, Ndiaye stated, it is a way to redistribute food surpluses, since the availability of energizing foods now exceeds 10 percent of the population's nutritional requirements.

For his part, Alain Rens indicated that this gesture by his country toward the Senegalese people is but a new illustration of the relations between our two countries which have always been excellent and marked, year after year, by increasing friendship.

BRIEFS

ARGENTINE HYDRAULIC EQUIPMENT--The ship "Rio Gualeguay" of the Argentine Shipping Lines Enterprise (ELMU) arrived Monday in the port of Dakar from Buenos Aires, transporting the first 400 tons of hydraulic equipment acquired in the Argentine Republic by Senegal, within the framework of the $15 million line of credit granted by the Argentine Government to Senegal. Among the equipment unloaded were windmills, water extraction pumps, water tanks and other complementary accessories. All of the equipment mentioned will be the object of two forthcoming shipments. The complete delivery will take place by the end of June. [Text] [Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 5 May 82 p 4] 9380

CLAIMS OF ARMS SUPPLY TO ARGENTINA EXAMINED

Paris LE MONDE in French 27 May 82 p 5

[Article by Patrice Claude: "There Seems To Be No Doubt About South Africa's Arms Deliveries to Argentina"]

> [Text] The news reports according to which Pretoria sent arms to Argentina (26 May issue of LE MONDE) were denied in Buenos Aires, and South African authorities refuse to comment on them. But the debate on Pretoria's relations with London and Buenos Aires is underway.

Johannesburg--"South Africa Is Supplying Arms to Argentina" ran as a 7-column page one headline on Monday 24 May in the Johannesburg English-language daily THE STAR (26 May issue of LE MONDE). According to that liberal opposition paper, which did not give its sources, the shipments--including ground-to-ground Skorpion missiles (the South African version of the Israeli Gabriel models, with a range of 42 km) and French Mirage III spare parts--were made from a secluded Capetown Airport runway. The arms packed in enormous containers labeled "spare parts for tractors," were said to have been loaded aboard a DC-8 cargo plane flying the Uruguayan flag. As early as Monday evening Mr "Pik" Botha, South African minister of foreign affairs, had pointed out that Pretoria made it a principle not to reveal information concerning its arms sales. "Consequently," he added, "the government is neither confirming nor denying."

A little earlier that afternoon, a spokesman from the Foreign Affairs Ministry had stressed that in the past the United Kingdom had itself decreed a voluntary and unilateral embargo vis-a-vis South Africa. "We were driven to develop our own arms industry," the official went on, adding that the country had "international contractual obligations" in that area. While confirming that by revealing anything concerning the country's "obligations" there was no question of "jeopardizing the country's credibility," he nevertheless finished by pointing out that the South African Government had adopted a neutral stance in the Malvinas conflict.

However, even if the government rejects THE STAR's unusually specific assertions outright, it certainly seems that in the end, in spite of that announcement of neutrality, the temptation to "play a trick on perfidious Albion" won out in Pretoria over political considerations. In Capetown diplomatic circles people do not in fact see what benefits South Africa might expect from such a deal. During the last few years the policy of friendship with Buenos Aires, embarked on in the 1960's by the Vorster government, has clearly shown its limits.

Argentina is still not a very important economic partner for Pretoria, and Argentina's place in world affairs is not such that it might in any way imorove the situation of the apartheid regime. Of course the military junta, along with a certain number of other "pariah" regimes such as Uruguay, Paraguay, Taiwan and Israel, has gotten involved in more or less clandestine and more or less formal pacts of friendship and cooperation with Pretoria. In the name of common and solid anti-Marxism they gladly pass on sophisticated weapons manufacturing secrets to each other, open wide the doors of their military schools on a reciprocal basis to each other, and generously exchange information on techniques of fighting against subversion.*

It definitely appears that when the Argentine General Mario Benjamin Menendez, today military governor of the Malvinas, was on a visit to Pretoria in May 1981 he obtained assurances that in the event of conflict South Africa would refuse British naval ships use of the very modern Simonstown base near Capetown. General Diaz Bessone, a former junta minister who visited Simonstown itself in February, managed to remind the South African authorities of the terms of their commitment. Respecting the commitment was all the easier because the British apparently did not ask to use those facilities, which were given up on a permanent basis by the Wilson government in 1975. No doubt Mr Pieter Botha's cabinet would have been able to leave it at that.

For many people in South Africa the arms shipment, about which there seems to be hardly any doubt, is an adventuristic and dangerous policy. What is more, it is embarrassing for the government, involved in this affair at the side of the Soviet Union, its sworn and declared enemy. There is no possible comparison between the fact that Pretoria conveyed to the British information concerning the movements of two Soviet spy planes based in Angola and tasked with spying on the movements of the British fleet--as was officially announced here--and an arms delivery; nor in the eyes of Mrs Thatcher will they likely be considered comparable. Pretoria had made public commitment not to send the junta Exocet class French missiles, and furthermore, there are assurances in Paris that Pretoria does not have any.

*An Argentine "specialist" in the field, Capt Alfredo Astiz--a prisoner of the British today (15 May issue of LE MONDE)--and his boss at the Escuela torture camp in Buenos Aires, Vice Adm Ruben Chamorro, were also the naval attache and military attache respectively at Argentina's embassy in Pretoria right up until the beginning of this year.

By skirting that commitment the South African Government would seem to have taken the risk of jeopardizing the friendly and useful relations it maintained up to now with British Conservatives, major providers on occasion of protective vetoes in the United Nations when [South African] white soldiers go and drive "Namibian terrorists" all the way to Angola. Was it worth sacrificing diplomatic effectiveness for Argentine friendship? In European embassy offices they are suggesting it is one of three things: "Either the South Africans yielded to purely mercenary concerns; or they received assurances or even encouragement from a great power indirectly affected by the Malvinas; or ancestral anti-British feeling, still very deep-rooted among Afrikaners, overrode political wisdom." In any case, the venture will--there is no doubt about it--have serious repercussions on the country's diplomacy.

KPETIGO DISCUSSES MEDIUM, SMALL BUSINESSES IN TOGO

Lome LA NOUVELLE MARCHE in French 4 Jun 82 p 3

[Article by Ayitegan Apedo-Amah]

[Text] During sessions of the first African meeting of heads of enterprises for organized human development under the auspices of UNIAPAC [International Christian Union of Heads of Enterprises] on 3-6 May in Lome, it was largely a question of promoting African small and medium-size businesses [PME].

In Togo, General Gnassingbe Eyadema's regime places great importance on the harmonious development of our PME's. A series of measures taken recently by the 13 January Government of Man attests to our leaders' concern to spare no effort to enable Togolese PME's to play their full role in national development.

On the occasion of one of the roundtable discussions which enabled the participants in this first meeting of UNIAPAC-Africa to see specific cases of PME development in a number of African countries exhibited, Togo's position in this area was brought up. The task of speaking to the delegates about Togo's PME's fell to RPT [Rally of the Togolese People] Central Committee member Kwassivi Kpetigo, minister of industry and state corporations.

In his discussion, the minister of industry and state corporations devoted his remarks to explaining why the Togolese economic officials have been anxious to develop PME's "as a means to rapid overall development."

He then brought out some of the results which Togo has achieved in this area, not forgetting to indicate what remains to be done and solutions which would enable the achievement of "more progressive results."

The President of the Togolese Republic, General Gnassingbe Eyadema, stressed Mr Kpetigo, gave specific priority to the PME's very early on. The RPT's program states the following: "In regard to the principle of the 'New Market,' a specific effort must be made on the economic and social level aimed at improving the people's condition by giving them an education which results in employment, by reviving their spirit of initiative by helping them to be self-sufficient, and by providing the conditions essential to their complete prosperity."

Further on, the program recognizes the value of drafting a large scale policy to stimulate national private initiative by promoting PME's. The desired goal is the emergence of national entrepreneurs who are capable of providing national bases for the economy.

There can be no real development without development of the PME's; even in the large industrialized countries, the PME's form the basic fabric of the economy.

Operation and Performance of PME's in Togo

The second sub-theme developed during this discussion was the operation and performance of PME's in Togo. Here Mr Kpetigo analyzed the Togolese experience in terms of legislation and regulations in force, operation of the PME's, and their results.

In regard to Togolese legislation and organization of PME's, Mr Kpetigo felt that the current structure of PME's in Togo was the result of numerous political and administrative measures taken by regional authorities as well as on a purely national level.

Within the context of the UMOA [West African Monetary Union], Mr Kpetigo indicated that the six states in the Union had a policy directly affecting small national enterprises.

In order to support the efforts of the PME's, the Central Bank has established a policy called "credit selection" which obligates local banks to allocate at least 5 percent of their outstanding loans to financing PME's, and this has been in effect for around 4 years. This measure, which facilitates access to credit for national enterprises, has already achieved very encouraging results.

Besides, this support is accompanied by other measures. During its 31 March 1982 meeting, the board of directors of the Central Bank readjusted interest rates applicable within the UMOA, and decided that short or middle term credit or loans granted to national PME's whose total outstanding credit does not exceed 30 million CFA francs will receive a preferential discount rate.

Furthermore, among long term loans, those loans with no more than 10 years left granted to national PME's whose total outstanding loans do not exceed 30 million CFA francs and which can be taken over by the Central Bank will also benefit from a preferential rate.

By the Central Bank's definition, national enterprises are considered to be enterprises owned by individuals from one of the states in the Union, or corporations with at least 51 percent of their stock held by UMOA nationals (individual or legal entities) and which are managed by UMOA nationals.

Furthermore, a fund for interest subsidies to Togolese PME's has been established.

PME's eligible to apply for interest subsidies are those whose outstanding bank loans are between the level above which Central Bank lending conditions and other banks' general conditions do not allow preferential interest rates to be granted, and 150 million CFA francs.

The fund is made up of an annual contribution from the Togolese state in the amount of 50 million CFA francs, deducted from the share of Central Bank profits returned to the state.

It must also be noted that the BOAD [West African Development Bank], another UMOA financial development institutions, often finances PME's through the CNPPME [National Center for Promotion of Small and Medium-Size Businesses].

On a purely national level, there have been numerous actions benefiting national enterprises.

The Investment Code

National enterprises with an investment volume of less than 50 million CFA francs can obtain an exemption from import duties on equipment. The exemption does not pertain to raw materials.

However, national enterprises showing an investment volume of only 25 million CFA francs can request that the provisions of Schedule A or of common law be applied to them. In this way, they can benefit from exemptions from import duties on both raw materials and equipment.

The SNI and Related Funds

The SNI [National Investment Company] is a development bank par excellence. As such, it is responsible for financing or participating in the financing of projects, forming enterprises with others, and granting or guaranteeing loans.

In this role, it manages: the FNI [National Investment Fund], the Togolese Enterprise Loan Guaranty Fund, and the Fund for Subsidizing Interest Rates on Loans to PME's.

The FNI, whose objsective is to encourage Togolese enterprises to use some of their profits to make investments in Togo, is more flexible with regard to PME's. In fact, automatic deductions are made from the enterprises each year to constitute this fund which is not even reimbursed in part until the enterprise can justify having realized its investments. Reimbursement is made more flexible and more favorable for PME's.

The BTD [Togolese Development Bank] and the CNCA [National Fund for Agricultural Credits] also finance national enterprises.

The CNPPME, for its part, is responsible for bringing together young Togolese promoters to prepare proposals for the banks and to make feasibility studies.

The Chamber of Commerce, Industry, and Agriculture of Togo provides orientation to new national activities being formed by providing them with the information they need.

The Results

Regarding the results obtained, Mr Kpetigo states that the numerous support structures established by the government have enable rapid development of PME's in Togo, in Lome as well as in the interior of the country. In any case, the PME's are distributed between two centers of development: the Lome industrial region, and the Kara industrial region, 400 kilometers from the coast.

The PME's cover primary (10 percent), secondary (35 percent), and tertiary (55 percent) activities.

Today we count close to 40 PME's of greatly varying sizes, representing a total investment of several billion CFA francs.

These national enterprises benefit from many advantages: The primary advantage is the relatively low cost of certain elements of production in Togo. Labor, transportation, and construction of buildings for industrial purposes are less expensive in Togo than in the other countries in the region. Togo has been able to keep the prices for these items within reasonable limits.

Another advantage is the fact that qualified labor is relatively abundant in Togo.

Without any modesty, we will add that the most important advantage is the existence of a good work ethic. We have a host of hardworking and conscientious personnel.

However, Togolese PME's do display some weaknesses which are at the heart of their problems.

Problems for Togolese PME's

It was to these problems that Mr Kpetigo devoted the last part of his discussion.

These difficulties, he stated, are found in the size of the production units and in their legal and economic environment.

Togolese companies in general are comparatively smaller than those in some other countries in the region. They are susceptible to foreign competition.

Their managers do not always have the knowledge and the capabilities required to assure their survival, growth, and prosperity in the face of competition.

The legal and economic environment within which they operate has shortcomings which limit the effectiveness of its role as a support structure.

We must quickly fill this void by taking certain steps: by establishing CNPPME branches abroad in order to maintain continuous contact with foreign investors; by establishing research divisions to rapidly improve the quality of our products; by creating a center for foreign trade which would centralize data on foreign markets and determine markets for Togolese products--this center would basically direct its activities toward countries in the region; and by creating a national "seal of approval" and launching a campaign to promote Togolese products.

We cannot speak of the PME development in general without taking into consideration the current economic environment which is characterized by an economic crisis on a worldwide scale.

Inflation and problems with international liquid assets, productivity, and production costs are imposing new constraints on the businessman.

The art of doing your best under today's basic conditions means looking toward the future.

It means freeing yourself of the past, managing growth with growth strategies, and finding indications of the path to healthy growth.

It is therefore essential today to be able to recognize an individual's leadership qualities in terms of managing tomorrow's institutions.

Turmoil, says Peter Drucker, is fitful, devious, and convulsive by definition. But, these initial causes can be analyzed, forecasted, and taken into consideration.

Technology too is entering a period of turmoil, a period of innovation and of rapid and basic structural upheaval.

We must make ourselves capable of transforming rapid change into good opportunities for productive action which profits society, the economy, and the individual.

Turmoil has its dangers. The primary one is the temptation to deny reality.

But, turmoil is also very beneficial to those who understand, accept, and exploit the new realities. The leader of a certain enterprise must confront reality and resist the temptation of yesterday's certainties which are about to become tomorrow's paralyzing superstitions. From now on, he must involve himself in action more than in understanding, in decisions more than analysis. His reaction must no longer be "how do we do it?", but rather "what do we do?".

INTERVIEW WITH BELGIAN PTT HEAD ON RELATIONS WITH ZAIRE

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 20 Apr 82 pp 1, 5

[Interview with Herman de Croo, Belgian minister of communications, posts, telephones and telegraph, by Essolomwa Nkoy ea Linganga; date and place not specified]

[Text] A year ago, the Belgian prime minister, Wilfried Martens granted us a major interview on the eve of an important trip he was to make to Zaire from 27 February to 5 March 1981.

In responding to our question on the objective of his trip to our country, Mr Martens told us that he had come to ascertain on the spot the state of and prospects for our relations in all areas.

Today, it is one of his distinguished colleagues, in the person of Herman de Croo, who has been happy to accomodate our questions.

On the occasion of that question period, the Belgian minister of communications and PTT [posts, telephones and telegraph], who has just finished a 1-week official visit to our country, emphasized that the fact that he is the first member of the new Belgian Government emerging from last November's general election to come to Zaire takes on a certain importance.

As can be readily observed, these two statements are reflections of the desire that has always driven Belgium to strengthen its ties with Zaire, in spite of the confusion that certain circles known for their hostility toward our country often attempt to create. On the Zairian side, this desire has been expressed once again in the warm and spontaneous reception that Mr De Croo received both at the time of his arrival in Kinshasa and everywhere he went during his fruitful stay in our country.

This shows that cooperation between Zaire and Belgium is developing harmoniously. As the results of the visit of the Belgian minister of communications and PTT illustrate, the climate in which this cooperation is evolving gives one cause to think that the serious problems of the economic conditions that Zaire continues to face will be contained.

Owing to this desire of our two countries, which are steadily working in the direction of strengthening and improving the quality of their bilateral cooperation, and in view of the place Belgium occupies among Zaire's Western partners, it is evident that the effectiveness of that cooperation will continue to influence our country's relations with those partners in a beneficial way. That is all the more the case because for several years those Western friends have been participating in the international plan for the development, stabilization and rehabilitation of Zaire.

So, Belgian-Zairian cooperation is doing will, as Mr De Croo stressed in the interview we run below--an interview in which he also spoke to us frankly about the present concerns of Belgium and of his party, the Liberal Party, victorious in the November 1981 elections.

[Question] Mr Minister, you have just completed a week-long stay in Zaire? Could we know the purpose of your visit?

[Answer] The purpose of my visit was twofold.

As minister of communications, I was the guest of the Zairian state commissioner for transport and communications, and, at the same time, in my capacity as minister of PTT, I was the guest of the state commissioner for PTT.

I will not hide from you that in addition to my twofold capacity, the fact that I am the first member of the new Belgian Government emerging from last November's general election to come to Zaire takes on a certain importance.

[Question] You have been able to make contact with several Zairian officials. To that end you have had meetings with the first state commissioner, who granted you a formal interview, and with your counterparts for foreign affairs, finance, transportation and communications and PTT and the general commissioner for planning. Might one know your impressions after these different meetings? How is Belgian-Zairian cooperation doing?

[Answer] After the different meetings with the very distinguished members of your government, as well as with the governor of the Bank of Zaire, I have some difficulty in responding to your question regarding my impressions.

I have, in fact, been acquainted with several members of your government for a number of years, and I do not want to confuse my friendly feelings with the objectives of my mission. I have, however, an overall impression, and I believe that the key ideas of our way of approaching cooperation meet with a positive response among your officials.

Those key ideas are the following:

1. to work together to alter our cooperation qualitatively;

2. to make that cooperation as tangible as possible;

3. to aim for a maximum beneficial effect as best we can; and

4. to reach the greatest possible number of Zairians.

It is in this fourfold perspective, both in the area of transportation and the area of communications and telecommunications, that my visit has taken place.

Belgian-Zairian cooperation is doing well, but, like any cooperative process, it needs detailed examination in a practical fashion on the part of a certain number of Belgian and Zairian departments.

I am bringing back from Zaire a rich harvest of evaluations and forecasts. In accordance with the rules in force between our two countries, they will be subjected to very careful examination, to be followed, I hope, by maximum effect.

[Question] After visiting the capital, you went to Lubumbashi where you were given the opportunity to see the facilities of the SNCZ [Zairian National Railroad Company], to Matadi where you visited the national port and to Inga. How do you see the progress achieved by Zaire, and what, in your opinion, are Zaire's major needs in the area of transportation?

[Answer] My visit to Lubumbashi was of a twofold nature.

I met locally with political and private officials, and I showed my concern regarding the SNCZ. If I understood Mr Gunst clearly, this last aspect was much appreciated.

At Matadi and Inga, with which I was already familiar, my colleagues and I were able to inspect two keys to Zaire, its port of entry and its storehouse of energy.

In the transportation area, in view of the vastness of Zaire's area and the requirements that efficient, economical, rapid and reliable transportation involve, the Zairian nation is confronted with enormous challenges.

The challenge of the "national route" in all its complexity seems the most important one to me.

I am delighted at the new approach being taken to the issue of the electrification of the Matadi-Kinshasa railway line; accomplishing it, providing that an optimal ratio of investment to cost is found, seems possible to me. That would mean doing it at lowest cost.

What seems new to me is the importance attached by Zaire to the acute problems of air traffic--air traffic in all its aspects, as varied as access to airports, their nighttime use, meteorology and cooperation in the area of air safety.

Finally, as regards railroads, I am struck by the enormous rolling stock requirements the SNCZ has need of, and I hope that the briefs that have been presented to me can convince the lenders to contribute to this essential modernization as a matter of urgency.

Lastly, the agonizing problem of public transportation in the big Zairian cities, and especially in Kinshasa, requires a pragmetic approach. In that connection, several representatives of the private sector went around with me at the request of your authorities.

From the view point of private enterprise or of, at the least, collaboration between private sector and public sector, a series of ideas were analyzed.

[Question] We know that there exist cooperation agreements between Air Zaire and Sabena. However, after your having met with the governor of the Bank of Zaire, is it possible to think that a solution has been found to the dispute that exists between the two companies?

[Answer] You know that Sabena has excess receipts in Zaire amounting to the equivalent of 1.2 billion Belgian francs. In view of the situation on the foreign exchange market, Zaire is experiencing very major problems with regard to transferring those sums to Belgium.

The Zairian authorities, particularly those working with the Bank of Zaire, have discussed this case at length, and positive prospects emerged from an important meeting with the bank's governor, Citizen Sambwa. I must tell you that a happy outcome to this transfers issue would help us to fulfill the requests for air collaboration that Zaire has addressed to Belgium. In fact, our experts have singled out, in this area and that of Air Zaire-Sabena collaboration, a series of points where the parties come together.

[Question] In the context of loans granted to Zaire since 1977, Belgium seems to give priority to ONATRA [National Transportation Office] and to SNCZ. Recognizing that this financial assistance permits Zaire to maintain the "national route," might one think that this aid will be extended to other enterprises such as RVA [Airlines Administration], which is greatly in need of financing for the renovation of airports in the interior?

[Answer] I have amply responded to your fifth question by mentioning to you the possibilities for the electrification of the Matadi-Kinshasa line and the collaboration we think we will be able to extend to the Airlines Administration.

[Question] Since 1976 there has been talk of the electrification of the Matadi-Kinshasa railway, and Belgium is said to have financed the preliminary studies. Considering the fact that Zaire has enormous energy resources in the Inga Basin at its disposal and considering the high cost of petroleum products, do you not think, Mr Minister, that Belgium could participate in carrying out this project?

[Answer] The same goes for your sixth question, in which regard new ideas were examined at the time of the various meetings I was able to have, in particular with your state commissioner for finance. One should, in fact, evaluate the impact of financing for electrification on the capacity of the Matadi-Kinshasa railroad as precisely as possible. The studies financed by Belgium in particular seem to have reached a state of completion that will permit a concrete decision to be reached.

[Question] A few years ago, the presence of Henschel and Brossels buses in Zaire's big cities, particularly in Kinshasa, did Belgium proud. Might one suppose, after the OTCZ [Zaire Joint Transportation Office] has been shifted from public to private control, that the presence of representatives of the three Belgian firms involved in urban transportation is evidence of a desire on the part of Belgian interests to join with Zairians for the possible creation of a transportation company in Kinshasa?

[Answer] Your seventh question already received a response when I spoke about public transportation in Kinshasa.

[Question] Belgium has just given 150 million Belgian francs to Zaire for the renovation of the PTT. In that regard, you announced the training of Zairian postal agents by your country. What are the other actions envisaged in the future?

[Answer] About the switching center, which your eighth question addresses, I am happy that our governments have been able to arrange a government-to-government loan, which, in actual fact, more or less amounts to a gift that Belgium is making to Zaire. The switching center--which by the end of 1983 will give about 20,000 telephone lines the ability to make automatic overseas connections, especially with Belgium--will put ONPTZ [Zairian National Posts and Telecommunications Office] in a position to record receipts in this sector correctly and completely.

However, there is more.

The state commissioner for PTT has asked us for significant cooperation as regards cable tracers and cable layers, so that the cable ordered by his departments will pay off as quickly as possible.

As soon as the outlines of this new cooperation are conveyed to us, we will see to it that a definite response is made to them, with our eyes on the beneficial effect the cooperation is meant to have.

[Question] The Kingdom of Belgium has gone through a fairly prolonged government crisis just recently. Should the crisis be considered definitively resolved?

For the second time you are a member of the Martens cabinet, even though your party lost a certain number of seats as a result of hte last elections. How is the coalition doing, and what is the position of the Liberals concerning regionalization, unemployment and monetary issues?

[Answer] Well, your last two questions address themselves to the politician, the member of the Belgian Government.

The government presided over by Mr Martens is clearly distinguished from previous governments by its concretely demonstrated will to resolve the Belgian economic and budgetary crisis.

It is in this perspective that our parliament has given the government special powers for the duration of the current year, special powers that we are handling with much political diplomacy; these powers are essential for sorting out our budget deficit, stabilizing our social security and settling a series of important issues in large public sector areas under my supervision: railroads, public transportation, Sabena and others. We must, in time of crisis, get the best possible return on public investment and the subsidies that the government grants.

The present government--which came out of the elections in which, as you know, my party, the Liberal Party, emerged the winner, and in which the Christian Social Party experienced a sizeable electoral loss--has decided to apply self-discipline, so as to face up to the economic and social consequences of the world crisis. We feel that the state cannot and must not do everything and that there is no social paradise, in our country, that can come to fruition on an economic graveyard.

The present Belgian Government is indeed open to beneficial cooperation between our two countries, I believe, from the standpoint of the four principles I have stated to you.

Finally, let me say to you how much my delegation and I myself have appreciated the particularly warm reception we were given. We have been very gratefuly, my colleagues and I, for the high quality of our talks and the meetings we were able to have. In this time of crisis, which also affects Zaire, ties of solidarity between your country and mine are proving to be more solid than some believed.

So everything is clear: new and happy prospects are opening up for Belgian-Zairian relations.

DOCTORS STRIKE--Kinshasa, 18 Jun (AFP)--Kinshasa's largest hospital, hit by a strike of doctors which was said to have resulted in the deaths of around 100 patients from lack of treatment, was operating virtually normally today. The strike was still continuing, but its effects were considerably diminished by the Zaire Government's decision to bring in 40 doctors from elsewhere to provide a basic service. An authoritative source said that about half of the Mama Yemo Hospital's 160 doctors were refusing to work after hospital authorities disciplined some of them for demanding payment from patients for treatment. The government is thought to be considering the prosecution of the striking doctors for criminal negligence. Meanwhile the only noticeable sign of the strike's effects today were larger queues of patients awaiting treatment than normal. [Text] [AB181836 Paris AFP in English 1558 GMT 18 Jun 82]

RESOLUTIONS OF MEETING OF FAT OFFICERS

Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 13 Apr 82 pp 4, 5, 6

[Article: "FAT Officers Call for Joint Administration in Southern Zone"]

[Text] The officers of the Chadian Armed Forces (FAT) who met from 31 March to 3 April published a final document which contains resolutions which would throw Chad's political situation into confusion if they were applied. We are publishing these resolutions in their entirety.

--Whereas the Chadian Armed Forces have become a trend on the same grounds as those of the FROLINAT;

--Whereas the Kano I agreements called for the demilitarization of Ndjamena by the armed forces confronting each other;

--Whereas the Chadian Armed Forces have withdrawn to the south of the country;

--Whereas the situation in the east of the country calls for energetically taking the men into hand;

--Whereas GUNT [Transitional National Union Government] is experiencing serious difficulties in supporting the Integrated Armed Forces in general and the Chadian Armed Forces in particular;

--Whereas the Permanent Committee, the deliberative and administrative organ, is practicing mismanagement of the state's public finances;

--Whereas for 2 years this organ has become unpopular and has, moreover, no representatives;

--Whereas the incumbent administration is within the Permanent Committee's jurisdiction;

--In view of the necessity of creating a new organization to administer the zone;

--In the belief that under present conditions a strictly civilian terriorial administration cannot realistically be interested in military problems;

--Whereas the representatives of the Chadian Armed Forces in the government no longer see anything but the interests of their newly created political party;

--With concern for the urgent necessity of reorganizing the command of the Chadian Armed Forces by establishing a dynamic and competent staff;

--Conscious of the real difficulties which the Chadian Armed Forces are encountering both in terms of equipment and morale,

We, commissioned and noncommissioned officers and enlisted men convened in a general assembly from 31 March to 3 April 1982 in Ndjamena, are agreed to the following:

In the Military Field

Reorganization of the command of the Chadian Armed Forces. We have resolved to put the present chief of staff of the Chadian Armed Forces temporarily back at the head of the Chadian Armed Forces until the forces are completely integrated into the Integrated National Army.

In order to do so, we recommend to the chief of staff of the Chadian Armed Forces the immediate establishment of a complete, dynamic and competent staff, based on objective and rational criteria.

We maintain the military regions in their present organization, but the command must assure their mobility and their permanent availability. We opt for the creation of new combat and reserve units. We insist on the program for creating the command of the national state police force. And meanwhile we ask the chief of staff of the Chadian Armed Forces to re-establish the squadrons and units of the state police force within the framework of the Chadian Armed Forces. We maintain our commitment in the present fighting to the struggle against rebellion.

In the Politico-Administrative Field

We are formally resolved to prohibit the Permanent Committee and the other political organizations of the region from using public funds. We ask GUNT to establish a joint territorial administration composed of military and civilians at the level of prefectures, subprefectures and administrative posts.

We are resolved to create a joint organization for controlling the administration and management of the south. For this purpose, we are resolved to create a military commission charged with studying with the civilian and military authorities the practical methods for applying points II and III. We demand our representation in the Transitional National Union Government by another military apart from the vice president and state secretary for defense.

FROLINAT COMMUNIQUE ATTACKS KAMOUGUE, PERMANENT COMMITTEE

Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 13 Apr 82 pp 3, 4

[Article: "Demarcation Between Patriots and Lackeys of Imperialism Is Taking Shape, FROLINAT Claims"]

[Text] The Permanent Committee's memorandum file is far from being closed again. The big row which has been going on for close to a month between advocates and adversaries of this document, has undergone a new development with FROLINAT's reaction. FROLINAT is taking a militant look at what it considers "treason against the Chadian people and against the martyrs of the struggle for peace in Chad."

This severe indictment which openly attacks the GUNT [Transitional National Union Government] vice president, Colonel Kamouge, emphasizes that Chad's political situation is becoming clear. The events of 12 February 1979, FROLINAT emphasized in this press release, "eclipsed the objective facts of our country's problem" and relegated "our people's patriotic and revolutionary aspirations" to a subordinate position "in favor of deceptive and impassioned watchwords." But "a demarcation is being drawn between patriots and lackeys of imperialism, between those who are using the tribal bugaboo to satisfy their passions and those who are fighting against the use of natural differences among us for southern political purposes."

Alluding to the resolutions of the recent Nairobi summit the authors of which, according to FROLINAT's document, were manipulated by the monied powers who arm the FAN [Northern Armed Forces], FROLINAT denounces internal complicity which is revealed by "timidity in adopting a definite position." This is the framework in which the Permanent Committee's memorandum should be placed. This memorandum, FROLINAT feels, contributes nothing new, because all the propositions of this document (sound administration, organization of free elections) have been "an attainment of the Chadian people since Lagos." The real problem is thus "to create the conditions for applying these conditions of principles and "the first of these conditions is assuring peace and the state's authority over the entire national territory." Analyzing the Permanent Committee's resolutions, FROLINAT claims that this "document comes at the right time to sow confusion," because "despite the last minute evasions, it is a question of a political settlement and a cease-fire with the FAN. For FROLINAT the adoption of this position is the proof that the Permanent Committee and its head are working to sabotage GUNT's authority. The FROLINAT particularly points out the south's imperviousness to GUNT's decisions.

In conclusion, FROLINAT asks GUNT to assume its responsibilities in order to cut short dilatory maneuvers and to see to the application of its decisions. He also asks that, if necessary, it revise the channels for distributing equipment and resources in order to permit all forces to participate fully in the war against the nation's enemy.

INSTALLATION OF NEW CENTRAL BANK DIRECTOR

Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 14 Apr 82 pp 1, 2

[Article: "Installation of New National Director of Central Bank"]

[Excerpts] Outman Idriss, new national director of the Bank of Central African States in Chad, was officially installed in office Tuesday. A ceremony was held on this occasion in the garden of his residence. Two speeches were made by the BEAC governor, Kasimir Oye Mba and Gangbet Kosnay, the minister of Economy and Finance.

The installation of a young national executive at the head of such a large enterprise as the Central Bank is a double satisfaction, the BEAC governor was to have declared. "A satisfaction expecially since it brings a long vacancy in management to an end." "We all want to see the sign of hope, rebirth and renewal, at the end of these dismal times which we hope have definitively ended for Chad."

For the BEAC head, "this ceremony also has another context, that of solidarity between our countries in their common monetary area." The fact that BEAC of Chad has continued to issue "after the distressing outbreaks is an eloquent illustration of the reality of monetary cooperation." Oye Mba stated that BEAC of Chad has still not reached cruising speed, quite simply because its usual partners (enterprises and banks) are still in a period of reorganization, with all the material difficulties which that involves.

The BEAC governor reviewed the role that a central bank can play in a country's development through the "vision, open-mindedness, conscientiousness, strictness, and firmness of its leader." Addressing the new director in turn on behalf of the National Transition Union government, the minister of economy and finance disclosed that this ceremony is as important as the opening of our issuing bank in June 1981 after the painful events of March 1980. Outman carries our hope, the hope of a Chad ravaged and devastated by an unequalled civil war, Gangbet added. The task entrusted to him is both exciting and difficult, especially during a crucial period of our country's history. Avoid "satisfying such and such a friend, such and such a family, such and such a tribe" was the chief advice given by the minister of economy and finance to the new head of our country's Central Bank.

MILITARY APPOINTMENTS--Two decrees signed 10 April by President Goukouni name different officers to important posts of military responsibility. The one which will attract the most attention is undoubtedly the staff of the State Police Force which will be commanded by Major Ngarbaroum Demtita. He is being assisted by Siddick Faddoul and Annour Aboud, respectively the first and second deputy chiefs of the National State Police Force. Major Galiam Negal has been named director of military cooperation by a second decree. Two deputies will assist him in his work, Kedallah Younous and Abakar Assidick Absilekat. The same decree names Colonel Kotiga Guerina to the head of the directorate of research and development in the Ministry of Defense. He will have the service of two deputies, Kassoure Guelbeye and Djoubal Zalba. [Text] [Ndjamena INFO TCHAD in French 14 Apr 82 p 1] 9380

BASES ESTABLISHED FOR SENEGAMBIAN TEACHERS' CONFEDERATION

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 24 May 82 p 3

[Article by Souleymane Gueye, permanent APS [Senegalese Press Agency] correspondent: "SNEEL-GTU, Toward a Teachers Confederation"]

[Excerpts] Banjul--A new stake has just been set in the process for the reunification of Senegal and Gambia. The GTU [Gambian Teachers Union] and SNEEL [National Elementary Education Union] have indeed laid the foundations for what could in the long run be translated into the establishment of a confederation of teachers of Senegambia.

On the occasion of the visit of a SNEEL delegation, headed by Mr Ismaila Diagne, secretary general, and after 2 days of meetings, the GTU and SNEEL set up a broad exchange program.

The communique published at the end of the work notes that for the purpose of developing Senegambian youth strongly rooted in sociocultural values, both the GTU and SNEEL hope for the establishment of closer cooperation and the establishment of cultural exchanges between the two unions in various disciplines (languages, social sciences, Arabic, practical education, etc.) The GTU and SNEEL are also considering consolidation of their cooperation for the purpose of strengthening their relations in international organizations, such as the World Teaching Profession Federation and the Pan-African Teaching Profession Organization.

The two union organizations have, moreover, expressed the hope for their being represented at all meetings of the permanent Senegalese-Gambian secretariat on education, culture and training.

They have, moreover, recommended the twinning of schools of the two countries, cooperation in the field of sports and exchange of experiences for the development of the teacher union organizations and the integration of exchange programs for teaching personnel.

Finally, it was agreed to set up a 12-man committee (six from each organization) to be responsible for implementing this program.

The latter remains to be submitted to the organization representatives. The next meeting between the two unions scheduled for Dakar in June should give its definitive approval, something that will doubtlessly pose no major problem for several reasons.

It is indeed a question of firstly institutionalizing longstanding relations because there have always been, even from the 1950's, exchanges between Gambian and Senegalese teachers.

Secondly, the SNEEL and GTU initiative goes in the direction advocated by the two chiefs of state, namely to strengthen cooperation between Senegal and Gambia in all fields of endeavor, and consequently, confederation is consecration.

The two organizations can even now count on the support of Dr Dawda Jawara, Gambian chief of state.

Dr Dawda Jawara reaffirmed to the Senegalese delegation, that presented him "the SNEEL medal of honor," the essential role of teachers in the building of the confederation. Dr Jawara stressed, "I have received many medals but I attach special significance to this one because it comes from teachers."

Mr Ismaila Diagne, speaking for all his Gambian and Senegalese colleagues, assured Dr Jawara of the commitment of all teachers in the task of building Senegambia. In this way, both SNEEL and GTU teachers commit themselves to provide their contribution to the building of African unity as Mr Mbaye Mbengue, our ambassador to Banjul, had called on them to do so at the opening of their meeting.

Mr Mbaye Mbengue stated, "Teacher labor organizations are a focus of attention for African unity because knowledge is an effective weapon against prejudice, and history, geography, science and all forms of art can be utilized to remind both children and adults that progress is not the prerogative of one single people."

Mr Mbaye Mbengue wanted in this way to make the teachers realize the fight they have to wage against a certain number of myths, including overpraised nationalism that causes hatred of all countries except your own.

Therefore, it is up to the teachers "to convince their peoples that their nationalism must not prevent better understanding, better sub-regional cooperation and that their governments must encourage state groupings without destroying national identities."

MMM FOREIGN RELATIONS DESCRIBED AS OUTRAGEOUS

Port Louis THE NATION in French 9 May 82 p 1

> [Text] The security services of Mauritius have specific information regarding the foreign relations of the MMM [Mauritian Militant Movement] and how that party's electoral campaign is being bankrolled. According to information gathered in Mauritius and abroad, the MMM has mentioned on past occasions the possibility of using force to overturn the democratic institutions of the country. Also, some circles in Mauritius are worried by the instructions issued to MMM supporters telling them to go to the polls very early on 11 June. And on Friday, Yousouf Mohamed said that the opposition intended to make the dead and those who are out of the country cast their votes.

There is every indication that the allegations made by the Labor Party [LP] concerning the MMM's relations with some foreign countries are not based on unfounded guesswork. A recent investigation conducted by politicains, some of whom have close connections with the MMM/PSM [Malagasy Socialist Party] Alliance reveals the following facts:

1) An MMM activist is a KGB (the Soviet Union's intelligence service) agent and another one has close ties with a foreign embassy.

2) The MMM is bankrolled through a center located in the Indian Ocean region under the watchful eye of a Cuban who is established in the Seychelles.

3) In 1977, after the coup d'etat carried out by France Albert Rene in the Seychelles, a Ugandan terrorist and his North Vietnamese wife came to Mauritius on a mission but had to leave the country prematurely when they were discovered by the Security Police.

4) A member of the MMM met with a terrorist who had been trained in Mozambique.

5) In 1980, a member of the MMM met, in Paris, with Moroccan terrorists, with a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and with leaders of the French terrorist group Action Directe.

6) While in Europe, a member of the MMM went to Iraq, where he met with the PLO leader, Yasser Arafat.

7) A foreign firm operating in the free zone acts as the channel through which foreign powers are bankrolling the MMM.

In view of the dubious activities carried out by the MMM since its creation in 1969, and in view of its close links with some Marxist countries of the Indian Ocean region, the government must adopt all the necessary measures to protect democracy and to guarantee free elections in Mauritius.

MMM PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGES--If the MMM [Mauritian Militant Movement] wins the elections, the prime minister will be elected by the Central Committee of the party and Jugnauth is not likely to get the designation. In Vacoas, yesterday, Sir Ramesh Jeewoolall and Kailash Purryag quoted some provisions of the Constitution drafted by the MMM which stipulate that the prime minister must be chosen by the Central Committee. Now in every election organized by the Central Committee to this date, Paul Berenger has always emerged in first place followed by Kader Bhayat; Jugnauth usually came in 5th place. Labor Party speakers claim that Berenger can bend the Central Committee to his will and that, therefore, he will be automatically selected for the office of prime minister if an election takes place. In a different context, Mr I. Seetaram said that posters with a picture of Jugnauth were printed at a cost of 25 rupees per poster. The seven houses, camping ground and two schools owned by Jugnauth also gave rise to comment in Vacoas. [Text] [Port Louis THE NATION in French 10 May 82 p 1] 8796

PRESIDENT MACHEL MEETS WITH FORMER WAR CRIMINALS

Maputo DOMINGO in Portuguese 16 May 82 p 3

[Excerpts] President Samora Machel met last Monday and Tuesday with some 1,000 persons formerly connected with the colonial-fascist Portuguese regime. The meeting took place in the assembly hall of the Josina Machel secondary school. Also present at the ceremony were leading members of the FRELIMO Party and Government.

Because of state programs that could not be postponed, this meeting was interrupted on Tuesday and will continue in a few weeks.

However, these two days, during which the leader of the Mozambican Revolution heard various criminals, already showed the dimensions of the alienating and repressive process of the large machine set up by colonialism.

Present at the meeting were former members of the PIDE [Police for the Control of Foreigners and Defense of the State], DGS [Directorate General for Security], ANP [Popular National Action], GE [Special Group], GEP [Special Paratroop Group], commandos, Fleshas and members of the small puppet groups that appeared after the coup d'etat in Portugal, as well as other war criminals.

The life story of some of them still strongly marked by alienation, and of others already aware of the committed treason and of the road that led them there, is a true political lesson that the Mozambicans have to learn.

This important meeting of the FRELIMO Party Leadership with the former war criminals has as its objective the restitution of Mozambican personality, the definitive liberation from a past committed to the colonialist ideology and repression.

Acting in the traditional FRELIMO manner, this meeting was frank and open, permitting an in-depth analysis of the past of alienation and treason so as to win more patriots for the country.

Through the various stories of the former war criminals, especially those who directly and frankly recounted their lives, it could be clearly seen to what point colonialism has destroyed their personality but, as the Chief of State said "They did not make Portuguese out of you. You remained Mozambicans. It is this personality that must be rebuilt. It is this honor that must be restored to all Mozambicans, from Rovuma to Maputo."

What was heard at the meeting at the Josina Machel School are the stories of lives of alienation, repression and servility, but they are lives, as the FRELIMO Party has been demonstrating, which can be transformed in this new school of learning from life. They are lives, that after they are transformed, will rebuild man himself.

REBUILDING OF MARITIME, RIVER FLEETS DISCUSSED

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 3 May 82 p 2

[Text] One of the main tasks that the National Board of Maritime and River Transportation will carry out during this year is the rebuilding of the maritime fleets most of whose boats are operating under difficult conditions. For the officials of this sector this is the first step in the development of the maritime and river transportation enterprises--state and private--existing in the country, eight in all.

This decision was announced in Beira yesterday during a meeting to discuss the entire situation of maritime and river traffic. A spokesman for that meeting informed our reporters that the situation that was discussed is quite serious, since most of the existing boats have problems such as splintered hulls, damaged motors and lack of parts and replacement parts.

The plan for rebuilding the fleets envisages the importation of new motors and replacement parts for those that can still be salvaged; equipping boats traveling large distances with means of communications (radios); equipping the boats with lifejackets and creating conditions to make it possible for the firms to have the minimum facilities for maintaining the equipment.

In the specific case of Sofala, there are at present 17 boats, of which only 9 are operational but with many deficiencies.

A new motor has arrived for one of the boats that has been out of service for 2 years, and it is being installed. Another motor is also ready to be placed on another boat. The plan envisages that by the end of this year more motors and spare parts will arrive to put into operation 15 damaged boats.

As to the development of the maritime and river transportation enterprises, the establishment of a firm in Pemba and another in Lago Niassa is envisaged.

At the same time, maintenance centers will be created in all places where firms in this field exist or will be established.

Present at the national meeting held in Beira yesterday were representatives of the maritime and river transportation enterprises of Inhambane, Pemba, Ilha de Mocambique and Songo, in addition to Sofala whose delegation of the National Board of Maritime and River Transportation came to the meeting.

Present at the ceremony were members of the party and government. The guest of honor said that he was very moved by the reception, which he characterized as "a very big surprise." During the ceremony messages were read from members of the Sofala provincial government and the Mozambican Armed Forces, and presents were given to the guest of honor. CUBAN RADIO BROADCASTING COOPERATION--Talks between Radio Mozambique and the Cuban Institute of Radio and Television began in Maputo yesterday to strengthen the existing cooperation between the two organizations. At the start of the talks, the director general of Radio Mozambique, Leite Vasconcelos, stressed that cooperation between Mozambique and the Republic of Cuba, especially in the field of radio broadcasting, has been growing. He also pointed out that the presence of the Cuban delegation in our country was an encouragement to strengthen this cooperation. The vice chairman of the Institute of Radio and Television, head of the Cuban delegation, said for his part, that the agreement signed last year between this organization and Radio Mocambique opened the possibility for an advantageous cooperation, especially in the field of program exchanges. BRITISH COOPERATION IN PUNGUE BRIDGE--DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE has learned that the installation of the floating bridge on Pungue River will begin during the last 15 days of this month. According to our information, a British expert, who will supervise the work, is to arrive in Beira in the next few days. The floating bridge over the Pungue River was offered to our country by the Kingdom of the Netherlands which, for its part, purchased it from Britain. Working on the project will be 24 workers and 5 engineers--all Mozambican nationals--in addition to the British expert especially sent here by the building factory. It should be noted that this floating bridge will have a road over 4 meters wide and is built to support the weight of a 30 ton truck. HOFFE REPLIES TO LANG'S ASSERTIONS

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 26 May 82 pp 5-6

[Text] Douglas Hoffe, local CDM [Consolidated Diamond Mines] director and president of the SWA/Namibia Chamber of Mines replied to a speech made before the IG [German Interest Group] by Eric Lang on 11 May 82 in Windhoek. Hoffe said that Eric Lang sharply criticized the governments of South Africa and SWA/Namibia, as well as the Diamond Council, the mining industry (especially the diamond industry) and the CDM. All those criticized by Lang should keep their distance from the unclear statements and misleading impressions resulting from Lang's speech. Hoping that he might clarify misunderstands that could result from the publication of Lang's remarks, Hoffe said:

Unfortunately, Lang has made derogatory remarks which are based on false facts. His conclusions are of no importance and unfortunately lead to impressions that are dangerously misleading. A Windhoek newspaper has commented as follows on Lang's speech after it was published: "If this should be true, this diamond affair reeks of corruption and criminal action of a magnitude unknown [in this country]."

This commentary shows to what degree Lang's statements result indeed in wrong opinions, and cause members of the public to draw false conclusions.

The best way to deal with the greatest errors in Lang's speech is to explain again in detail several facts that concern the diamond industry. Mr. Lang talked about the SWA/Namibia Diamond Council. This is an official institution in which the government as well as the diamond producers of SWA/Namibia are represented. The government names the chairman and is represented by a majority of members on the council. The council is responsible for the accounting of all diamonds produced anywhere in SWA/Namibia.

Evaluation

The Diamond Council ships diamonds to its authorized representatives for evaluation. The council can thus supervise export and export taxes in relation to production.

After the diamonds have been evaluated and shipped to the market, the Diamond Council collects export taxes from the producer and turns them over to the government. It does not collect taxes for diamond profits, mining taxes or taxes from shareholders abroad. Producers who are responsible for paying these taxes--including CDM--pay them directly to the government.

The records (books) of the Diamond Council are inspected and examined by the finance authorities. Details on tax contributions are contained in the budget plan and in the report of the chief records examiner, both of these are public documents published by the government.

Mr. Lang's report could cause considerable confusion about the sales methods for diamonds leaving SWA/Namibia.

Diamond Sales

Except for a small percentage of diamonds that are sold in South Africa, all diamonds produced in SWA/Namibia are sold to the Central Selling Organization (CSO) in London, through an organization known as the Diamond Producers Association (DPA). The DPA is formed on the basis of an agreement between the government of SWA/Namibia, the South African Government, CDM, De Beers, and the Diamond Corporation (P-ty) Ltd. As a partner in this agreement, the CDM received special authority from the administrator general. The association can be traced back to the year 1934.

The functions of the DPA are, among others, to receive the diamonds produced by the producing members, and to obtain independent productions if these are available in order to assure that all diamonds are sorted and properly evaluated--and conversely: on the basis of another agreement recognized by the DPA partners, to arrange for the sale of the members' production to the CSO.

Through the DPA, the government (with its interest in taxes) as well as the CDM (with its interest in profits) can make certain that SWA/Namibian diamonds are sold at the best possible profit. In Kimberly the diamonds are sorted and evaluated according to current sales offers and price lists, i.e. according to valid CSO prices for raw diamonds offered for inspection to international buyers in London. It is the stated principle of CSO to guarantee a firm price for raw diamonds and to raise the sales price over the years to amounts adapted to inflation, but only if high prices can be guaranteed and only in as much as, later on, polished diamonds can be sold to consumers as jewelry. Over the past 34 years, sales prices were raised 28 times, i.e. once every 15 months. The last increase took effect in February 1980.

No "Cheap" Diamonds

There are intensive methods that are supposed to assure that CDM receives the full sales price (minus the agreed CSO deductions) which, in turn, is no less advantageous than the price demanded by all other producer who sell their products through CSO. All these matters are most carefully watched in the interests of government and CDM. The price for diamonds produced in SWA/Namibia is not raised to the advantage of some third party at some given time between evaluation and sale to CSO. The price remains constant until the diamonds have reached CSO.

In case of favorable conditions, when CSO can sell diamonds immediately, they are sold on the international market. If market conditions are unfavorable, diamonds are held back until the market is stable. Diamonds stored by the CSO are kept in storage by firms within the organization at their own expense. In view of the present high interest rates all over the world, the advantages of this system for producers are self-evident. If market conditions remain weak for a longer period of time, as right now, agreements on quotas prevously made between CSO and the producers take effect immediately. Essentially, these agreements give each producer the right to ship his diamonds to CSO for sale on the market in the same proportion as that of his production capacity to total production that can be handled by the CSO.

In other words: it is wrong for Mr Lang to sate that CDM sells its diamonds "cheap" and the CSO sells them "expensive" later on, a practice that is supposed to result in losses for CDM and the government.

Price Stability

The sales agreements of CDM are as advantageous as those for all other producers in the world who are selling diamonds through CSO and derive advantageous as those for all other producers in the world who are selling diamonds through CSO and derive advantages from CSO services.

The principles of De Beers, the leader in the diamond industry, are to guarantee long-range stability and the prosperity of the industry as a whole. For this reason, De Beers founded CSO which markets more than 80 percent of the world's raw diamond production with many of these diamonds coming from independent countries in Africa and the Third World.

Even though, historically speaking, the trend for demand is on the increase, there were temporary reversals on the world market--as right now--which usually influenced the sales of diamonds of a certain size and quality. In such times, CSO directives provide for price stability by adjusting shipments to demand while purchases by producers are kept on a satisfactory level. Inappropriate decreases or restrictions of mining activities are thus avoided as much as possible to the advantage of the mining companies and producing countries.

Accounting Value

CDM and the government derive considerable advantages from this system and especially from the large financial resources thet De Beers has accumulated and that enable the firm to hold back temporary production surpluses until demand has improved. At the end of 1981, the accounting value of De Beers inventories was 1.4 billion rand. It is clear that no producer by himself, and not even a national production group, is able to withdraw capital of this amount from circulation. Few could afford the loss of interest alone that such withdrawal means. Mr Lang's speech in no way mentions this essential stabilizing factor in the industry. Stability has always been recognized as an essential component of the diamond industry because price fluctuations, which are considered normal in the field of most raw materials, would destroy public confidence in high quality diamonds. They are considered pure luxury and public ownership of jewelry is by far greater than current world production.

H.F. Oppenheimer said in regard to the price stabilizing function of CSO: "There is nobody who deals in diamonds--whether producer, dealer, polisher, jeweler or buyer--who does not derive benefits from this function. The CSO protects not only stock holders of the diamond companies but also the mine employees and the communities that depend on their work. We are aware of our responsibility not only toward share holders, not only toward the entire industry and the consumer community but also toward the governments of the countries in which we operate."

5,000 Categories

In order to sustain and increase the demand for diamonds, CSO supports advertisement and publicity campaigns in 26 countries, among them those with the biggest world markets. In 1982, the budget for advertising amount to no less than $72 million. These expenses too would be far above the potential of an independent producer.

CSO handles between 20 and 30 million carat diamonds annually which are sorted into 5,000 categories according to size, shape, color and quality for sale to diamond polishers. Advanced technology and particularly the special knowledge of well-trained experts are necessary to weigh, sort and pack diamonds. Knowledge and skill must be updated continually in order to adapt to merchandize changes and polishing requirements. For this reason, CSO has close contacts with all customers in order to be continually informed about their needs and to adapt the principles of marketing to these needs.

Mr Lang referred to agreements with the South West Finance Corporation Ltd. These are agreements of long standing that can in effect be traced back into the previous century because in the Halbscheid Agreement all previous agreements are included that had been valid for the German Diamond Association DDG The Halbscheid Agreement recognized CDM as the titular successor of DDG.

Tax Procedures

Lang made several unjust accusations in regard to tax procddures. It is appropriate to clear the air in this connection also. Since its establishment as a registered association in 1920, CDM has paid taxes on its profits to the government. CDM's account books are examined by certified account book examiners and can be inspected by the government. As a diamond firm, CDM pays a higher rate of taxes than any other tax payer.

Taxes paid to the government by CDM are always much higher than the dividends paid to stock holders.

(Commentary: Where are the answers to direct questions?

Why does our country have no diamond polishing industry? How much is actually paid in taxes? Do diamonds really cost less when they are sold to CSO? What exactly do they cost? Eric Lang's statements could have been dealt with by clear facts. In any case, CDM has shown its willingness to react to a complaint by a "man in the street".--The editor)

SITUATION IN ANGOLA DISCUSSED

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 1 Jun 82 p 2

[Editorial by Hans Feddersen: "Letter From Angola."]

[Text] While military correspondents from South African newspapers were able to visit the "area of operations: last week in order to relate their findings to our press which, in turn, related them to the citizens of the country directly involved, the AZ [ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG] received a letter directly from Southern Angola. How does a person living in that part of the country view conditions there?

Item: on 4 February 1982 an important event took place: "Our president and all kinds of Soviet, East German and Cuban friends drove with Sam Nujoma through barricaded streets." Up to 20,000 people came out to meet them and caused a panic when somebody mistakenly identified a South African airplane as a UFO. Everybody ran wild, three children were trampled to death. Other children could be rescued with great effort.

"Bandits" are stealing whatever SWAPO and other gangs have left behind, such as block and tackles, aluminum roofs, ice boxes, chinaware and cattle. Burnt out military vehicles and warning signs that certain roads cannot be used because they are mined belong to the daily scene.

At a number of mission stations, from 40 to 60 people are reported to be dying from hunger each day. The food situation has not changed even after the UN Refugee Commission allotted 500 million in aid for Kunene refugees. Independence seems to be a dismal failure. The MPLA government is hurting from attacks on the Benguela railroad. 500 Yugoslavs are reported to have arrived in order to complete an airport in the south of the country. "Many other whites" are hanging around in Lubango. Lubango became a frontier town when the South Africans came as close as 200 km.

The writer of the letter speculates that the foreign ministers of Cuba and Angola have fabricated nice phrases in Luanda in order to throw sand into the eyes of the Americans. Accordingly, the Cubans are to be withdrawn as soon as Sam Nujoma takes power in Windhoek.

He would, of course, request them to come back immediately--and so the Cubans withdraw from Angola as soon as Namibia is independent. This should be clear to the South Africans. The writer of the letter asks if the United States will fall for this. We believe that the United States and the West are interested equally in Angola and an independent Namibia.

PRESIDENT DISCUSSES REGIME'S ACHIEVEMENTS, LIBYAN RELATIONS

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 7 May 82 pp 1-3

[Interview with Colonel Seyni Kountche]

> [Excerpts] The magazine EUROPE OUTREMER has just published a special issue on Niger. This special issue evaluates measures taken by the CMS [Supreme Military Council] and the government since 1974 for the economic, social, and cultural development of our country.
> On pages 2 and 3 we present the complete interview which head of state Colonel Seyni Kountche granted to EUROPE OUTREMER's special envoy on this occasion.

[Question] Mr President, 15 April marks the 8th anniversary of your assumption of power. Of all the work that you have completed so far, what are the aspects that you feel are most important?

[Answer] In a country like ours, it may seem presumptuous to rank or even just to favor certain aspects of the development movement over others, although at the onset some were perceived as urgent or top priority.

You know under what circumstances the national armed forces were led to take responsibility. Our primary ambition was to remove our country and our people from the disastrous situation into which an incredible combination of natural and human factors which, if you will permit, I will not review, had plunged it. It was necessary to put the most sensitive areas of national life into order immediately. We had to act quickly and satisfactorily to restore hope and confidence to close to 5 million Nigerians. With God's grace, the efforts put forth were crowned with success.

From that time onward, we have endeavored to define the major lines of structural development activity methodically and in an organized manner through a preliminary 1976-78 Three-Year Program, completed by the Five-Year Plan in progress. The objectives being aimed at through these measures are: achievement of self-sufficiency in food production; establishment of a development company; and pursuit of less economic dependence.

Under the circumstances, this has involved building ever more solid foundations for a national economy which is basically agricultural and still subject to the vagaries of weather. It was necessary, gradually but essentially, to withdraw our people from a precarious existence. The resources? We found them in our subsoil first of all, and then in the invaluable reserve of courage and ingenuity found in our people. We have basically devoted these resources to development of the rural world still represented by 90 percent of our population: construction of dams for water power/irrigation purposes, implementation of regional productivity projects, programs to reconstitute herds, opening up the interior by paving the major arteries and building service roads and rural runways.

In the same drive for progress and social justice, we initiated graduated and objective improvements of social conditions (schools, hospitals, supplying drinking water, electrification, subsidized housing), and a continuing restoration of our cultural heritage. The Samariya, which was once a proven method of organizing mutual aid and mass solidarity, was revived. A national festival offering each of our departments the social and educational facilities required for our young people to thrive physically and mentally has been established.

Visible progress has been made with regard to personal income: the inter-occupational guaranteed minimum wage has increased from 5,800 CFA francs in 1974 to more than 20,000 CFA francs in 1982; while in 1977 we eliminated the minimum tax, and more recently, the schedular tax on salaries and wages. The overall budget increased from some 14 billion in 1973-74 to close to 94 billion in 1981-82.

Similarly, in our foreign policy we feel proud to have not only strengthened the acceptance and the image of our country and our people, but also to have contributed, to the full extent of our capabilities, to the pursuit of peace and harmony among people; to the defense of their higher interests, their legitimate goals, and their inalienable rights, wherever they have been attacked or threatened.

Here, briefly outlined, are some indications of the struggle for liberation in which our people have been involved for close to 8 years. What encourages me personally and above all reassures me, is the tangible evidence of our people's ability to steadfastly and courageously confront the brutal realities of our ecosystem and geopolitics in unity and solidarity.

[Question] On 14 April 1979. you announced your plan to provide your country with original institutions in the form of a "Development Company." How has the preparation of these future institutions progressed so far, and what exactly will be their role?

[Answer] As I customarily say, there is no universal model for development. Based on its own economic, social, cultural, and even denominational realities, each nation must map out the development path which best responds to its concerns. As I said in 1979, for Niger the Development Company will be the perfect expression of the ideals, goals, and deep convictions of a people who are aware, self-confident, and in perfect harmony with their environment.

The National Commission established in 1979 and exclusively of the people in nature, has submitted its report. The government has adopted it. What remains is to translate the fruit of these 2 years of joint consideration into action. The process has been initiated. Each village, district or tribe; each canton or unit; in short, each administrative unit up to the national level will have its structures for motivation and production, of which the development institution will be the outcome. Once established, the Development Company will open a new era of strengthening unity and building the nation for Niger, while through cooperation, consultation, and participation, it will ensure the sound and responsible management of the state. The people will more fully assume control of their own destiny.

[Question] In your long message to the nation on the occasion of the 23rd anniversary of the proclamation of the republic, you did not mention the uranium problem. As this year begins, what are the international market perspectives for this strategic ore and their consequences for Niger? Didn't 1981 exports show an increase over the previous year?

[Answer] Although the perspectives for the international uranium market, or more precisely the international markets, are basically not gloomy, they are still a concern since after its sudden drop over the past 2 years, the price level that we allow for is still hesitating to recover to our satisfaction. However, we have some reason to hope for a gradual improvement in this state of affairs, basically considering the spirit of confident solidarity which prevails between Niger and its principal trading partners. If the current trend continues, subsequent readjustment of our economic investment programs, which at the moment obviously require appropriate financial support, can be hoped for. Efforts are being pursued both with regard to profitability and to increasing production with the putting into operation of the SONICHAR [Nigerien Coal Company] power plant to supply backup power to the mining region on the one hand, and with the imminent start-up of the Tassa N'Taghalgue Mining Company, an eloquent expression of the confidence that Niger inspires in its friends, on the other.

[Question] Mr President, why do you sell uranium to Libya while denouncing its attempts to destabilize the area and its Pan-Saharan propaganda? Are these sales intentionally limited?

[Answer] As long as we have an urgent need to build the nation, uranium will be an eminently marketable product to us. At present it is our preferred tool for financing development. This is a reality, perhaps an economic one, despite the clouds which are momentarily shadowing our political relationships with some of our partners. In this regard, we make a distinction between politics and commerce, with the latter more directly under the responsibility of the Nigerien Office of Mine Resources, a public industrial and commercial establishment. A fair distinction. Wait, look around a little so you will understand what many governments have understood: you have to be able to transcend the political incidents which attract attention to perceive through them each time the historical necessity of cooperation among people with strict respect for the dignity, sovereignty, and interests of each.

This being the case, I clearly state and reaffirm that Niger has always respected the guarantees called for on the international level for the use of uranium for strictly peaceful purposes, and requires them of its trading partners.

[Question] You recently told a major French paper: "Our stride has been broken." However, of all the non-petroleum-producing African countries stricken with drought and crisis, isn't Niger still relatively well off?

[Answer] I will immediately say, No! Of course, the Sahel and our land-locked location are external limitations with which Niger must inevitably reckon. Not only are we suffering the effects of the world economic crisis and particularly the inflation of prices for products and services, as are the other non-petroleum-producing countries, but in addition we must bear the costs of transportation to and from the coast. Confronting so many aggravating factors while all of a sudden our resources have been diminished by the dizzying drop in uranium prices--I will let you be the judge. So, our only advantage lies in our determination to overcome the effects of the economic situation at all costs and to give our development firmer foundations and more stable structures.

[Question] Your careful attention to food production is well known, but, despite all the efforts exerted, a new grain shortage--a limited one, it is true--was recorded for the last harvest. In your opinion, has the Sahel's delicate balance been permanently disrupted?

[Answer] Disrupted, yes; although the situation varies from one country to the next. But, this disruption should not be permanent. We do not know how long this cycle of drought which, despite some hesitation, does seem to be yielding to a mild cycle, will last. This is therefore not a permanent disruption, but a bad period to be passed through. There is also the policy of constructing large dams on the Senegal, Gambia, and Niger Rivers which are a source of hope for the Sahel's food and energy balance. Provided that we are understood and assisted in this process.

[Question] One of Niger's great hopes is the Kandadji dam. How do you respond to those who criticize these large dam projects, in particular because they cause significant dislocation of populations, because irrigating tens of thousands of hectares is very expensive and requires qualified personnel, because they contribute to the spread of diseases related to the water supply, etc.?

[Answer] Construction of a large multipurpose dam is a pressing necessity for Niger. I will explain. In the area of agriculture, Niger's goal is to attain self-sufficiency in food production by combining traditional dry crops and irrigated crops. The terrible drought which we experienced in the 70's brought to light the vulnerability of a policy based uniquely on dry crops, in other words dependent on rainfall and its distribution. Our potential in land which could be irrigated from surface waters is currently estimated at 270,000 hectares, including 140,000 (or 52 percent) in the Niger River valley. Various technical studies have shown that unless its flow is regulated, the river can only cover the water requirements of 13,000 to 20,000 hectares at the maximum. Obviously, if we do not regulate the river's flow by building the Kandadji dam, we will not be developing close to 120,000 hectares which are suitable for irrigation.

It is true, as the critics of the large dams state, that if certain measures and precautions are not taken in time, the complete benefits expected from a large project may not be achieved.

From the beginning, the problem of displacing people whose homes and some capital goods will be flooded by the dammed waters has been a major concern. To confront this problem, we are going to devote a sum of over 500 million CFA francs to studies--and studies alone--of resettling people. It must also be said that the number of people directly affected by the Kandadji dam reservoir is far less than those affected by other African projects. In fact, the general census taken in 1979 shows that for the highest water estimate (228), 18,000 people would be affected (for the Kaindji dam in Niger and the Kossou dam in the Ivory Coast, the figures were 44,000 and 100,000 persons respectively).

Creating a large reservoir in the Kandadji region has a good chance of increasing existing diseases related to water supplies. Preliminary studies will pinpoint the ecology of the major disease-carrying organisms so that conditions favorable to their development will not be recreated. These studies are currently in progress and will cost us close to $1 million. Without prejudging the results of these studies, there are two methods which can be implemented simultaneously to fight these diseases: active methods, such as preventive and curative health care within the structure of or based on health care organizations; and passive methods basically involving hygiene.

Investments related to the dam and to hydro and agricultural development are heavy indeed; especially in the current economic situation. But, it must be noted that the dam construction is staggered over a 5-year period, and that as for the irrigated areas, we have allowed for a period of 40 years for the development of the 140,000 hectares in the river valley. Qualified personnel will be put on the job as development progresses, within the context of an overall professional training program for which we already have the first drafts.

But, despite the size of the investments, the Kandadji project showing itself to be economically, financially, and socially beneficial. It is the type of project without which we cannot be economically independent, since there can be no independence without a guaranteed food supply and, in the Sahel, in any case, a guaranteed food supply cannot be conceived of without water management and a modernized system for irrigating the land. Furthermore, the significance of the "Energy" component of the Kandadji project must be stressed and properly evaluated.

With an estimated production of between 715 and 811 gigawatts/hour for a water level of 228, which based on 1980 represents approximately 7 times the city of Niamey's power consumption, Kandadji's energy output will definitely have a positive effect on our petroleum bill and, consequently, on the nation's overall economic activity.

[Question] Now that their troops have withdrawn from Chad, is a normalization of your relations with Libya foreseeable, as you seem to have implied in your message to the nation on 19 December last year?

[Answer] The deterioration of our relations with Libya is not due to the Libyan presence in Chad, but to diverging opinions on how relations maintained by two sovereign states are to conducted. Nevertheless, as a good saying of ours puts it, "When your neighbor's beard catches fire, put yours in the water," and, consequently, any threat to Chad's peace and security is also felt as such by the countries directly bordering it.

As for normalization of our relations with the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, we have never excluded the possibility and we are not excluding it. Many factors militate for it, especially our proximity; our common faith; and our membership in institutions for international cooperation, such as the OAU, the Movement of Non-Aligned Nations, the Organization of Saharan States, the Islamic Conference Organization, etc. But, as I was saying, there are preliminaries which must be enacted through frank and constructive dialogue with no passion or ulterior motives.

[Question] While your country remains completely calm, and unity does not seem at all endangered, what meaning can be assigned to the departure of about 12 people, including high level officials, for Tripoli in the month of August?

[Answer] Escape from responsibility. Those who preceded them returned to us better educated on the reality of affairs. Truth on this side, error beyond, said Pascal.

[Question] Mr President, what are your relations with the new French administration, and in particular, what is the status of French-Nigerien cooperation in uranium matters?

[Answer] Our relations with Mr Mitterrand's administration are excellent, as French-Nigerien relations, which are marked by steadfastness of commitment and harmony of principles, have always been. There is the fact of history, but there is also and especially a clear, realistic and objective vision of the concept of cooperation which we basically share with the new government. The contacts that I personally have had with the president of the republic and the benevolent demonstrations of friendship and solidarity that his government has never failed to display toward us; strengthen us further in our mutual desire to bring French-Nigerien cooperation to its high point.

The French head of state's approaching visit to Niger conveys and symbolizes the reserve of esteem and confidence between our two governments. This will be an opportunity to enrich our philosophy of cooperation and to consolidate as necessary and as desired the foundations which underly it.

NATION SAID TO BE WELL ADMINISTERED DESPITE ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

Paris L'EXPANSION in French 21 May-3 Jun 82 pp 122-131

[Article by Erik Izraelewicz: "Niger-on-Uranium--Drought and Drop in Uranium Price Hinder a Well-Managed Country"]

[Excerpt] "Boss....gift." The child from Niamey that accosts us with these two words still does not know about the catastrophe that took place in the city the night before. The big market, the nerve center of the Nigerien economy was consumed in flames. The fire of unknown origin is a veritable national catastrophe.

On this morning of the beginning of April, bulldozers are removing the debris and ashes of 7 hectares which had been occupied by 3,000 small businessmen. They are all there, uneasy, all in one compact crowd of people. None of them has been assured. They have lost everything: their stocks of a thousand and one items that make up an African market. Their savings too: large bundles of bank notes fed the flames. Overall, some 5 billion CFA francs, or about 100 million francs, the equivalent of 5 percent of the national budget. Decidedly, Niger, one of the poorest countries of the world, has no luck. The past 10 years give proof of this. Everybody remembers the terrible pictures of scrawny little African children, victims of the Sahel drought between 1967 and 1973. With foreign aid and the sudden wealth derived from uranium Niger thought that it could make it. A new blow of fate: the drop in the price of uranium has cast the country back into inextricable difficulties.

The equation is almost commonplace. A poor country bases its development on one raw material. Economic take-off has begun. The price of the raw material crumbles. The meshing of indebtedness, recession and destabilization is therefore inevitable. The only thing is that Niger is not at all a country like others. Nature has not given it many gifts. As stressed by Wanis Semerdjan, permanent resident of the UNDP [United Nations Development Program] in Niamey: "Niger is handicapped by nature." It accumulates all ills. A vast desert country (twice as big as France), sparesly populated (5.6 million inhabitants), very hot and dry climate with uncertain rainfall, it is landlocked, without direct access to the sea, while its illiteracy rate has reached record levels.

Nevertheless, the economic take-off begun during the period 1974-1979 has been managed, according to unanimous opinion, in a remarkedly healthy fashion. The number one place of honor goes to Col Seyni Kountche, president of the Supreme Military Council. Having come to power on 15 April 1974 after a military coup d'etat, he attacked corruption with perserverance and success. And he set the country into a developmental policy centered on a priority basis on food self-sufficiency.

From a military aspect, he has maintained its methods. Authoritarian, he does not hesitate to threaten with prison those who do not in time carry through in their obligations or those who try to divert public funds for their own use...and he implements his threats. A man of the soil, he pays attention to all operations. His "showing up" at customs offices, his intervening in rural development projects or in the ministries is not unusual. Leading a rather austere life, he wants to be an example for his ministers, most of whom are civilians. He profited from two pieces of good luck--an improvement in rainfall levels and especially the increase in the price of uranium beginning in 1973--to put Niger on the economic take-off runway. In 1974, he set up a national investment fund supplied with the revenues derived from uranium. Results were eloquent. Despite strong demographic pressures (annual 2.7 percent growth), food self-sufficiency was practically arrived at in 1979 and 1980. The livestock herds were reconstituted and the effects of the drought practically eliminated.

Business activity experienced a veritable explosion. Also, Niamey, the capital. It was completely transformed: a few multi-storied buildings appeared, an international hotel, topped off by a Congress Palace on the edge of the Niger River. A businessman used to African capitals said "Honestly, it was not deluxe." There are now more cars crossing Kennedy Bridge than camels. Numerous dispensaries, schools and administrative office buildings have been inaugurated. Joseph Detraux, director of the Nigerien branch of the BNP [National Bank of Paris], stated "without any exaggerated expenditures."

Today, however, the time of euphoria has passed.

A village north of Niamey. Seated in a half circle around a small collective television screen--another fruit of the good times--about 30 people wearing jeans, boubous or military uniforms religiously listen to a speech by President Kountche on the occasion of the eighth anniversary of the coup d'etat. Three quarters of an hour of an austere harangue, without a trace of demagogy: we must work, consolidate what has been acquired, but also prepare ourselves for a pause in development. This was the inevitable consequence of the drop in the price of uranium, something that is thought to be long-lasting.

Uranium...Right in the middle of the desert, a long asphalt ribbon leads to Arlit, 1,500 kilometers north of the capital. A city of 25,000 inhabitants has risen from the ground, an oasis of greenery and prosperity. Its raison d'etre is to be found a few kilometers away in a moonscape setting: a vast open-cut mine that last year supplied 2,100 tons of this precious ore.

SOMAIR [Air Region Mining Company] (one-third of which belongs to the Nigerien state through ONAREM [National Office of Mineral Resources], one-third to COGEMA [General Nuclear Materials Company] and the remainder to German and Italian shareholders) has been mining uranium since 1971.

Ten kilometers further away, another village, Akotan, is home for COMINAK [Akouta Mining Company] (one-third belonging to the Nigerien state, one-third to COGEMA and the remainder to private French, Japanese and Spanish interests) personnel. This latter company is the other mining company that has been mining an underground mine since only 1978. Total production of the two mines in 1981 (4,300 tons) put Niger in the fourth world place for uranium producers, behind the United States, Canada and South Africa.

COGEMA experts recognize that the uranium reserves of Niger are gigantic. At the end of the 1970's, there was thought being given to opening four or six other mines. Both Americans and Japanese were very active. However, the drop in the price, especially sharp since 1980, caused them to back off from these projects. Will it be long-lasting? Nigerien officials who refuse to be fooled reckon it as yes. Indeed, all factors are against Niger: world recession, slowdown of electronuclear programs in industrialized countries, as well as the new interest shown in coal and the drop in the price of petroleum. Finally,--and perhaps more serious--the discovery of many more profitable deposits as those beginning to be mined in Australia.

Another "Providential" Purchaser

Therefore, the drop in the price on the "spot" market weighed heavily beginning in 1980, on the negotiations between Niger and her partners, as well as the stockholders of the two companies which remove the extracted uranium of the two mines in proportion to their participation. Price and quantities were the subject of difficult talks. Finally, in 1981 and 1982, the Western partners agreed to maintain an excess price of about 20 percent in relation to the spot market price. According to a French negotiator, the most difficult part was to persuade certain European partners, particularly the FRG and Spain.

Not a consumer of uranium, Niger encountered difficulties in selling its own share. France made a gesture in 1981 by purchasing 600 tons of the Nigerien share. However, another "providential" purchaser appeared: Libya which has purchased close to 2,000 tons since 1978 at a price still higher than the negotiated price. Nobody knows what the country of Colonel Qadhdhafi is doing with this uranium. Is it stocking it? Is it reselling it to the Pakistanis, Soviets, or to other Arab countries?

Pressure on prices make mining more and more difficult. The two companies have, moreover, experienced sensitive fiscal years over the past 2 years because production costs, already high to begin with, are growing: the construction of entire cities in the middle of the desert, their management and upkeep, all the benefits--extra wages, various compensations--to be granted personnel (of whom 500 French families) to entice them to come to work under difficult conditions, as well as the big costs for vocational training within the framework of the "Nigerization" plans pledged by the two companies, all of these factors weigh heavily on the mining accounts.

This does not include exceptional transportation costs: The mining manager of Arlit mine explains that "to produce 1 ton of uranium we import 30 tons of raw material." Sulphur, magnesium...that come from France or the United States. Once they have arrived in Africa (in Cotonou, Benin), this merchandise must still cover 2,500 kilometers partly by train and partly by truck.

Philippe Moureau, COMINAK mining manager, stresses that the two Nigerien mines, on the other hand, still offer undeniable benefits: "An ore with a relatively high content, continuous operation 24 hours a day and 365 days a year for the underground mine, and, above all, a level of production greatly superior to that of the French mines: from each of our two mines we extract as much uranium as all the French mines put together."

Nevertheless, Mahamane Annou, Nigerien minister of mines and industries, recognizes, "If there were a veritable market for uranium, we would perhaps not be competitive. However, there is not, for the time being, a world market obeying the conventional laws of offer and demand." He therefore refuses to rely solely on the spot market for determining prices, where only marginal quantities of the ore are transiting. "Uranium is a product affected by strong political and psychological coefficients." He mentioned that in 1977 and 1978, the price Niger sold uranium to its partners was lower than the spot price: Niger was therefore paying for the cost of security for the sale of its uranium. It is normal that today consumers pay for the security of their being supplied.

Negotiations Followed With Interest

In the eyes of the Nigerien leaders, they are not paying dearly. "Our 1973-1983 plan had been established on the basis of a price of a kilogram of uranium constant in real value." The proof that Minister of Planning Mamane Brah proposes is simple: "In 1981, the price should have been 29,500 CFA francs a kilogram. It was 20,000. In 1982, it should have reached 32,000 rancs. It was 24,000. You can imagine the loss that represents for our economy." The Nigeriens have therefore followed with interest the negotiations between France and Algeria on gas. Just as President Seyni Kountche, Mahamane Annou is very much in favor of a "development contract" according to which the uranium price would be fixed for a period of 3 to 5 years. Aid would be integrated into the price in order to "replace aid by trade." "Instead of seeing producer countries of raw materials sell their product at constantly decreasing prices and these same countries always asking for more public aid for development, it appears to us more healthy to upgrade once again the price of raw materials." This is an idea that is not easy to be accepted by most of Niger's partners--even France when one recalls criticism provoked by the Algerian gas contract.

There remains the hope for a turning around of the nuclear situation that certain experts anticipate for 1985. Mahamane Annou states, "We must go through this period of turbulence without trouble but we must also prepare ourselves for the resumption in the best conditions." Hence the obstinate desire of the Nigerien authorities to open up a third mine just beside those already mined--"a project linked to the good old times," according to a French expert.

It was already very difficult to set up the capital even of the SMTT [Tassa N'Taghalgue Mining Company]. It was at last arrived at last February, with equal distribution between three partners, Kuwait, COGEMA and ONAREM (representing the Nigerien state). It was, indeed, France, in the form of a subsidized loan of the Economic Cooperation Central Fund, that financed Niger's share. Cost of the investment: 4 billion francs. The minister of mines recognized, "I understand that such a figure is frightening." The Nigeriens are therefore reportedly ready to accept an intermediary solution permitting a reduction in expenditures.

The drop in the price of uranium was reflected by a slump in budgetary revenues that were scheduled to be assigned to the national investment fund. Surpassing 20 billion CFA francs in the best of years, these revenues were no more than 14 billion in 1981, and less than 5 billion are anticipated for 1982. While waiting for a possible turnaround in the uranium market, Niger is therefore beginning a long....passage over the desert. Three ways are possible: a call for foreign assistance, borrowing and austerity. They will be simultaneously followed.

Cooperation with traditional partners is to be continued. France, the number one moneylender (with 27 percent of overall aid over the 6 past years), has already agreed to make an extra effort by granting special assistance in the amount of 100 million francs for the financing of the national investment fund in 1982. West Germany, the United States, as well as the major international organizations, mainly the European Development Fund, will not spare their efforts.

As a gesture giving his approval for the strict policy being carried out by President Kountche, Alden Clausen, the new World Bank president, visited Nigerien officials in the latter part of April and granted them new credits. For the same reason, the UN will double its contribution, raising it to 40 million dollars for the period 1982-1986. Niger, whose population is more than 95 percent Muslim, has also turned toward the Arab countries. It is expecting mainly broad assistance from Saudi Arabia. A check equal to 380 million francs is scheduled to symbolize Arab-African cooperation on the occasion of the Islamic conference of foreign affairs scheduled, in principle, to take place in Niamey in August.

Another supporter is declaring that it is ready "to aid" Niger: Qadhdhafi's Libya. Relations between the two colonels are at the least in conflict, the "wealthy one" trying, through the intermediary of the Touaregs--those nomads of the desert--to destablizie the "poor one." Last March, after having renewed diplomatic relations that had been broken for several months, Seyni Kountche is keeping his distance despite deliveries of uranium and despite the sight of buses circulating in Niamey tagged with the inscription "gift of the Libyan Arab people to the Nigerien people." Evidence of this was the arrest at the end of April of about 15 Touaregs in a Jeep who had been suspected by Nigerien authorities of preparing an attack against the two mining villages.

A second way is borrowing. Here, prospects are more limited. Present costs are exorbitant. The foreign debt of the country has greatly increased over the past 2 years. Nevertheless, in the eyes of foreign bankers, it still remains reasonable, in the vicinity of 4.8 billion francs, a sum that represents a servicing of the public debt of 12 percent of the amount of export revenues approximately.

Two other factors are of concern: the big increase of the trade deficit that is going to continue until 1984; and especially the great indebtedness of the state vis-a-vis firms. "Delays in payment" reportedly will amount to 20 million CFA francs (400 million francs). The Public Dredging and Works, the main firm of the area, does not hide its concern: with a stagnant business turnover in the past 2 years of around 10 billion CFA francs, it is presently accumulating a state debt approximating 5 billion francs. Several French firms are, moreover, envisaging a discreet withdrawal.

There remain the health management and budgetary strictness thanks to which the country is maintaining, despite difficulties, a good image in the financial community. Announced during a speech on the state of the union, a provisional plan--imitation inherited from the colonial era?--is scheduled to be established. The priorities of the 1979-1983 plan will be maintained overall: national independence, food self-sufficiency and the setting up of a "development company." Up to 1983, "the attainments will be consolidated," i.e., no new project will be started. The minister of planning explains that "the provisional 1984-1985 plan actually will be a spreading out over 7 years of goals initially fixed for a 5 year period." Are severe cuts in prospect? "Everything that was to be financed by our own resources, certain administrative buildings, for example." Therefore, austerity in the life of the state. Also to be finely screened are the management of public and mixed economy firms as well as the tax system. A discreet mission of the IMF has reportedly already begun working on this latter topic.

Apparently President Seyni Kountche intends to concentrate his meager available resources on projects that appear to him as being vital: the third uranium mine and the Kandadji dam on the Niger River, an investment of 2 to 3 billion francs. It will have three objectives: regularizing the river, energy production and irrigation of 130,000 hectares of land. The project, being studied since 1976, has been the subject of many disputes among many potential moneylenders interested in the operation. Problems regarding the site, profitability, priority among the various objectives and the spreading out of the financing raise doubts as to its being implemented. Studies already carried out have not eliminated the reservations of certain moneylenders.

During his stay in Niamey in mid-April, [minister delegate to the Ministry of External Relations for Cooperation] Jean-Pierre Cot said, "We will completely adhere to the objectives of the dam." He added that studies would be conducted over the next 2 years--one way or another to let it be understood that France could finance the projects but also to have our partners exercise patience.

KOUNTCHE DISCUSSES URANIUM PRICES, FRENCH RELATIONS

Paris L'EXPANSION in French 21 May-3 Jun 82 p 125

[Interview with Nigerien President Seyni Kountche on the day after the ceremonies marking the eighth anniversary of the taking over of power by the army [15 April 1974] by Erik Izraelewicz; place not specified]

[Excerpt] Firmness, pragmatism and nonalignment: Col Seyni Kountche, 51 years of age, president of the Supreme Military Council, appears to many observers as one of the rising personalities in the second generation of African leaders in the post-independence period. We questioned him on the day after the ceremonies marking the eighth anniversary of the takeover of power by the army.

Erik Izraelewicz: Your state of the nation speech can be summarized as "consolidating the attainments." Can Niger sustain a pause in its development?

Syeni Kountche: When a well-known minister of your country used the expression pause, that caused a stir. We have reverted to it, I believe, and today it appears that this idea has been accepted. For us, we must first of all digest what we have eaten. We must avoid indigestion in terms of development. Then, I believe that it is preferable to impose something on one's self before somebody else imposes it on us. We do not want to wait for someone to tell us: "Messrs Nigeriens, you are going too fast. Here are the conditions you must respect." It is true that this causes anxiety among the world of labor. As for the good farmer, whether or not there is a pause, what is of interest to him is to have his fertilizer and products to fight the enemies of crops. We will do everything so that he will continue being supplied. As for the firms, mainly construction firms and small and medium-sized businesses, we have taken measures to guarantee them a minimum of activity up to the end of 1983, thanks to our own efforts and to aid or cooperation that we maintain with certain countries.

[Question] Was the bottom of your decision the apparently long-lasting drop in the price of uranium, Niger's only exportable product?

[Answer] Not that only. It is true, uranium is a spring for our economy. If the drop in the price of uranium is one cause, the economic situation on a world level is another one.

[Question] Can you forsee a turnaround for uranium in the short run?

[Answer] As far as uranium prices are concerned, there was a small glimmer this year. Whether or not it will be borne out, I do not know. Only the powerful in this world could be in a position to answer. Like all producer countries of raw materials, we put up with the misunderstanding and injustice of the present world.

[Question] Uranium mines in Canada and the United States are being closed down. Is the opening up of a third mine in Niger, the SMTT [Tassa N'Taghalgue Mining Company], under such conditions well-advised?

[Answer] We must not stop everything. The third mine is already experiencing a delay because of the economic situation. We are looking for a formula together with our French and Kuwaiti partners that would permit us to begin mining this mine in favorable economic conditions.

[Question] To finance the national investment fund this year, you counted on aid from Saudi Arabia. Despite your trip to Riyadh last month, it still has not come forth.

[Answer] I did not go to Saudi Arabia especially for that. Saudi Arabia has participated and is participating in Niger's development efforts. I use as proof of this the construction of means of communication, its contribution to our balance of payments, its deeds for all the Sahel countries, its big contribution to the Islamic Bank, as well as its participation in Nigerien agricultural and irrigation projects. Saudi Arabia's commitment goes beyond the FNI [National Investment Fund]. For this year, the principle has been attained. It is no more than a question of procedure between the interested ministers.

[Question] France is the number one moneylender of the country. Have you noted any changes in your relations with Paris over a year?

[Answer] In the field of cooperation, France has remained France, and its interests are the same. The change that has taken place in your country has not at all prejudiced the development projects planned.

[Question] No change then?

[Answer] We note (is this due to the nature of men in power?), let us say, a flexibility, a moralization and greater simplicity in our relations with them. Nigeriens are simple people. They are even more than at their ease in their relations with Paris.

[Question] Are your not afraid that the France of Mitterrand will turn more toward those nations in the Third World that have a civilian government claiming socialism?

[Answer] Regardless of what Niger says we are always given a certain label. Those who come to Niger discover what we are. We are revolutionary without saying it because we are simply preoccupied in the quest for the Nigerien man.

[Question] The North-South dialogue has become "a dialogue of the deaf," according to your own words. Is this a condemnation of the initiatives by Francoise Mitterrand?

[Answer] Cancun was not negative. This meeting created psychological conditions that have led certain countries to revise their attitude vis-a-vis the North-South dialogue. France has always tried to play the role of catalyst. But what can France do all alone?

CNTS FEDERATIONS REDUCED FROM TWENTY-TWO TO FIFTEEN

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 20 Apr 82 p 5

[Article by M.S. Ndiaye: "Reorganization of Federations"]

[Text] The third regular congress of the National Workers' Federation, which saw the election of Madia Diop to the office of secretary general, replacing Babacar Diagne, also adopted the reorganization plan submitted for its approval. This plan, prepared by the National Committee for Trade Union Revival, reduced the number of trade union federations from 22 to 15.

The principal concern of the committee members was to merge the trade unions in terms of sectors of activity. Thus, the municipal workers trade union, which was independent up to the present time, is now incorporated into the General Administration Workers Federation. This decision did not receive the consent of all municipal workers who wanted to retain their independence in view of the differences between administrative public office and communal public office. The other major change concerns the "fat bodies" incorporated in the chemical industries. The SONAR [National Company for Supplying Oil Mills] trade union will henceforth be integrated into the Federation of Agriculture and Forestry Workers.

In another connection the Cooperation workers called for certain specificity. On this point, the chairman of the committee indicated that they must first organize as a trade union. From that time on, the new confederal office will undertake to find them as affiliation. Madia Diop specified that the list of federations is not exhaustive and that the office could be induced to make new changes. That will depend on the workers' dynamism and their aptitude for organizing. Here is the new organization of the trade union federations of the National Confederation of Senegalese Workers (CNTS).

Federation of General Administration Worker Trade Unions

--Administrative Department Workers Trade Union;

--General Administration Chauffeurs Trade Union;

--Trade Union of Agents of Financial and Bookkeeping Departments;

--National Assembly Workers Trade Union;

--Trade Union of Civilian Personnel of the Armed Forces;

--Departmental Agents Trade Union;

--Economic Control Workers' Trade Union;

--Justice Workers Trade Union;

--Municipal Workers Trade Union.

Federation of Trade Unions of Workers in Public Works

--Trade Union of Workers in Public Works and Hydraulics;

--State Press Workers Trade Union;

--Trade Union of Workers of the Autonomous Port of Dakar;

--ASECNA [Agency for Air Navigation Safety in Africa and Madagascar] Workers Trade Union.

Federation of Trade Unions of Telecommunications Workers

--OPT [Postal, Telegraphic Office] Workers Trade Union;

--Tele-Senegal Workers Trade Union;

--ORTS Workers Trade Union.

Federation of Education Workers Trade Unions

--Trade Union of School and University Workers;

--Trade Union of Workers in Lay Elementary Education;

--Senegalese Professors Trade Union;

--Trade Union of Teachers in Private Lay Schools.

Federation of Agriculture and Forestry Workers Trade Unions;

--Trade Union of Agricultural Workers;

--Trade Union of Forestry and Game Agents;

--SONAR [National Company for Supplying Oil Mills] Workers Trade Union;

--Scientific Research Center Workers Trade Union;

--Technical and Agricultural Center Workers Trade Union;

--SODEVA [Company for Developing Agricultural Extension Services] Workers Trade Union;

--SAED [Company for Distribution and Exploitation of the Senegal River Delta and Valley Lands] Workers Trade Union.

Federation of Trade Unions of Workers in Commerce, Banks and Financial Institutions and of Entertainment Enterprises

--Trade Union of Business Employees and Executives;

--Entertainment Enterprise Workers Trade Union;

--Bank and Credit Organization Employees Trade Union;

--Insurance Employees Trade Union.

Federation of Food and Hotel Industry Workers Trade Unions

--Food Industry Workers Trade Union;

--Bakery Workers Trade Union;

--Agricultural and Food Complex Workers Trade Union;

--SERAS [Company for Exploitation of Senegalese Animal Resources] Workers Trade Union;

--Oil Mill Workers Trade Union;

--Hotel and Restaurant Workers Trade Union;

--Servants Trade Union.

Federation of Trade Unions of Workers in the Chemical and Extractive Industries

--Chemical Industry Workers Trade Union;

--Extractive Industry Workers Trade Union.

Federation of Trade Unions of Workers in Textile and Garment Manufacturing Industries

--Textile and Laundry Industry Workers Trade Union;

--Garment Manufacturing Industry Workers Trade Union;

--SODEFITEX [Company for Development of Textile Fibers] Workers Trade Union.

Federation of Trade Unions of Workers in the Steel Industry, General Engineering and Printing and Kindred Industries;

--Trade Union of Workers in General Engineering;

--Trade Union of Workers in the Steel Industry and Enamelling;

--Printing Industry Workers Trade Union;

--Dakar Marine Workers Trade Union.

Federation of Trade Unions of Workers in the Building Industries, Private Public Works and Sanitation

--Trade Union of Workers in Building and Private Public Works;

--Trade Union of Furniture and Wood Workers;

--Trade Union of Sanitation Workers.

Federation of Transport Workers Trade Unions

--Railroad Workers Trade Union;

--SOTRAC Workers Trade Union;

--Air Transport Workers Trade Union;

--Highway and Urban Transport Workers Trade Union;

--Trade Union of Senegalese Dockers, Watchmen and Jig-Bore Operators;

--Transport Auxiliaries Trade Union;

--Fishers Trade Union.

Federation of Energy Workers Trade Unions

--SONEES [Senegalese National Water and Electricity Company] Workers Trade Union;

--SENELEC [National Company for Energy Exploitation] Workers Trade Union;

--Petroleum and Gas Workers Trade Union.

Federation of Social Security Workers Trade Unions

--Social Security Fund Workers Trade Union;

TEACHING OF ARABIC LANGUAGE CONSIDERED POLITICIZED

Dakar ETUDES ISLAMIQUES in French No 13 Apr 82 p 11

[Article by Hamady Coulibaly, inspector of Arabic language instruction in Senegal: "The Teaching of Arabic Must Be Depoliticized"]

[Excerpt] Since independence, the teaching of Arabic has not, up to now, had the fate it deserves; far from it.

It has now become private property, reserved exclusively for the trade unionist politicos of the PS [Socialist Party] regime. They do with it what they please and as they please.

Lets take for an example the anarchic recruitment of "Arabic language teachers," which continues to be done without any precise criteria. That is not to say that we are against the recruitment of Arabic language teachers--far from it--but we wish only that the recruitment complied with objective conditions, because of the responsibility that any Arabic teacher will assume in the future in his dual capacity as instructor and educator.

For several years we have been constantly attending meetings and study days on the subject of the teaching of Arabic with a view to its so-called regulation (the study day organized at the Dakar Islamic Institute in March 1979, the Mbour seminar in April 1981). But in reality all the sessions have yet to serve a purpose, except to disorganize it further.

This teaching suffers from still other problems, namely:

The absence of a precise program, the lack of school books, failure to introduce Arabic during normal hours (up to now Arabic courses have been given only after 1700 hours), etc. However, such organization would not present so many problems if only the political "authorities" were willing.

Despite the promises constantly being repeated by the regime's "mouthpieces," the teaching of Arabic in the public sector has still not undergone a period of "reorganization". We were going to say "of disinfection", both in terms of pedagogical training of teachers and in terms of their administrative situation, particularly their promotion, for example, by creating professional examinations.

During the recent congress of the trade union of young teachers of Arabic, the same scenes of self-congratulatory evaluations and grandiloquent promises again were marched across our screen. In reality, the Arabic language instructors were left hanging. They would be less so if the minister of national education had spoken to them concretely about the salaries of the 50 assistant teachers recruited several months ago, because they may well meet the same fate reserved for their seniors, recruited a year earlier (see the article "In voluntary Volunteers", ETUDES ISLAMIQUES No 12 January 1982). Or if he speaks to them about the problem of integrating the students in their last term at the Franco-Arab College, who are victims of Decree No 77-987 of 14 November 1977, as well as the problem of the other graduating students of the same Franco-Arab College who have done their practice teaching in Tunisia and who quite justly are calling for their reclassification in the teaching profession.

There is also the case of graduates of the Arab universities who were recruited as assistant teachers before the creation of the Arab section of the ENS. These latters are justly calling for their reclassification as assistant teachers without any preliminary conditions. We should also add to this the situation of the 250 "assistant teachers in training" recruited last year, who up to now still do not know how and when they are going to get out of this ambiguous situation.

Finally, there is still the problem of the Arab supervisory body, despite the 4 years of services performed with dedication and without any quid pro quo.

After this gloomy picture, how can it be said that the "authorities" are encouraging the teaching of Arabic?

The basic condition for such encouragement is, of necessity, freeing teaching and teachers of Arabic from the clutches of the politicians' politics and yellow trade unionism, especially at the level of elementary education.

We also suggest that recruitment be made on objective bases and precise criteria, taking competence into account. This will enable Senegal to have teachers of the Arabic language who are capable of fulfilling the important mission which the Muslim people of the country expect of them.

STUDENTS TO BE REPRESENTED ON VARIOUS UNIVERSITY BODIES

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 21 May 82 p 5

[Excerpt] The Council has examined and adopted seven draft decrees putting an end to the provisional system now in effect at the University of Dakar.

The government authorities decided to put an end to the special system now in effect at the university and to go back to the former regulations that allowed students to be represented in various university bodies.

In March 1971, date of the institution of the special measures, the experiment for "student participation" was negative. The freezing of the university institutions and the suspension of courses therefore justified the implementation of the special measures taken by the government in implementation of Article 4 of Law 67-45 of 13 July 1967 relative to the university.

These measures that ensued from Decree 71-299 of 16 March 1971 resulted in excluding students from university bodies and reducing the composition of the university assembly to facilitate its functioning.

Since that time, therefore, provisional faculty councils met without student representation and a university provisional council replaced the faculty assemblies and the university assembly. In comparison to the latter, the university provisional council does not, moreover, include either a representative of the teaching staff or a representative of African states having scholarship holders at the university.

These councils exercise all the powers of the assemblies they have replaced. The university provisional council has, moreover, complete disciplinary powers over the students. A scaled-down permanent committee is established to aid the dean in preparing plenary sessions of the faculty council. It was therefore decided to put an end to this special system and an ad hoc committee, set up by Decree 4369 of 9 May 1981 of the Ministry of Higher Education and Scientific Research, has been given the responsibility to study demands of students of the University of Dakar.

Moreover, it should be noted that Decree 68-960 of 24 July 1968 relative to student associations of higher education does not permit the legal existence of student national unions, i.e., associations bringing together students of the same country. The need to maintain the corporate bodies was decided on, as well as to bring about legal adjustments permitting the recognition of associations bringing together students of the same country at the university level.

Moreover, the composition of university assemblies, having been judged too top-heavy, has been changed. This is why the number of outside personalities at the university has been dropped from 11 to 8 and that it no longer includes representatives of African states having scholarship holders at the university. Nevertheless, these countries can be called on to participate in the assembly if they want to be associated with the functioning and with the development of the university, in conformity with Article 4, Paragraph 2, of Law 67-45 of 13 July 1967.

Finally, in accordance with the work of the ad hoc committee, it has been deemed necessary to amend or to repeal certain texts in order to permit the normal and regular functioning of the structure set up prior to the provisional status. Students, therefore, will be represented on various university assemblies, councils and committees.

FRG DONATION FOR FOOD SECURITY

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 28 May 82 p 6

[Text] FRG Ambassador Udo Hontman has presented the commissioner for food assistance a check for 84 million CFA francs. Mr Hontman stated, "Food security has a special place in Senegalese-German cooperation that has a long tradition." He pointed out that the program financed by the FRG concerns the building of a food stocking infrastructure in the Diourbel, Sine-Saloum and Thies regions.

The German contribution will permit the state to continue its efforts to build up grain stocks through local purchases.

In answer to the FRG ambassador's speech, the commissioner for food assistance indicated that the grain project, whose implementation is in progress thanks to German cooperation, is made up of a production section and a marketing and stocking section. This holds true especially for corn. The commission acted in a more effective manner by assuring the purchase of the entire production supplied by farmers under contract with SODEVA [Agricultural Development and Familiarization Company].

Mr Ndiaye stated, "There remains the study for implementing the food processing section to abide by the procedures in all of its aspects."

SECURITY LEGISLATION LACKS SUFFICIENT INDIVIDUAL PROTECTION

Johannesburg RAPPORT in Afrikaans 23 May 82 p 3

[Article by Political Reporter Thinus Prinsloo: "Security Act Can Create Injustices"]

[Text] Attorney Robin Marais, senior consultant and chairman of the General Bar Council of South Africa said that "The risk of serious injustice is inherent to the nature of our security legislation."

RAPPORT asked Attorney Marais to comment on the Draft Legislation on Internal Security following a 12-hour debate conducted in Parliament this week at the committee stage.

The security legislation is being regarded as the most important of the current parliamentary session and it is being strongly opposed by the Progressive Federal Party. This party has tried to revise more than half of the 74 clauses in the legislation.

Attorney Marais said that the Bar Council is of the opinion that the draft legislation does not provide sufficient protection to the individual. Protection can be provided without sacrificing the security of the community and without encumbering to an unacceptable degree the important job of the security police.

Essentially the Draft Legislation on Internal Security consists of those measures drafted by the Rabie Commission. The Bar Council and the Association of Attorney Societies of South Africa provided their comments at the request of the minister of justice.

Attorney Marais stated that to the great disappointment of the Bar Council no hearing was granted to its objections and recommendations, with few exceptions.

The appointment of the Rabie Commission offered a golden opportunity for giving profound consideration to South Africa's security laws. The legal profession had the chance of raising serious objections and misgivings on many aspects of that legislation.

"I wish to emphasize that these misgivings are not limited to the ones entertained by inimical feelings towards the established order. These are shared by great numbers of South Africans of various political convictions whose good faith is above all suspicions."

If the proposals of the legal profession had been accepted then many of the misgivings would have been swept away. With the exception of the Security Police there are few people in South Africa having more experience and knowledge of the security laws than the members of the legal profession.

They are thoroughly aware of the importance of stability and maintenance of law and justice, especially in a country where there are often attempts at attaining political aspirations through violence and sabotage.

It is hardly necessary to remind the legal profession that the state has the duty of guarding the security of the community. However, the individual is also entitled to protection against unrestrained executive authority of the state.

"There is no need to digress over the vulnerability and helplessness of innocent persons being held without a hearing or for questioning and without access to anybody else than those whom the executive authority allows them to see."

Attorney Marais said that the creation of a review board is a positive step in the right direction. But this is greatly defeated by the fact that the minister involved can ignore its recommendations.

The further appeal to the chief justice does not constitute a full and unlimited appeal and can succeed only on limited grounds.

In the legislation there are no rules set down for the manner in which interrogation can take place or for the drafting of a complete record of the interrogation.

There are insufficient provisions for access to a detainee by persons who are not in the service of the state.

The suspicions of Attorney Marais concerning the treatment of detainees cannot be dispelled in this manner. The more isolated a prisoner is kept the smaller is the risk that the police's investigation can be encumbered.

However, a civilized country which attaches great values to justice and the avoidance of misuse of injustice cannot exclude all the risks of this nature.

SEYCHELLE COUP FAILURE BLAMED ON HOARE'S CHANGE OF PLANS

Johannesburg RAPPORT in Afrikaans 23 May 82 p 3

[Article by Eddie Botha: "He Followed His Own Head About the Plan and Failed"]

[Text] Col Mike Hoare deviated from the original plan for toppling the Seychelle Government of Mr Albert Rene. This was the main reason for the failure of the coup d'etat of last year.

This is what Gonzangue D'Offay is now saying; he is a former minister in the cabinet of Jimmy Mancham, the deposed president of the Seychelles. Mr D'Offay's name was mentioned earlier, at the time of the closed hearing in Pietmaritzburg, as the man who first approached him about leading the attack on the Seychelles.

Last week Colonel Hoare announced that he wanted to call Mr D'Offay as a defense witness, but on Friday morning he told Judge Neville James that he gave up this idea.

Mr D'Offay who, since the takeover of Mancham's government in 1977, has been living in Durban, in an interview with RAPPORT, lifted the veil of secrecy over the Seychelles resistance movement for the first time; this had to do with the movement's negotiations with Colonel Hoare.

The idea about a coup d'etat came up immediately after Albert Rene overthrew the government of Mr Mancham at the time when D'Offay was with Mancham at the Commonwealth conference in London.

Mr D'Offay said: "In 1978 we, the members of the resistance movement, decided to go into action. This was after Rene jailed certain people who wanted to revive the Democratic Party."

He said that at that time the resistance movement did not have enough money. "A study was undertaken with regard to the feasibility of the plans and the costs involved in such a project."

Mr D'Offay said that he had proposed to the others that Col Mike Hoare be approached. "On a previous occasion we approached several other mercenary soldiers, but it was clear that they were only interested in money."

"I did not know Mike Hoare, but I had read an article about him as well as the book he wrote about his days in the Congo."

Mr D'Offay said that a friend arranged a meeting with Colonel Hoare. "I do not wish to say who this man was and furthermore he did not have anything to do with the coup d'etat."

"Hoare and I met in Durban and during the first meeting we discussed things in general. He said that he would help us on condition that the plan was feasible."

Mr D'Offay said that it was agreed that Colonel Hoare would submit to him an estimate of the cost involved and they met to discuss things several times shortly before the unsuccessful attack on the island.

Mr D'Offay said that after the first meeting with Colonel Hoare the resistance movement began to collect money. "Most of the money came from exiled inhabitants of the Seychelles."

"The movement is a very strong one. Living in Australia are some 7,000 exiles; there are about 5,000 of them in Britain and 90 percent of all these people belong to the resistance movement. In South Africa there are approximately 400 Seychellois and everyone of them is a member of the movement."

The final plans were approved last May. There was enough money and it was agreed that the mercenary soldiers would receive their money after a successful attack. Mr D'Offay said that this proposal was accepted by Colonel Hoare.

According to the original plan the weapons were to be shipped to the Seychelles in crates; "But Mike Hoare deviated from this plan. I am convinced that the mission would have succeeded if Hoare had not changed the plans." So stated Mr D'Offay.

He added that he did not know where the weapons were coming from. "Nor did I know who was responsible for these weapons."

He denied that he had negotiated with government officials or with the armed forces "and I did not have any contacts with anybody in the U.S. spy service (the CIA)."

Mr D'Offay said that the resistance movement had tape recordings with messages from himself, Mancham and Gerard Hoareau, a former immigration official, and these tapes were given to Colonel Hoare. They were to be played for the inhabitants of the Seychelles after the coup d'etat.

In South Africa the members of the movement, which included him, were to hire an airplane to fly to the Seychelles and form the new government.

He even resigned from his job due to the fact that he could not obtain leave of absence. He knew exactly the day on which the coup d'etat was to take place and wanted to keep himself ready to depart.

"Of course we were disappointed when the attack failed, but this is not the end of the world. We are going on with our plans and will not rest until the illegal government of Mahe is overthrown." So stated D'Offay.

Nevertheless he is very sorry for the seven persons who are now under arrest in the Seychelles.

ACT ON TERRORISM FOUND TO BE INVALID FOR THE FIRST TIME

Johannesburg BEELD in Afrikaans 24 May 82 p 5

[Text] Wednesday's historical pronouncement by a full bench of the Appellate Court, in which for the first time a South African court made a pronoucement on human rights, is theoretically of little importance for South Africa, but on the long run it can have very great "moral, ethical and psychological" values.

This was the reaction of legal experts with regard to the case in which Wilfred Sebonege Marwane was acquitted by 11 appeal judges on the charge of violation of the Act of Terrorism. In 1978 he was sentenced to 15 years in jail by the Supreme Court in Bophuthatswana.

When it became independent, Bophuthatswana also took over South Africa's Act on Terrorism and the South African Court of Appeals is still that country's highest court of appeals.

In a majority pronouncement the court decided that the conviction and the sentence must be put aside, because--among other things--stipulations in the Act on Terrorism are in conflict with stipulations on human rights in Bophuthatswana's constitution, including the fact that an accused person is innocent until proven guilty.

Four of the 11 judges were at odds with that verdict in their minority verdict. They are Chief Judge F. L. H. Rumpff and Judges P. J. Rabie, P. M. Cillie and C. P. Joubert.

Attorney Marinus Wiechers, professor of law at the University of South Africa and legal advisor of Bophuthatswana, said that although the verdict does not make any difference to the status quo in South Africa, because the country's constitution does not have any stipulations regarding human rights (the so-called Bill of Rights), what has really happened is that the Act on Terrorism has been declared invalid.

"Although in the short run this will not have any practical effect here, the significance of this cannot be underestimated in the long run. The moral, ethical and psychological value of such a verdict will not become clear until later on."

According to him no inferences can be attached to the minority verdict.

"It is regrettable that in our courts giving an opinion on human rights in the South African set-up is not being allowed. We have a very competent tribunal and I am convinced that brilliant verdicts will be given."

Prof George Barrie, a law professor at the Rand Afrikaans University, is less enthusiastic and is of the opinion that the verdict cannot in any way be made applicable in South Africa, because human rights here are under the jurisdiction of common law and not stipulations in a law.

Professor Wiechers spoke strongly in favor of stipulations on human rights in the constitution.

RIGHT LACKS STRENGTH IN ASSEMBLY

Johannesburg RAPPORT in Afrikaans 23 May 82 p 9

[Report: "The Right is Not Making It -- but KP (Conservative Party) Will Perhaps Get 28 Seats with Help of the HNP (Herstigte Nasionale Party)."]

> [Text] The PFP [Progressive Federal Party] will continue to be the largest opposition party, while the Conservative Party can capture at most 28 seats in the House of Assembly -- unless it works together with other far-right parties. Thus Mr Harry Laurie, experienced election analyst and statistician, predicts the cause of events if an election were to be held now. The picture may change, however.

Mr Laurie made his analysis on the basis of RAPPORT's most recent opinion poll. He says that since Treurnicht's breaking away, the support for the PFP and NRP [New Republic Party] has stayed the same as in last year's election. Support for the NP [National Party] stayed the same in Cape Province, the Free State and Natal. Only in Transvaal was there a shift of about 18 percent in favor of far-right parties such as the KP and HNP.

The KP will specifically have to collaborate with the HNP in order to achieve the above-mentioned success. By splitting votes, or even by stay-away votes which the KP could cause for some seats, the PFP will most probably take two seats away from the NP.

The Same

For purposes of his inquiry, Mr Laurie counted together the support for the three more rightist parties. The Mulder party is already with Dr Treurnicht.

The survey has shown that true support for HNP is small. The large support the HNP got last year at the voting booth clearly came from dissatisfied nationalists rather than from HNP supporters.

"Outside of the Transvaal it does not look as if Dr Treurnicht's leaving has had much effect. The support predominantly on the right is largely the same as it was then.

Correction

"On the basis of the opinion poll, I very much expect the same results as last year for the other parties. The presence or absence of three-way fights could change the outcome in half a dozen or so electoral districts outside of Transvaal. In broad outline, however, the House of Assembly will look very much the same," said Mr Laurie.

In Transvaal, support for the NP among the Afrikaans-speaking is actually the same as for the far-right parties -- a ratio of 274 to 273. When the English-speaking are included, that ratio is 347 against 297.

In 1981 the NP received 396,425 votes in Transvaal and the HNP 119,879, the NKP [Natl Conservative Party] 17,086 and the AET [Action Own Future] 3,325. This is a total of 139,760 for the far-right parties together as against the 396,425 of the NP.

"Percentagewise this means that the NP received 74 percent of the total votes which were brought out for it and the far-right parties together. I tried to make a correction for seats which were not contested by the parties. That could decrease NP support to 72 percent."

For Transvaal the current survey shows that the NP gets 54 percent and the far right parties 46 percent of the voters who do not vote for PFP or NRP.

Shift

"This indicates a shift of 20 percent to the far-right parties," says Mr Laurie. "We can bring that shift down to 18 percent by making provision for uncontested seats . . .

"I worked with a shift of 18.5 percent. Where NP support was less than 61.5 percent of the votes (excluding the PFP- and NRP-votes), I expect those seats to probably go to the KP if voters vote according to the opinion poll.

"Between 61.5 and 65 percent I see it as more likely in favor of the KP. Between 65 and 72 percent any party can win. Between 72 and 75.5 percent it is more likely that the NP will win."

Mr Laurie makes the following classification:

Seats which are strongly KP: Barberton, Brits, Carletonville, Ermelo, Hercules, Loeberg, Middelburg, Potgietersrus, Randfontein, Rustenburg and Waterberg. Altogether 11.

Seats which lean toward the KP: Lichtenburg, Schweizer-Reneke, Soutpansberg, Standerton, Stilfontein, Ventersdorp and Witbank. Altogether 7.

Borderline seats: Bethal, Delmas, Gezina, Klerksdorp, Koedoespoort, Krugersdorp, Lydenburg, Meyerton, Nelspruit, Nigel, Overvaal, Pietersburg, Potchefstroom, Pretoria-Wes, Roodeplaat and Wonderboom. Altogether 16.

Seats which lean toward the NP: Alberton, Brakpan, Innesdal, Kemptonpark, Maraisburg, Vereeniging and Westdene. Altogether 7.

"Six seats remain about which we do not have any indication from the 1981 results, but in which the position of the KP must be considered. They are Germiston-Distrik, Jeppe, Langlaagte, Pretoria-Sentraal, Sunnyside and Waterkloof. It is improbable that the KP will win in any of these electoral districts, but it could perhaps have an outside chance in the first four," according to Mr Laurie's calculations.

Possibles

This thus gives the KP 26 seats -- 11 practically certain and half of what he considers to be borderline seats. Perhaps another seat could be added to these from North Cape Province -- Freeburg or Kuruman. Possibly one from the Free State from the electoral districts which are along the Transvaal border, such as Sasolburg or Paris. Possibly also Newcastle in Natal. One of the uncertain ones might be added. That would then give the KP 30 seats in the House of Assembly, but probably it will not be over 28.

These calculations are based on the assumption that the far-right parties will collaborate. If however they do not work together, it will probably prove how insignificant the support for the HNP is -- no more than in the election of 1977.

(As an aside, the new, more severe law with respect to candidates of parties not represented in the House of Assembly will probably count against the NP, for now it will be more difficult to nominate candidates who can split the far-right vote to the advantage of the NP, says Mr Laurie.)

Losses

Support for the KP can cause losses for the NP, even if the KP does not enter candidates in those electoral districts. Noord-Rand, Randburg, Waterkloof and even Benoni and Jeppe could be affected.

"It would not surprise me if the PFP would win two of those seats. Thus it is probable that the PFP will continue to be the official opposition."

In conclusion Mr Laurie remarks: "By the time we hold elections, the picture will undoubtedly look very different. The KP does not have a newspaper. On the other hand, the record of strong middle-of-the-road parties is not too good in South Africa. Just think of the old SAP [South African Party] and VP [Folk's Party?]

But what will count most of all is practical politics. At this stage it is impossible to say how the voters will think by 1986. How many of the proposals of the President's Council will be reality by then, and how will the international scene look then?

CONCEPTION OF LOCAL POWER-SHARING

Johannesburg BEELD in Afrikaans 19 May 82 p 11

[Report: "Power of Regional Governments worries the BEPA [expansion unknown] group: 'Local Governments Should be Independent.'"]

[Text] The President's Council proposes the elimination of the four existing provincial councils and the take-over of their functions by eight regional governments. Heading those should be administrators appointed by the minister from within local governments,who are assisted by four executive committee members representing the three racial groups, likewise appointed by the central government.

The position of the BEELD-BEPA group on this is that the department for local government should merely be a transitional measure in order to get the new system going. If such a department were to be of a permanent nature, it could have an inhibiting effect on the development of independent local governments. Wherever central authorities obtain power over lower authorities, there is the tendency that that authority increases and never decreases.

This also influences the group's position on the appointment of administrators. Especially in view of the fact that there is no other figure of authority between the especially strong powers of the executive state president and the chairmen of local government committees, that group is of the opinion that administrators and executive committee members should preferably be elected. Strictly according to the proposals of the President's Council, the functions of appointed administrators could develop into something like governors. That would seriously affect the power of local authorities.

When the provincial councils are eliminated, the question arises: What will become of all the state officials who then will become superfluous? The view of the discussion group is that those officials will be badly needed elsewhere in order to get the new state machinery going. The ideal situation would be for the eight new regional governments to offer merely supporting services (such as secretarial services) to the local governments.

Because of the possibility that two local authorities could easily have different opinions on the placing of new projects and townships, the discussion group thinks there is a need for a village council consisting of experts. Its function should be to act as arbitrator with respect to conflicting interests.

A council of knowledgeable officials should also be composed in order to assist new local authorities with advise and services while they are struggling to get started.

In addition there could be an assessment council to help in the drawing up of equal assessment standards. This could also be used, if requested by local authorities, as a central point from which taxes are levied. Each local government can set its own rates and that body can take care of collecting the taxes.

The most important components of government at that level, however, are the various local authorities for whites, coloreds and Asians. The BEELD-BEPA group therefore is not very happy about the President's Council's suggestion that, in addition to regional authorities and local governments, metropolitan councils be also established. True government should always be the local authorities. In order to ease their task, the group suggests that metropolitan councils be established to carry out certain services on behalf of the local authorities.

Thus hospital councils, school councils, transport and road councils, water councils and nature preservation councils could be established. These should be created according to the needs of local governments. Thus, for example, the Asian community of Potgietersrus and Pietersburg could decide to jointly create a hospital council to operate a hospital for them. The white local administrations of Johannesburg and Randburg could likewise establish a council to operate their hospitals jointly. Those one-purpose councils must be able to levy taxes to run their own services.

In the United States such a system of one-purpose service bodies is working extremely well. Each one has the power to levy its own taxes, and experience shows that ultimately less taxes are levied there than when one body -- such as our existing provincial councils -- levies taxes in order to operate a variety of services.

The group is strongly convinced that the switch to such a new system of government will not render any existing state officials superfluous. They will merely be appointed to other bodies.

That is how the BEELD-BEPA group thinks the relationship between local governments and the eight regional governments which have to take the place of provinces should look. The village council should consist of experts and only arbitrate when the interests of local authorities conflict. The Council of Experts must help smaller local governments to get started and the Assessment Council must assist in property assessments and could be the central body which collects taxes on behalf of everyone.

The Metropolitan Councils should be created by local authorities as they see fit in order to oversee certain services such as hospitals or water supply. Their committee members should all be elected.

NEW CONSTITUTION: NATIONALIST PARTY MP ENGAGED IN FENCE SITTING

Johannesburg RAPPORT in Afrikaans 23 May 82 p 3

[Article by Political Reporter Thinus Prinsloo: "NP-MP Denies Switch over Plans"]

[Text] There is a question mark hanging over the position being assumed by Ferdie van Heerden, the Nationalist Party's MP for De Aar. When this past weekend RAPPORT questioned him about talk among Conservative Party members to the effect that he wants to switch over he denied this.

Answering other questions he said that he can agree with certain viewpoints of the Conservative Party, but not with certain other points. When asked whether he is going to reconsider his position when the government takes a stand on the proposals of the Presidential Council he replied that this depends on what the government's proposals are going to be.

In the Conservative Party it is being said openly than Mr Van Heerden is seriously considering leaving the Nationalist Party. It is interesting that Mr Van Heerden has been frequently seen in the company of members of the Conservative Party especially since the publication of the proposals of the Presidential Council.

However, according to RAPPORT's information, in the course of a meeting in his constituency Mr Van Heerden gave confirmation of his support for P. W. Botha.

This past weekend Mr Van Heerden told RAPPORT that he knows nothing about rumors in Conservative Party circles that he is considering switching over. Asked whether the rumors are wrong he replied: "Yes they are wrong, I am not considering anything at the moment."

When asked if he will consider this in the future he said: "No, I am not considering joining them."

Mr Van Heerden said he "does not know on what basis they can say these things. I have my viewpoints on these matters, but I have not announced that I am going to join them."

Mr Van Heerden said that his viewpoint (which he also passed on to his constituents) is that people should not get excited about the proposals of the Presidential Council at this time, but must wait for the government's proposals. After all those are the things which the people are going to cope with in the future.

Mr Van Heerden said that he naturally supports the prime minister's interpretation of the Nationalist Party's policy.

When asked if he is going to reconsider his position when the government takes a stand with regard to the proposals of the Presidential Council, Mr Van Heerden replied: "It depends mostly on what the proposals are going to be. I do not know; I have no idea of what their proposals are going to be and I am not considering anything at this stage."

When questioned as to how he feels about the Conservative Party's policy he said: "There are certain views of theirs with which I can agree and others with which I cannot agree." However, he did not wish to state the points with which he agrees.

CONSTITUTION: PRESIDENTIAL POWER RESTRAINTS EXPLAINED

Johannesburg RAPPORT in Afrikaans 23 May 82 p 27

[Text] In the light of the recommendations of the Presidential Council with respect to an executive president, is South Africa on its way to a dictatorship?

According to Dr Denis Worrall, the chairman of the Constitutional Committee, the basic aspect of a dictatorship, namely arbitrary power, will not be there and the future president will be dependent on a reformed parliament for the approval of (a) laws, (b) policy and (c) budget.

According to Dr Worrall it is incorrect to say that the thoughts of a non-parliamentary executive president is a departure of South African traditions in view of the presidential system of the old South African Republic and of the Free State Republic.

Besides the examples provided by the old Boer republics, in the present day Westminster system in Britain, as in South Africa there is centralization of power in one person--the prime minister and in fact today the system is known as "premier government."

Through conventional or constitutional custom the present day state president appoints the leader of the party, which has won the most seats in an election, as prime minister. The latter is the person who controls the appointment and office tenure of cabinet members. As long as the prime minister retains his power basis in the caucus and in Parliament there exists a "premier government."

Point of Power

In my judgment the proposed executive president must be regarded as the replacement of the present prime minister as a point of power in the executive authority--and that in itself is not such a drastic proposal. In our present system it is Parliament which approves laws as well as budgetary measures.

Under the proposed system it will not be any different.

As far as policy is concerned, however, in paragraph 6.9 of its report, the Constitutional Committee shows that during the past 40 years the British Parliament has declined as a policy making body and that the prime minister now overshadows Parliament and the Cabinet.

The Constitutional Committee proposes that the "establishment of national policy" shall rest with the president and the cabinet, while the prime minister "is charged with the daily administration of the country, the coordination of the ministers and the government's relationship with legislative functions" (paragraph 6.32 of the report).

Therefore, here again, with respect to policymaking the proposed executive president will to a large extent be replacing the present day prime minister.

There has also been public criticism that the proposed new order of things is leaning towards dictatorship, because an extra-parliamentary cabinet is not bound to be responsible to the electorate.

In our present system, however, the cabinet is not responsible to the electorate either (except in a subsequent election), but to the lawmaking entity (Parliament). In connection with this the relationship between the executive authority and Parliament will be of great interest in the proposed order of things.

Unjustified

The criticism that the Presidential Council's proposal of a system which is strongly executive-oriented will prejudice the importance of the legislative function, in the structure under consideration, is unjustified. It is true that the Constitutional Committee cannot make detailed recommendations on the legislative functions (paragraph 7.1 of the report) until a later report, however, the committee has made it clear that the legislative authority's role will actually increase in importance (paragraphs 6.33, 7.3 and 7.15); therefore it considered it necessary to state and explain some of the most important deductions regarding the role of the legislative body in a new constitution (paragraph 7.1).

With regard to the relationship between the planned legislative (parliament) and the executive authority there was also strong criticism against the president's power to dissolve parliament. However, there is no reason to suspect that such power will be wider in any respect than that of the present state president.

The Constitutional Committee recommends that the functions of the president, as the head of the executive authority, must be described clearly in the constitution (paragraph 6.31). But there is a relevant question and that is: How can a state president's 7 year tenure of office be reconciled with the present rule that parliamentary members be elected at least every 5 years?

An executive president, whose term in office has not expired at the time of an election, might not have the confidence of a subsequent electoral college (the future parliament) with the consequent tension between executive and legislative authorities.

In the present constitutional debate the prospect is being held out that a president shall be answerable to charges and be subjectable to removal from office ("impeachment") as a punishment.

Something to this effect is already in the constitution: Removal on the basis of improper behavior or the incapability of the state president to conduct effectively his official duty. This sort of provision should also be contained in the new constitution.

If the above elements are not considered sufficient enough to put a stop to dictatorial measures on the part of a future president, these can be expanded to read simply: "with a list of reasons"--the present cause for the removal from office of an administrator.

Guarantees

Notwithstanding the drastic measure of removing someone from this office, there can also be other guarantees in the constitution for exercising control over the president. For example the French Constitution has provisions for the dissolution of the National Assembly by the president, but only in consultation with the prime minister and the president of the House of Legislative Authority to be followed by a mandatory election shortly thereafter.

The French Parliament also has the constitutional right to meet twice a year. Moreover, in France it is not merely a convention, but a stipulation in the constitution, that the government must resign in the event that the National Assembly approves a motion of censure in the government or rejects a general policy statement on the part of the government. It will be possible to have such a stipulation, which will also affect the office of the president in certain circumstances, in South Africa as well.

In summary: One finds it ironical that the Presidential Council's proposals, simply involving greater separation of powers between the legislative and the executive authorities, are now being criticized as leading to a dictatorship.

Montesquieu's doctrine of separation of powers was exactly aimed at combatting dictatorial measures. The committee's considered opinion was that a non-parliamentary executive authority will create a government structure in which it will be easier to abolish dominance and to ensure a peaceful and continuous reform (paragraph 6.22).

CONSTITUTION: PROCESS OF IRONING OUT DIFFERENCES SUGGESTED

Johannesburg RAPPORT in Afrikaans 23 May 82 p 26

[Article by Willem de Klerk: "A Plan of Action on Constitutional Proposals Necessary"]

[Text] The public will have to bear further stretched-out discussions on the Presidential Council's proposals, because these will bring about maturity and direction. However, I predict that a saturation point will be reached, because eventually it will be difficult to find new things to say.

We are now moving into the phase of a mechanical fountain--the same water (arguments) being taken up again, injected into the air by means of a spout and then falling into the pool to find its way upwards again, tomorrow and the days to follow.

It is now already clear that there are problems with and differences about the incompleteness and vagueness of the report, the office and powers of the executive state president, the competencies of the local authorities, the functions and composition of the district councils, the interim measures, the position of the black people in the republic...and thus we can go on with a series of other things which have appeared in the press during the past 2 weeks.

Moreover it is also clear that a significant middle group of people among the whites, coloreds and Indians have accepted the basic philosophy of the Presidential Council's recommendations as a practical point of departure. Of course there was the expected opposition of the Progressive Federal Party and of the Cape Province's Reconstituted Nationalist Party as well as opposition from black radicals.

This basic philosophy is a "consociation-democracy" between the three groups with "segmental autonomy" at all levels of government. Put in simpler terms this means the structuring and entrenchment of self-determination and co-determination from the local level to the national level of government.

Another philosophical point of departure for a new constitution is the separation of legislative authority (Parliament) and the executive authority (Cabinet, prime minister and president). There are sharp differences over this.

What is the next step now? In other words: what procedures must now be pursued?

With regard to this I want to repeat my views in greater detail.

The most important thing now is that the government issue a tentative declaration of intentions...say by August. Such a declaration must be a preliminary one, because the government has not yet tested out the Nationalist Party on this matter and therefore such a statement would still have to be qualified.

This declaration of intention should only be about such things as the recognition of the principle of a single-voice/joint-voice of the three groups involved in the entire government house keeping, the elimination of discrimination, the acceptance of the transfer of power to one's own local authorities, the description of functions of the district authorities and of other connective institutions, the appointment of an executive state president having sufficient controls; additional sources of income for local authorities, the orderly progress in the application of the system with an indication of a time schedule and finally the necessity of immediate interim measures for providing representation to the three groups in government institutions.

A paragraph must be added to the declaration of intentions and it must deal with the situation of the black people--the consultation structures being planned, the fact that a confederation framework will be worked out simultaneously with the proposals for a new constitution, also the fact that black people within the republic will be getting a voice at all levels of government with respect to their own interests.

This preliminary declaration of intention should bring about some sort of stability, it should allow the constitutional discussion to keep its momentum and it should serve as an agenda for the work ahead for the Presidential Council and for the other institutions involved.

We cannot go round and around without such a document of intentions and the government cannot afford to let that mechanical fountain go on spouting without initiative and guidance.

Following this preliminary statement of intention there are two stages in the further process and these must follow through simultaneously.

The first of these is that the government must carry through its consultation program. This involves such things as consultations in the caucus and in the Nationalist Party congresses with respect to the principles set forth in its preliminary statement of intentions. Along with that there should also be consultations with selected and representative groups from the colored and Indian communities.

Other institutions such as organized business associations, cultural organizations and municipal associations should also discuss these matters thoroughly within their own circles, but do so on hand of the principles set forth in the preliminary declaration of intentions.

The second stage is that the Presidential Council shall reconsider matters and formulate final proposals having before it that declaration and using also as a basis the reactions to its own reports.

In connection with this it would be fruitful to single out a number of experts for the purpose of formulating detailed points of criticism and alternative proposals to be sent back to the Presidential Council for consideration (and if necessary pay these people).

Both the government and the Presidential Council could complete this process by say: February 1983.

By making arrangements for an advanced Nationalist Party congress decisions could be made during the parliamentary session of 1983.

COLOREDS, INDIANS REACTING CAUTIOUSLY TO NEW CONSTITUTION

Johannesburg RAPPORT in Afrikaans 23 May 82 p 26

[Article by Gus Adams: "Why Then So Cautious?"]

[Text] Why are the coloreds so cautious about the new constitutional proposals of the Presidential Council? Why don't they embrace them with warmth and enthusiasm? Is it actually worth the effort for the government to proceed with the new plans if the people in whose interest this is supposed to be are receiving this so coldly and there are even indications in certain circles that these proposals could be rejected? These are questions being heard today and they deserve replies.

Let us first of all make one thing very clear: These new proposals along with the Presidential Council et al, are not primarily intended to give the coloreds and the Indians a place in the sun. The primary motive, as we see it, is to ensure a future for the whites, it is primarily a matter of white survival. How did Mr P. W. Botha put it recently at Springbok?--If civilization survives then South Africa will survive. With that he told his audience at Springbok that they, the whites, the Afrikaaners, the Nationalists, would also survive.

But in order to accomplish this there has to be a defensible system; one which is defensible abroad and within the country. Therefore there has to be a better order of things for the coloreds and the Indians.

Now, there is nothing wrong with the will to survive. That is the first and strongest law of nature. It is a case for rejoicing to see that leading white politicians are now beginning to realize that one party needs the other if all want to survive.

However, the coloreds' coolness over this matter is easily understandable. If you are used to being treated badly and as an inferior person and then one day you meet the same person and find him ever so friendly and even invites you into his living room, whereas before that you never as much stepped beyond the kitchen, how would you react? It is very possible that you would be very careful, wary and on your toes. Why is he so friendly all of a sudden? Is he up to something new now?

And so this is how so many of us feel. Even the most outspoken individuals who praise the plan are going to qualify their praise and they are not going to climb aboard boots and all.

There is another reason: They say that if a person has been without food for a long time and then you put food before him, he is going to eat little by little. He cannot eat fast otherwise he will get sick. It is nearly as though his body has become accustomed to being without food. It no longer feels hunger pains. Hunger has become the norm for it, so why turn to eating now?

Of course these arguments cannot be carried on too far.

The coloreds have had to manage without a political voice for a long time now. To be sure in the northern provinces here in Transvaal and in the Free State we have never had this. The Cape Province have not had it for some time and the bitterness of these people is felt all the more, because they feel that they have been robbed of something. Now something is being offered to them. There are some who say: We have done without that for such a long time that we can just wait a while longer. Others say: We must wait until we get a much clearer picture on this matter. Still others say: We will have to wait until all the population groups are included in this. However, the general consensus is not to be too hasty and possibly end up being disappointed as a result.

The whites will have to be patient with this attitude; they must not interpret this as a rejection; rather they must ask themselves if they would have not reacted in the same manner.

Actually I am surprised to see how little negativism there actually is. Under the circumstances I would have expected more. Those who have gone out of their way to show rejection have only made a poor show. The Labor Party, whose dilemmas I pointed out several weeks ago, is still wrestling with its problems, but indications are that the Laborites are thinking and that means a great deal. May they, and also others in their position, keep on thinking for themselves and not allow others to do their thinking for them or to prescribe actions to them.

BECKETT CALLS FOR WHITES, BLACKS TO PULL TOGETHER

Johannesburg BEELD in Afrikaans 19 May 82 p 11

["Frontline" Column by Denis Beckett:"'Think-Again' for Black and White."]

[Text] It is rather nice to know that there are certain things on which I as a liberal and the readers of BEELD as Nationalists undoubtedly agree.

For example, I am entirely convinced that we in South Africa have a big problem with respect to the many black people who simply attribute all their problems, without exception, to apartheid, even problems which have nothing to do with apartheid. Readers of BEELD will readily agree that the evils of apartheid are too easily overemphasized (although not everyone who feels that way will agree that the evident solution would be to do away with apartheid as quickly as possible).

Likewise BEELD readers will not find it difficult, in general, to accept the idea that it would be very good to throw some real thorough challenges at those blacks who think that if they stay around long enough socialism will get here sooner or later and make them all rich. Or to challenge those blacks who see racism in everything and use this primarily as an excuse for everything.

I am of the opinion that it is very necessary to challenge those people. I am dead sure of it that the great majority of BEELD readers agree with me 100 percent on that point.

The problem is that when these types of challenges are posed, they are usually rejected without any serious consideration. They are rejected because they come from a suspect area.

If a black person were to pose such a big challenge (which hasn't happened very often), the usual reaction is a shrug of the shoulders and a negative commentary, meaning that the spokesman is surely a traitor or a puppet. And if a white person were to do this . . . well, he's actually white, isn't he? Then why pay attention to him? Isn't he merely a privileged member of the ruling class which tries to demoralize the blacks in an attempt to hold on to its own privileges?

Thus, fundamental criticism of its merits is seldom considered or even given real attention. It is summarily rejected because it comes "from the outside." And to me that is a great tragedy.

In my view it would be constructive if black people in general were to be confronted with heretic and unwanted thoughts which could encourage a re-evaluation in their thinking, a re-thinking as it were, instead of blind service to the all-embracing term Black is Beuatiful -- precisely something which is so often distorted into Black is Perfect.

I don't necessarily expect Blacks to agree with that sort of criticism. But it would be really good if this criticism were judged for its true merits and not summarily rejected.

And BEELD readers, I am sure, will agree with that.

As the Englishman would say, so far so good. But let's take this one step further. If challenges and provocative thoughts are good for blacks, then why not for whites? And if it is wise to expect blacks to judge new ideas on their content and not on their origin, then shouldn't Afrikaners do likewise? Or is the problem perhaps that Afrikaner thoughts are so infallible that they may not be questioned? And this while the thoughts of all the others need constant sharpening?

In my experience the usual reaction of Afrikaner Nationalists is exactly the same as the black reaction -- exactly in reverse gear. If there is a challenge from a source other than the Afrikaner one, it is summarily rejected on that ground alone, while if that source is indeed Afrikaner and the challenge is fundamental enough, people always find an easy way out by branding the challenger a renegate or traitor.

I am mentioning all this because just tonight someone went on and on again about the fact that I can't be expected to know anything about anything because I am afflicted with the disease of having an "English background." This happens all the time, and if there is anything which to me is like a red cloth to a bull, this is precisely it. Perhaps it is true that I don't know anything about anything but, please, not because of that reason! I am as much an Afrikaner as any Afrikaner or black and it is very arrogant and futile for people in each of the various camps to accept that they alone have the right to show interest in the country which all of us must share.

Last week I wrote about that one liberal dream I have, namely that the day will break when all of us can applaud the local man (regardless of his color) when he fights an opponent from abroad. This week I am submitting another dream: that all of us will listen to the thoughts and ideas which are circulating and that we use our intelligence to decide whether we agree with them or not.

Then we will indeed have a degree of hope to find the type of future all of us will be able to share.

BUSHMEN LAUDED AS FIGHTERS

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 1 Jun 82 p 13

[Report by Gideon Joubert: "Bushmen Part of Feared Fighting Team"]

[Excerpts] The Bushman is like an antelope. He is intelligent, and his power of observation is unbelievable. He does not get lost. At night he follows the stars.

Last week a group of newspapermen visited Omega, the Bushmen base of the armed forces in West Caprivi. We liked the Bushmen right away. They are modest, withdrawn, friendly and loyal. For many centuries they were used as slaves by black people. In Angola their wives and daughters were made prostitutes.

At Omega it is not difficult to find recruits for the army. The news has spread quickly that it is a safe haven. Almost daily new Bushman families arrive.

Omega is located in an area of undescribably beautiful scenery. The Bushmen who come to Omega are primitive. They hate SWAPO and Marxism, for they know it. These days they receive the same pay as white soldiers. Their standard of living has increased unbelievably.

The Bushmen's capacity to track, their ability to survive in the veld, their knowledge of the veld and their sense of direction in the bush -- coupled with the white power of leadership -- make them a feared fighting team.

Major Lieb Liebenberg, deputy commander of Omega, says that the sense perceptions of the Bushmen in the veld are unbelievable. If a patrol has a Bushman along, it is not necessary to post guards. The Bushman also sleeps, but he is already awake and sounding the alarm when the enemy is still far away.

Religious

The Bushmen's second language is Afrikaans. They are members of the Dutch Reformed Church.

The Bushmen are a playful tribe. They make a game out of everything.

Once or twice a year there is a veld school. The veterans take youngsters to the veld for 2 or 3 weeks, and then they are made Bushmen. They have to live off the veld, hunt with bow and arrow, sleep in the cold night, make fire with sticks, and learn all the miraculous little veld tricks only known by Bushmen. Thus one prevents that precious knowledge from becoming lost.

In West Caprivi there is peace. SWAPO has never yet shown its face there. Why should it? There are only trees and Bushmen and the latter are not susceptible to indoctrination. Some of the Bushmen have been fighters for 10 or 15 years already. Earlier on they fought side by side with the Portuguese in Angola. Two of Omega's soldiers have received the Honoris Crux-order. One of them was a Bushman.

REV JORDAAN, CHURCH COUNCIL SPEAK OUT ON CENSORSHIP

Johannesburg BEELD in Afrikaans 24 May 82 p 3

[Text] The church council of the Dutch Reformed congregation of Stellenbosch Central has accepted Rev Pierre Jordaan's assurance that he will not misuse his ministry for party politic aims and that it shares his concern about censorship. This is what Reverend Jordaan said yesterday before his public worship service.

Reverend Jordaan was recently in the news for his criticism of the government's application of censorship and a letter concerning this matter which he wrote to Mr Hendrik Coetzer, the Nationalist Party MP for East London-North. Reverend Jordaan recently opened a Dr Andries Treurnicht meeting at Stellenbosch with Scripture reading and prayer.

Before the public service of last night, which was led by Dr J. S. Kellerman, Reverend Jordaan read from a duplicated announcement such as can be obtained every Sunday at the doors of churches.

In it the church council states that at a meeting of 19 May it decided to share Reverend Jordaan's concern over the aspects of the Act on the Control of Publications. The church council confirmed a previous decision in this respect.

Indignant

"The church council notes with appreciation Reverend Jordaan's statement regretting the offense which stemmed from some of his views and accepts his assurance that he will not misuse his ministry for party politics purposes."

Reverend Jordaan said that he hopes the announcement will bring this matter to an end.

Reportedly some students were very indignant over the words he used in his letter to Mr Coetzer. In it he said that he would use his influence as a student teacher "to bring to the attention of our youth this decadent attitude of a party which in the past has almost been holy in my view."

Although Reverend Jordaan later stated that he regards his letter to Mr Coetzer as a personal one, a copy of it was also sent to Minister Hennie Smit [Posts and Telecommunications], the MP for Stellenbosch.

CHURCH'S APPROACH TO APARTHEID: PATIENCE AND CLARITY NEEDED

Johannesburg BEELD in Afrikaans 24 May 82 p 4

[Text] In a lead article DIE LIGDRAER (Light Bearer), the official newspaper of the Dutch Reformed Missionary Church states that the merits of Dr Allan Boesak's proposal that the justification of "apartheid," on the part of certain churches must be tested against the reformed confession, rests in the fact that this is putting the debate on this matter at a theological level.

This commentary follows a study document which Dr Boesak, a minister of the Missionary Church, has drafted for the World Federation of Reformed Churches and in which he asks that a status confessiones be proclaimed so that each member church shall test its views on apartheid against the confession's written creeds.

DIE LIGDRAER states that in such an eventuality no member church will abstain from assuming a stand, because no church can be neutral with respect to a matter which prejudices its confession.

The Dutch Reformed Church had begun to justify its view on the religious and political policy of separate development on a theological basis back in the 1970's. Therefore, criticism of the Dutch Reformed Church's viewpoint cannot take place without theological justification. It is here that one finds merits in Dr Boesak's proposal.

Crux

"Let the World Federation take a good look at the question of whether and to what extent the policy of apartheid, with its religious and political practices, is in conflict with the Scriptures and the Reformed writings on creed." By pressing such a theological crux of the matter a purer religious character will be imparted to this action."

"Any pronouncement in terms of the status confessiones must, however, be based on a clear analysis on the situation. The question, therefore, is what is meant by apartheid."

"The word is being used in an especially loose and regular manner and can mean anything from an absolutely normal separateness of interest groups, out of their own choice, to the well-known political concept of a legislated separation of different ethnic groups through the will and power of one of these groups."

Patience

The apartheid in question must, therefore, be defined clearly. Not until then can it be determined how the Scriptures and confessions will judge it.

The newspaper states that the proclamation of a status confessiones can be a preparation to disciplined thinking, but religious discipline is characterized by a continuous concern about the sinner in a spirit of extreme patience until it becomes clear that "through absolute hardening he has separated himself, as it were."

BRIEFS

SOUTH AFRICA WANTS TIME TO RESOLVE PROBLEMS--All South Africa is asking of its trade partners abroad is that they give it time and the opportunity to solve its domestic problems in a peaceful manner, Mr Harry Schwarz, member of parliament for Yeoville, said yesterday at a dinner meeting of the South African/German Chamber of Commerce in Johannesburg. Mr Schwarz discussed the new political and economic dimensions in the Republic and said it would be easy for him to undo the new proposals of the President's Council. However, he stands behind Prime Minister P.W. Botha and the leader of his party, Dr Van Zyl Slabbert, by making an appeal to politicians not to make hasty decisions which cannot be withdrawn later on. According to Mr Schwarz the tide of politics in South Africa has now completely turned. The Afrikaner no longer fights for his own independence, but for peaceful co-existence of all peoples in South Africa. The break in the National Party was inevitable, according to the course of history. The proposals of the President's Council and those of the Buthelezi Commission cover a lot of joint territory, even if they come from two different poles. Those who are searching for a solution to the country's problems should start to look here for answers which will satisfy all groups, he said. The report of the President's Council should serve as the foundation for discussions between the various groups. The differences of the past must now be forgotten and the similarities of the future should be the guideline, he said. [Text] [Johannesburg BEELD in Afrikaans 19 May 82 p 11] 8700

AFRICAN-ARAB JOINT COMMISSION MEETS IN DAKAR

Opening Session

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 23 Apr 82 p 4

[Article by Ibrahima Fall and Sidy Gaye: "Meeting of the African-Arab Ministerial Commission: For Dynamic and Renewed Cooperation"]

[Text] The Fifth Permanent African-Arab Joint Commission meeting opened yesterday in the Dakar international trade center, presided over by the prime minister, Habib Thiam, representing the chief of state who is presently on a visit in the Persian Gulf. This meeting of what are knows as the "24" (12 African states and 12 Arab states) is to get some decisions moving again, decisions from the first summit of sovereigns and chiefs of state of the OAU and the Arab League--now a memorable event--that was held in March 1977 in Cairo. But in actual fact, the commission meeting had its origin in the first African-Arab ministerial conference, held in our capital in April 1976, which constituted a crucial stage in the definition of new organizational and programmatic means for giving dynamism to African-Arab cooperation, cooperation justified by historical legitimacy and the similarity of the challenges confronting the two complementary entities.

Yesterday, during the ceremonial opening session, the emphasis was on their common destiny in the face of the rising Zionist peril and apartheid's increasing irredentism, just as the need was underlined for solidarity and cooperation in the face of the persistence of an economic order of an inegalitarian nature. Political challenges and economic ones--as well as reflection concerning future courses of development suggested by, on the one hand, the OAU through the Lagos Plan and, on the other hand, the Arab League through the development strategy stemming from the Amman meeting--were guiding elements to help the 24 ministers present to give a new dimension to that natural cooperation.

Specific context

Opening the proceedings, the prime minister made sure he defined the specific context in which the meeting was occurring--a time when the Zionist state is carrying on increasingly savage repression against the freedom fighters, the Palestinians, "our brothers in God" as the head of the government has called them. With regard to Israeli hegemonism, which has taken a new turn with the carrying out of sacrilegious acts attempting to defile one of the greatest legacies of Islamic "ouma," the prime minister requested a minute of silence in memory of those who died for their desire to defend the freedom and dignity of their people. The prime minister referred at length to the need for the Arab and African communities, faced with difficult economic circumstances marked by increasing dangers for those communities, to "strengthen their fraternal cohesion." "We must become further involved in more concerted political action and in the implementation of measures likely to promote the complementary development of our respective countries even more," he maintained.

Senegal's role in the search for ways to give dynamism to African-Arab cooperation was stressed by the prime minister, who recalled the milestones in the process to establish a main line with regard to political and economic as well as cultural activity. Thus, in the political arena, the prime minister hailed the efforts that have been initiated and emphasized the existence of sustained consultation on the problems with which the Arabs and Africans are directly confronted: the Middle East crisis and the situation in southern Africa in connection with the Tel Aviv-Pretoria axis, and then on other current international matters such as the North-South dialogue and current activity promoting peace and security in the world. But African-Arab cooperation does not take on only a political connotation. It is maturing and becoming dynamic via the economic aspect as well. As far as that is concerned, Habib Thiam pointed out that encouraging results have been obtained in that area on both the bilateral and multilateral levels.

Thus, from 1973 through June 1981, Arab financial commitments in Africa totalled nearly US $7 billion. But figures are not everything, and the prime minister dwelled on that: "That assistance is being granted on very advantageous terms and on conditions directed at the priorities singled out by the African countries." There one has an illustration of what can be active South-South cooperation. The prime minister observed that in spite of effort efforts made here and there to give African-Arab cooperation a dynamic and innovative stamp, that cooperation has not been adjusted to fit the enormous potential for it that Arabs and Africans have at their disposal. Therefore, lines of research must be explored in this area to "Lead to common accelerated development, calling on contributions of the industrialized world's technology as well." Habib Thiam also felt that organization plans for a joint conference of representatives from African and Arab private sectors and study plans for the promotion of trade between the two sides should be examined and should take concrete form within reasonable deadlines. The prime minister did not want to downplay the cultural dimension of this dialogue, and he suggested a specific action plan for cultural cooperation as well as the plan to create a cultural fund and a center of Afro-Arab cooperation to find the dynamism that attempts are being made to infuse it with, it is essential to set aside "certain political vicissitudes that since 1978 have prevented regular meetings of the high level officials charged with following up and expanding this cooperation." In spite of the stumbling blocks and the extent of the challenges, the prime minister saw grounds for hope in the Dakar conference, "hope born of the initiatives that have led to this meeting and that demonstrate that the need to reactivate African-Arab cooperation has been felt on both sides."

Dynamic Dialogue

Prior to this, the chairmen of the African and Arab groups, as well as the deputy secretaries general of the OAU and the Arab League, had expressed positive assessments concerning the resumption of consultations between the two entities, which have everything to gain by initiating exemplary cooperation.

In the view of Daouda Diallo, Nigerien minister of foreign affairs and cooperation and chairman of the African group, at a time when the deterioration in the terms of trade is getting increasingly worse, when financial markets are suffering the disastrous repercussions of a monetary policy based on draconian interest race practices and when the North-South dialogue is in a bad state because it is being transformed into a dialogue of the deaf, it is beneficial that a firm commitment for giving African-Arab cooperation dynamic impetus has been made. Also, structural revisions are essential to make that cooperation more efficient and more operational. Mr Diallo felt that cooperation should not be limited solely to the restricted framework of the financial arena. The chairman of the African group stressed that what with the holy alliance of apartheid and Zionism, any dispersal of forces is nonproductive, so ranks must be closed and all difficulties likely to separate us must be transcended.

For his part, Abdelaziz Khellef, chairman of the Arab group, stressed the imperative need to strengthen and expand cooperation, which is beneficial for both groups. In his assessment, that cooperation has never been interrupted, in spite of difficulties, and he emphasized the existence of financial institutions at both the bilateral and multilateral levels. After having appealed for private Arab investment in Africa to be increased, Mr Khellef stated that the League has established a budget of $300 million, about 75 billion CFA francs, for necessary studies with that end in view. Moreover, he proposed that a meeting of experts be held to define the best paths for renewed cooperation. On the political level, the co-chairman of the Arab group called, in the light of the outrageous acts of defiance with which the oppressive regimes of South Africa and the Zionist entity burden the world's security, for a fresh initiative to strangle the forces of evil.

Priority Sectors

As for the deputy secretary general of the OAU, Sylvestre Nzanzinana, he first conveyed the regrets of Edem Kodjo, who was detained in Nairobi at the meeting of the OAU office with the job of looking into the Western Sahara issue. Mr Nzanzinana argued for the strengthening of structural mechanisms and the transfer of resources to priority sectors. The deputy secretary general of the continent-wide African organization also emphasized the need for harmonizing positions within the context of the dialogue for a new international economic order. Thinking is to be developed involving areas as different as trade, food self-sufficiency and energy.

For his part, the deputy secretary general of the Arab League States made excuses as well, for Chedli Klibi, who had been detained. Then the deputy secretary general pointed out, in regard to the rise of Zionist hegemonism and of apartheid, that the last three decades have been marked by the overwhelming victory of liberation movements. He condemned the foreign support that makes the continued existence of the oppressive regimes possible. Adnan Omran mentioned that the situation that prevails in the territories occupied by Israel is similar to what the peoples of southern Africa experience daily.

After the formal opening ceremony and adjournment of the proceedings, the delegates subsequently met again but in camera. The end of the proceedings of the fifth permanent ministerial session for African-Arab cooperation is scheduled for today. It will be presided over by Assane Seck, minister of state for equipment.

The 24

Arab side: Algeria, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Mauritania, PLO, Somalia and Syria

African side: Angola, Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Liberia, Madagascar, Morocco, Mozambique, Niger, Rwanda, Swaziland and Tunisia

It should be emphasized that the make-up of the commission is periodically altered, in accordance with the principles of rotation and geographical representation.

Closing Meeting

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 26 Apr 82 p 3

[Article by Ibrahima Fall: "New Momentum for African-Arab Cooperation"]

[Text] In the end it was quite late Friday evening when the fifth permanent joint session of African-Arab cooperation was brought to a close. In fact, that was only a ceremonial closing due to the circumstances, inasmuch as its goal was to free up the minister of state for equipment who had the responsibility of delivering the concluding speech. Moreover, work resumed immediately after the departure of Assane Seck.

In the course of these proceedings, which for 48 hours brought together in our capital 24 ministers of foreign affairs from the Arab and African worlds, the paths for giving dynamism to this natural solidarity were examined, and, similarly, practical methods were proposed for bringing that solidarity to the level of what is expected from it.

One of the outstanding developments of the Dakar session was the reaffirmation of the will of the Arab and African communities to do everything possible to demolish the irredentist policies of the oppressive Israeli and South African regimes, which still keep the martyred peoples of Palestine, South Africa and Namibia under the yoke of their imperialsim. Stress was laid on the need for coordination within international and regional organizations of the positions of states that belong to the OAU and Arab League. In addition, and more concretely, budget plans meant to enable the operation of institutions emerging from the Afro-Arab conference were adopted, as were other documents of a financial nature relating to Arab capital becoming involved in both African states' priority sectors and trade. Without a doubt, one of the most striking decisions of this session was the affirmed desire to do everything possible to hold at an early date the Afro-Arab ministerial conference and the second summit conference of Arab and African sovereigns and chiefs of state, which will be a forceful sequel to the spring 1977 meeting in Cairo.

Increase in Financial Aid

During the conference's formal closing ceremony, it was Daouda Diallo, Nigerien minister of foreign affairs and cooperation and chairman of the African group, who drew initial conclusions from the meeting, speaking for the ministerial conference. According to him, the meeting in Dakar, which city is the cradle of Afro-Arab cooperation, constituted an additional step in the new momentum that is being given to cooperation between the two communities. The conference resulted in fine vantage points for setting up cooperation characterized by solidarity and complementarity.

After having stated that the atmosphere of the proceedings was marked by serenity and brotherhood, the chairman of the African group pointed out that special importance was attached to the Palestinian and southern Africa issues in favor of the restoration of the fundamental rights of the people there.

To do that, Mr Diallo pointed out, increased financial and material aid to those freedom fighters was decided on, as was the strengthening of cohesion between the two groups. The moral and political support of the Arabs and Africans was also reaffirmed regarding the frontline states. On the economic level, the Lagos Plan and the Amman strategy could be the foundations for future concerted action, in Mr Diallo's opinion. The potential of that community of interest is enormous. He expressed his feeling that if that potential is made use of, it will make a radiant future possible for our peoples.

Mr Diallo expressed the wish to see normal resumption of the operation of the institutions set up within the context of that cooperation. In that respect, he expressed the desire that the African-Arab ministerial conference be held in the course of next year. On behalf of the conference, he addressed thanks to the Senegalese chief of state and people for the kind hospitality the delegations to this joint session were shown.

Devotion to the Cairo Principles

"It is not an exaggeration to say that the holding of the fifth session will have made it possible to answer a new challenge", was the appraisal of the minister of state for equipment as he officially closed the proceedings.

According to Mr Seck, the Dakar meeting was proof of the will and the ability to find suitable ways and means to make this cooperative undertaking fact. In his opinion, the meeting also demonstrated devotion to the Afro-Arab principles defined at the 1977 Cairo Conference.

He did not fail to mention the extreme interest the Senegalese chief of state and people show in the accomplishment of the plans of this community, which brings together more than a third of the member states of the United Nations. The minister of state for equipment expressed the felling that the Arab and African peoples must unite to combat domination and exploitation, and he urged the harmonizing of Arab League and OAU positions and a just solution to the Middle East and southern Africa problems. After having listed the positive results with which the conference ended up, Assane Seck affirmed that these results symbolized the reality and vitality of Afro-Arab cooperation. He hailed the positive role played by institutions such as BADEA [Arab Bank for African Economic Development] and ECA [UN Econo nomic Commission for Africa] in the reinforcement of that cooperation.

For his part, the head of the Palestinian delegation offered a motion of thanks to the Senegalese Government, authorities and people for the conditions which the holding of the meeting provided and which made the success of the proceedings possible.

ECOWAS FORMS YOUTH, SPORTS ORGANIZATION

Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 24 May 82 p 23

/Article by special correspondent, Joher Yassine: "The ECOWAS /West African States Economic Community/ of Youth and Sports is Born"/

/Text/ After a week's work in a really constructive spirit, the ECOWAS of Youth and Sports was organized in Conakry, helping to strengthen the bonds which unite the young sportsmen in our sub-region.

Thirteen ministers out of the 16 expected attended this first organizational conference of the ministers of youth and sports, which made it possible to determine the main lines of the sports policy of this great community of 190 million people.

The experts did excellent work for 2 days and even 2 nights and drew up some quality documents, thus contributing to the success of this conference opened officially on Tuesday 12 May by the prime minister of the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea, Dr Lansana Beauvogui, who made an important speech, emphasizing the need to create this sports organization to develop African unity through youth.

In the name of the ministers, Laurent Dona-Fologo took the floor to first thank the party-state of Guinea for having agreed to host this conference and stress the important work of President Ahmed Sekou Toure for the benefit of African youth. Then he dwelt at length on what this ECOWAS of youth and sports will have to be.

Then the Ivorian minister spoke for almost a half hour, before the members of the Guinean government and a very large crowd, about African cooperation, Guinean efforts in favor of youth and in concluding he congratulated President Sekou Toure for his splendid reelection to the highest position in his country.

An Effective Work

The ministers and their experts then met to examine documents drawn up by their experts. For 3 days they analyzed all the suggestions made and made some changes in them before drawing up the documents which will establish this new organization.

The ministers selected Upper Volta to be the permanent headquarters of the conference.

As for the general objectives outlined for the conference, the ministers, knowing the current difficulties, retained the idea expressed during the university games at Yamoussoukro, to set up a loosely structured organization, but dynamic and efficient, with a realistic program because it is simple, with extensive opportunities for staff training, acquiring sports and socio-educational equipment and the development of scholastic and university sport.

The budget agreed upon was also "moderate": operational expenses for 2 years will amount to about 32 million CFA francs, with each country's share being only a million and a half.

It is clear that some favorable solutions have been achieved. The work of the ministers directed with much ability and practicality by the Guinean minister, Seydou Keita, has been outstanding and the changes excellent each time in a spirit of genuine fair play.

The Houphouet-Boigny Trophy in 1983

The ministers have asked the UFOA /Association of West African Soccer Federations/ to sponsor the ECOWAS Cup reserved for national teams which will be supplied by the Houphouet-Boigny trophy. Elimination matches will be organized and our country, qualified officially, will host the final stages in 1983 which will include four teams.

A second junior soccer cup supplied by the Shehu Sagari trophy has been established besides.

Four disciplines have been reserved for the ECOWAS games: soccer, basketball (men's and women's) boxing and athletics. Benin has been asked to host this big event.

The West African university games have been definitely organized and the next meeting in 1983 could take place in Lome.

The ministers have asked their chairman, Seydou Keita, to speak during the meeting of the ECOWAS chiefs of state next week in Benin to inform them about this new ECOWAS branch and request their moral as well as...financial support.

We hope with all our hearts that this subregional organization, whose time has come, will allow all our youth, beginning certainly with sportsmen, to develop closer ties and thus increase more than ever the spirit of fraternity which is indispensable to us.

The Suggestions

Physical and sports education sector

Physical Education:

Education of EPS [Physical and Sports Education] teachers; of schools and teacher training institutes;

Granting of scholarships for training of middle and upper EPS teachers to disadvantaged countries;

Pairing and cooperation between schools and training institutes with a view to joint research;

Advanced specialization of regional EPS institutes in different sports disciplines

Starting a regional information bulletin and popularization of physical education;

Organization on the spot (in countries requesting it) of a refresher course and seminars connected with EPS teaching;

Study of methods and joint use of facilities to produce equipment adapted to West African conditions

Sport

Organization of multinational school and university tourneys in the various sports disciplines

Organization of university games;

Organization of tourneys in the various sports disciplines for national teams (men's and women's) promising athletes and juniors;

Organization of exchanges of trainers for all useful purposes;

Organization of refresher courses for staff and team trainers on the spot in the various sports disciplines for the benefit of the countries which will request them;

Youth and Socio-educational Activities

Bilateral exchanges of folklore groups;

Organization of a modern music festival and choral singing groups;

Organization of a festival of traditional music;

Organization of an artistic festival (ballets);

Study trip for staff, youth movements;

International youth projects (of economic development or reconstruction);

International camp for explorers, pioneers and scouts;

Training on the spot (disadvantaged countries) of middle level personnel by experts from other countries.

Training of advanced leaders in existing institutes;

Vocation colonies with an international emphasis;

Organization of conferences of government or political leaders of youth on various subjects;

Regional record fair, exhibition and presentation of records of West African orchestras.

Cooperation between schools and training institutes for joint research concerning the arts, African culture and the status of youth in African societies.

The Main Decisions

Permanent headquarters: Ouagadougou

Conference chairman: Guinea

TWO FRENCH FINANCING AGREEMENTS SIGNED

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 644, 15 May 82 p 4

[Text] Comrade Tsikabaka Lupey, general secretary at the Ministry of Cooperation, and Mr Darge, head of the French Cooperation Mission, signed two financial agreements totaling 200 million CFA francs on 8 May on behalf of the Congolese and French Governments.

The first, nonreimbursable agreement, for 100 million CFA francs, concerns the development of small-scale farm mechanization. The analysis of the experimental stage of the farm mechanization project, with a total duration of 6 years (1974-76) [as published], the training stage (1976-78), based mainly on state farms (1979-80), and the popularization stage in rural areas, with financial aid of 320 million CFA francs from the FAC [Aid and Cooperation Fund], has made it possible to launch a farm mechanization development program.

We should note that this Small-Scale Farm Mechanization Operation (OPMA) concerns the Mindouli and Kindamba sectors in the Pool and Bouenza region. A similar study will also be made for Mantsoumba.

Support for Agricultural Research

The second agreement, also for 100 million CFA francs, has two parts.

The first (94 million francs) should make it possible to establish the third regional substation at Ewo and to develop the programs started in recent years and to complete the training of national researchers destined to take over from expatriates. It therefore includes technical assistance, training and equipment as well as certain operational expenses (analyses), generally to be assumed by the Congolese side.

The second part (6 million francs) will make it possible to complete the equipment of the CTFT [Technical Center for Tropical Forestry] in-vitro laboratory at Pointe-Noire for forestry research.

Finally, we should note that the first stage of agricultural research, completed in 1981, make it possible to equip the central Loudima station and to establish two regional substations at Kindamba and Odziba.

The genetic heritage of food production has thus been reestablished, which has made it possible to obtain better yields which better satisfy the food needs of the population.

French participation in this project from 1977 to 1981 was 285.5 million CFA francs.

The latter agreement is also nonreimbursable.

GOALS OF NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT PLAN NOTED

Brazzaville MWETI in French No 585, 20 May 82 p 1

[Excerpts] Three concepts--analysis, coordination and the human aspect--are required to understand and interpret the Congolese economic approach which has been underway for 3 years.

The establishment of a socialist economy in a neocolonial zone is a new undertaking in Africa. The closest examples are still incomplete; we would have to go to Eastern Europe to find valid examples. This is a factor which provides a dimension that must not be overlooked by our critics, who are accustomed to referring to existing models such as the Ivorian and Cameroonian forms.

What characterizes the emerging experiment of economic reconstruction in the People's Republic of the Congo is, in my opinion, the time devoted to the political process itself. Since the people's rejection of the proliberal government in August 1963 and the choice in favor of socialism in 1964, the country has gone through a period of characteristic political turmoil. While political debate was maturing, the economy was going through a period of lethargy which the people deplored, although without questioning the choice they had made. Top-level economists, while weighed down with political matters, used this very long period to good advantage by making analyses. After reading and rereading Samir Amin, Rene Dumont and the classics of socialist economics, as well as the many experts such as Hugues Bertrand, who have evolved through their own experience, this economic elite finally developed a working method: coordination. Thus between 1979 and 1982, the first year of the plan, Brazzaville welcomed many economists and experts. The most productive forums, such as the long and patient Conference of Government Enterprises, brought eminent Third World experts in planning, management and trade to the People's Republic of the Congo. A locally established permanent unit assists the staffs of young enterprises while participating in discussions on economic recovery.

The Third Special Congress of the Congolese Labor Party recently formulated and coordinated its analysis and methods in greater detail. This was in March 1979. The findings and decisions of the congress must therefore be used as a reference point for the Congolese economic experiment. Expressed in political terms, they are no less scientific and realistic. They constitute the basis of the first national development plan, whose first year of implementation is 1982. Its major feature is the determination to limit all the ills of a lethargic neocolonial model. Naturally, this is impossible under a single 5-year plan. As the political leadership has patiently explained, stages and choices are required. This is why three major areas have been given priority: territorial unification; area improvement and regionalization of development.

Territorial unification requires the implementation of a series of decisive programs in transportation, telecommunications and information, the energy infrastructure and trade. Planned domestic links will stimulate interregional trade to broaden the domestic market. Within 20 years, the north and south of the country should be linked by two main roads: the Pointe-Noire-Brazzaville-Ouesso road and the Pointe-Noire-Madingou-Kayes-Mossendjo-Djambala-Okoyo-Ewo-Kelle-Souanke road. Crossroads will link these two main roads to assure real intraregional integration. Ouesso will be linked to Impfondo via Epena and connections are planned with neighboring countries; a National Road Administration Center is also planned.

Territorial unification will also be dependent on the railroad, river and air transportation sectors and telecommunications.

The interim program has earmarked significant funds for studying and launching projects in this sector, which is considered vital. Thus the RNTP [National Public Works Administration] has already set up jobsites with operations employing hundreds of workers.

No major difficulty is expected to slow the momentum of these initial months.

CONSTRUCTION OF ELF-CONGO OFFSHORE PLATFORMS DESCRIBED

Brazzaville MWETI in French No 585, 20 May 82 p 10

[Text] The operations of the Boscongo Company, a subsidiary of Bouygues Offshore, are expanding significantly. Thus in the first part of this year, its Pointe-Noire yard recorded a substantial increase in the production of drilling structures. The internal magazine of the Bouygues group, LE MINORANGE, reported on these operations in its last issue, mentioning in particular the start of production of the new "Emeraude steam-drilling" platform ordered by ELF [Gasoline and Lubricants Company of France]-Congo.

Boscongo has gone ahead with the expansion of its yard, which now occupies 25 hectares, which has enabled it to enlarge several production departments and to create new storage and manufacturing areas.

Its wharf has been extended and a harbor has been built for sheltering the operating barges of Bouygues Offshore: the "Bos 300" and "Bos 355," which arrived in the Gulf of Guinea in November.

New operations for dry-docking, maintenance and servicing of oil tankers are being developed.

But most of Boscongo's operations still concern the manufacture and assembly of offshore platforms. The rate of producing the structures has accelerated substantially. The construction cycle for a jacket has been reduced to 2 months.

The first order placed with Boscongo involved the construction of eight metal drilling platforms for ELF-Congo; the first three platforms of 100 meters in height were delivered according to schedule from May to October. The structures, Yaf 1, 2 and 3, are currently installed in the Yanga field and Yaf 4 was scheduled to be delivered in early 1982 [as published].

In the first part of 1982, Boscongo began production of the "Emeraude steam-drilling platform" (EMVF), a special platform recently ordered by ELF-Congo, thus reaffirming its confidence in Bouygues Offshore.

This pilot platform will be used for drilling in the Emeraude field, which contains extremely heavy petroleum, thus making production much more complex.

The steam-injection technique will be tested offshore by ELF for the first time in an effort to increase the percentage of recovery from that deposit.

With all its fittings, EMVF will weigh more than 2,000 tons. Launching is scheduled for the summer of 1982.

SUDAN-DJIBOUTI COMMUNIQUE

Djibouti LA NATION DE DJIBOUTI in French 17 Jun 82 p 4

[Article: "Sudan-Djibouti Communique. A Spirit of Fraternity and Cooperation Between the Two Countries"]

[Text] Following the official 24-hour visit made to Djibouti last week by a Sudanese delegation headed by the minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Muhammad Mirghani Mubarak, a Sudan-Djibouti communique was published on Wednesday 9 June. This communique, large extracts of which we are publishing below, shows that the conversations were marked by a climate of fraternity. Let us recall that Mr Mirghani, who was bringing a message from President Gaafar Nimeiry to his brother and counterpart in Djibouti, was received by the latter last week on Wednesday morning.

The two parties were pleased at the broadening of the prospects for a bilateral cooperation, which reinforces the potential for the materialization of these prospects in the interest of the two brother parties.

In accordance to the agreement signed by the two heads of states in April 1981 in Khartoum, concerning the creation of a joint ministerial commission to translate into facts the spirit of fraternity and cooperation which exists between the two brother countries, the two parties decided to organize a meeting of that commission in Khartoum in mid-August.

The two parties were pleased with their similarity of views concerning regional, continental and international problems, based on similar principles of neighborly relations and peaceful coexistence between the nations in the area and a peaceful settlement of conflicts, as well as the use of their respective countries' potentialities for the economic development of their people.

The two parties noted that their countries are factors of concord and reconciliation in the area, thanks to the wise policies of their respective leaders who spared no efforts to restrict the conflict in the Horn of Africa and who have made appeals for a return to peace and stability in the area, and have made all possible efforts so that the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean can become areas of peace and security.

Concerning the situation in the Arab world, the two parties took note of the present situation with bitterness and condemned the brutal and barbaric action of Israel against their Lebanese and Palestinian brothers. They noted that the latest Israeli aggression has come at a time when the Arab nation is divided, which reduces its capabilities and potentialities to face the danger which threatens its future existence.

The two parties considered the need to strengthen Arab solidarity and to set aside the marginal conflicts which have eroded it, so that it may strengthen itself in its struggle for its national aspirations, and first of all in the liberation of the occupied Arab territories and the recovery of the legitimate right of the Palestinian people to an independent state of its own under the aegis of its sole representative, the PLO.

In this respect, the two parties reaffirmed their support to the peace plan offered by the Saudi Arabian kingdom, and made an appeal for the resumption of the Fez Arab summit.

The two parties made a pathetic appeal to the Arab nation and to all Muslim people to spare no efforts to end the Irak-Iran war which has mobilized energies that should have been used against the real danger which threatens the Arab and Muslim people. In this respect, the two parties praised the efforts made, among others, by the Islamic Conference Organization, the Non-Aligned Countries Organization, and the United Nations to end that war.

The two parties also stressed the importance of strengthening Arab-African solidarity to foil the Israeli ploy aimed at a renewed Israeli penetration on the African continent. They condemned the South-African aggression against the countries of the Front and reasserted their full support to the Namibian people for the recovery of its independence and the reunification of its territory under the aegis of its sole representative, the SWAPO.

The two parties reaffirmed their common desire to fight the racist apartheid regime imposed by the minority regime in Pretoria upon the African people in the south of the continent, as well as colonialism in all its forms and manifestations on the continent.

In reviewing the problems with which the Organization for African Unity is faced, the Western Sahara question and the Chad question retained their attention. The two parties are making a pressing appeal for the application of the decisions of the 18th summit of heads of states and governments concerning this question.

The two parties hold similar views on the necessity to strengthen solidarity between Third-World countries and to apply the principles of the Non-Aligned Movement, and on the creation of a new international economic order thanks to which developing countries could derive more profit from their national resources, and under better conditions.

The two parties reassert their frank and total support to the efforts of the United Nations and its various organizations to preserve world peace and to further stability and development.

INTERVIEW WITH MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Djibouti LA NATION DE DJIBOUTI in French 17 Jun 82 p 4

[Djibouti Information Agency interview with Mr Moumin Bahdon Farah, minister of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation, date and place not given]

> [Text] On Thursday 10 June, the minister of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation, Moumin Bahdon Farah, left for Rome (via Paris) for an official three days' visit after which he will go to Tunis; prior to his departure, he gave an interview to the Djibouti Information Agency (ADJI), to explain the purpose of his visits to Italy and Tunisia.

[Question] Mr Minister, following an invitation from the Italian government, you are going on an official visit to Rome?

What questions does your delegation plan to discuss with your Italian partners?

[Answer] It goes without saying that the Italian Republic has recognized the Republic of Djibouti at an early date. Diplomatic relations were established right after we gained independence.

I would like to add that Italy has a sound knowledge of the African Horn area, and its presence cannot be ignored, whether in Somalia or in Ethiopia.

Therefore, the people with whom I am going to talk are aware of the problems of our region. By accepting this invitation of the Italian government, my special objectives are to strengthen the political ties between our countries, to give new impetus to our bilateral cooperation which, undoubtedly, can be developed in several directions.

[Question] What results do you expect from this visit to Italy?

[Answer] Considering the friendly relations that exist between our countries, my visit to Italy will make it possible to strengthen our bilateral relations which are the result of the visit to Djibouti of the Italian under-secretary of state. Our information agency is well aware that the outcome of this visit was a statement signed by both parties, in which the domains for cooperation were identified. Let me remind you that these were: geothermal energy, industry, agriculture and health.

[Question] Geothermal energy is destined to play a predominant part in the future of Djibouti's economy. The distinguished scientist, Prof Marinelli, is taking an active part in projects in our country. Will geothermal energy also be at the center of the conversations you will have with the Italian authorities?

[Answer] Certainly, since we lack other raw materials, geothermal energy should play a predominant role in the future of our economy. A national source of energy, it will make it possible for the state to achieve substantial foreign currency savings and to lower the cost of energy in the Republic of Djibouti. In the near future, it will also make possible the industrial development of our Republic. Certainly, the studies made by Professor Marinelli must be continued before we can realize this project. However, I do not intend to center discussions on geothermal energy only; I shall give full attention to the other fields of cooperation.

As I said before, the Italian Republic is fully aware of the situation prevailing in our area and, consequently, it will play a non-negligible part in the activities of the European Economic Community.

At a time when several topics--the European-Arab dialogue or the North-South dialogue--are being debated, we, as an Arab and a Third-World country, must discuss these pertinent questions with the Italian authorities.

It is a fact that the situation which prevails in the Middle East is serious, and this problem will certainly be at the center of our discussions.

[Question] On your way back from Rome, you will stop over in Tunis before coming back to Djibouti. Do you plan to have conversations with Tunisian or Arab League leaders and discuss with them the situation prevailing in Lebanon and the extension of Israel's annexation policy?

[Answer] My visit to Tunisia is intended to strengthen our relations with our sister Republic of Tunisia. A regular and permanent dialogue must be maintained between us.

I shall not fail to discuss with the general secretary of the Arab League the distressing problem which is now confronting us and which results in hardship for our Lebanese and Palestinian brothers due to a criminal invasion. It is urgent for the Arab world to find again its unity in order to confront our common enemy, Israel, and the international opinion, which favors peace and justice, must become aware of the tragedy which is taking place under our very eyes in Lebanon.

EFFECTS OF INCREASING MATERIALISM ON SOCIETY NOTED

Dakar AFRICA in French No 141, May 82 pp 15-17

[Article by Jean-Pierre Challard: "An Example of Direct Democracy"]

[Text] Convened in the form of an open forum, the well-publicized "exchange of views meeting" on Friday, 9 April 1982, to which President Omar Bongo had invited several hundred participants from all the occupational categories, will doubtless be recorded in the annals of Gabonese political life.

Under the impressive vault of the conference hall, the show-piece of the cite du 12 Mars of Libreville, the chief of state, in his own words, "threw the government open" to an audience of about 500 persons without distinction as to rank or function.

Because the topic was hot, the discussion was heated: the principal political leaders were criticized without mercy by the speakers, minor government officials or ordinary merchants, in the course of the debates which did not take a back seat to the congresses of the Gabonese Democratic Party [PDG]. These are congresses during which the rank-and-file activist or the provincial delegate openly confronts governmental bigwigs without hang-ups and denounces flagrant faults, errors or injustices.

Several considerations involving form and substance caused the Gabonese chief of state to literally provoke this face-off between rulers and ruled. "When everything is going well, it is thanks to everybody; when things go badly, it is because of Bongo!" he exclaimed during his introductory remarks. This was a reference to the persistent rumblings and tracts of the underground National Recovery Movement (MORENA) which did not spare the president at a time when, to his mind, the democratization of political and administrative life and the appointment of Leon Mebiame as prime minister had demonstrated his desire for openness.

"I am a man of dialogue," he reminded the audience, in the sense that all criticisms are permitted in Gabon, provided they produce constructive suggestions. The Gabonese Democratic Party continues to be the institutional framework for these changes in objectives and every official, whether he be a parliamentarian or minister, must answer all questions clearly and precisely.

"However," Omar Bongo added quickly, "no parochial criticisms," no facile demagogy, no hidden lies. He lashed out at the recent wave of "incrimination, jealousy and demagogy" which has been increasingly and shamelessly prevalent among his compatriots. Are these the signs of social malaise? Psychosis of individual insecurity? Maladjustment of the traditional structures?

Increasing Alienation

A former activist of the Union of Youth (UJ/PDG), Thomas Franck Eya'a, during the 9 April meeting, expressed his concern over the "lack of political guidance for young people." The chief of state countered this annoying comment by asking how the association of National University students could join the UJ, an essentially political movement, playing the role of driving force, and therefore, in principle, a more solid organization from the ideological and structural standpoints.

The answer of Minister Leon Auge (National Orientation, special party organizations) was stated in plain language: the young Gabonese obstinately turn their backs on the party's propaganda; official publications are used for wrapping paper in the shops; and the national radio is not listened to, while foreign broadcasts readily attract them. This imperviousness is distressing those responsible for official propaganda who feel that this lack of communication is an affront or at least a setback.

Confronted with this dual observation, who will seek and discover the deep-seated reasons for this lack of understanding? It would be easy, but erroneous, to accuse "foreign countries" without naming them, however: the fact is the bush civilization has been fully overtaken by a materialist civilization.

The mass of gadgets, or simply commercial products, has freely and without hindrance penetrated Gabon's market like a tidal wave accompanied by a rise in the people's standard of living. This materialist revolution, which is neither new nor original, has shaken up the customary ways of thinking in a brutal and uncontrolled manner, ways of thinking that for centuries were assured by the tranquility and wisdom of the preceding generations.

Not only do we not listen to "the old people" any longer; but increasingly we treat them with indifference and condescenscion: during the debates on 9 April 1982, a subprefect who is not even 40 years old verbally abused the elderly prefect of Makokou (Ogooue-Ivindo) who had not quietly taken the road to retirement 2 years after reaching the mandatory retirement age.

"Why do outmoded people like this prefect hang on to their positions and prerogatives?" the speaker asked vehemently. "In spite of the reform in the public sector, which properly called for the retirement of older government officials to make positions available to young persons who have graduated from schools and universities...!"

On the other hand, vestiges of tribalism are thwarting the principal task with which President Omar Bongo has busied himself for 15 years, namely national unity. Certainly a successful effort if we measure how far we have come since 1967 but like Penelope's weaving which has to be continually rewoven because prominent persons, out of political ambition, are playing the regional card in the absence of general consensus, to incite the young people to commit clandestine acts.

"The unfortunate part of this process," the chief of state noted, "is that those who write the tracts are 'university types,' that is to say a category which the current government has encouraged to take the most important positions with none debarred. What is more, reportedly there are deputies involved in these underhanded libels: the satirical newspaper PATRIOTE, which is supposed to reflect the government's most precise opinions, made a direct reference to certain parliamentarians in its last issue in April, for whom 'the colors of the chameleon' are handy." "But," Omar Bongo warned during the 9 April debates, "the day they are caught they will change their colors in vain; that will not save them!"

These oratorical jousts generally serve as handy safety valves for tension that is not always visible but which exists in a latent state in a country in the midst of change: one does not move from a bush and agricultural economy into the oil and technological era without paying a price. Gabon is changing rapidly, perhaps too rapidly for its population. As regards agriculture, a sector which has however remained static compared with the priority given to mining, a foreign expert recently questioned the advisability of immediately establishing agroindustrial entities at a time when Gabon is barely emerging from a "cottage economy" of the village type.

People's Complaints

The other daily safety valve, which assumes the guise of friendly but caustic jesting, is Makaya's letter of the day in the newspaper L'UNION. For over a year, small and big have been raked over the coals for their mistakes, their excesses. In reality, the phenomenon of Makaya is tantamount to a collective outlet, as not everyone has the means or opportunity to express himself within the context of the party.

These potshots at Gabonese political life are characteristic of President Omar Bongo's governing style. He has a penchant for direct contact with the people when administrative channels are no longer able to keep up to date. Of course, the government is there to translate the intentions of the leaders and to actualize the desires of the people; however, administrative impediments, personal suspicions and bad information are legion.

Therefore, the chief of state periodically spends weeks touring in the provinces, visiting regional capitals, listening to complaints and patiently explaining the purposes of his acts. According to the prime minister, these complaints are methodically collected, listed and catalogued with a view to finding acceptable solutions for each case, often for each individual. In his opening address to the ordinary session of the National Assembly, Leon Mebiame took the opportunity to emphasize that although solutions had been found complaints continue to be numerous.

"The facts, we want the facts." That is what the Gabonese people seem to be saying in the face of statements made by their leaders.

The questions asked in the Cite du 12 Mars arena on Friday, 9 April, covered such wide-ranging topics as the kilometrage of city streets, provincial roads, wage increases, promotions and bonuses; the questions covered anomalies in local labor contracts which were signed on behalf of expatriates and which miraculously were transformed into material advantages attributable solely to contractual expatriates.

Of what, then, do these complaints consist?

During the 9 April "exchange of views meeting," the speakers seemed to skim over the surface in their demands, and the members of the government, who presented figures and large-scale demonstrations, took every opportunity to scoff at "the deeper meaning" of the questions raised.

However, if we step back a bit, we can easily see that basically all these complaints covered fundamental problems: inadequate or easily violable labor legislation, slowness in reforms in spite of proclaimed good intentions, "oversights" such as pensions for veterans, road construction begun but not finished and districts too quickly developed without services in Libreville. In short, the gamut of problems and concerns of all existing nations.

The Euphoria of Oil

But why such a fuss about problems which sooner or later will be resolved? Without a doubt we must seek the reasons for such impatience and irritation in both current conditions and Gabonese character traits.

For several years, with the help of the euphoria of the oil "boom," the image of a rich Gabon went to our heads: oil galore, uranium, manganese and timber, to cite only the basic raw materials. Until the sudden swelling of cities such as Port-Gentil and Libreville, Gabonese consumers were practically self-sufficient as regards their food needs.

Cities such as Libreville shot up from 50,000 to 180,000 inhabitants, as reported by the last demographic census. Port-Gentil, a sleepy town bitten by the oil bug, now has over 60,000 inhabitants. These cities have very large foreign communities which, boasting of their high salaries, demand living conditions comparable to those of Europe or the big African metropolises. What is more, the whims and demands of these expatriate workers, who do not receive incomes half as large in their countries of origin, are not always justifiable: the nouveau-riche mentality does not only affect the well-to-do Gabonese class.

By means of Boeing 747 flights from Bordeaux, the Canary Islands or Casablanca, we import fruits and fresh vegetables at premium prices, luxury apparel bearing the most prestigious labels, big American gas-guzzling cars since "small Japanese cars" and classic European automobiles are inadequate marks of "standing."

Regularly, major jewelers such as Mauboussin, Cartier and Perrin exhibit in the luxury hotels of the capital pearl necklaces and diamond rivieres which are the equivalent of 200 months' wages of a rank-and-file laborer being paid 50,000 CFA francs, even though he is among the highest paid in French-speaking Africa.

Ministers on the Grill

Ostentation is not exempt from danger, as it incites envy and imitation. Silk gowns are replacing the traditional printed cotton dresses; and President Omar Bongo was outraged by mothers who, choosing luxury and comfort, were going so far as to push their young daughters toward "handsome gentlemen" with gold rings and generous wallets.

Prostitution, which was an activity practically absent or at least discreet 10 years ago, began to flourish, then to spread to the central districts and hotels. The chief of state did not fail to taunt those young ladies of questionable virtue who frequent the parking lot of the "Rapontchombo" Hotel at nightfall in search of lonely businessmen.

The conclusion of the Gabonese chief of state, after this marathon of political interchange lasting six and one-half hours, consisted of several clear ideas. In the first place, the lack of communication between rulers and ruled: information is not passed between members of the government who initiate reforms or decisions whose meaning and scope escape the people most of the time.

Consequently, President Omar Bongo has decided that the televised program "The Files of the RTG" (Gabonese Radio-Television) should resume its previous schedule. Every minister in turn will be on the grill to explain his positions and not to describe in dismal tones the organizational chart of his department which the televiewer does not understand and does not give a hoot about the fact that this ministry is autonomous or that another ministry handles National Education and Popular Education simultaneously.

If money is the sinews of war, persuasion is the sinews of political consensus. A cliche, perhaps, but one which is worth its weight in truth in a country in which traditional motivations are falling one by one in deference to new gods: social success, material comfort, travels abroad, etc.

SUCCESS IN ACHIEVING SUGAR PRODUCTION GOAL REPORTED

Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 8 Jun 82 p 12

[Article by Hien Solo: "SODESUCRE: With 166,000 Tons This Year, 97 Percent of Production Objectives Are Achieved"]

> [Text] This year, 166,000 tons of sugar were produced by the country's 6 refineries, which represents 97 percent of the objectives set at the start of the campaign. However, according to Mr Kouame Kra, general manager of SODESUCRE [Company for the Development of Sugar Cane Plantations, and the Industrialization and Marketing of Sugar], the objectives could have been exceeded by far, had it not been for occasional cash shortages which brought many plants to a stop for lack of oil products. Also, according to Mr Kouame Kra, the campaign started late at certain refineries because of the delayed arrival of spare parts. As a result, the end of the campaign was disturbed by the rainy season.

In addition to these problems, for which responsibility lies elsewhere, there were some management problems. The latter will be reviewed in detail for a week in Borotou-Koro, by the refinery managers and their close associates, the general managers. They will take stock of the operations of the past campaign and reexamine the difficulties encountered, the problems that arose, the solutions that were used, so as to draw conclusions and lessons which will make it possible to contemplate the future more serenely. The meeting will take place in committees and the conclusions will be published at the end of the week, during a ceremony chaired by the minister of Commerce, Mr Akoakan Edjampan Thiemele.

Last Saturday, the minister of Plan and Industry, Mr Maurice Seri Gnoleba, accompanied by his colleagues, Mr Bra Kanon, minister of Agriculture, and Mr Lamine Fadika, minister of Maritime Affairs, opened the meeting.

On this occasion, the minister of Plan and Industry pointed out the importance of agriculture which, he recalled, underlies our country's development, in spite of the low prices paid for agricultural products. The future of the Ivory Coast, he added, is based on the processing of our own raw materials and, in this respect, SODESUCRE, he said, provides an example, the induced effects of which must be developed.

Valorization of By-Products

In the intervention he made to present SODESUCRE, its results and the importance of the Borotou-Koro meeting, Mr Kouame Kra said that "in view of the difficulties encountered in marketing brown sugar and its by-products, for which world prices have dropped sharply, one possible response would be to proceed further toward production of the finished product. That would mean refining brown sugar to produce white sugar, and also valorizing by-products locally, e.g. by using molasses to produce yeast, alcohol, cattle feed, etc."

This is undoubtedly a safe way to achieve profitability of our refineries, especially when it is known that, in addition to low prices on international markets, the Ivory Coast has not yet managed to secure quotas under the CEE/ACP [European Economic Community/African, Caribbean and Pacific countries] convention. And we must expect huge problems for our country when cruising speed has been achieved, i.e. when we can produce over 250,000 tons per year.

We are not yet there. Better, this year SODESUCRE has managed to reduce production costs per kilogram from 185 francs to 173 francs (exclusive of financial and amortization costs). But this is not the only reason for satisfaction: we must also mention the increased number of native cadres and their improved awareness and interest in their jobs. According to the general manager of SODESUCRE, this is essential and is a sure proof of the success of the Ivorian sugar-production plan which, in spite of this year's satisfactory results, shows internal deficiencies which Mr Kouame Kra did not conceal, feeling as he did that the Borotou-Koro seminary was just the place where to examine them in great detail.

Indeed, Mr Kra explained, "our personnel are not always fully qualified for the tasks that are entrusted to them. Besides, they are not always fully aware of realities.

- Concerning the management of SODESUCRE equipment, we have noted with regret the lack of care in maintaining it.

Therefore, action must be taken quickly to increase the personnel's training and awareness.

- Considering inventory management, there are many deficiencies. There is still no follow-up on consumption, nor on orders.

The immediate consequence is a high inventory which is intolerable in a modern enterprise during a time of crisis."

Mr Kouame Kra assured the authorities that measures are being taken to put an end to these conditions, and that the situation will soon improve.

Concerning control as a whole, SODESUCRE General Management recognizes that control has not always been what it should. As a result, there was a certain casualness which may have been detrimental to the company.

Therefore, Mr Kra stated, there again measures are being taken, especially to strengthen the internal audit force which, in addition to the manager, now consists of six agents. The frequency of their missions at the refineries and at headquarters, including the general manager's office, will be increased. Corrective action will immediately follow their reports and recommendations. Their immunity and independence from other agents will be increased. In particular, their action will be extended to headquarters, the financial manager's office, the purchasing department and the distribution department. At refineries, increased importance will be given to accounting, inventory management and personnel management.

Borotou-Koro - An Example of Dynamism

To achieve this year's production of 166,000 tons of sugar, SODESUCRE crushed 1,785,000 tons of sugar cane, i.e. 8 percent more than last year, representing a sugar production increase of 31,000 tons, i.e. 23 percent. According to Mr Kouame Kra, the difference between these two percentages shows a very high increase in the saccharose yield since, this year, 9.3 tons of sugar were obtained from every 100 tons of cane, against 8.15 tons last year.

The greatest cause for satisfaction this year is, of course, Ferke I, the output of which keeps increasing, but, above all, it is Borotou-Koro, a refinery for which one would not have given much. In fact, after a very bad campaign during its first year in operation, the Borotou-Koro refinery has now yielded unprecedented results and, relatively speaking, results that exceed those obtained by any other refinery.

This is because its management has regained strength. On the one hand, the last inter-campaign maintenance operations, although late, made for a good upkeep of the production equipment, especially of the plant which, according to technicians, has achieved record technical performances. On the other hand, the personnel is increasingly motivated to improve the results, and is helped in this by an improvement in the quality of the vegetable raw material due to a good irrigation during the campaign.

For all these reasons, sugar production reached 39,460 tons, compared with an objective of 34,200 tons, and molasses production 12,700 tons, compared with an objective of 14,000 tons, the refinery yield exceeding by far 11.34 tons. These are enviable results which deserve recognition when one is aware of the commendable efforts of the young refinery manager, Georges Bonnebaud, and his associates in taking up the challenge in spite of prophets of doom who were consistently pessimistic about Borotou-Koro, although this refinery possesses human resources capable of the best. At any rate, the results of the last campaign have proved that much.

MINISTER AKOTO YAO ON EDUCATION IN LCD'S, IVORY COAST

Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 8 Jun 82 pp 8-9

[Article by Kebe Yacouba: "Is an Underdeveloped Country an Uneducated Country? The Ivorian School System Must Not Become a Kind of Commercial Enterprise, Minister Paul Akoto Yao Stated in His Conference"]

[Text] Is an underdeveloped country an undereducated country? Minister Paul Yao Akoto kept his word not to go into intellectual and philosophical speculations about the subject of his conference because, he believes, "it would be improprer to approach this problem by celebrating our culture, although it is real and must be nourished and kept alive." In other words, according to the speaker, an underdeveloped country is not necessarily an undereducated country, contrary to a statement made by a Frenchman, Jean Fourastie. The actual question which developing countries must solve today, Mr Akoto stated, is that of matching their economic and social development and the development of their educational system. Therefore, from the outset, he attempted to parallel the efforts of nations to emerge from underdevelopment in a manner consistent with their aspirations, and the initiatives taken in the field of education. To make his point clear, the minister of National Education stressed the experiments made in some developing countries and backed this up with figures and references; he then considered the problems with which Ivory Coast is faced in the field of education.

The speaker first remarked that, if we compare two maps of the world, one showing the economic situation of nations, the other their rates of literacy, we can make an observation which could lead us to believe that underdevelopment is one of the many consequences of undereducation, or that undereducation will of necessity bring about underdevelopment. The map of illiteracy is the same as the map of poverty in the world. Most countries of the South show considerable deficiencies in the field of education.

The minister of National Education emphasized that, in the past 20 years, most such countries of the South have undertaken what amounts to a revolution in the field of education by devoting to it a significant part of their incomes. Third-World countries, Mr Akoto remarked, do not all have the same problems.

Whereas the poorest among them are making gigantic efforts to solve their economic problems trhough education, the richest see their development efforts hampered or delayed by inadequacies in their educational systems.

Spectacular Figures

He mentioned the example of Iran which, in 1975, in spite of its oil resources, had to postpone large projects because of a lack of trained personnel. At about the same time, in Saudi Arabia, Mr Akoto stated, foreigners held 68 percent of supervisory and cadre positions. Closer to us, Nigeria had the sad reputation of being "an equipment graveyard" due to its lack of trained personnel to maintain modern equipment. The minister concluded that these countries "made the sudden experience that an influx of riches and durable goods does not constitute true development, unless it is backed up by the intellectual and technical capabilities of a population educated enough to control them, and this is all the more true of other, less fortunate, countries which, nevertheless, have understood that education is a prerequisite for development." With this conclusion, the speaker meant to stress the importance of education, at least of training, for the future of a country.

Aware of this pressing necessity, developing countries have engaged into what amounts to a fight against illiteracy. As a result, on the African continent, the proportion of young people from 6 to 23 who are enrolled in an educational institution has increased from 32.3 percent in 1975 to 41.8 percent in 1980.

In 1950, Mr Akoto said, the student bodies of developing countries totalled 930,000, i.e. 10 percent of the world total. In 1972, they numbered 7.6 million, i.e. 25 percent of the world total. In 1980, they represent about 30 percent of the total number of students enrolled in universities or colleges. These figures are quite spectacular. They prove that the countries of the South intend to overcome their underdevelopment through the training of men and women. Unfortunately, the minister of National Education also emphasized, during the same period Third-World population experienced an extraordinary growth which compromised these countries' efforts in the field of education and increased the differences between them.

The speaker then considered the variety of conditions existing in developing countries, using as examples countries like Egypt, India, Pakistan and Tunisia, which have become suppliers of trained manpower, whereas others, especially those which got rich fast thanks to an influx of oil dollars and to their smaller populations, are now lacking trained personnel. In the Gulf States, for instance, many supervisory jobs are held by Egyptians who, in their own country, would probably be "unemployed intellectuals." In this area, Mr Akoto Yao remarked, the services of Indian and Pakistani cadres are appreciated and, as a result, they find openings which they might not always find in their native countries.

Some comments from the speaker: "This may appear to be a sound distribution of needs and abilities; nevertheless, you can imagine how much financial and human resources have been lost or poorly used in the process." Evaluating various school system reforms, all (or almost all) of which have been applied in the Third World, Minister Akoto pointed out a characteristic they have in common: "All these reforms were intended to create closer ties between schools and the job market." He discussed the reform of the Indian educational system where the secondary school system is now entirely centered on vocational training, the objective being to produce many mid-level technicians and to reduce considerably the number of admissions to universities and colleges. With different methods, the People's Republic of China is doing about the same thing, the speaker underlined. As for Singapore, it derived its inspiration from the "Japanese model," and instituted "a drastic selection system at all levels." As for Africa, Mr Paul Akoto Yao gave as an example the Tanzanian experiment with UJAMAA [expansion unknown] villages, where the elementary school has become a community education center which is supposed to fulfill the needs of the community as a whole. The objective of the Tanzanian educational system is that the people should be educated strictly to fulfill the requirements of the rural society in which they will have to live.

The Ivorian Educational System

The various experiments made here and there prompted the minister of National Education to ponder over the relations that exist between the educational system and the production system: Should the production system impose its priorities, and the school provide training strictly to meet the requirements of the economy? Should the educational system have authority to develop independently, according to its own standards and objectives? Finally, is it possible to organize some interaction between the two systems? These questions led the speaker to consider the specific problems of the Ivorian educational system. To evaluate this system, he chose to start by quoting figures: in 1960, 200,406 students were enrolled in elementary schools, 8,326 in secondary schools, and 145 in colleges and universities. Fifteen years later, in 1975, there were 672,707 students in elementary schools, 102,387 in secondary schools, and 8,000 in universities and colleges. In 1980, there were 1 million students in elementary schools, 200,000 in secondary schools, and 16,000 in universities and colleges.

In 20 years, the number of students was multiplied by 5 in elementary schools, by 12 in secondary schools, and by 55 in universities and colleges. These figures need no comments; they are the result of the economic expansion which the Ivory Coast experienced during these years. The efforts made by the state were supplemented by those of rural communities which, besides, are still financing the construction of primary schools, which often requires considerable sacrifices.

The country's efforts have not been restricted to increasing the number of students, Mr Paul Akoto Yao noted, for the content of our school programs has changed considerably during that period, our constant care being to adapt it to Ivorian realities. Among other things, he mentioned the School Television Service in elementary schools, which he justified by saying that it made it possible to ensure the transition to a mass educational system under difficult conditions. No matter what one may think of television as an educational media, the minister of National Education remarked, some of its contributions are here to stay because they represent a window on the outside world and help integrate schools into society. According to the speaker, there have been reforms in secondary schools, especially with respect to the French, history and geography programs, and the introduction of physics, chemistry and technology in middle schools. As far as university and colleges are concerned, Mr Akoto mentioned the creation of structures which are directly "linked" to the job market, including schools like the ENSTP [expansion unknown], the INSET [National Institute for Advanced Technical Studies], the ENSA [National College of Agronomy] and the ENS [National Advanced School]. We should not forget, he said, that the Faculty of Medicine, the School of Pharmacy, the Institute for Odonto-Stomatology, the University Vocational Training Center (CIFOP), are producing graduates who have no trouble finding suitable jobs.

Interaction Between the Two Systems

Concerning the training of educators, Mr Akoto indicated that his department is making satisfactory progress toward Ivorization. Thus, for the school-year 1981-82, 2,140 out of 2,781 teachers of literature were Ivorians, i.e. 76 percent. This proportion is of only 21 percent among science teachers.

The minister stated that, considering the efforts accomplished, it is hard to say that the educational system has developed independently with no concern for the needs of the economy. The Ivory Coast, he said, has not placed its educational system under the yoke of its production system. Rather, he added, there was an interaction between the two systems.

Minister Akoto would have been accused of complacency and of blowing his own horn if he had not pointed to the great evils which are affecting our educational system and are a cause of concern for all Ivorians. Among these evils, the speaker mentioned two: the difficulties of admission in secondary schools, and the problem of graduate employment. Concerning admission into the lower grade of secondary schools, the minister of National Education unambiguously stated that, even if there were more such schools, we must realize that "for a long time to come, the general and technical secondary schools will not be in a position to admit all students having completed the fifth elementary grade." "We are confronted with a problem of capacity, for we now have one place for every six or seven applicants."

According to Mr Akoto, the creation of agricultural training centers, recommended by the Seventh Congress of the Party, would remedy the dramatic situation of tens of thousands of children who cannot be admitted in high schools.

Speaking of "unemployed inellectuals," Minister Akoto said that, of the 800 who filed an application with the Ministry of Labor, some 300 still have no jobs, essentially law and economic science graduates. Whereas the problem is serious, the speaker said, it is exaggerated, considering these figures, to refer to the university as "an unemployment factory."

Mr Akoto Yao underlined that the government is aware of these deficiencies and that, for that reason, the "commission on education at the development department of the Political Bureau" suggested to redefine the role of higher education in the Ivory Coast. In addition, the idea of creating new options to supplement the specialized training provided by the University, of offering credits for Mechanization and Computers or for Statistics, the organization of on-the-job training periods, according to the minister, prove that there is a real desire to transform the University so as to adapt it to the requirements of our economy.

Selection Through Orientation

In conclusion, the speaker stressed the necessity of preserving a selective admission system for university-level colleges. As far as admission into faculties is concerned, he recalled the spirit of the orientation system:

"We must," he said, "replace the former system of selection through failure during the course of studies--resulting in heavy financial and human costs to the nation--by a system of selection through orientation which will take into account both the abilities of the students and the admission capacity. This should make it possible to lower the rate of failure at the University and facilitate access to the job market."

Making a personal reflection on an educational system that would be too closely linked to the job market, the minister of National Education said that it would be "dangerous" to attempt a total adhesion of general education and initiation into the job market. The school would then become a sort of enterprise, and the enterprise would become a school. In the Ivory Coast, Mr Akoto remarked, "we did not wish to be that radical, our political philosophy demands that we progress as safely as possible and preserve that precious possession, freedom."

After the minister's speech, an interesting debate was expected, because of the high quality of the speaker and of most of those who had come (teachers and students). However, there was no debate worth mentioning. The few interventions made actually dealt only with futilities.

Yet, that speech could have given rise to many interesting questions.

ANEEROOD JUGNAUTH PLEDGES TO WORK IN COUNTRY'S INTEREST

Port Louis HORIZONS NOUVEAUX in French 6-12 Jun 82 pp 6-7, 11

[Interview with Aneerood Jugnauth, future prime minister, In Vacoas; date not given]

[Excerpts] On the eve of the elections, HORIZONS NOUVEAUX offers readers an interview with the man who, at the highest level, will personify the change toward which the entire island of Mauritius will move on Friday.

We had left for the purpose of meeting the individual whose photograph is hung on walls all over the country in person. In Vacoas, we met a man very different from the official portrait, which doubly surprised us.

First of all, we were surprised by his simplicity, absolutely astonishing these days, especially on the part of a person who will soon occupy the highest post in the country. While ministers who are the so-called "best losers" act like the heirs of divine right and while the lowest appointed commissioner views himself as the legal (and moral?) owner of public property, Aneerood Jugnauth lives peacefully, simply, despite the role he will assume in a few days. He lives in a healthy way, without thereby underestimating what lies ahead.

Our second surprise was the frankness of his language, a frankness that might seem shocking, without being provocative, and that emerged throughout the interview. Instead of twisting or ignoring a perhaps embarrassing question, Aneerood Jugnauth stands firm and answers calmly and forcefully. As our readers will see, his answers might not please everyone and might even give rise to controversy, but they have the merit of being put forth with frankness and sincerity.

These are two qualities which, added to the profound simplicity of our interview, are absolutely rare values at the Government Palace today. We therefore present the interview with Aneerood Jugnauth, future prime minister, in which one can discern -- especially in comparison with what we have known in the past -- a new tone, new frankness, already two small proofs of change.

[Question] Mr Jugnauth, every day that passes, and especially since the beginning of the election campaign on television, confirms the fact that you will be the country's future prime minister. What is your concept of the role of prime minister?

[Answer] Do you want my personal views on the question? For me, a prime minister serves an entire country, a people, the entire Mauritian nation, without any distinction as to community, race or color. In such a context, I cannot agree with Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, who has made statements hinting that this country belongs to a single community and that the government is also of a single community. I deny that assertion. Next, as prime minister, I will have the duty, after the elections, of creating the unity of the Mauritian nation, to ensure that every Mauritian feels that he is part of the nation, that he has rights like others, and that justice and the law protect all Mauritians equally. Then there will be my responsibilities with respect to problems affecting our society: unemployment, the economic crisis....

[Question] What are your priorities in that area?

[Answer] My priorities.... First of all, I would create that indispensable unity between all Mauritians after this election campaign, which will certainly leave scars. I would get the economy back on its feet, diversify our agriculture, create productive jobs, make the necessary changes in the constitution in order to make Mauritius a republic, restore partial elections, organize municipal and village elections as quickly as possible. Those are my priorities.

[Question] The MMM/PSM [Mauritian Socialist Party] intends to create a new ministerial post that is not contained in the constitution, that of deputy prime minister. What would the duties of your assistant be?

[Answer] It is true that the constitution speaks only about the prime minister and his prerogatives, but we in the MMM-PSM thought that it was necessary for the prime minister to be backed by a deputy. In addition, he will replace the prime minister in the case of the latter's absence.

[Question] Your interview published in the MAURICIEN of 27 May aroused quite a bit of reaction, especially on the left. Your statement concerning the policy of extending a hand to Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam as a sign of national recognition was particularly irritating to some. Within such a context, must we, in the name of reconciliation, forget the antinational role of Ramgoolam, specifically in the case of the sale of Diego Garcia, for example?

[Answer] We publicly denounced Ramgoolam for his responsibility for the sale of part of our territory. History has recorded that shameful transaction, which can never be erased. But we also say that we have no intention of following a policy of bitterness or engaging in a witch hunt. Reconciliation must exist.

[Question] Does that mean that an MMM-PSM government could forget -- still within this spirit of national reconciliation -- the underhanded dealings for which many ministers are responsible?

[Answer] Listen, it is obvious that some persons will necessarily have to answer for some of their past actions. But you can certainly understand why I cannot, at this stage, tell you who will answer for what. Not until we have opened the files will we know what has to be done. At that time, if there are sanctions to apply, we shall do so.

[Question] The MMM-PSM is now asking voters to give them a better than two-thirds majority in Parliament in order to be able to make constitutional amendments, particularly regarding nationalizations. What do you expect to do in that area if, unfortunately, the alliance should not obtain that two-thirds majority?

[Answer] In that case, we would have to begin with the current priorities. Then we would have a public debate on the matter of nationalizations and we would file a motion aimed at amending the constitution with the Legislative Assembly. We would then see the reaction of the opposition, which at that time would have to face up to its responsibilities. Then, if necessary, we would be willing to go back to the voters on precise issues.

[Question] Do you intend to use the referendum formula in order to consult the people on these issues?

[Answer] Absolutely not. No, if necessary, we would go back to the voters for new elections. However, this does not mean that with the first difficulties, we would hold elections. We have an enormous amount of work to do. We have a program and commitments to respect. In the beginning, we must show our serious we are, demonstrate our capabilities. We will have to convince public opinion. Then, later, when the time comes, we shall go to the voters, if need be, on questions we may not have settled. But if we obtain the majority we are asking for from the people, we shall move rather quickly toward nationalizations.

[Question] The MMM-PSM has spoken of naming persons to head the regional administrations....

[Answer] That would only be a temporary measure while awaiting the municipal and village elections, which will take place rapidly. I hope that we will be able to organize them within 3 months. But in the meantime, we want to appoint persons to administrative positions. That is why we want, during this short transitional period, to have the cities administered by politically neutral persons.

[Question] Do you not believe that while awaiting the 11th, the municipal commissions will step up their pace of their underhanded dealings?

[Answer] The regional administration and the country are now on their knees. It is bankruptcy!

[Question] On 11 June, the MMM-PSM will inherit an administration accustomed to working at a certain speed. How do you expect to speed up that pace...in order to go hand in hand with the change?

[Answer] The change in administrative speed will depend on each minister, on his determination to bring about a change in thinking in the sector for which he will be responsible. That will also depend on the heads of the departments, of the ministries, the PS [Socialist Party] and the PAS [expansion unknown], and so on. It will depend on the cooperation we receive.

[Question] Do you fear a possible administrative boycott?

[Answer] Listen, based on the principle that the civil servant is neutral, that risk should not exist. The civil servant serves the government, not a party or an individual. I hope that that principle will be put into practice. I am convinced that the civil servants are sufficiently mature and that we shall have no problems of that nature.

[Question] The right is loyal only to its profits. It is to be feared that the right will seek, by every possible means, to upset the future leftist government. What would your attitude be if tomorrow the right should organize a management lockout?

[Answer] We have said and repeated and do so despite the fact that some people are not happy, that we want to head the country through dialogue. We know the country's situation, we know what difficulties we shall have to face and we do not want to act as dictators, because we have a philosophy and a vision of the Mauritius of the future. We want to achieve change, but as we have always said, amidst stability. We must take the country's economic situation and the people's aspirations into consideration. We shall have to bring about change by avoiding the type of sabotage you have just mentioned. We hope that that type of thing will not come about.

[Question] If that type of thing were to come about, you would take measures.

[Answer] No matter who governs in this case, they must take action.

We do not want to arrive at that type of situation. We are going to do everything possible to avoid it, but if ever such situations should exist, we would be forced to take the necessary measures as a responsible government.

[Question] In militant leftist milieus, they are beginning to criticize the MMM-PSM for reassuring the bourgeoisie by making concessions to it. What are your feelings on this?

[Answer] We have made no concessions and we have none to make. We merely have an ideal toward which we are moving, but which we cannot attain overnight. That ideal will be attained only through systematic work.

[Question] We are a few days away from the elections. What do you think of the election campaign?

[Answer] Our campaign is perfect, peaceful, and is moving along without disorder, with respect for the adversary. Naturally, there are schemes to make people believe that a given candidate was the victim of our supporters, all in order to make people believe in tension that does not exist!

[Question] In 1976, at the time of the television campaign, the PT [Labor Party] dropped "election bombs" at the last minute, such as free education. There are some rumors to the effect that the MMM-PSM is announcing popular measures in one of the last programs of the campaign. Is there a basis for such rumors?

[Answer] Everything that we had to announce, we did so long ago in our program. Our cards are on the table and we have no "surprises" to announce. And we shall engage in no last-minute demagogy.

[Question] With the victory now won, the militants note with surprise that the bourgeois who were so recently fiercely antichange are now well-placed in the MMM, while certain others expect to enjoy personal advantages.

[Answer] How many of our adversaries yesterday have come to our philosophy! How many have become good members! If we thought as some do, the MMM would now be only a tiny group. With that way of thinking, we could not now lay a claim to power. Whether or not our sympathizers are bourgeois, they are above all Mauritians 100 percent and they have their place in this country. We have to head a country in the interest of everyone. We are going to preserve the independence of the institutions so that the meritocracy will triumph. I cannot understand the reaction of those militants.

[Question] Are you not afraid that your adversaries will take advantage of the latest demagogic measures during the final days of the campaign?

[Answer] The campaign of our adversaries is based on demagogy. There are many examples: unemployment benefits, the creation of jobs. There is no doubt that they will use demagogy, but the Mauritian people are too intelligent to get caught. And the young people know that last-minute offers will not lead them far. Young people know that we need and serious and planned change in order for there to be a lasting and not temporary improvement.

[Question] You have just spoken of temporary employment. Some persons newly hired by the government anxiously wonder whether with an MMM-PSM government, they do not risk losing their jobs.

[Answer] We have said this everywhere: We want to protect jobs, but there are many that are not productive. We in the MMM-PSM are going to rechannel certain jobs that are totally unproductive for the time being. In contrast, we want to get the economy back on its feet, create jobs and absorb unemployment little by little, until we have completely eliminated it. I guarantee that no one will be fired.

[Question] In the partial municipal elections in Rose Hill in 1979, you made a statement reprinted in the press. You said, after the defeat of the MMM, that the voters had no political maturity. Does that still hold true?

[Answer] Be careful! I would note that the phrase concerned a particular group of voters in a particular election. In that precise context, I maintain what I said and am not afraid to say it. I delivered that phrase with respect to certain persons, persons who had helped the MMM win in the 1977 municipal elections in Rose Hill and who then expected rewards, personal advantages. Those people then came to ask us favors and we, the MMM, had the courage to tell them that we did not follow such policies. Our team governed the city in the interest of its inhabitants, which disappointed those people, who then waged a campaign against us and supported our rivals in the partial municipal election. I am categorical on that point. I engage in active politics to serve the country, not to serve myself.

[Question] Your political enemies do not hesitate to use communal arguments within the framework of their campaign. Do you believe that the Mauritian voters are still sensitive to that type of language?

[Answer] Our adversaries are lower than low. Not only do they say that I insult the Hindus, that I am against certain castes -- which is totally false -- but they do worse than that. At private meetings, they take my family as targets: my wife and my daughter, of whom the worst things are said. I am convinced that the Mauritian people are clear-sighted enough to find the truth amidst their vileness and especially, to realize the purpose behind all the attacks.

[Question] Some political observers speak of a possible last-minute alliance between the PAN [expansion unknown] and the PMSD [Mauritian Social Democratic Party] in order to bar the way to the MMM-PSM. What is your opinion on that matter?

[Answer] For us in the MMM-PSM, things are clear: PMSD, PT, RPL [Rally for Progress and Freedom], etc., etc.: It is all the same thing; it is the right. However, there were personality conflicts that prevented them from agreeing and Duval found himself outside the main alliance. There was especially the opposition between the Boolell clan, supported by Duval, and that of Ringadoo, supported by Jagatsingh. Ringadoo played his cards and won; that is all.

But nothing about the right would surprise me. For me, whoever elects Duval, Ramgoolam, Booleel, Ringadoo, Francois: It's all the same thing. I would not be at all surprised if an "arrangement" should be made on the eve of the elections.

[Question] In conclusion, Aneerood Jugnauth, what is your message to the Mauritians on the eve of the elections?

[Answer] I am asking the Mauritian people not to go into the elections blindly. Before voting, I am asking them to look back at everything they have had to suffer and accept over the past 5 years. I am asking them to look at the situation the country is in, the situation into which the Labor government and its allies has taken it. I am asking the people to reflect, to think whether the outgoing government has worked in the country's interest, if people think that the Labor Party and its allies can serve the interests of the masses in the years to come, then I, Aneerood Jugnauth, am the first to tell those people to vote for that ticket.

But if the people believe that there is no hope with the rightist alliance and if they understand that change and the future are on the side of the MMM-PSM, then I am asking for a straight-line vote for our ticket, for all our candidates, without any distinction as to color, community or caste. I am asking the people of Mauritius to vote for an ideal, for a program: for change.

OUTLOOK FOR INDEPENDENCE NEGOTIATIONS CALLED GLOOMY

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 21 Jun 82 pp 1-2

[Editorial]

[Text] This newspaper will be the first to admit that the SWA settlement process is like a yo-yo — promising the one day, threatening the next.

Last week we expressed considerable optimism about a settlement because considerable optimism was expressed by all the parties to the dispute.

This week however the yo-yo seems to be on the down.

Main reason is the MPLA's standpoints that the withdrawal of the 18 000 Cuban troops in Angola must not be tied to a Namibian settlement while it is also argued that the presence of the Cubans in Angola is the product of an MPLA-Cuban bilateral agreement and has nothing to do with anyone else.

This is surely a serious sticking point.

The MPLA understandably will not want to be caught with its pants down by a surprise SA strike into Angola once the implementation of the independence issue is under way (not that the South Africans would exploit the situation.)

And if its not the South Africans, the MPLA certainly doesn't want to be caught in the same way by Dr Jonas Savimbi's Unita movement; the MPLA knowing that Unita is already advancing militarily by the day, morally backed by the South African, Americans and others.

True, the US has put some attractive carrots under the MPLA's nose, the MPLA would like Swapo as its neighbour in Namibia and it would like to be relieved of the SADF and Unita strikes in southern Angola, but at what price?

Besides, it is unlikely that the Soviets, with vested interests in an MPLA-controlled Angola, would agree to risking the withdrawal of the Cubans and as such would probably put considerable pressure on the top decision-making body of the MPLA to think twice about its actions.

And if the MPLA concurs with such thinking and then decides not to ask the Cubans to leave, then we have these questions:

- Will Swapo still risk the election?
- Will the other Frontline states side with the MPLA and Swapo if the latter also decides to remain allied to the MPLA?
- And what alternatives will the Western five then seek?
- And will SA and all the other parties agree to those alternatives?

No doubt, some or all of these questions will be answered in the New York discussions during the next week or two involving all the parties to the dispute (the internal parties being excluded).

On balance, however, the outlook (as for now) is gloomy.

PORT EXPANSION PROJECT DESCRIBED

Saint-Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 27, 28 May 82

[Article by Alain Dreneau: "The Site of the Future Port Is Getting Busy. The Curtain Is About To Rise"]

[27 May 82 p 10]

> [Text] The curtain is about to rise on the port construction site, a large semicircular "stage" located between the highway that leads to the center of the town, the ZUP [zone scheduled for priority housing development] and the shore. The "show" which is about to begin will last at least three years. It will be the largest construction site Reunion has ever known. When 480 million francs have been invested and 9 million cubic meters of earth removed, modern facilities will come into being: the island's new port.
> Exactly, what will these huge operations consist of? What is the construction site schedule? What large secondary facilities will be provided? TEMOIGNAGES will briefly answer these and some other questions in a series of articles which begins today.

The major operations to be completed during these three years on the construction site will be the following:

- digging of the basins both above and under water;

- construction of the quays;

- construction of two sea walls to protect the port entrance.

Digging the Basins

Initially, stretches of water were to have been obtained by the traditional dredging method: the dredge enters through the sea and digs as it moves forward. The Dutch are the leaders when it comes to this method, and their assistance was required some 10 years ago when the port was enlarged to the south.

However, the successful bidder for the contract (see "Who Will Do What?" below) has decided to use a different method, more economical and better adapted to the stony ground of Plaine-des-Galets. In fact, all digging will be done from the dry land.

Underwater digging will be done with draglines, i.e. large cranes equipped with buckets. The method consists in throwing the bucket to the end of the crane boom and bringing it back by means of a cable when it is full. Each throw of the bucket makes it possible to bring back 8-10 cubic meters of earth, i.e. approximately 20 tons.

A 70-Meter Long Boom

The two cranes which will be used for the job are true monsters, with booms 60-70 meters long. Each of them includes a power station and a central hydraulic unit (to control all the jacks).

The first crane arrived the day before yesterday at the port of Pointe-des-Galets on board the Ville-de-Genes. Unassembled of course. Its assembly will require no less than two full months; that gives you an idea of its size!

The port construction site will also include less spectacular and more traditional digging operations, viz. all digging above water-level will be done by heavy trucks.

At times, it will be necessary to go down from the 8-9 meter mark to water-level (1 meter mark), the crane and its bucket doing the rest so that the bottom of the future basins will lie at the -13 meter mark.

The digging will last as long as work on the site. The opening of the channel (requiring the removal of 250 thousand cubic meters of earth) will be done when on-site work is almost completed, by the Digging Service Corps working under the direction of the contractor.

Earth removal by trucks is scheduled to start in July. The crane will start digging as soon as it is assembled, early in August. It will not accomplish its termite work blindly, but methodically, starting with a huge 500-meter long trench at the site of the future quay.

Construction of the Quay

The construction of the quay is the second largest operation on the site. The prefabrication of the quay elements will start at the same time as the excavation.

The contractor for the concrete work (see "Who Will Do What?" below) is already at work. For the past few days, car drivers following the port shore have been puzzled by a large strangely-shaped wall. This is the future grading station for the materials that will be used to make concrete. A first concrete unit is also being assembled. A second one will soon be installed. They will provide all the concrete required for the quay and sea-wall elements.

The prefabrication of hollow elements for the future quay will start in July when tests and adjustments are completed. The quay will be installed starting early in 1983. It will then wait until the port is filled, in 1985, to welcome the first ships, ships that are too large to enter the present port.

Who Will Do What?

The project is owned by the state. The prime contractor is the Departmental Directorate of Equipment (DDE). To follow up and coordinate all the operations, the DDE has created a special department within its Maritime Division, which is headed by Mr LeClech.

This new department, which will last only as long as on-site operations, is the Port Expansion Subdivision, headed by Mr Choux, and with a staff of some 20 people.

The successful bidder for the overall contract is GTMI (Marseilles International Public Works). It has selected two subcontractors:

- Reunion Travaux (Tomi Group) for all the concrete work;

- Bourbon Transports for the transportation of almost all the materials.

[28 May 82 p 12]

In addition to the digging of the basins and the construction of the quays (see TEMOIGNAGES dated 27 May), other construction operations will also take place on the site: two sea walls will be built on each side of the entrance channel.

Construction of the Sea Walls

The core of the two sea walls will be made of ungraded material reinforced with rock-fill of increasing size--natural rock-fill up to 5 tons, then artificial rock-fill (concrete blocks). The largest elements will have a weight of 50 tons and will form the first line of defense against the onslaught of the waves.

Construction of the sea walls will require the opening of a quarry from which basalt blocks will be extracted. The site selected is on the Possession territory, at the junction of the two Lataniers gulleys. It will be the first quarry of this type in Reunion.

Its operation will start in August-September 1982 and will last for 8-10 months. The sea walls are scheduled to be built next year, from April to November 1983, during the season when there is no cyclones. This is because a sea wall is fragile and could not resist the heavy ocean swell as long as its nose is not completed. This stage of the operations will be the most spectacular: in particular, it will involve the use of giant cranes that can move 50-ton blocks over distances of 40 meters, a rather impressive performance.

Earth Removal Plan

The designers of the project were faced with a major problem: what to do with the 9 million cubic meters of earth that will be removed, where to put them? The method selected to dig the port affects the project as a whole. If dredging from the sea had been used, the only possible way would have been to dump the earth removed at a distance from the shore--which, by the way, would have affected the submarine flora and fauna.

However, when digging is entirely carried out from the dry land, the problem is different, and it is possible to use these millions of cubic meters, these mountains of earth to improve the future port surroundings. The earth removed will be used to remodel the relief at the back of the port so as to provide suitable sites for new facilities, an artisanal or industrial zone, recreation or sports areas.

Hills in the Plain

All these developments underlie the earth-moving plan. The plan was designed by DDE in cooperation with the Port and Possession municipal authorities, and with the assistance of architects (ARSAC). A number of areas have been selected to dump the earth removed. There are four of them:

- the area called Ravine-a-Marquet, to the east of the future port (on the side of Possession). Two 25-meter high pyramids of grass-covered earth will mark the entrance to the port site. They will form a sort of belvedere overlooking the quay facilities. Terraced plateaus will be provided to receive an artisanal zore or recreation facilities.

- the area called Artisanal Zone, to the west (on the Port side). A 500-meter long and about 100-meter wide hill will stretch from north to south. It will include plateaus for sports grounds, including a field with natural terraces. It will also receive the future Port cemetery, half overlooking the landscape, half overlooking the sea. Finally, it will receive the city's artisanal zone.

- the area called Industrial Zone. This will involve a plateau of over 50 hectares, located at the back of the port and intended to receive the future industrial zones of the community in decades to come.

- the development of the shore up to Pointe-du-Phare. Undulations will be made between the forest and the shoreline, according to the development scheme prepared by architect Quentin for the Port community.

During the coming years, we are going to witness radical changes in the whole site. A ballet of enormous machines will soon begin. When on-site operations are completed, three years from now, the first ship will be able to enter the port... The new port of Reunion will be born; it should represent a first-rate tool in the country's development.

AMERICAN 'INFILTRATION' IN NATION'S ECONOMY CONDEMNED

Dakar FAGARU in French No 3, Apr 82 p 6

/Article by Boubakar Kamara: "Senegal Goes American"/

/Text/ American infiltration into the Senegalese economy basically constitutes an increasingly intolerable influence. The squandering of public funds, corruption and the disastrous management of national resources, particularly in the field of agriculture, have led to a crisis that is without precedent in the history of our country.

With its well-known inability to find a way out of such a situation, the Senegalese Government had to call on the two principal international financial institutions controlled by the United States, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. The government signed an extended credit agreement with the IMF for an overall amount fixed at $243 million, payable in three installments. The IMF cancelled this agreement in July 1981; it was replaced by a confirmation agreement for the year 1981-1982. The cancellation of the extended credit agreement was basically the result of the poor performance of the economy in 1980, the first year of the mid-range economic and financial recovery plan. The World Bank granted the government a structural adjustment loan amounting to $60 million.

The antisocial corrective measures required by these two institutions, which are in the service of American international imperialism in particular, constituted the prior requirement for investments by the lenders, who met in October 1981 to support the neocolonial regime. Previously, the Club de Paris had worked out a rescheduling of the debts in the amount of $22 billion.

The United States was only too ready, and for good reason! The U.S. Government opened negotiations with the Senegalese Government in 1979, which resulted in a support program for the recovery plan, a program that went from 1980 to 1986, or 1 year beyond the VI Plan (as published).

Among other things, the contract signed provided that the government would move to liberalize the economy and disengage itself from certain social economic sectors and from the agricultural arena. Moreover, within the framework of agreed projects, American enterprises would be used as much as possible to supply materials and products. USAID undertook more than 27 projects in all, involving numerous activities in rural affairs. American imperialism was interested particularly in three regions: the Fleuve, the Sine-Saloum and the Casamance. For this reason, USAID signed contracts with SAED /Societe d'Amenagement et de l'Exploitation des Terres du Delta et de la Voltée du Sénégal/ (in the Fleuve region); the SODEVA /Société de Développement et due Vulgarisation Agricole/ (in the peanut-raising basin); and the SOMIVAC /Société de Mise en Valeur de la Casamance/ (in Casamance).

Moreover, American capital is represented in the SODAGRI /expansion unknown/ to the amount of 50 percent, in the PRS /expansion unknown/ (for the rice development project in Sehiou) and in the PIDAC (Integrated Development Project for Casamance). In the social field, efforts of American penetration included depending on the Peace Corps and American Catholic welfare groups. These organizations, which are closely controlled by the CIA, have a well-established intelligence mission and a mission to develop friendly contacts.

To provide for the future, the United States has imposed a certain direction in agricultural research, using primarily American universities and reducing the work of domestic organizations.

Such, in broad outline, was the American strategy for the 5-year period, before the government's resignation due to the collapse of the economy.

NEW ELECTORAL CODE SAID TO FAVOR MINORITY BOURGEOISIE, PS

Dakar FAGARU in French No 3, Apr 82 p 1

[Editorial by Babacar Sane: "An Antidemocratic Electoral Law For a Made-to-Order National Assembly"]

[Text] The month of May 1982 will remind all Senegalese that the working class is facing a battle on two dialectically connected fronts. The first is the defense of immediate interests through the struggle to improve living and working conditions within the framework of trade union action. The second is defense of future interests through the replacement of a government now in the hands of the bourgeois minority by a worker majority.

With this in mind, the vote of the National Assembly during its first session for the year 1982 on Law 10/82, the electoral law, becomes all-important since it fulfills a plan, symbolizes a policy and affirms the will to enslave the working masses.

This made-to-order law is actually from every point of view contrary to the interests of the workers who constitute the majority. Suffrage based on property qualifications and requiring a security deposit can be used to eliminate the economically disadvantaged. The method of balloting selected includes a threshold limit of five percent and mixed balloting on a national list and a departmental list, with equal numbers of deputies on the two lists. Moreover, this law puts chicanery, corruption and blackmail to the voters ahead of choice based on the policies and platforms of the parties. When one realizes that state resources are often mixed with those of the PS [Socialist Party] and that the administrative authorities are either PS leaders or allies of that party, one can easily see what class interests this kind of voting expresses, and one readily sees, contrary to what the president of the republic has declared, that the new electoral law really favors one party, the PS.

Moreover, this new law is dangerously old fashioned in the sense that it conceals the real dangers of the resurgence of regional, even tribal, sentiments, thus jeopardizing national unity in favor of selfish group interests.

Workers of this country should thus understand that a National Assembly based on such foundations is not for them. It will never defend anything but the interests of the exploiting class. It will adopt laws like law 01/80 to perpetuate the hold of capitalism on our country, by utilizing neocolonialism.

That is why this month of May 1982, which should have seen intellectual and manual workers, workers and peasants united, in different situations, true, but nonetheless united in the struggle against capitalist exploitation, which, for the LDMPT [Ligue Democratique--Movement Pour le Parti du Travail], as of now constitutes the best refutation of those who, thanks to this electoral law, will cry victory for the PS bourgeois minority in power.

IVORIAN PARTICIPATION IN CAPITALIZATION OF ADRIPECHE HAILED

Dakar AFRICA in French No 141, May 82 pp 48-49, 106

[Text] An event of great political and economic importance took place a short time ago which, unfortunately, has passed almost unnoticed in the two countries concerned: the Ivory Coast and Senegal. What is involved is the first practical manifestation of unity between the two countries, that is, the purchase of a large part of the capitalization of the Senegalese company ADRIPECHE [Dakarian Shipowners for the Reorganization of the Fishing Industry] by Ivorian private interests. Up until then relations between the Ivory Coast and Senegal were characterized by commercial exchanges which the Senegalese-Ivorian grand commission had been trying to develop with some difficulty. In the past, several industrialists or merchants in Senegal had established branches or subsidiaries in Abidjan; however, these were French promoters. As a significant example, we cite the Bareil family which was able in Abidjan with the same success as in Dakar to renovate a large industrial milk-products plant.

First Participation in Capitalization

However, there was no transfer of national capital in spite of the wishes of the Ivorian and Senegalese chiefs of state to see the development of dialogue and cooperation between the two countries in the field.

A first step has now been taken by Ivorian nationals, in this instance the Djibo Group of Bouake, featuring the presentation made at the initiative of one of the principal architects of the development of Senegalese industrial fishing and its processing, Mr Adrien.

In 1979, this man, who owns the ADRIEN Shipping Company, had established the ADRIPECHE company with the help of private Senegalese stockholders. This company experienced spectacular growth: with capital of 20 millions at the outset, 40 percent held by nationals and 60 percent by Adrien, who later became Senegalese, the capitalization rose to 203 million while business income increased from 300 million in the first year to 4.1 billion CFA francs in 1980-81. This business income was derived entirely from exports, with 50 percent going to Europe in the form of choice fish, fish fillets and first-quality, deep-frozen shrimp and 50 percent to Africa, particularly the Ivory Coast, in the form of unprocessed, deep-frozen fish of various kinds.

A High-Performance Senegalese Enterprise

It should be noted that such expansion could be achieved thanks to continual improvement in productivity and quality abetted by a bold policy of systematic reinvestment of all profits and supported by favorable provisions of the Senegalese Code of Investments. Because of this action, total investments rose from 50 million to 950 million CFA francs.

We have been told that certain Senegalese officials were surprised by and had even deplored the entry of the Ivorians into such a high-performance enterprise. That tells us to what degree parochial nationalism is still prevalent and how great are the problems in promoting regional economic unity, the only way to set up markets of suitable size for the modern world.

Reciprocal Interests

At present, above and beyond the political interest in this participation in capitalization which places Senegalese and Ivorian capital on an equal footing, the economic advantages are obvious. The Ivory Coast is getting something out of this arrangement as it permits the PROMOFROID Company, the largest Ivorian fish importer, to be assured of a regular supply of fish. To this end, the company was planning to invest in deep-freeze plants on the coast of Africa and Mauritania which could offer an interesting investment site.

That is to say, complete interest in Adrien's initiative which will allow Senegal to assure for itself a solid and important position in the Ivorian market for the sale of its production. Proof of this is the fact that ADRIPECHE exports to the Ivory Coast have nearly doubled since the arrival of the Ivorians.

Another advantage for Senegal and indirectly for the Ivory Coast is that capital recovered through the cession of part of ADRIPECHE's capital will be totally invested in the ADRIEN Shipping Company. This company has 12 trawlers flying the Senegalese flag, representing an investment of 750 million CFA francs and earning business income of 1 billion CFA francs. The infusion of new capital will permit the conversion of certain vessels into freezer ships to give greater value added to seafood products and to build new shipyards for ship repair and maintenance and cold-storage facilities and offices on the fishing wharf. This will produce a general improvement in fishing equipment which should result in an increase in deliveries of fresh fish to ADRIPECHE.

An Example to Follow

We hope that this initial Ivorian intervention will induce other Senegalese and Ivorian operators to invest in the two national economies to strengthen the bonds which already link the Ivory Coast and Senegal and to gradually set up markets of economically feasible size wherever possible.

IRAQI ENVOY PRESENTS CREDENTIALS, TIES DISCUSSED

AB240700 Freetown Domestic Service in English 2000 GMT 23 Jun 82

[Text] The first accredited Iraqi ambassador to Sierra Leone, Mustafa Assad (an-Nashabandi), today presented his letters of credence to President Dr Siaka Stevens at State House.

During the presentation ceremony, President Stevens remarked that even though Iraq and Sierra were separated by great distance, they shared certain principles which are manifested in their membership in the United Nations Organization and the nonaligned movement. President Stevens congratulated Iraq for the able manner in which the president of the 36th session of the UN General Assembly, a distinguished son of Iraq, chaired that session. President Stevens also noted the efforts being made by the government of Iraq to host the seventh summit of the nonaligned movement in Baghdad next September and hoped that in the true spirit of the movement, every effort would be made to create the right atmosphere to attract maximum participation at the meeting. The head of state also welcomed the ambassador's desire to strengthen the cordial relations between Iraq and Sierra Leone and assured him that every effort be made to make his assignment in this country a fruitful and rewarding one.

Earlier, Ambassador (an-Nashabandi) expressed the true desire of the Republic of Iraq to strengthen its relations with Sierra Leone. He said that in spite of the circumstances of the war imposed on it, his country was continually endeavoring to consolidate Afro-Arab ties and to coalesce their common struggle against apartheid, Zionism and racial discrimination. The ambassador said that Iraq would devote its best endeavors to ensure the success of the seventh summit of the nonaligned movement.

At the ceremony were the acting first vice president and minister of finance, Salia Jusu Sheriff, the acting second vice president and minister of development and economic planning, Dr Shaka Kanu, cabinet ministers and senior civil servants.

RATIONALE FOR BUTHELEZI COMMISSION FINDINGS ANALYZED

Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES in English 13 Jun 82 p 34

[Article by Lawrence Schlemmer: "We Said It First and We Said It Better..."]

[Text] THE President's Council constitutional report has been rightly welcomed for digging the grave of the time-hallowed principle that whites should govern South Africa all on their own.

At the same time it has raised many questions by making no provisions at all for the inclusion of black people in the parliamentary process.

Its composition and the circumstances of its establishment had long forewarned that it would limit its proposals to whites, Coloured people and Indians, but some hopeful observers expected a little more — at least some broad and tentative discussion of fresh constitutional options for at least some blacks.

But the report is emphatic: democracy under the consociational system which it proposes would be impossible if blacks were included.

What's the basis for such a conclusion? How does another recent commission established by the KwaZulu Government as a black political initiative — the Buthelezi Commission — deal with this central issue?

In cold analytical terms, democracy is indeed highly problematic in a starkly divided society like ours.

The highly visible, symbolic divisions of race, particularly between whites and blacks, co-incide with huge income differences — white and affluent versus black and poor.

Powerful currents of black nationalism and a shared spirit of grievance could politically unite blacks against a numerically much smaller white group which is internally divided in terms of language, culture and political ideology.

The potential for disruptive political conflict which would undermine democracy is very great.

Democracy assumes that parties and groups in opposition to one another at least share an underlying loyalty to the basic form of government, the economic order and to key symbols of national identity.

In other words, however rough the democratic political game, the basic rules of the game are accepted and defended by most parties.

Many serious political scientists, the chairman of the Constitutional Committee of the President's Council no doubt included, question whether blacks can be expected to honour the rules of our political game.

In depth

Will black people not turn the tables of discrimination, limit white-dominated free-enterprise, insist on univeral support for a standard black nationalism, suppress opposition parties, change time-hallowed place names and make whites feel foreign and insecure in their own country?

The Buthelezi Commission under Professor GDL Schreiner, and which included a wide cross-section of over 40 whites, coloured people, Indians and blacks, considered these questions in depth.

It took the fullest account of the arguments in favour of political partition of the homelands and of black people from whites.

Yet it concluded that a shared political system for blacks, whites and other groups was not only feasible and viable as a democratic form, but also essential for long-term security and development.

How and why did the Buthelezi Commission reach this conclusion?

While the commission recognised all the problems, it also recognised that threats to the democratic political order and to the basic economic institutions would not be avoided by excluding black people from joint political participation.

The Soweto disturbances of 1976, for example, had a very damaging effect on economic confidence and growth in South Africa.

The commission, through extensive research contracted out to independent organisations, established the disquieting fact that since 1977 the proportion of black people expressing anger, impatience and a militant outlook has increased from a minority of roughly one-third to more than 50 percent.

Crime

Secondly, the close geographic inter-dependence between the fragmented blocks of territory of KwaZulu and "white" Natal, and the overwhelming reliance of the latter on KwaZulu labour simply forces a need for inter-dependent planning, administration and decision-making.

Health problems like cholera and typhoid, social problems like crime and stock-theft and myriad other phenomena sweep across political boundaries and cannot be controlled with politically separated administrations.

Thirdly, whether white politicians like it or not, the larger majority of black people, including migrant workers from rural areas, see their prospects for economic progress and social advancement as being centred on the multi-racial urban and industrial centres.

Limited

When they think of political interests they think of issues affecting their lives in places like Durban, Johannesburg and other developed centres.

Politics for them loses most of its meaning if it is partitioned off and limited to affairs inside a homeland. Therefore political partition will make peacefully-oriented homeland-based black leaders irrelevant to their own followers.

The commission believed that partition would create a black vacuum which would be filled by the forces of violence and disruption.

These and many other reasons moved it to accept that black people should be fully included in the constitutional arrangements for a secure and prosperous future.

How did the commission deal with the problems which the President's Council saw as insurmountable?

The President's Council proposes a particular political process to gain balanced agreement between divided segments or groups in a society.

This is in fact a high-level "coalition" of accepted leaders from different groups who gain consensus among themselves and resolve conflicts before they disrupt parliament.

The President's Council has this process in mind for the mixed cabinet of whites, Coloured and Indian people.

Professor Arend Lijphart, perhaps the foremost world authority on this form of government is referred to by the President's Council.

Professor Lijphart served on the Buthelezi Commission and guided its many constitutional proposals.

He has made the point that while a consociation is not facilitated by deep divisions and a large imbalance in numbers, it is the only constitutional form able to cope with these problems where the alternative is violence and disruption.

He recommended a consociational structure for KwaZulu and Natal and the commission built on this recommendation.

He has also publicly disavowed that blacks should be excluded from any constitutional arrangements for South Africa.

An open consociation for Natal-KwaZulu, very briefly, would involve a further delegation of powers to Natal, but with Natal and KwaZulu together remaining fully part of the Republic, as a federal province.

Executive

Initially, the (larger) Executive of Natal and the Cabinet of KwaZulu could combine, with Indian and Coloured representatives, into a racially balanced negotiating body.

This balanced body would become the executive of the combined region of KwaZulu-Natal.

Advised by an expert commission it would draw boundaries of electoral regions, to which many powers would be delegated, as much as the President's Council recommends for local government.

These voting regions would be drawn, after negotiation, in such a way as to reflect socio-economic characteristics of the voters and, depending on what is negotiated, they would elect a number of representatives to a legislative assembly.

Since the size, shape and number of voters in the regions would be an outcome of negotiation, so would the proportion of races in the assembly.

Hence, a fixed ratio of representatives following the proportions in the general population would be most unlikely although there would be a majority of blacks.

Since the ratio in effect would have been fully negotiated, once accepted it would be supported by the leaders involved.

Control

Further safeguards for minorities are built into the formula — proportional representation in constituencies avoiding the winner-take-all principle, a minority veto, a Bill of group and individual rights and a test of legislation by our independent judiciary.

The central government would retain control of the army, foreign affairs and certain other major functions.

Furthermore, the balanced consociational executive would initiate legislation after agreement among its members. This is perhaps the most important guarantee of minority rights.

A pre-condition for success would be to blur and soften the lines of racial conflict. Hence reform in socio-economic conditions and accelerated economic development would accompany the process.

Group areas would have to be phased out to allow people to live in areas suited to their socio-economic circumstances rather than their race.

This would make a realignment of political loyalties possible at all levels and reduce serious racial antagonisms.

The President's Council and the Buthelezi Commission share the same political theory of consociation.

The Buthelezi Commission, however, has simply anticipated what is inevitable and dealt with the central problems affecting our shared future.

PROBLEMS IN COUNTRY'S LABOR FORCE EXAMINED

Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES/BUSINESS TIMES in English 13 Jun 82 pp 1-3

[Article by Andrew McNulty]

[Text]

DANGEROUSLY accelerated labour strife, surging unemployment, a further fuelling of already rampant inflation and even social unrest can be expected within a year unless key dilemmas in South Africa's manpower sector are defused.

This harsh threat facing the country is worsened by the growing economic downturn.

Labour and industrial-relations leaders questioned by Business Times this week say that an economic recession could ignite the already fragile labour fuse.

They warn that the situation demands exceptional wisdom and goodwill from employers and from trade unionists.

More wage increases at the levels of the past two years will exert further strain on the sagging economy — but failure by workers to accept this could have other serious consequences.

Major, far-reaching developments in the workforce are moving rapidly to a head. They include:

- Rising expectations of continued wage increases near or above the inflation rate among large numbers of newly unionised workers.

A trend has already been set in the huge iron and steel industry, where increases ranging from 15% for whites to 26% for blacks have been granted.

- Faced with rising costs, slowing growth and diminishing profits, employers are showing growing resistance to granting many of the wage increases demanded ever more stridently in the black sector.
- Retrenchment of workers as companies dig in against the downturn has already led to a rapid acceleration in the number of strikes and work stoppages.
- Problems are compounded by rivalry between unions and by a growing polarisation between white and black union members.
- Events took a dramatic new turn recently with the establishment and growth of the Black Mineworkers Union (BMWU), the first big step towards unionisation of the 450 000 black workers in the country's largest and most vital industry.

This union is the first black mining union to be granted some degree of recognition by the mining industry.

Jack Liebenberg, labour relations adviser to the South African Chamber of Mines, confirms that two months ago the BMWU was advised that it could have access to Chamber collieries and gold mines for recruitment of members.

The healthy (or otherwise) future growth of this union and responses by employers and other mining unions could be critical for the whole labour movement.

These developments are a climax to a massive unionisation — which is still in the melting-pot — of the country's black workers that has occurred since a new labour dispensation was introduced by the first Wiehahn report three years ago.

Registered black trade-union membership rose from nil in July 1979 to 246 551 by the end of last year.

During 1981, the number of registered black unions more than doubled from 14 to 36, while their membership jumped by 359%.

Total membership of registered unions rose by the end of last year to 1 054 405, of whom 468 029 were whites, 326 794 coloureds and Indians and 259 582 blacks.

There are also around 100 000 — possibly more — black members of unregistered trade unions.

However, Henk Botha, director of the Institute for Industrial Relations, notes that many of the unregistered unions have shown a "heartening" inclination to seek registration.

Of 21 unregistered unions, seven have applied for registration.

Showing what is seen by some labour commentators as a disturbing polarisation between white and black union members, membership of black-only unions rose last year by 500% — from 27 000 in 1980 to 162 000.

"Polarisation and multiplicity of trade unions certainly makes negotiation more difficult. But it has to be left to union members themselves to decide how to organise themselves. They can't be forced to amalgamate or go multiracial," Mr Botha says.

From negligible levels in 1979, strikes and work stoppages, with wage-related issues the leading cause, leapt to new peaks last year.

According to Fanie Botha, Minister of Manpower, last year there were 283 strikes and 59 work stoppages, resulting in 1 812 434 man hours lost.

While there are not yet full statistics for 1982, Henk Botha comments that the trend appears to be continuing.

Of 19 strikes and other work stoppages reported in the Press in April this year, 12 were caused by wage-related issues and two by retrenchments.

"There is a lack of understanding of economic realities among black union membership and a worrying lack of sophistication among union leadership, many of whom have had little or no formal training in industrial relations.

"Efforts to encourage and provide this training, and patience and care in communication, are more important than ever," he says.

PAPER CRITICIZES PROPOSED CHANGES IN PASS LAWS

MB251112 Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 25 Jun 82 p 10

[Editorial: "Koornhof Was Right"]

[Text] It is three years since Dr Piet Koornhof declared war on the dompas [identity document] but, as reports in this newspaper over the past two weeks have shown, the government's latest attempt to reform the pass laws will mean an even harsher implementation of influx control.

The legislation--which bears the Orwellian title of the Orderly Movement and Settlement of Black Persons Bill--has been referred to an all-party select committee before its second reading in Parliament. This is just as well because the fundamental philosophy behind the bill is wrong: it prepares a relatively small elite of "urban" blacks for co-option while banishing the majority of black South Africans to rural wastes, there to be robbed of their birthright.

It is true that the bill gives the first legal recognition to the permanency of certain blacks in the cities. But this ideological step forward is hopelessly outweighed by the negative aspects which are proposed. The bill provides for a tenfold increase in the fines for employers--from R500 to R5,000; it grants extraordinary powers to the minister to unilaterally remove rights granted to blacks in terms of the bill and to summarily remove whole settlements of black squatters under certain conditions. The controversial black curfew provision is repealed in one section of the bill and then effectively re-introduced in a disguised form elsewhere in the legislation.

The 72-hour grace period for blacks entering the cities is scrapped and replaced with a harsher provision decreeing that, unless authorised, they may not be in an urban area between 10 pm and 5 am. This had led experts to predict massive night raids to implement the provision.

The bill, like the department from which it emanates, has changed names several times; originally it made its appearance in the "new deal" package announced by Dr Koornhof with a fanfare in October 1980. The retrogressive character of the package was exposed by newspapers and by academic and legal experts all over the country and this led to the referral of a series of bills for re-drafting to the expert Grosskopf committee.

The organs of the nationalist government found some of the proposals so indigestible--for instance, freehold property rights for blacks--that it was a full year before the bills began re-emerging in public. While there are indications that one of them--the black local authority bill, which has won the blessing of the PFP [Progressive Federal Party] and the Urban Foundation--could provide the basis for a new deal in black local government, the same cannot remotely be said for the influx bill.

This places a heavy responsibility on the parliamentary select committee which is to deal with it. The PFP's role in transforming the local government legislation has raised expectations of what could be possible. But ultimately there is only one way to reform the pass laws and that is to scrap them. As Dr Koornhof so eloquently told the National Press Club in Washington three years ago: "That thing (the dompas) must be ousted completely and totally from my country."

He was right. And until it is done there can be no talk of real reform.

POSSIBILITY THAT COUNTRY MAY BE MATURING POLITICALLY VIEWED

Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES in English 13 Jun 82 p 35

[Article by Ivor Wilkins: "Is This Land of Ours Growing Up at Last?"]

[Text]

AS SOUTH AFRICA'S legislators exhaustedly ground out the last of their parliamentary programme this week, they played out the closing scenes of a half-year that will be seminal to a distinctly different political landscape of the future.

In a large sense much remains ill-defined. Standing on the threshold of an altered tomorrow, nervous, ill-at-ease, excited, the politicians were aware not so much of what the future holds, only that it would be inescapably changed.

A major factor in their uncertainty is a realisation, growing for some years, but accelerating dramatically now, that the dominion they have held over national events is fast losing its exclusivity.

Not only is a sure element of the future some sort of shared dispensation with politicians who are not white, but also an acceptance that forces other than formal politics will play an increasing role.

Indeed, in their stocktaking of this year's first six months, they cannot fail to recognise that a large proportion of the impulses that will imprint themselves on tomorrow came from outside Parliament.

Some happened in and around Parliament, but relatively little in terms of "seminal politics" was directly of Parliament itself.

In fact, this session's legislative record tips the balance far more in favour of hardline old-style authoritarianism than progressive change.

Dubbed the "repression session" by one headline writer, it has seen the country's awesome security laws herded into a compendium Internal Security Act that Opposition spokesmen said embodied all the old horrors.

A massive military mobilisation is also catered for in the amendments to the Defence Act which will directly affect every white South African family with its provision for a "dad's army" of soldiers up to 55 years old.

One highlight, in terms of reform, is the law that will translate the Government's belated recognition of the permanence of urban blacks into reality and enable the establishment of fully-fledged black local authorities.

New growth

For the rest, politics has been overshadowed by events like the National Party split, the President's Council down the road, and surrealistic meetings with African leaders under spreading maroela trees in remote corners of the country.

A letter-writer in one of the Afrikaans newspapers this week noted that as South Africa celebrated the 21st birthday of its republic, it was at last showing signs of real maturity.

He was right.

If national television remains a somewhat prim guardian of national morals, consenting adults were able to catch the occasional glimpse of breast and thigh outside the privacy of their own bedrooms.

Its politics, too, were sprouting signs of new growth.

But, the pains of adulthood in modern society spawn new problems. And new solutions.

Tireless examiners of modern neuroses, mainly American, become best-selling authors of books like Gail Sheehy's "Passages", which maps out predictable crises of adult life.

In her terms, South Africa's political advance to maturity is behaving just about on schedule.

At this age, the fledgling rebellion against old values like apartheid might be a little tardy — 18 would have been about right — but by no means certifiably retarded yet.

In trying to slough its adolescent garb for something more grown up, it is selecting some macabre combinations, but cogniscenti would prescribe some indulgence and say it is just a phase — like punk rock.

The process is what counts. And that is what Prime Minister P W Botha will be trying to persuade South Africans to buy in the months ahead.

It will be a difficult sale, because he has to pitch one commodity at two distinctly different audiences at the same time.

He has to convince his own followers in the National Party that the process does not threaten their position, while he has to convince coloured and Asian people that the process holds for them promise of a better future.

The two concepts are so estranged as to sometimes seem almost mutually exclusive.

But, Mr Botha's sales skill has been decidedly polished.

When he came into power, his reformist rhetoric led to exciting times, but proved costly to his own support and achieved little but aroused suspicion on the right and frustrated expectation on the left.

Willingness

Since then, he disappeared into a period of what appears to have been consolidation and reassessment.

That, and the trauma of the break in his party, seems to have forged new resources, which recently have begun to emerge.

His last few public performances have shown a new confidence, a willingness to engage his audiences, a patience with interjectors and, although the arrogance of old still bursts out from time to time, a curb on his fabled temper.

While his speeches continue to be pathologically shy on detail, the style of statecraft and delivery has changed from the take-it-or-leave-it manner of his debut years to a more modulated, persuasive tone.

He now pays all due deference to the protocol of the party congresses he once tried to bully.

This, too, is part of South Africa's seminal politics.

Faced now with a rightwing party of 18 MPs under Dr Andries Treurnicht, it is clearly a time for nurturing, not squandering, what you have.

And for seeking new alliances. Thus, while Mr Botha has been savage in his attacks on the Conservative Party, shaking an infuriated finger across the Assembly floor at the rebels who dared break faith, his sorties against the New Republic Party and the Progressive Federal Party have been less venomous.

After his Parow public meeting on Monday, where he made unkind references to the NRP ("the wobbling remnants of the old Natal Stand and the United Party"), he returned to Parliament, soothed their hurt and said he was only teasing.

And, in his parting shots at the PFP, he was singularly unconvincing and used an argument not only spurious, but one that leaves him wide open for counter attack.

Warning

He berated the official Opposition for their relationship with Chief Gatsha Buthelezi's Inkatha movement, which, he complained, advocated one man one vote in a unitary state.

Yet, it is common knowledge that the Government itself is locked into serious negotiation with the Labour Party, energetically seeking its participation in the new white, coloured, Asian dispensation.

The Labour Party's formal policy is, of course, one man one vote in a unitary state.

But, if national politics does show signs of maturing, there is also a fear that it may become lodged in the punk rock stage of bizarre experimentation, without passing through that delinquent phase into something more becoming.

This is what Opposition leader Dr F Van Zyl Slabbert warned about when he urged Mr Botha not to attempt half-baked reform.

That would both fail to redeem him in the eyes of the right-wing and to attract into the new dispensation the people it was aimed at.

"If we are going to enter a process of constitutional reform, let us do it in a way that makes it clear that it has a possibility of creating peace for all population groups and of mobilising the loyalty of all people," he said.

Unless the process of reform now is going to have enough momentum to carry it from the infancy of whites-only politics, through the adolescence of whites-coloureds-and-Asians politics, to the maturity of a politics for all South Africans, it would not succeed.

It was a warning that found grim echoes outside of Parliament.

In the lead-up to the 1982 commemoration of the June 16 explosion of unrest in Soweto six years ago, a number of bombs went off across the country. In Cape Town a young man was killed in one of the blasts.

The Commissioner of Police, General Mike Geldenhuys, said he was convinced it was the work of the banned African National Congress.

Violence is not new to South Africa, but just as the first six months of this year have seen the beginnings of a yet unclear but irretrievably different South Africa for some of its inhabitants, the current midyear wave of bombings may also be a signal.

BRIEFS

PFP CRITICIZES NEWS RESTRICTIONS--The South African official opposition party has slammed alleged police suppression of information on six people detained yesterday. The critique came from PFP spokesman Dave Dalling. Carmen Ricard reports: [Ricard] A warning from Gen Johan Coetzee, chief of the security police, was given to all newspapers last night not to publish anything about the detention in terms of the police act. Police refused to confirm the detention or the act under which they were made. Acting on legal advice, the NATAL MERCURY has decided not to release names. But the paper quotes Dave Dalling as saying that this situation brings into stark focus what he calls the horrendous power of the government which could make people disappear without trace and without any public inquiry being allowed. CHURCH GROUP STAND--The National Conference of the South African Council of Churches has taken a major policy decision precluding dialog with Afrikaans churches unless these denounce apartheid as a sin and heresy. The resolution does not single out the churches by name, but it says it cannot hold any useful dialog with those who continue to uphold the system and seek to justify it on moral and theological grounds. PRIME MINISTER DISCUSSES PROBLEMS IN EDUCATION

MB251014 Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 25 Jun 82 p 20

[Article by Charity Tshabalala]

[Excerpts] The rapid population growth in Swaziland is placing enormous strains on the limited resources.

As a result, the country's ability to satisfy all the educational aspirations of the nation is affected.

This was stated by the prime minister, Prince Mabandla, during the official opening of Mphundle secondary school in Siteki area.

Despite the substantial increase in the number of new schools in the country, he said, most schools are still overcrowded and understaffed because of the sharp increase in the number of students, which has occurred over the past few years.

"Every Swazi who has the interest of this country at heart, should be concerned about the current 74 percent failure rate at our high schools," he expressed concern.

Due to rising costs building schools and providing other social services will be virtually impossible in scattered rural homesteads. Rural communities will have to build their homesteads closer together in order to share these scarce facilities.

When Swaziland had independence there was a student population of over 68,000 in schools. The number has increased to 145,000 students.

The numbers are almost certain to rise and in the next 18 years Swaziland is expected to have more than 275,000 students.

RESUMPTION OF ZAIRIAN-ISRAELI DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS EXPLAINED

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 26 May 82 pp 1, 7

[Text] Definitely, the renewal of diplomatic relations between Zaire and Israel is causing a great upset in certain Islamic regions of the world.

Following the resentment voiced in the number of Middle Eastern capitals and the disapproving statements of a certain number of black African leaders, we are witnessing today the artillery fire from the Arab League and its "Front of Firmness."

In fact, none of this can surprise us: we knew for a certainty well in advance that if we adopted the position we did, certain Arab countries would not agree with us. Also, we are in no way seeking to pursue any polemic whatsoever with them or anyone else. The fact still remains that it would be well to clarify some obscure points, in view of the restive agitation in certain countries and certain Arab organizations, whose statements have reached the limits of the reasonable and gone well beyond those of decency.

In fact, sources close to the secretariat general of the OAU have informed Zaire in bewilderment that Mr Chadli Klibi, secretary general of the Arab League, urged the secretary general of the OAU to adopt a position on the decision of Zaire to reestablish diplomatic relations with the state of Israel. Mr Eden Kodjo has been urged to do nothing less than "reject the decision by Zaire."

Like a Dream...

The OAU, the pan-African body for cooperation among the sovereign states which are its members, would thus have the "supranational" power to enable it to constrain nations on the specific point of their national sovereignty--by definition, inalienable--and the power to impose a given policy on them...

In addition, the Arab League, a pan-Arab organization of which a certain number of Arab nations are members, would have the power to dictate its policy to the OAU, an African organization with a charter in which the sovereignty of the states is forcefully set forth as the basic principle, the defense of which justifies the very existence of the organization.

Mr Chadli Should Be Reminded

The exercise of its sovereignty by a member nation in the OAU is not the business of that organization, but rather that of the nation itself. The recognition of a nation or the establishment of diplomatic relations between one nation and another is an individual act of sovereignty and not the collective exercise of a right which the charter of the OAU itself has never set forth anywhere.

Nor, moreover, has the OAU ever approved any resolution or injunction urging member nations not to reestablish relations with Israel.

Under such conditions, to speak of "the business of Africa, the Arab-African nations and the whole of the Third World," as the secretary general of the Arab League is doing, means mixing and confusing the law and the state of mind of the spokesmen of that organization rather naively.

Moreover, it is perhaps we in this whole affair who are the most naive, in thinking that it was a question of sovereignty, liberty and independence.

We should have long since understood that with this kind of "partners," there is neither liberty nor independence possible without total adherence to the distorted logic which converts a fanatic maneuver into a principle of law.

Zaire will nonetheless continue to defend its positions on the basis of law and solely on that basis. This leads it to regard the Arab noise and furor for what they are: intimidation and blackmail designed to influence the leaders of black Africa and to persuade them not to follow the example of Zaire. Arab-African solidarity, exploding in malevolent intentions, menacing statements and open threats against Zaire because it fully exercised an inalienable right seems to me of a very special nature and close to subjection.

We will not allow ourselves to be impressed: recalls of diplomats, the closing of embassies, suspended diplomatic relations and injunctions to the BADEA [Arab Bank for African Economic Development] will have no effect on the policy of Zaire. Our position is clear and irreversible, because it is based on principles and conduct which are equally clear and irreversible.

It is thus not toward Zaire that the verbal violence and threats of the Arab hawks are directed, but rather toward the black African leaders and nations which might be tempted to exercise their right of sovereignty in turn.

In this affair, the harrowing confusion of law and states of mind is not limited solely to the specific point of our sovereign decision to reestablish relations with Tel Aviv. An effort has also been to ascribe to us intentions which would link our policy with Israel's claims to the Jerusalem territory. The mass media have gone as far as to insinuate in this connection that the explanations undertaken by the diplomatic missions of Zaire in the main European capitals and in the United States constitute "backpedaling" by Zaire.

Backpedaling From What?

The statement made public on Friday, 14 May 1982 by the bureau of the Central Committee of the MPR, which had met with the chief of state himself presiding, makes mention nowhere of the establishment of an embassy of Zaire in Jerusalem, nor even simply of the name of the city dear to the adherents of the three great historic religions in the world.

Why then all of this commotion and agitation? Once again, it is much ado about nothing in connection with a false problem created out of whole cloth by ill-intentioned circles which regard every means as legitimate for stirring up the incomprehensible and acute hostility certain Arab nations nurture against the sovereign position of Zaire and against its head.

Whatever the case, the basic thing is that the Israelis themselves know that the embassy of Zaire will be established in Tel Aviv. All the rest is nothing but useless provocation and vulgar falsification.

There remains the amazing statement published in Tripoli by the Arab ministers of the "Front of Firmness," urging the people of Zaire to rebel and oust their president.

Zaire reacted to the publication of this statement with indignation and scorn, indignation and scorn which are the greater since two African countries, although Arab, are among the "signatories" of this hateful communique which is entirely in violation of the letter and the spirit of the OAU charter, which both Algeria and Libya have ratified.

What motivation played the greatest role in the attitude of Algeria and Libya? We note with regret but without illusion that Arabism overrode Africanism.

But Algeria and Libya should not nurture any illusions either. Since 24 November 1964, the only slogans to mobilize the people of Zaire have been those emanating from the only source capable of galvanizing and giving meaning to a national liberation undertaking: its leader and guide, Gen Mobutu Sese Seko, the author of its independence and the guarantor of its sovereignty.

And moreover, since Gen Mobutu Sese Seko cannot ask his people to oust him, the exhortations of the countries of the so-called "Front of Firmness" will go for naught.

Two Simple Observations

The first observation is that the Arabs who are scornful of Zaire chose the wrong tactic in contriving to distract Africans by childish statements in which everything is intermingled in a total confusion of principles, facts, statements and commitments, which neither bad faith, blind fanaticism nor the atavistic hatred of the blacks of yesterday's slave traders can help to clarify.

The second observation is similar to the first and is linked with it. It is that for 15 years, with a view to consolidating the relations between our country and certain Arab nations which have had a tainted history where black Africa is concerned, President Mobutu Sese Seko deliberately undertook to eliminate a certain number of chapters in the history books used in the schools in Zaire. These chapters had to do with the black slave trade.

Well now! Matters will be different in the future: since the same forces which yesterday denied human rights to the black man want today, now that he has been liberated from the colonialism provoked and justified by their undertaking, to deny him again the freedom so dearly won, it will be necessary to restore to history what belongs to it, and to the truth the whole horror of the slave trade and all the cruelty of the bearded and turbaned hordes of yesterday.

The children of Zaire who did not know of it will learn henceforth from their revised and corrected texts that Zanzibar was a great slave market, and the caravan route passed through Bunkeya, in Shaba, through Kindu and Maniema.

Zaire understands the scope of the discomfort of certain moderate Arab countries since the decision adopted to reestablish relations with Israel. It reiterates, however, that this decision is neither a question of pleasing Peter or displeasing Paul, or in fact involving either one of them. It is a question of acting on one's own analysis, based on one's independence and interests.

This can never be stressed too much in this affair.

LINK BETWEEN ZAIRE, ISRAEL DESCRIBED

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 25 May 82 99 1, 8

[Editorial: "Between Kinshasa and Tel Aviv"]

[Text] Everything is henceforth nicely settled between Zaire and Israel, now in the stage of exchanging diplomatic missions after 9 years during which relations were suspended, and following the talks which were held recently in Kinshasa and Tel Aviv by high officials of the two countries.

In particular in the capital of Zaire, the reopening of the Israeli diplomatic mission last Friday was the occasion for a truly moving ceremony. It constitutes a happy augury of the warm and open relations which the leaders of Zaire and Israel have decided to reestablish for the greater good of their respective peoples and peace in the world.

Thus despite the extravagant reaction of the Arab world and its African lackeys, who in a delirious moment condemned the decision of Zaire to renew relations with Israel, revealing that they have forgotten that Zaire is a country owing allegiance to no one and profoundly devoted to the principles of law, justice and the freedom of peoples to choose their own fate, and also that our country has always refused to be taught lessons by anyone whatsoever, Kinshasa and Tel Aviv are determined to reestablish profitable and exemplary relations between themselves.

The fact that the reestablishment of these relations was the cause of extreme agitation in the Arab world and in certain African countries which have become the servile tools of Arab imperialism is, in the eyes of observers, of great importance to the future relations between Zaire and Israel. And it is in this connection that the observers are making assessments of the possibilities for the exchange which should exist between the two countries.

Pending a more propitious occasion which will allow us to assess all of the possibilities for trade and other types of exchange between Zaire and Israel, we can say that the warm and confident talks which have been underway for a dozen or so days between the two parties have revealed complete identity of views, particularly where the means of dynamizing cooperation between Zaire and Israel are concerned. The Israeli officials have confirmed the desire of their country to contribute effectively to the economic and social recovery of Zaire. The authorities in Zaire, for their part, have also promised to place the prestige and the tremendous potential of their country in the service of the new cooperation between the two nations.

Thus, it is clearly evident that the relations between Kinshasa and Tel Aviv are likely to establish an exemplary model, as the two parties desire, on the economic as well as trade, cultural, technical and political levels.

Also, praise is merited by the constructive spirit animating the two countries which will have to support each other mutually and act in concert with a view to the strengthening of peace and the establishment of an era of justice in the world.

ZAIRIAN POLICY TOWARD ISRAEL FURTHER EXPLAINED

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 25 May 82 pp 1, 7

[Article by Nzanda-Buana Kalemba, secretary general of the Youth of the Popular Movement of the Revolution: "There Is No Uncertainty"]

[Text] "Neither to the left, nor to the right." This is the formula making it possible to understand the secret of the foreign policy of Zaire.

In fact, in the light of the principles set forth in the N'Sele Manifesto, our national party catechism, this golden rule means that Zairian international cooperation relies on the principle, dear to our people, of giving its sovereignty priority, at all costs, in its relations with all the countries in the world, regardless of their political and economic systems.

What does this mean, if not that our country is prepared to cooperate with any country in the world which has understood the meaning of the authenticity of Zaire, which demands mutual respect and nonintervention in the domestic affairs of a sovereign nation?

Strong in this political experience, our country, Zaire, today occupies its proper place in the concert of nations, and whenever it has had the opportunity to debate a difference of opinions in the world, it has set forth equitable solutions inspired by our philosophy of recourse to authenticity, and animated by the search for peace and concord among the nations.

So it is that on many occasions, the international community has valued the just positions adopted, one by one, by Zaire, concerning the two Germanys, the two Vietnams, the two Koreas and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO).

Zaire, faithful to its policy of openness to the world and always seeking international peace, also met with unanimous world approval when, on 4 October 1973, it broke off diplomatic relations with the Jewish state.

Linked with the principle of causality, this sovereign decision, which was dictated by Israel's occupation of Egypt's African territory, thus flouting the dignity of the entire African people, becomes an anachronism now that this African territory, because of which Zaire made the break, has been restored.

There can be no misunderstanding about the fact that Zaire, respectful of its commitments, has decided in all logic to renew relations with the Jewish state, for there no longer exists any reason to explain the suspension of diplomatic relations with Israel.

The dog barks, the caravan moves on. The outcry which arose throughout the Arab world following the adoption of this sovereign position is of no concern to the people of Zaire, much less its youth.

The Arab people must know that even if Zaire supports Arab-African solidarity, it nonetheless remains an independent and sovereign nation, free to establish the options of its foreign policy for itself.

Zaire has no fear at all of the foreign agitation orchestrated by all these charlatans. On the contrary, this enables it to measure the offer of friendship made it by the Arab League more accurately.

The young people of Zaire believe that the African-Arab people remain a brother people, the Asiatic Arab people are a friendly people, and for Zaire, the PLO remains an organization for the liberation of the Palestinian people, deprived of their legitimate rights, an organization struggling so that this people can win back their fatherland.

The Youth of the Popular Movement of the Revolution, the vanguard of the authentic revolution in Zaire, see the just value of the diplomacy being pursued by our country and stand behind its beloved guide, enthusiastically supporting the reaction of Zaire and its people to the masquerade of some Arab countries.

It would be truly an error for the Zairian state to ignore the right of the Palestinian people to have a fatherland, and it would be equally erroneous for Zaire to turn its back definitively on the Jewish state at a time when it has restored the African territories it was occupying.

Whom can they deceive? In any case, not the sons and daughters of the great nation of Zaire, who under the tutelage of their farseeing guide, Mobutu Sese Seko, have learned since the redeeming dawn of 24 November 1965, to live intelligently with all the countries of the world concerned with peace and freedom.

Why is the Arab League unable to understand these well-known relations with other countries in the world which have contributed in one way or another to the settlement of the Israeli-Egyptian conflict?

The people of Zaire cannot be taken in, nor can its youth.

SUPPORT OF ISRAEL'S CAUSE JUSTIFIED

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 29 May 82 pp 1, 6

[Editorial: "All of Us Behind the Guide"]

[Text] The members of the Popular Movement of the Revolution (MPR) from all parts of the republic will have an unusual afternoon today, for at 1 pm local time, they are invited, through the support marches organized under the sponsorship of the executive committee of the party, to demonstrate once again their tireless devotion to the builder of the nation. And for what reason? No one is unaware that on 14 May, our country, through the Bureau of the Central Committee of the MPR, decided to reestablish diplomatic relations with Israel, relations broken off in 1973 as a result of the occupation of the African territory of Egypt. This decision, taken in full freedom, has, as is known, led to reactions from the Arab world bordering on hostility.

Let us recall that 9 years ago, the suspension of diplomatic relations between Zaire and the Hebrew nation, courageously announced from the U. N. rostrum by Gen Mobutu Sese Seko, won us the admiration of the great-grandsons of the Arab slave-mongers. Were there any flattering epithets which were not used to describe the just nature of the behavior of this great military leader and this eminent leader of men who had always been guided by good sense? What Arab and African emissaries did not cross the threshold of Mont Ngaliema to prostrate themselves before the man of 24 November who was the first to condem, before the world and without the slightest equivocation, the expansionist intentions of the state illegally occupying the Sinai? Was there any praise which was not heaped upon the head of a country which stands out because of the price it attaches to its freedom and its independence?

But since 25 April 1982, the Sinai, the occupation of which by Israel was the reason for our decision to break with the Zionist state, has been, in accordance with the Camp David agreements, returned to our Egyptian brothers. It goes without saying that in view of the change which has occurred in the relations between Egypt and Israel, Zaire had lost the moral right to adhere to an anachronism which was no longer justified. Thus the normalization of its relations with Israel was nothing more than the logical consequence of the situation created by the two countries involved.

However, as was to be expected, this clear-sighted and judicious policy did not suit the desires of the Arab imperialists who naively believed they had some right of inspection over a country which has become, since the accession of General Mobutu to the highest leadership post, truly sovereign and independent, having no need to account to anyone whatsoever.

The people of Zaire, who will always place their confidence in their leader thanks to whom they recovered all the attributes of freedom, will profit from this afternoon's activities to make it known to our master blackmailers once and for all that they will never yield to pressure, much less to blackmail, whatever its source may be. Let all these tyrants who are exploiting their peoples in shameful fashion and whose petrodollars serve only to maintain terrorism throughout the world know that we reserve for them a fate identical to that to which all those who stubbornly attempted to prevent us from winning our economic independence have had to resign themselves. For come what may, we will cheerfully pursue our path toward development.

The 25 million members of the MPR, as one man following the guide of the true Zairian revolution and galvanized by the ideals of the party, are ready to fight to the last drop of their blood to maintain the sovereignty and independence of their dear and beautiful country, two gains of the Second Republic.

APPEAL FOR MARCHES IN SUPPORT OF MOBUTU ISSUED

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 29 May 82 pp 1, 7

[Article by Kongo Luzayamo Nzundu: "Marches in Support of the President of the Republic"]

[Text] Since 14 May, the date on which diplomatic relations with the state of Israel were resumed, the Arab world has had it in for Zaire. Slanderous efforts in the press have been directed at the president and founder of the MPR, although Zaire, as an independent country, is free to pursue its policy as it sees fit. The proof of this is seen in the fact that the decision adopted by the Bureau of the Central Committee to reestablish relations with the Hebrew state has won a ceaseless stream of congratulations from both political and business circles.

In view of the subversive pursuits orchestrated by the Arab world, the executive committee of the MPR has decided to organize marches to demonstrate support of the chief of state beginning at 1 pm this Saturday.

Once again, rallying around their regional party presidents and regional governors, the militants will prove to the enemies of Zaire that their marriage to Mobutu is indissoluble. As is the custom in Kinshasa, the militants who will rally at the 20 May stadium will come from four former subregions. At the conclusion of the march, the regional president of the MPR and city governor, Mr Sakombi Ekope, will speak to the people to explain the situation currently prevailing in the country to them and to appeal for vigilance.

Because of this grandiose demonstration, the "salongo" scheduled for this Saturday will not be held. The zone commissioner as well as the section presidents of the MPR, private, state and parastate enterprises, will be asked to devote Saturday morning to the mobilization.

The political leadership of the party youth, for its part, meeting in special session last Thursday with Mr Nzanda-Buana Kalemba, secretary general of the JMPR [Youth of the Popular Movement of the Revolution], urged all young people in Zaire to participate massively in the march this Saturday.

POPULAR MARCH SUPPORTS RESTORED TIES WITH ISRAEL

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 30-31 May 82 pp 1, 8

[Article by Kongo Luzayamo Nzundu: "The Zairian People Confirmed Their Loyalty to the Chief of State"]

[Text] In Kinshasa, as in all the capitals of the regions, subregions and interior zones, thousands of citizens of Zaire went into the streets to demonstrate their loyalty to the president and founder of the MPR and president of the republic, Gen Mobutu Sese Seko.

This occurred on the occasion of the support marches organized at the instigation of the executive committee of the party.

In Kinshasa

"Down with the Arab racists!" "The Arab League, a firm front deceiving whom?" "We want to be ourselves and not what others want us to be!" "The dog may bark, but the Zairian caravan continues on its path toward progress!" "We are for the PLO and we challenge the imperialist Arabs!" "Arabism means fanaticism, racism and imperialism!" "The OAU will always remain strong and united!" "Mobutu, our only Guide!" These were some of the slogans one could see on the streamers carried by the men and women militants of Kinshasa during the support march organized throughout the country last Saturday by the executive committee of the MPR.

In response to the party appeal, the main streets of the capital were dense with crowds beginning at 1 pm. Led from the four corners of Kinshasa by citizens Sakombi Ekope, Nzita-Puatidi Mavambu, Kpama Baramoto and Botuli, governor, vice governors and urban director, respectively, the militant citizens marched gaily to prove to all the world that their marriage to Mobutu remains indissoluble.

Meanwhile, the 20 May stadium, which served as a rallying point, was enlivened by the ballets "Kake" and "Lipopo," and the music of the OK Jazz, Mpongo Love and Vonga Aye orchestras. These musical groups had the ingenious idea of performing songs of which the themes were the lack of slavery in Zaire, the good-neighbor policy and defense of the gains of the revolution.

Following the march, the regional president of the MPR and governor of the city of Kinshasa, Mr Sakombi Ekope, delivered an address in which he praised the population of the capital for its constant readiness to respond to any party appeal. Explaining the meaning of the day's demonstration, the head of the city administration stressed that Zaire can in no case tolerate the slanderous intentions pursued by certain Arab countries with regard to its leader since the announcement by the bureau of the Central Committee of the MPR that diplomatic relations are being resumed with the state of Israel.

After discussing the motivations underlying the conflict existing today between Zaire and the Arab world, Sakombi Ekope recalled that, within the framework of his open-approach policy, Zaire has no problems with the Arabs. Those Arabs who live in Kinshasa can go about their usual concerns provided that they do not interfere in our affairs. In this connection, the people of the city were urged to maintain the highest level of vigilance.

The governor of the city wanted to deal, before ending his address, with the problem concerning the prevailing insecurity in the capital. In this connection, he congratulated the population of Kinshasa on its solidarity and urged the people to take evildoers seized to the proper departments so that more profound investigations can be pursued. In the position that it adopted on the reactions of the Arab countries to the resumption of diplomatic relations between Zaire and Israel, the Kinshasa regional committee of the MPR, in a motion which Vice Governor Nzita read aloud, energetically denounced and condemned the violation of our sovereignty. It expressed approval and total support of the president of the republic for the justified renewal of diplomatic relations with Israel, a renewal the committee regards moreover as a substantial contribution to the efforts to bring peace to the Middle East. In addition, it asserted forcefully that the militants in Kinshasa continue to rally around their guide, Mobutu, in the defense of independence, national unity and territorial integrity. In its conclusion, the message confirmed the unceasing devotion of the men and women of Kinshasa to the president and founder and the ideals of the revolution, and congratulated the chief of state on his policy of openness and the realism and firmness with which he guides our diplomacy.

In Shaba

The men and women members in the Shaba region expressed their support of the president and founder of the MPR and president of the republic, citizen Mobutu Sese Seko, through magnificent marches organized in the various political-administrative districts of this part of the national territory.

In Lubumbashi, these marches were organized on the basis of the seven zones of the city, and were led by various personalities including citizens Mbalanga Hahe and Mombongolia, vice governor of Shaba, and citizen Mulonga Misha Kabange, second vice president of the bureau of the Central Committee of the MPR and political commissioner.

Following the march organized in the urban zone of Katuba, in which Vice Governor Mbalanga took part, the militants in this municipality sent the following motion of support to the president and founder of the MPR and president of the republic, citizen Mobutu Sese Seko:

"We, the men and women militants in the urban zone of Katuba in the city of Lubumbashi, rallied within the MPR, are, on completion of the march organized along all of the main arteries in our zone, sending this motion of support to you, assuring you of our unconditional support of your decision, after ripe consideration, to reestablish diplomatic relations with the Jewish state.

"We confirm to you that we most energetically reject all the imperialist ideas of certain Arab countries which claim to represent a 'front of firmness.'

"We thank you for all you have done and will continue to do for our dear country, without moreover forgetting your main historic achievements, which are peace, calm, the unification of the people of Zaire, freedom of expression and the organization of our armed and territorial forces.

"We implore all the gods of our ancestors to allow you long life and to aid you in your burdensome tasks.

"Once again we reiterate our unending devotion to the ideals of the party and its president and founder.

"Long live the president and founder, long live the MPR."

Similar popular demostrations developed in the various cities and subregions of Shaba, in which the party militants carried out popular marches in support of Guide Mobutu along the main thoroughfares in their districts.

In Kipushi, the capital of the subregion of Haut-Shaba, citizen Buloko Wa Tshimpumpu, subregional commissioner, personally led the march. He was aided by his colleagues as well as their wives, who joined with the women merchants to express their unending devotion to the father of the nation.

In Likasi and Kolwezi, the two main mining towns in the region, the local population marched the route of 7 kilometers marked out by the urban authorities through the Kikula, Panda, Shituru and Likasi districts, as well as the Manika and Dilala zones.

Motions expressing support of the president and founder of the MPR and president of the republic, citizen Mobutu Sese Seko, were sent to him by the people of these districts, issuing a challenge to the Arab countries which claimed to constitute a "front of firmness."

In Matadi

All of the popular forces in the town of Matadi, led by citizen Malumba Mbangula, regional president of the MPR and governor of Bas-Zaire, participated Saturday in the great march in support of the president and founder of the MPR and president of the republic, citizen Mobutu Sese Seko, organized along the main thoroughfares of the port city.

Following the march, citizen Malumba told the militants gathered at Damar Square that Zaire's decision to renew relations with the Hebrew state is "logical, normal and sovereign."

Where the Arab reactions against this decision by Zaire were concerned, he said: "The dog barks, but the caravan moves on." The governor of the region also urged the citizens under his jurisdiction to maintain increased vigilance and to continue to trust in Guide Mobutu Sese Seko, to whom he paid deferential homage.

Earlier, citizen Bolombo Baembe, regional secretary of the MOPAP, had read the motion of support drafted by the militants of Bas-Zaire for the president and founder of the MPR.

In that document, they confirmed their undying devotion to and support of the father of the Zairian revolution and the ideals of the MPR.

In Bukavu

An important march to demonstrate support for the president and founder of the MPR and president of the republic, citizen Mobutu Sese Seko, was organized Saturday afternoon in Bukavu for the men and women members of the MPR and the party youth. Following the march, citizen Mwando Nsimba, regional president of the MPR and governor of Kivu, recalled the slave-trading past of our Arab brothers, who want to continue to dominate us by means of petrodollars. In this connection, he recalled the towns of Kasongo and Kindu, which in the past served as great slave markets, before the arrival of the Belgians.

After the speech by the governor of the region, citizen Mulihiri, urban secretary of the MOPAP, read the following motion, addressed to the president and founder: "We the militants of Kivu, represented by the urban population of Bukavu, rallied within the MPR, hail with revolutionary enthusiasm your decision to reestablish diplomatic relations between our country and the state of Israel, the logical consequence of the sovereign decision you adopted on 14 October 1973 and announced before the members of the 28th General Assembly of the United Nations.

"By this decision, you have shown to all the world, in particular the Arab imperialists and their acolytes, that Zaire is a sovereign country which can in no case yield to any kind of menace whatsoever.

"Let the former slave merchants know that they would do best to leave us alone, in order to avoid recalling the painful memories we have been willing to bury with history.

"We take advantage of this occasion to reiterate to you once again our undying devotion to your august personage and our determination to fight beside you to our last breath to safeguard our sovereignty."

In Mbuji-Mayi

Thousands of militants from the city of Mbuji-Mayi, led by Governor Zamundu, undertook a march Saturday in support of the president and founder of the MPR and president of the republic, Guide Mobutu Sese Seko, to demonstrate to him their inflexible support of the wise decision he made to renew diplomatic relations with the Hebrew state.

Following the march, the Mbuji-Mayi militants, and through them, those of the subregions and rural zones of Kasai Oriental, addressed the following motion to the father of the nation:

"We want to assure you of our firm determination to resist fiercely in opposition to the threats of intimidation proffered by certain Arab countries which, in the midst of the 20th century, still yearn for the days of subjecting other peoples, as they did in the era when they were masters of the slave trade. To defend this national sovereignty and the integrity of our territory, we, the people of Easter Kasai, are ready to wage courageous battle to the last drop of our blood.

"We are aware that at this precise moment, all of the political agitators want to engage in a campaign to disrupt and poison the peaceful population of Zaire by promulgating false rumors and thus sowing doubt in the minds of the people. However, we are more than determined to maintain vigilance on all fronts in order to protect ourselves against the subversive campaigns orchestrated by these political criminals. We reiterate our never-ending devotion to your august personage as well as the ideals of the MPR."

GREATER COOPERATION WITH FRANCE IN COMMUNICATIONS SECTOR PLANNED

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 26 May 82 p 7

[Text] The meeting of the joint high commission has always provided an opportunity for the confirmation of the bonds linking the two nations by making the strengthening of their cooperation possible. With regard to cooperation between France and Zaire, in which connection the sessions of the joint high commission once again provided proof of the excellence of the relations between the two nations, it is expected that it will breathe new life into sectors to which our country gives priority: agriculture, transportation, energy, mining, health and education.

In Zaire it has been constantly reiterated that agriculture must be developed in order to make it possible to effect substantial economies in foreign exchange as a result of self-sufficiency in the food sector.

The first priority assigned to agriculture can thus only be justified if the key sector which transportation and communications represent can succeed in providing outlets for the regions which can then fully play their role as the breadbasket for the capital and the other major urban centers.

For a country with subcontinental dimensions such as Zaire, the most favorable means of transportation is without any doubt by air. This is particularly true when speed is needed, for time is money. But having airplanes is not enough. It is necessary to guarantee those who use them safety both on board the aircraft and in the facilities housing the related offices and services. And this need is the more urgent at a time when many private individuals are responding to the appeal made by the president and founder of the MPR and president of the republic for support of Air Zaire in the transportation of passengers and freight.

Thus civil aviation occupies a leading place in the complex of elements contributing to the development of the country. For this reason, it has not been overlooked within the framework of Franco-Zairian cooperation. Quite the contrary! The aid contributed to the Airlines Administration (RVA) by our French partners through the agency of the Sofreavia Service state company is very substantial. Established by the general multiannual cooperation agreement for the civil aviation and meteorological sector dated 6 April 1981, it was designed to ensure aerial safety and the training of Zairian personnel with a view to replacing the French cooperative workers, and was to function for a minimum of 4 years.

And as a prerequisite to the actual launching of this enterprise, funds were needed. The two parties provided for this when they signed the implementation agreement for the period between 1 July 1981 and 31 December 1982, which called for contributions from the partners. Thus of its share of the first establishment expenditures, including the purchase of rolling stock and technical equipment, as well as the modernization of installations, France has already paid up 75 percent, or about 20 million French francs. Where Zaire is concerned, the RVA was able to pay into this fund, as a gesture of goodwill on the part of the Zairian state, an amount from its subsidy. But this effort is insufficient, because the resources available to it will not allow it to take the place of the board of directors.

The extent of the activities underway should moreover stimulate the political authorities, aware of the contribution this sector of activity is making to the development of the country, to react within a relatively short period. For it is necessary to find the credit needed for the maintenance of the electronic, telecommunications and meteorological apparatus, as well as the fire control vehicles due to arrive in Zaire shortly.

Ipso facto, any discussion of maintenance involves spare parts. For this reason Sofreavia Service recently dispatched its "order bureau" official, Mr Jaouen, to Zaire, to go over with the management staff of the RVA the orders placed by Zaire on which delivery is expected soon. This mission, undertaken just prior to the meeting of the joint high Franco-Zairian commission, can contribute to the development of a file useful to the experts of our two countries.

The problem of safety in aerial navigation will be entirely resolved through collaboration between France and its Zairian partner, which will have to make its quota contribution. France even plans to extend its collaboration beyond the improvement of safety at the N'Djili International Airport, to include other international airports in the country as well (Lubumbashi, Kisangani and Boma).

TRAINING LEADER INTERVIEWED ON THRUST OF MOBUTU MOVEMENT

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 14 Apr 82 pp 10-11

/Interview with Kangafu-Vingi-Gudumbangana, secretary general for cadre training and director of the Makanda Kobobi Institute, by Mputu-Toko Dingani: "The Paths of the Mobutian Revolution"; date and place not specified/

> /Text/ In an interesting interview given last week to our newspaper, Citizen Kangafu-Vingi-Gudumbangana, secretary general for cadre training and director of the Makanda Kabobi Institute, reminds us of the date 22 March 1967, "a memorable date that deserves to be duly recognized." It is on that day, in fact, that the founder-president, the president of the republic, announced the imminent creation of a national party. In his answers, Citizen Kangafu puts this date in its historical context and then talks about the "advance" or "long march" of the Popular Movement of the Revolution before giving his vision of the MPR in the year 2000.

/Question/ 22 March 1967--an almost insigificant date in the public view. And yet a rereading of the history of our national party shows that 22 March is a memorable date that deserves to be duly recognized. Citizen Secretary General, would you like to define its historical context in terms of time and place?

/Answer/ It is an apparently insigificant date or, more precisely, a date of which activists have no recollection. And you understand the importance of commemorative dates in the destiny of a nation! Fine. On 22 March it was exactly 60 days from 20 May, and we are steadily making our way toward the 15th anniversary. Within that progression, the date of 22 March is of capital importance: it is the day on which Guide Mobutu made the ceremonial announcement of the imminent creation of a national party--a major occurrence, therefore. As for its historical context: We were, of course, coming out of a period of an apolitical nature. During that time, only the CVR /expansion unknown/ that is, a body of patriots, was providing the political driving force. And it had no status as a political party or political formation. All the political parties were no longer in existence. This was because the new revolutionary government wanted to break away, wanted a total break with everything that had existed before. This desire for a total break with the past, which involved the determination to innovate for the benefit of the masses of the people, had given rise to much sympathy, genuine alliances and powerful basic popular enthusiasm. Let us not forget that the Guide had been touring the country since 14 March; in his mingling with crowds and his contacts, he had been experiencing genuine political communication--a stir of encouragement and sincere support for the undertaking of 24 November 1965. So that immense popular support--that profound similarity of view demonstrated by all social strata of the people of the Zaire River--had to be crystallized into something organic, capable of channeling and organizing that breath of liberation emanating from the people. So, during a meeting with members of the press at his stop in Mbandaka, the decision that had been taken was made public: a mass movement, a political formation was to be created, very soon, to bring the country out of being apolitical and to strengthen the flame of patriotism that the CVR was fanning.

/Question/ After 15 years, the MPR has a history that has now become identified with the existence of the nation. In your view, what is the importance of the 22 March date within the march of our authentic revolution?

/Answer/ The importance of 22 March? General Mobutu became aware of the unanimity and the similiarity of aspirations surrounding his desire for renewal and for the liberation from historical destiny of the people of that central basin that constitutes Zaire. On that date--on that day--a conviction was formed: Popular enthusiasm and support of the masses for political innovation required a structure to keep it going, an organic foundation. There was unanimous support for an undertaking for national liberation, for the building of a new society rejecting the colonial model as well as the model of the First Republic--fundamental unanimous support for organizing independence, which came on 30 June, as a plan for society, as a unified national liberation. The mass movement that was announced was already a vision of the new city--an organization of the vast aspiration for freedom.

/Question/ What about the CVR, Citizen Secretary General? Can you single out the influence of its activity in the Mobutian action announcing the creation of the MPR?

/Answer/ The CVR? Well, President Mobutu has always had his hand in it and a presence in it. He has sworn to be committed and faithful already /as published; dropped line/. The high command? He has a hand in that; the CVR shines in public education. It is the only organized and nationalistic politicized structure. In fact, it is itself the voluntary protector of the safety of the independent republic /of Zaire/. At that dawning of "cha-cha independence," though the army proved to be the only well-knit and disciplined force, the CFR emerged in the civilian sector as the only structure for watching over the republic's defense and mass education--the only politicized, organized structure established in the country with the defense of national unity as its objective. Do you remember the startling stands--supported by the CVR--that prayed for an organization like the MPR? That conjunction of two forces--note that the CVR shone with youth, evidencing determined youthful forces--undoubtedly prompted President Mobutu to forge ahead, particularly to unite and gather together that energy devoted to the glory of the building of a strong, unitary nation.

/Question/ How did the population react to that decision, especially since it still had in mind the sufferings borne for 5 years following the fratricidal conflicts bred by the political parties of those days?

/Answer/ Yes, the sufferings that had been borne, the mourning, the fratricidal conflicts, the panoply of tribal-ethnic parties...there was scattering, dispersal, the dissolution of reality. Note that in that announcement of President Mobutu's there is no question at all of "party." It is a question of "mass movement."

And the massive, spontaneous and enthusiastic support for this movement measured up to the immediate identification of the population with this political undertaking. The people, who had previously been bewildered, found themselves back with an incarnation, a consciousness, a political plan--in short, an identity by means of which they could define themselves.

/Question/ Citizen Secretary General, starting with 22 March 1967, would you like to describe the MPR's course, stressing the high points of its history?

/Answer/ The course of the MPR! I prefer the terms "advance" or "long march." The course? That is as if one were at the end of the journey, whereas we are right in the middle of it. I see two kinds of high points already experienced. First, institutional advance. This started out from the apolitical attitudes of 1965-1967, went through the 24 June 1967 constitution's two-party system, which very soon proved not just inadequate but, most of all, without purpose, and matured into the one-party system—the institutionalized MPR (which has become a publicly acknowledged fait accompli within the state)--the MPR, supreme institution of the republic. This form of one-party system was quickly superseded, and the MPR further matured to become the preeminent institution of the republic—the politically organized Zairian nation, as our basic texts say. The MPR is the formal consciousness of the Zairian people--to the extent that the nation is molded in the MPR's objectives, ideals, and principles of action--and the MPR identifies itself with the Zairian nation. Hence, the MPR is the party-government of Zaire.

Then, the advance in the internal organization of the unitary nature of power. In this connection, let us point out the ups and downs of the two-headed system, or dualism, remembered with sadness, and then the movement of liberation, or strengthening of democratization, starting with the general political speech of 1 July 1977, to make institutions more responsible, to permit the people to make their voices heard more effectively, and to sanction the activity of party cadres.

Finally, the evolution of economic-administrative decentralization with the new territorial organization, the broadening of elections into rural areas and the creation of structures with a mandate granted by popular election, such as the assemblies. An important feature in all these high points of the MPR's recent history is that everything starts from and converges on the basic postulate of the second republic: the primacy of the party. Thus, within the entire hierarchy, the MPR committees are the leadership authorities--the authorities with political responsibility.

/Question/ Can one say that the MPR's path through these reference points is a straight line that has not undergone either twisting and turning or any change of direction?

/Answer/ No. But the MPR is successfully launched—no doubt about it. And just like any human undertaking, the path of its maturing process has had its shining moments and its somber moments. Besides, that is why periods of revitalization or renewal of the party make all the sense in the world. Think of the periods such as those marked by the instructive outcry for leadership, political affairs and coordination, the executive secretariat, the secretary general for political organization and...highs and lows, a sign of the MPR's incredible vitality.

/Question/ The MPR is a party with a future. After that historical reminder of the past, could the secretary general tell us what he envisions concerning the MPR of the year 2000?

/Answer/ The MPR in the year 2000...(And that is within about 8 /as published/ years. In concrete terms, the year 2000 will be reached in President Mobutu's next 7-year presidential term which starts in 1984.) There you have the whole problematical matter of the durability of Mobutuism. Mobutuism will live on--that is the way things will be—to the extent that the political leadership adequately resolves the issue of professional cadres within the MPR.

Let me explain: Everything bad being said or done regarding party cadres quite simply means that, at this stage of the revolution, the demand for them by the rank-and-file is such that the outcome of the debate over party cadres is proving to be decisive for how the maturing process of our party-government is evolving.

One thing is being forgotten in this debate: The MPR sprang from the complete approval of the nation, from definite legitimacy, which is to say in accordance with the deep-seated will of the people. I mean that the MPR arose with the total support of the masses. But regarding party professionals, they have come from that whole variety of banned parties. They came to the MPR not because of support for the movement's political plan but in search of jobs, because of their need for gainful employment. The foundation of the MPR is in the masses, and that is what is essential. But the party professionals must be won over. More precisely, the MPR must establish its professional cadres from among those who identify with the MPR's political plan.

Of course, opportunities to do this have been missed; however, the Central Committee came back to this matter in its first and fourth sessions. The Executive Committee has responsibility for establishing the file of Mobutuist party professionals. In short, a need is being demonstrated, the need to have within the large movement rallying the masses a vanguard dedicated to the achievement of the MPR's political plan, something like a locomotive pulling railroad cars. The durability of Mobutuism--the MPR in the year 2000--is taking shape in that perspective.

/Question/ The ideology of a political party is the set of important ideas that enlighten its members and determine their historical progress. In your capacity as director of the party school, could you give us a panorama of the state of health of the MPR's ideology? And how does it fit into the MPR activist's everyday life?

/Answer/ The MPR's ideology has had a fortunate development. It has won, nurtured and confirmed its position as an ideology for contemporary Africa. This ideology has matured in several dimensions:

- in the dimension of its theoretical consistency;
- in the dimension of the reasoning of its basic theses; and,
- in the dimension of its conceptual clarification.

Mobutuism is a kind of humanism. However, it is a pragmatic doctrine--that is to say, it gives great importance to translating the theoretical body of its theses, intentions and claims into living actions of social transformation. It is the achievement of a specific political plan. It is through its pragmatism that it goes about integrating itself into the everyday life of its activists--an integration not just of outward achievements but, most of all, of internalization in order to transform activists into the creative spirits of their own development in accordance with the pattern of the plan.

/Question/ Citizen Secretary General, you run the Makanda Kabobi Institute, which is in charge of training the country's party professionals politically and ideologically. Do you believe that the party school is accomplishing its objectives by following its present working methods?

/Answer/ Let us first state the party school's objectives:

1. to imbue party professionals with the teachings of the Guide;

2. to get party professionals talking the same language;

3. to clarify the principles that are the basis of the Second Republic's revolutionary activity;

4. to spread the party's doctrine in a standardized fashion; and,

5. to train MPR officials and leaders at all levels, so that they speak the same language and constantly improve their knowledge of it.

And presently implemented methods are effectively working toward making a success of those objectives. Those methods are based on:

1. the adult education system;
2. continuous functional training;
3. a training system with follow-up; and,
4. a body of teachings set by the Central Committee.

These present-day methods facilitate the assimilation of the teachings by those adult persons who are officials and leaders of the MPR and facilitate those teachings being translated into behavior, attitudes and capabilities. So, a didactic method for teaching proper behavior makes one's intellectual grasp of Mobutuism complete. Insight into the functioning of our party-government political system--knowledge of the principles of Mobutuist action--understanding of the relevance of Mobutuism in the national, inter-African and global sociopolitical context—knowing that decisions that are taken by and actions of the government fall into a definite overall political plan--all this properly qualifies party cadres and makes them capable of controling the authentic Zairian revolution. Not only are the school's objectives being achieved, but also a genuine political culture is in the process of molding the MPR's officialdom and leadership personnel, which currently come through the party school. And that is a step forward.

BANK OF ZAIRE REPORTS SLOWDOWN IN ECONOMY

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 22 Apr 82 pp 1, 7

/Text/ The growth of the Zairian economy, noted in 1980, continued during the first half of 1981 but slowed down after the middle of the year.

According to the Bank of Zaire's report on the economic life of Zaire in 1981, this slowdown was due to the insufficiency of foreign resources to finance the imports needed for production.

The report stresses that certain enterprises, taking into account the weakening of demand caused by the decline in consumer purchasing power, reduced the level of their activities. Shortages of funds also hampered business activities.

As a result, Zaire's economic growth fell short of the expected rate of 3 percent. In actual fact, according to preliminary estimates of the Bank of Zaire, the gross domestic product grew at the rate of 1.9 percent in real terms (2.4 percent in 1980), thanks to the favorable situation in the consumer goods sector.

Mining and Metallurgical Production

The Bank of Zaire notes an upswing in mining and metallurgical production, but at a less rapid rate. This production increased 96.8 points in 1979, 109.1 in 1980, and 115 in 1981, using 1970 as the production index base.

Copper production increased from 459,300 tons in 1980 to 504,800 tons in 1981. Production of refined zinc reached 57,000 tons in 1981, compared to 43,900 tons in 1980.

An upswing was also noted for gold and silver, which had been in a distinct decline during the previous years.

Production of crude petroleum reached 7,668,000 barrels in 1981, as against 6,640,000 in 1980. There was a decline in the mining of other ores: a decline of 23 percent for cobalt, whose production was intentionally slowed as a result of large existing stocks; and a decline in diamond production due to the difficulties in exploiting the rocky deposits intended to replace the alluvial deposits now being worked out.

Activities in the transport sector, which have made headway since 1980, kept up in 1981. But traffic in the ports of Matadi and Kinshasa improved as a result of the more intensive use of the national road for the export of ores.

Retail Prices

The average index of retail prices, reached after adjustment of the two indices of the National Statistical Institute and the Institute of Economic and Social Research, respectively, in 1981 as against 46.7 percent in 1980. [sentence as published]

The index of market prices shows a more marked increase for local products than for imported products.

The Bank of Zaire nevertheless emphasized the inflation that followed the rise in prices of goods other than foodstuffs in the 3 months following the change in parity, and then the rise in the prices of foodstuffs at the end of the year, during the supply difficulties caused by the shortage of fuel.

Concerning public finances, the state of Zaire had receipts of 4,801,800,000 [zaires] in 1981, an increase of 27.1 percent, while payments reached 6,524,100,000 zaires in 1981, for an increase of 58.6 percent.

The deficit was financed by foreign loans and by monetary resources.

Foreign Economic Relations

Receipts from Zairian exports reached 2,769,400,000 zaires in 1981, as opposed to 4,380,700,000 zaires in 1980.

Imports totaled 2,360,900,000 zaires, an increase of 16.2 percent. The decline in foreign accounts in zaires is due above all to the unfavorable development in the terms of trade: copper prices fell to a very low level, the selling price of cobalt weakened, while the price for diamonds (average price) again diminished as a result of the increase in the relative proportion of lower quality diamonds, to the detriment of jewelry stones.

On the other hand, prices for vegetable products showed greater strength, with the exception of the price for coffee, which was clearly in decline during the second half of the year.

Compared to prices, tonnages exported scarcely changed. With the sole case of copper, exports reached 470,000 tons in 1981, as against 468,000 tons in 1980.

The decline in export receipts made it impossible to meet all foreign obligations accumulated in 1981 by the repurchase of large issues and payments to the International Monetary Fund.

Money and Credit

The total amount of moeny in circulation increased only 37.9 percent during the year 1981, compared to 61.5 percent in 1980. This was the result of maintaining a restrictive monetary policy. Monetary liquidity increased by 37 percent in 1981, compared to 66.1 percent in 1980.

This monetary expansion is due to the state's recourse to deficit financing for its operations. Net state debts increased to 4,942,900,000 zaires, or by 60 percent.

Assistance to the economy reached 1,281,900,000 zaires (a 30.6-percent increase), while foreign holdings strongly decreased, so that the negative balance increased from 261.8 million to 1,408,800,000 zaires in 1981.

This credit to firms and individuals, fixed at 475 million zaires for 1981, reached 1,259,300,000 zaires by 31 December 1981.

In conclusion, according to the Bank of Zaire, the year 1981 did not fully confirm the hopes inspired by the renewal of economic growth in 1980, following numerous years of recession, and the progress achieved along the path of return to balanced finances.

In the foreign field, the report states that as a result of the noteworthy decline in export earnings, the balance of current payments is again in deficit.

The report emphasizes that this decline in export earnings may compromise the success of the recovery plan and make it more difficult to meet foreign obligations.

CHINESE TO HELP FINANCE EXPENSES FOR SUGARMILL

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 22 Apr 82 p 9

/Article by Mbiya Tchota and Muena Mpala: "Sino-Zaire Cooperation"/

/Text/ Half of the expenses for completion of the Lotokila sugarmill will be financed by the Chinese Government.

This is what emerges from the meetings that took place Thursday 15 April in the office of Citizen Kamitatu Massamba, state commissar for agriculture at the Department of Rural Development, with His Excellency Li Shangi, Chinese ambassador to Zaire. The two statesmen reviewed the subject of cooperation between the two countries in the field of agriculture, especially in connection with strengthening the search for new types of rice for Zaire.

During these meetings the problem of finishing the Lokoti sugarmill in the Upper Zaire region was brought up. The Chinese diplomat confirmed that the Chinese had agreed to take over half the financing costs, payable in local currency.

We note that this mill is expected to produce 12,000 tons of sugar annually. This production unit will be operational during the last half of 1984 if time schedules are maintained.

They also discussed strengthening the UMAZ /expansion unknown/ for the sale of light agricultural materials in the countryside, which the department considers very important.

MATADI FLOUR MILL PRODUCTION INCREASE REPORTED

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 26 May 82 p 9

[Article by Obotela Osega-Bioto]

[Text] On Wednesday, 19 May, the Matadi Flour Mills (MIDEMA) solemnly commissioned its increased production capacity. This production, up from 450 to 600 tons of wheat per day, was made possible thanks to new equipment, on which the technical preparatory work and installation began in October 1981. Today, this is a renovated plant, the commissioning of which the numerous guests of the MIDEMA brought to Kinshasa on a special airplane flight had the privilege of attending. The director of the MIDEMA headquarters, Mr Obrist, took the group of guests, headed by the regional president of the MPR and governor of the Bas-Zaire region, Mr Malumba Mbangula, on a guided tour of the facilities.

Three main addresses preceded the cutting of the symbolic ribbon by the governor of the region. It was 9 years ago that the president and founder of the MPR, now president of the republic, inaugurated these flour mills, Mr Beya Tshikeba, president of the MIDEMA board of directors, said in his speech. Today, he went on to say, based on the various agreements signed between the two main partners, Zaire controls 40 percent of the MIDEMA company capital, fully paid up. Speaking specifically of the ceremony in progress, the speaker noted that it bore witness to a model of cooperation between private foreign investors and the state.

In his address, Mr Walter Bohren Fluckiger, managing director of the MIDEMA, set forth the activities of this important wheat flour production unit. At the time of its commissioning, the MIDEMA had a milling capacity of 350 tons of wheat per day. "We were very proud that day," the speaker said, "and we have a right to be again," he stressed, "after having done our best for 9 years to carry out the mission entrusted to us. This pride is justified above all now that we can inaugurate facilities capable of milling 600 tons of wheat per day, and producing 10,300 sacks of flour per day," the managing director of the MIDEMA explained.

Since 19 May 1973, he went on to say, the company has not ceased to make additional investments. He mentioned the most important ones, the last having to do precisely with the production increase from 450 to 600 tons of wheat per day. The amount of this investment came to U. S. $2,034,000. These investments, the speaker said, are certainly the best evidence of the confidence prevailing among the stockholders of the MIDEMA, on the one hand, and the government authorities in Zaire, on the other.

The managing director of the MIDEMA headquarters, Mr Ngalo Ekendje, congratulated the officials of the company on behalf of the workers for having been able to arrange the financing of this project, which fully reflects the confidence they have in our great country, in its institutions and in its leaders, he stressed. The first 120 sacks of flour produced by the renovated MIDEMA plant were offered to various social projects in the form of a gift--proof that business does not totally exclude philanthropy.

In response to the thanks expressed by the president of the board of directors of the MIDEMA during the dinner at the Metropole Hotel, the regional president of the MPR and governor of the Bas-Zaire region thanked and congratulated the MIDEMA partners.

A visit to the bridge under construction over the Zaire River in Matadi brought the program organized for this great day by the MIDEMA to an end. Let us note that this economic ceremony was enhanced by the presence of the state commissioner for economy, industry and foreign trade, Mr Ilunga Ilukamba, the American charge d'affaires, Mr MacNamara, as well as numerous other outstanding guests (presidents and managing directors of enterprises).

LUBUMBASHI'S AGRICULTURAL PROGRAM EXPLAINED

Kinshasa ELIMA in French 28 Apr 82 p 9

/Article: "Lubumbashi City's Integrated Agricultural Plan"/

> /Text/ The Shaba, which is a "geological scandal," could also be an agricultural scandal. And to free this region from the need to import corn, CEPSE /expansion not given/ is doing everything it can to triple production.

Some 15,433 registered planters, including 1,222 groups, are participating this year in the integrated agricultural program initiated by the Lubumbashi city government.

This program, now under way, calls for the plowing of 936.9 hectares of fields where various items of food production will be planted, with an estimated production for the 1981-82 season of 2,600 tons of corn, 20,000 tons of cassava, 235 tons of peanuts, and 300 tons of soy beans.

The city of Lubumbashi possesses a rich green belt and certain agro-industrial units: the Kisanga farm, the Swiss agricultural mission in the Lubumbashi zone, as well as farms and truck farms.

The project aims principally at the restoration of the village by training peasant masses for increased agricultural production, identifying all human resources with a view to maximizing their rational use, noting the numerous constraints hampering agricultural development in the green belt, and evaluating the material and financial requirements for carrying out the project.

Compared to the territorial structure of a rural subregion which takes collectivity as the basis for peasant production, the project for the city of Lubumbashi places at the center of concern the locality (or village), as an agricultural brigade made up of production teams and cooperatives.

TEXTILE WAGES RAISED--The workers in the Utexco, Zaire-Print, Tissakin and Zaitex Companies in the textile sector will benefit from a 20 percent increase in their established wages as of 1 May 1982. This is the result of the initial negotiations which led to the signing of a protocol of agreement between the UNTZa and the textile company managers on 1 May of this year. This increase, the protocol of agreement specifies, is granted pending completion of the negotiations currently in progress between the social partners concerning amendment of the sectorial collective agreement governing the personnel of these four companies. COMPREHENSIVE TRAINING TO MAKE ARMY 'SUPER FORCE'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Jun 82 p 1

[Text]

ZAMBIA Army is going through a comprehensive training programme aimed at transforming it into a super fighting force, army commander Lieutenant-General Malimba Masheke said in Lusaka yesterday.

General Masheke said the training programme the army had embarked upon should not be a mere paper blueprint projecting professional aspirations.

"No matter how plausible, if just stored away to suffocate in the filing cabinets and not translated into reality through positive action, the programme was as useful as is an embryo to a family."

The general was speaking at the official opening of the inter-unit-skill-at-arms competition in Lusaka.

He appealed to all levels of command in the army to assume a sense of commitment when implementing the training programme.

"All of us must be clear of the aim and then with a deliberate sense of purpose strive to achieve it.

"It is our duty as an army to achieve and maintain the highest level of professional efficiency because that is the only way we shall be able to shoulder tenaciously the heavy national security responsibilities."

The shooting competition, in which 340 men are taking part, is of particular significance in any discerning army because it was one of the accurate gauges measuring its primary skill — shoot to kill.

There was not much point in a farmer to fatten one bull for a three-day show while leaving the rest of the herd in abject deprivation. "Remember shoot to kill is and must be an army's hallmark."

Urging the officers and men to "train hard to fight well", the general said there was conclusive evidence the "enemy" was training day and night "and the enemy can only train to fight us".

War in this part of Africa, he said, was still a three dimensional reality. There was the thick, dark, political cloud over the sub-continent which was an indicator it was just a matter of time before a freak hurricane of military confrontation could be the only viable option left.

Gen Masheke displayed his talent at marksmanship when he took position from 300 metres and fired at the targets twice hitting the bull using an M 56 assault rifle.

The competition ends on June 26 and is expected to be officially closed by Defence Minister Mr Wilson Chakulya.

OIL SEARCH--The Ministry of Mines has started to prospect for petroleum oil in the Luangwa Valley and te Western Province after a K6.6 million World Bank loan clinched in Washington last week. The two areas are being surveyed for oil because they contain ideal rocks. Acting permanent secretary Dr Eli Mwanag'onze confirmed in Lusaka yesterday the three-year hydrocarbon project had started and aeroplanes were flying over the two areas to locate structures containing oil or gas. "If and when these are located it will be up to the Government to decide how to proceed," he said. The Government would, if results prove positive, invite oil companies to jointly carry out detailed assessment of the available quantity to determine whether it would be economical to set up oil extraction plants. The project will take three years and will cost more than K7 million and the Government will pump in K1 million in three years. The actual survey was carried out by a company called Geo-Survey and another consulting company would evaluate its results. At this time of escalating oil prices, Zambia could save up to K200 million if this search proved fruitful. [Text][Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 23 Jun 82 p 2]

FRENCH AID MINISTER HOLDS END-OF-VISIT NEWS CONFERENCE

AB130800 Paris AFP in English 0732 GMT 13 Jul 82

[Text] Bangui, July 13 (AFP)--French Aid Minister Jean-Pierre Cot praised Central African Republic President Gen Andre Kolingba here Monday for his "perseverance and tenacity" in trying to restore the former French colony's fortunes after years of neglect.

He told a news conference at the end of a three-day visit here that talks with local officials had established that aid should be increased and henceforth on a more clearly-defined and "contractual" basis.

Mr Cot, who travelled hundreds of miles around the country inspecting various projects during his stay, listed France's main aid contributions as a rural development programme in the Savane area, an expansion of Bangui airport, and the building of an ultra-modern laboratory to study diseases.

He also praised the work of French troops stationed in the country in building bridges and rural schools and providing primary health care.

Asked about Chad, he said France welcomed current efforts at reconciliation involving new Chadian Head of State Hissein Habre and southern Chad leader Wadal Abdelkader Kamougue.

France wanted to help rebuild Chad after its civil war, but it had no intention of interfering in other countries' internal affairs, he stressed.

(The LIBYAN NEWS AGENCY said Monday that Gen Kolingba had sent a message to Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi calling for "normalisation of political ties" and a "reorganisation of cooperation" between the two countries. It quoted him as saying that Bangui was ready for "consultations at all levels.")

JAPANESE DEPUTY MINISTER VISITS--Today is the second day of an official visit to our country by (Simesieu Ideo Chudy), the Japanese deputy minister of foreign affairs. After being received early this afternoon by President Omar Bongo at the Renovation Palace, the Japanese representative was guest at a luncheon given by the secretary of state to the minister of state in charge of foreign affairs and cooperation. Proposing the toast on the occasion, Mrs Honorine Doussou-naki expressed the satisfaction of the Gabonese Government at receiving a Japanese guest. To Mrs Honorine Doussou-naki, this visit makes it possible to consolidate the bond of friendship linking Gabon to Japan and to further strengthen the economic and social relations which have existed between the two countries since 1972. Replying to the toast, the Japanese deputy minister of foreign affairs promised that the authorities of his country will work toward getting Japanese businessmen to invest in Gabon. CONFEDERATION AGREEMENT--Work on some of the protocols of the Senegambia Confederation Agreement has been completed and now awaits signature and ratification, the president, Sir Dawda Jawara, said on Tuesday. During an interview at State House with Richard Hall, commonwealth correspondent of the English newspaper the OBSERVER, Sir Dawda said that the protocol affecting tariffs was being prepared and he had no doubt that the two countries would take into consideration the best interests of their peoples when it is being drawn. On PPP [People's Progressive Party] policies, Sir Dawda said the party was firmly committed to a multi-party democracy as it was before. The party, he went on, is also committed to rejuvenating itself and already the last elections had injected new blood into the parliamentary party. Rejuvenation would continue down to the grassroots level, he added. Commenting on the economy, the president noted that tourism was growing and everything possible would be done to increase its contribution to the economy. Sir Dawda said the fishing industry had a great potential and already action was being taken to exploit it to the full. The country was also hopefully continuing its search for oil within its borders. [Excerpts] [AB150918 Banjul the GAMBIA NEWS BULLETIN in English 25 Jun 82 pp 1, 2]

GHANAIAN PAPERS VIEW TRIBALISM, REVOLUTION

AB140926 Accra Domestic Service in English 0700 GMT 14 Jul 82

[Press review]

[Text] THE GHANAIAN TIMES takes up the call on Ghanaians to be aware of the sustained attempts by counterrevolutionaries to incite tribal sentiment in a bid to destroy national unity and sabotage the revolution. According to a member of the Provisional National Defense Council [PNDC], Sgt Alolga Akata-Pore, who gave this advice, the only tribes which exist in the country are the rich and the poor, and this underscores the reason for the revolution [words indistinct].

THE TIMES agrees with him and says the 31 December event took place to stop the nation's alarming drift toward a violent confrontation between the small class of exploiters and the overwhelming majority of the masses. This is because those who controlled the fate of the toiling masses could not understand that the common people were really existing in a state of economic and social oppression. The paper challenges those who are accusing the revolutionary leadership of tribal domination to come out with statistics to prove their case. It says they should be honest to themselves and to those whom they seek to convince by publicly making a breakdown of the tribal composition of the PNDC, the INTC [expansion unknown], the secretaries heading the ministries, and all other PNDC organs for the nation and the whole world to see. THE TIMES says if opponents of the revolution are not prepared to do this, but prefer to go about shouting lies and associating the revolution with tribalism, they will end up only exposing their own perverted mentality. It says the revolution has come to stay and the people cannot be prevented from realizing that this is their opportunity to end their oppression by helping the PNDC to succeed.

GROUPS USE TRIBALISM AGAINST REVOLUTION

AB141843 Accra Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 14 Jul 82

[Station commentary]

[Text] The reiteration of the need to avoid tribalism by Sgt Alolga Akata-pore comes at a time when enemies of the 31 December revolution are exploiting tribal sentiments to cast all kinds of slanders on the Provisional National Defense Council [PNDC] and to discredit the whole revolution. Certain known interest groups and persons evaluate almost every action of government or leading figures in the revolution in terms of tribal bias or origin. Cheap and baseless rumors are being concocted with tribal learnings to divide the ranks of those who support the revolutionary transformation of our country. It should not be surprising that counterrevolutionaries are cashing in on the element of ethnic division in the country for their narrow selfish ends.

Tribalism has been one tool in the arsenal of reactionary forces for a long time on the whole African continent. The colonialists exploited ethnic divisions in Africa to conquer and dominate the peoples of our continent; and since independence, the same factor has been used to prevent the fostering of a strong united sense of nationhood among our people; the fact being that a divided and dissention ridden people are weak and easy to cheat. One former CIA agent has revealed how the American intelligence agents circulated leaflets as coming from one tribe against another in Burundi to intensify rifts between groups of people. It needs no telling that the enemies would continue using the tribal factor to divide and rule our people.

But looking closely at the major contradictions and problems that face our nation, ethnic division is hardly the factor that should be an impediment in the March of the mass of our people toward progress. The problems that we face are mass poverty, illiteracy, disease, poor transportation, hunger and malnutrition--the freight of underdevelopment. We are underdeveloped not because there are tribes in Ghana, but because of the domination of our country by imperialism coupled with serious corruption and mismanagement by the elites and (?concordant) groups that had ruled this country since independence. The unity of all the poor and underpriviledged of our people and all honest and patriotic citizens is essential in the struggle against the conditions that keep our people in poverty and misery.

The united front required to confront the fundamental problems of our society renders the divisions along tribal lines irrelevant and diversionary. The exploiters and cheats, by the way, are united in their nefarious activities. They reap their profits, bribes and dirty money from all parts of Ghana.

The divisions in our country, really, are between the poor, underpriviledged, honest, progressive and nationalist forces on one side and the rich exploiters, priviledged parasites, dishonest, reactionary and imperialist stooges on the other. Thus, all those who are genuinely interested in the advancement of the revolutionary process in Ghana must be on their guard and not allow the cheats to use tribalism to divide our ranks. The position of progressive people is a principled one, not tribal-based. So long as our national leadership is honest, dedicated to duty and totally committed to the progressive cause, they should continue to merit our support in spirt of the maneuvers of those who seek to erode this support through tribal dissentions.

COMMENTARY DECRIES 'BBC' CARRYING AMOAKO CHARGES

AB122127 Accra Domestic Service in English 1800 GMT 12 Jul 82

[Text] The BBC is a respectable broadcasting system listened to with adulation and its bulletins trusted. Among the Ghanaian elite, the BBC is trusted, even worshipped with awe. The GBC [Ghana Broadcasting Corporation] and the BBC are friendly radio-television institutions. Quite apart from and consequent upon our colonial linkages, we both belong to the Commonwealth Broadcasting Association and it is not traditional, in fact, not a comfortable matter to pick a quarrel with this respectable symbol of Western, and particularly English, objectivity. In the BBC's objective analysis of events affecting the life, views and image of governments in Ghana, to be precise, it always makes sure that the other side is heard. This means that whatever happens in Ghana, the opinions and views of representatives of that government's opposition forces in London must be sought and broadcast. It never matters what such opposition forces uphold, what aims they stand for and indeed who they really are. As long as they oppose the governments of the day, to the BBC, they are credible experts on matters affecting Ghana and its government.

This is how and perhaps why the BBC has become the megaphone for the most despicable liars, to slander, mudsling and insult Ghanaians generally and Flight Lieutenant Rawlings and the PNDC [Provisional National Defense Council], particularly since the murders of the judges and the retired major. In its peculiar sense of objectivity and neutrality the BBC is giving (?case) to vulture and hyenas like Adai Amoako, a criminal whose political principle is stealing, extortion and bribery and whose moral value is deceit. Adai Amoako has said in BBC that the PNDC, in collaboration with certain democratic organizations, committed the murders. It cannot surprise any serious and intelligent Ghanaian.

According to those who know Adai Amoako from the People's National Party (PNP) days, those who know him in his hideout in London and those who knew him as a private person, Adai Amoako is the first hand snake who cannot abide by any principle, promise or morals except lying and extortion. Adai Amoako became a widely known name in the last months of the PNP pretending to be the champion of opposition to Limann's undemocratic leadership of that party. He deceived the youth wing of that party who had initiated moves to reform it by seeking weed off Limann and other elements from the leadership. Democratic elements in the party and in the country took Adai Amoako seriously but for a time. Having attained a fake stature of a democrat through his posturing as such, he quickly accepted bribes in dollars from Limann and worked against a momentum he had usurped. With dollar bribe in hand, Adai Amoako then turned around hand-in-hand with Limann to harm those who stood opposed to the PNP leadership and corruption. This is the man who now assumes a mantel of justice. This is the man who now accuses others of murder. It is in line with his avowed profession, the job of lying, deceit, bribery and corruption.

In London, who is he working for now? Adai Amoako is the only one of the vultures waging a campaign against the PNDC and Ghana. We pick on him today only to show the character of the types who have been provided a microphone like the BBC to broadcast lies to the world. The BBC's opened arms to opposition elements is not, in principle, what is at stake. It is hosting the hyenas and vultures of our society that is detestable, because the BBC is more respectable than that.

BRIEFS

TRUCK SPARE PARTS--Ghana today took delivery of 35 trucks worth about 3 million cedis from Japan to be used for the evacuation of food stuffs and fertilizers. The trucks which were bought with a grant of yen 200 million from the government of Japan were accompanied with 20 percent spare parts. Speaking at the handing-over ceremony at the Nicholson Stadium in Accra, the Japanese ambassador, Mr Masatada Higaki, said the grant will help the PNDC [Provisional National Defense Council] to reconstruct the country's economy. He said now that agriculture is receiving urgent attention, the trucks will go a long way to help pass farm produce to the marketing centers. Mr Higaki assured Ghana of more Japanese aid to revive the other sectors of the economy. Receiving the trucks, the secretary for agriculture, Prof Bortei-doku, noted that in the past, fertilizers imported with scarce foreign exchange could not be transported to their destination because of the lack of trucks. He said the trucks will make a great contribution to the government's agricultural effort and help in freeing the nation from its tight food position. Prof Bortei-doku thanked the government of Japan for the trucks. It will be recalled that Japan gave Ghana 800 outboard motors last February. INVESTIGATE JUDGES MURDERS--The government has decided to set up a special investigation board to supervise the entire investigation into the recent abduction and murder of three high court judges and a retired army officer. An official statement today said the five-member special investigation board will be under the chairmanship of a retired member of the judiciary. The other members are representatives of the Ghana Bar Association; two persons, including a representative of the churches, nominated by the PNDC [Provisional National Defense Council]; and a representative of the attorney general's office, who will also be the board's secretary. The board will hear evidence which will provide memoranda for the general public. The high-powered investigation team appointed earlier by the government and led by the secretary for the interior shall provide investigating services and facilities to the board. The statement explained that the government's decision to set up the special board was in response to the views of the general public on the matter and it is there to ensure a fair and expeditious investigation. The board is to submit a report to the PNDC as soon as possible. [Text] [AB142111 Accra Domestic Service in English 2000 GMT 14 Jul 82]

FOREIGNERS TO BE DEPORTED--The National Investigations Committee has ordered two foreign nationals to be deported from the country within 48 hours. The two--Mr Firm Hatumal Dulani from India and Alhaji Sumana Hamani from Niger--were caught dealing in gold and illegal trafficking in foreign currency. They were arrested by the security agencies early last month and brought before the national investigations committee for interrogation. According to a statement, Mr Dulani, who is the managing director of Metro Industries Enterprises Limited, said he did not know that it was an offense to indulge in gold and currency trafficking outside the authorized channels for dealing in them. On his part, Alhaji Sumana Hamani, who has 12 houses in Obuasi, 4 cocoa farms and 2 vehicles, admitted that his main business has been acting as a go-between for miners and prospective gold buyers. All their assets, including the gold and foreign monies, have been confiscated to the state. [Text] [AB141542 Accra Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 14 Jul 82]

APPEAL TO LAWYERS--The PIONEER appeals to the Ghana Bar Association to ask lawyers to go back to the courts. The paper also urges members of the bench to start hearing cases. It says it understands the feeling of the lawyers on the senseless murder of three of their colleagues and says refusing to go to the court means a breakdown of the legal process. This would be a triumph for the cynical forces who want to manipulate unfortunate side effects of the times to their selfish political advantage. It also means the activities of policemen who take part in the legal process would be slowed down, thereby denying suspects the right to justice. The PIONEER reminds lawyers and judges that two wrongs do not make one right and that the ultimate sufferer from their boycott is the citizen whose rights and liberties lawyers have sworn to defend. COOPERATION WITH BRAZIL REVIEWED AS ITS AMBASSADOR DEPARTS

[Article by Desire Gnangnan: "Vast Prospects Exist for Our Cooperation, Thiam Tells Raffaelli"]

[Text] Mr Marcello Raffaelli, Brazil's ambassador to the Ivory Coast, has left our country to go to Geneva, to which he was summoned by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) to head the Committee for Surveillance of Textile Development in Africa.

The Brazilian diplomat, who spent more than 2 years at his post in Abidjan, through his actions as a man aware of the problems of the Third World has contributed to strengthening economic cooperation between his country and ours, and has worked toward the consolidation of the bonds of friendship linking the two peoples.

In recognition of the many services he has rendered, the government of our country gave a major dinner in his honor in the Balafon Room of the Hotel Ivoire last Friday.

During the dinner, Minister of Information Amadou Thiam, who served as intermediary between his colleague in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Brazilian diplomat, offered two toasts. Mr Gilles Laubhouet, the secretary of state for agriculture, and a number of other diplomats, were also present.

Minister Amadou Thiam, who spoke first, stressed the political career of this Brazilian diplomat, as well as his professional capabilities.

Mr Thiam then stated that "the Ivorian government attaches special importance to its cooperation with Brazil, because it was one of the very first Latin American countries to show interest in the African nations immediately after they won independence, less because it hoped to derive benefit from its relations with them than because of the profound cultural affinity due to history."

Mutually Beneficial Cooperation

"Moreover," the minister went on to say, "this cooperation in reality reflects the desire frequently proclaimed by the developing countries to abandon their exclusive orientation toward the industrialized countries in a search for solutions to their problems of development, instead gradually establishing closer and mutually profitable collaboration among them in all fields."

Regional Disparities

Mr Amadou Thiam said that vast prospects exist for this cooperation, even if for the time being it is only being pursued in certain sectors, particularly in the realm of popular education and sports, with the literacy campaign and the education of high-level trainers, and also within the framework of the Brazilian universities and that in the Ivory Coast.

Where agroindustry is concerned, Minister Thiam said that Brazil is also contributing its experience, in particular in pursuit of the soybean project which is particularly dear to the heart of the chief of state because it comes within his policy of combating regional disparities, and is designed to increase the income of the people in the savannah zones.

On the subject of trade exchange, the minister of information noted that an imbalance working to the disadvantage of the Ivory Coast has been steadily increasing for a number of years. Lacking the ability to absorb this difference, it is necessary that we jointly seek ways of reducing it.

In conclusion, Mr Thiam made a point of mentioning the establishment of two Brazilian banks, the Banque Real (Royal Bank) and the Banco Do Brazil (Bank of Brazil) in our country.

The Brazilian ambassador, for his part, expressed his satisfaction upon completing his diplomatic mission in the Ivory Coast. "I am departing persuaded of the potential for cooperation between Brazilians and Ivorians, and I am encouraged by the perception held in this connection by many in the Ivorian government."

We might note that earlier, during the morning hours, this Brazilian diplomat was made a grand officer of the National Order by Mr Amadou Thiam.

GOVERNMENT PUTS RICE INDUSTRY IN PRIVATE HANDS

Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 12-13 Jun 82 p 3

[Article by Hien Solo]

[Text] The transfer of the management and operation of rice mills to private hands, approved by the Council of Ministers in July 1981, will henceforth be effective. Minister of Agriculture Denis Bra Kanon signed the agreement making this transfer official with six private marketing companies last Thursday.

Thus beginning with the next rice growing season, these six companies, three of which are Ivory Coast owned, will take over from the OCPA. They will be required to purchase all the paddy rice, wherever produced, at the price established by the state. This is precisely the practice pursued with coffee and cacao. The minister of agriculture stressed this point, in order to avoid any misunderstanding about its application.

The 11 rice mills and 10 silos our country has are distributed among the 6 new enterprises which will henceforth be responsible for obtaining all the paddy rice.

The Ministry of Commerce is responsible for gathering the final products and distributing them according to the procedures of the usual structures, as well as the import of supplementary quantities of rice and the standardization of consumer prices.

The government believes that it can thus improve this rice marketing sector in order to get production going again. However, this will not be without cost to the state.

The cost of producing a kilogram of rice at present is 160 francs. The government is obliged to provide it at 118 francs, leaving a disparity of 42 francs to be recovered. An analysis shows that the operation of transferring the management of the rice mills to private hands will come 2.63 billion francs for the coming season.

Taking the constantly rising rate of inflation into account, the cost comes to about 3.145 billion francs (1982 value), or 3.44 billion (1983) for the 1983-84 season and 4.125 billion francs (1984 value) for the 1984-85 season.

The Ministry of Agriculture estimates, however, that this cost could possibly be reduced by 750 million for the 1983-84 season if the differential for paddy rice delivered at the mill were increased by 10 francs in 1983.

Similarly, the cost for the 1984-85 season could be reduced by 1.425 million if this same differential were further increased by 5 francs in 1984.

New Prices

As can be seen, rice production for the time being is not an easy thing when we examine the cost and the fact that since the equalization fund is not in a position to cover this cost out of income from sales of imported rice, it falls to the stabilization fund to finance it.

On the occasion of the signing of the convention between the new millers and the government last Thursday, Minister of Agriculture Bra Kanon expressed the fervent hope that the new millers will do everything possible to contribute to abundant production of high-quality rice, an absolute prerequisite for a reduction in production costs.

Let us also note that the coming agricultural season will see the entry into effect of the new prices for paddy rice. The prices will be 60 francs in the field, 70 francs at the collection depot and 75 francs on delivery to the mill or the silo. This is another decision by the chief of state which will further please the planters, without a doubt, and will provide a useful incentive for the policy of self-sufficiency in food which the secretary of state for agriculture is responsible for encouraging.

LEADERS REPORT ON LABOR UNION ACTIVITIES

Revolutionary Trade Union of Malagasy Workers

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 6 May 82 p 2

[Interview with Mr Telanosy, secretary general of the Revolutionary Trade Unio of Malagasy Workers; date and place not given]

[Text] The Revolutionary Trade Union of Malagasy Workers (SRMM) is affiliated with the Vonjy Iray Tsy Mivaky (VITM), one of the party members in the National Front for the Defense of the Revolution (FNDR). Its secretary general, Mr Telanosy (see our photo) very kindly agreed to give us a brief analysis of the activities during the trade union year.

Mr. Telanosy: From the point of view of recruiting, we have established 62 base units with about 15 members, making a total of 930. In terms of seminars, we have held 12, lasting 4 days each, in other words 2 per province. During a first stage, the following seminars were held: from 1 to 4 April 1981 in Antsiranana; from 27 to 30 April 1981 in Tananarive; from 4 to 7 May 1981 in Toliara; from 27 to 30 May 1981 in Toamasina; from 30 May to 6 June 1981 in Fianarantsoa; and from 24 to 27 June in Mahajanga.

This first stage was a practical one for trade union and political education. The second stage involved a seminar on practice and tactics, held as follows: from 2 to 5 July 1981 in Antsiranana; from 28 to 31 July 1981 in Tananarive; from 6 to 9 August in Toliara; from 27 to 30 August in Toamasina; from 3 to 6 September in Fianarantsoa; and from 24 to 27 September in Mahajanga.

[Question] How are relations between the tra'e union and the party and how are they being organized?

Mr. Telanosy: The SRMM is an association of workers in various vocational categories responsible for vocational and economic affairs as well as national planning. In a socialist country, the state is made up of the mass of the workers. In creating our present state, we solicited the opinion of the workers through the 1977 referendum on the Red Book. Subsequently there was the FIFASO. However, in the capitalist countries the opinion of the workers is not solicited....

Where our relations with the VITM are concerned, we have a party card and a union card. Our union has its own bylaws, its own card and its own internal regulations, but it works bilaterally with the VITM, on the basis of the analysis the SRMM made of the ideology of this revolutionary party.

[Question]. What are the prospects for the trade union's future?

Mr Telanosy: We have trained six trade union cadres on the whole of the island. We taught them in 30 lessons on trade union, technical and political training and 14 on ideological training. Now we have trade union cadres and the trade union will no longer be "on hold." The trade union flame will never waver again. In addition there have been ideological seminars on the issue of whether or not the trade union struggle has intensified or waned since the revolution, on the workers' opinion on article 3 of the constitution, which says that the working people are king, and on the subject of trade unionism and the establishment of a new state.

[Question]. How are relations among the trade unions developing?

Mr Telanosy: On a certain level there are no organic relations among the unions. In the enterprises, yes, and at the workers' bases, but on a higher level this proves more difficult. Political parties have a front, but the trade unions, at a certain higher level, have no front. This exists only on the base level. One could even say that the gap is widening. We even fear a break, that disputes will broaden. We need a single trade union to correct all these problems in the interunion relationships existing within certain enterprises. On the national and even the provincial level, this does not exist. And if there are inadequate relations, this is the problem of each trade union and political leader.

Union of Revolutionary Malagasy Workers

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 8 May 82 p 2

[Interview with Paul Rabemananjara, secretary general of the Union of Revolutionary Malagasy Workers; date and place not given]

[Text] Mr Paul Rabemananjara, secretary general of the Firaisan' ny Sendika Malagasy Revolisionera, or Union of Revolutionary Malagasy Workers (FISEMARE), which is affiliated with the AKFM/KDRSM [Congress Party for Malagasy Independence/Democratic Committee to Support the Malagasy Socialist Revolution], very kindly agreed to give us an assessment of trade union activities in 1981 and 1982 in an interview.

"One May is the production and ideological promotion season. On 21 May 1977 there were an initial 120 FISEMARE sections. Now, with 5 years behind us, we have 450 sections throughout Madagascar, with 6 federations.

"On the international level, the FISEMARE is a member of the World Federation of Trade Unions, which has 260 million members. Our memberships was approved by the general council in Moscow in 1981 and by the congress held between 10 and 15 February 1981 in Cuba.

"The FISEMARE also maintains bilateral relations with other foreign trade unions. Recently it established relations with Czechoslovakia and the GDR.

"From the point of view of worker training, we have agreements with the Soviet trade unions providing for training scholarships of 1 month in the USSR, as well as 10-month training periods at the rate of 2 per year since 1979.

"The Bulgarians and the Czechs have also provided scholarships for Malagasy workers.

"There have also been 15-day seminars offered by the Soviet trade unions, and exchanges for health cures."

[Question] What trade union gains can you cite?

[Answer] From the point of view of wages, there have been increases, but this does not mean that we are satisfied. The enterprises which will be created constitute a great hope for the workers. The workers should be reasonable and should not make claims for the sake of claims alone. There should be a budget for the well-being of man here, but instead of that the multinational corporations prefer to invest in the war industry, where they earn up to 600 percent profit, rather than investing in textile plants, for example. However, the second general UN assembly urged the conversion of war industries into peaceful industries.

Another point raised by Mr paul Rabemananjara was the labor code, which is old and needs revision, particularly since the FISEMARE has submitted proposals in this connection. And the national council has still not been changed, although the revolutionary regime plays a role therein.

Trade Union of Christian Militants in Madagascar

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 10 May 82 p 2

[Interview with Ratovonjanahary Charles, secretary general of the SEMPIKRIMA; date and place not given]

[Text] The Sendikan'ny Mpitolona Kristiana eto Madagasikara, or Trade Union of Christian Militants in Madagascar (SEMPIKRIMA), is a workers' trade union affiliated with a political party, the UDECEMA/KMTP [Malagasy Christian Democratic Union/Committee for the Defense of the Revolution]. Its secretary general, Ratovonjanahary Charles, very kindly agreed to assess the trade union year for us.

Ratovonjanahary Charles: During this period, 50 sections were established. Moreover, where the trade union struggle for the defense of the interests of the workers within the SEMPIKRIMA is concerned, a number of cases have been taken to court, where the workers have won, while others are awaiting trial.

There have also been a number of delegates representing the membership of the Trade Union of Christian Militants in Madagascar who have been elected by the workers. So that the workers will be very familiar with their rights, we have sent representatives of the SEMPIKRIMA to seminars organized by the National Workers Education Center and representatives of the International Labor Office (ILO) on three different occasions. Then those who took the seminars, in turn, passed on what they learned to the other members of the trade union in Tananarive, Antsiranana, Moramanga, Toamasina, Manjakandriana, etc, along with the joint UDECMA/KMTP committee and the central committee of the SEMPIKRIMA.

In addition, there have been provincial tours.

Concerning the foreign relations of the SEMPIKRIMA, trade union representatives have attended general workers assemblies in Geneva and Algeria, and the meeting of labor ministers in Harar. From the local point of view, the trade union is also involved in communal production work throughout the country. We should stress that the members of the SEMPIKRIMA in Bemahatazana Tsiroanomandidy were awarded the first prize in the competition organized by the Fanevan' ny Tolompiavotana.

[Question] How are relations between the progressive UDECMA/KMTP party and the SEMPIKRIMA organized?

Ratovonjanahary Charles: The SEMPIKRIMA represents a battlefield within the progressive UDECMA/KMTP party, which has aided it in everything pertaining to the trade union struggle. The trade union has its own independence where this point is concerned, and can have its own financial income to achieve its goals.

The members of the UDECMA/KMTP are, ex officio, members of the SEMPIKRIMA, whether they are workers or peasants. The children in ESPOIR UDECMA/KMTP, the young students in FITAM UDECMA/KMTP and the progressive housewives in UDECMA/KMTP are not members. It is obvious that the basic principles of the UDECMA are also those of the SEMPIKRIMA, i.e., the ideology of Malagasy Christian democracy (Ny fanahy no olona) and the basic rights of each and every one.

The goal is the proletariat in power, in charge of the economy.

[Question] What about the relations between the SEMPIKRIMA and the other trade unions?

Ratovonjanahary Charles: The militant Christian trade unionists of Madagascar can be and are ready to work with those who are not opposed to the basic principles of the SEMPIKRIMA, provided it is sincere collaboration without discrimination with the majority interests as its goal.
